The order further directed the marshal to serve a copy of the petition upon parties of interest expressly named, and to give notice to all persons, corporations, or associations interested, by publication, and the return shows that notice was in fact given in accordance with the order. Subsequently, but seasonably, the town of Nahant, in which the property is situated, filed its application for leave to be admitted as a party, and for leave to file its answer to the petition, that it might recover from the United States fair damages for the taking of its property.

In pursuance of its purpose to be heard and recover fair damages, the town filed its answer, in which it claimed interests in the condemned property, consisting of easements and rights of way over which it had built, at great expense, macadamized, crushed stone, and graveled streets, and under which, and in lands not streets, it had built and laid sewers and sewer pipes. The answer further sets forth that the town had built and laid water pipes, and that the taking of the land and the streets by the petitioner, and cutting off the sewers, stop the drainage of the land outside the land condemned, and would compel the town to build and maintain a new and expensive system of drainage. The answer concludes with a prayer that the jury may appraise the damages by reason of the taking of the land, its easements and improvements, including streets, sewers, and water pipes, for which compensation was demanded from the petitioner.

After service, and before trial, an agreement as to values and damages was duly entered into between the government and certain of the parties of interest, and subsequently a jury was duly impaneled, to which the cause was committed. At the trial it was admitted that no plan had been filed in the office of the secretary of state of Massachusetts, as required by the act of May 6, 1902 (Laws 1902, chap. 373, p. 289), and that certain taxes were assessed upon the land in question on the 1st day of May, 1902; and the town claimed as an element of damage, or as an interest to be appraised and valued, a lien for the amount of the taxes assessed upon land condemned.

To state the substance of the town's claim for compensation, it offered to prove that within the territory condemned certain streets had been located and constructed by the town; that in such streets there were water pipes belonging to the town, connecting with and forming a part of its system, and that the taking by the United States would compel the town to construct other lines for the purpose of carrying water to its inhabitants, and for the purpose of completing the town water system; and that in such streets there were certain sewers, the property of the town, and part of its sewer system, discharging through an outlet into the ocean, which were taken by the government, and that the sewers taken cared for the sewage of other portions of the town not taken; and that the taking of the sewers condemned would make it necessary to construct new sewers, and construct a new outlet or outlets for the sewerage system of the town.

The court excluded all such evidence as irrelevant and incompetent, and ruled that the town was not entitled to damages either on account of taxes, or because of the taking of the land in which the water pipes and sewers were laid; and the town excepted. No questions were submitted to the jury as to the interests of the town, and the jury rendered verdicts condemning the land described in the petition, and awarded damages to the owners of the fee, but none to the town; and a decree of condemnation was entered, covering the land described, together with all roads, ways, and avenues included in the description of the land, with all buildings and structures on the described premises; and the decree further recites that the land taken is shown upon a plan annexed to the petition.

It results, therefore, that we are confronted with the question whether the claim and offer of the town disclosed any interest in the property taken and condemned, for which it was entitled to compensation.

The petition in this case was filed April 29, 1902, and sets forth that the proceeding was instituted by the Attorney General of the United States, upon the application of the Secretary of War, in accordance with an act of Congress approved August 1, 1888, chap. 728, § 1, 25 Stat. at L. 357, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 2516, entitled "An Act to Authorize Condemnation of Land for Sites of Public Buildings, and for Other Purposes." In the following May there was passed in the state of Massachusetts an act entitled "An Act to Approve the Acquisition by the United States of a Tract of Land in the Town of Nahant." Acts 1902, chap. 373, p. 289. It is now contended by the United States that this proceeding for condemnation is so far authorized by the Massachusetts statute as to entitle the United States to stand upon the Massachusetts law as to the rule of damages where property taken for a second and different public use is connected with a prior public use authorized by the state, and that the rule of the local law is controlling.

We do not accept such view. The Massachusetts act was merely a recognition of the inherent power of the central government to exercise its own right of eminent domain, and a consent which amounts to a waiver of its jurisdiction under certain expressed limitations, and of all objection, if any, which the commonwealth might assert as a state upon consideration of its prior grants or delegations of quasi-public power to municipal or other corporate interests. By the terms of the Massachusetts statute, it was an act to approve of and consent to the acquirement by the United States, through purchase or by condemnation, of land within its territory for purposes of national defense, reserving concurrent jurisdiction with the United States in and over the area to be acquired, only so far that all civil and criminal process issuing under authority of the commonwealth might be executed on the land so acquired. The act does not employ any express words of grant; nor does it contain any expression indicating a purpose to transfer property, municipal or otherwise, to the United States, without compensation. The manifest and only purpose of the state was to acquiesce in the idea that the general government might acquire by purchase, or in its inherent right, through condemnation, under its own constitutional limitations,—its own safeguards and proceedings,—territory within the limits of Massachusetts for purposes of national defense.

In the case of Kohl v. United States, 91 U. S. 367, 23 L. ed. 449, where it was contended that the circuit court had no jurisdiction over a proceeding brought by the United States for condemnation of property within a state; and that the condemnation provided for by act of Congress meant condemnation by the state government in the exercise of its power of eminent domain; and that, if the state grant of power was accepted by the United States, it must be exercised in the mode and by the tribunal the state had prescribed,—it was broadly, distinctly, and emphatically asserted that the principle of the right of eminent domain exists in the government of the United States as an inherent, necessary, and independent attribute of sovereignty; that the power of the United States in such respect is complete, and without any limitation that it shall be exercised in the manner prescribed for condemnation by a state; and that a proceeding in the United States court for condemnation for necessary public and Federal uses is one by the United States government in its own right, and by virtue of its own eminent domain. See also United States v. Gettysburg Electric R. Co. 160 U. S. 668, 679, 40 L. ed. 576, 580, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 427.

The United States, in the exercise of such inherent and paramount right of eminent domain, is under its own limitation and injunction in respect to questions relating to just compensation for property taken in its own right; and this results from the 5th Amendment to the Federal Constitution, which declares that private property shall not "be taken for public use without just compensation."

What would be just compensation for property taken by the general government 69 L. R. A.

in its exercise of the right to condemn property used for a prior Federal public purpose, under its prior grant or franchise, might not be just compensation for property taken with which it had theretofore had no connection, and to which it therefore sustains the relation of an entire stranger to the title and to the property condemned.

Again, what would be just compensation in a condemnation proceeding by a state, where property had been dedicated to a prior public use under the exercise of a franchise granted by a state, might not be just compensation where property and rights are taken by the general government, in an independent proceeding, in the exercise of its own original and inherent right of eminent domain, to take property and rights upon just compensation. This would perhaps depend upon whether the general government, through the consent or grant of the state, and under the doctrine of subrogation, has succeeded to all the rights which would inure to the state in case of its condemnation of property created in connection with an existing easement or franchise which the state had previously granted.

We do not, however, deem it necessary to inquire as to the status of the local law in respect to the rule of compensation where the state condemns property for a second public use which was created and dedicated to the prior public use in connection with a franchise previously granted by the state. If the right rests with the state of Massachusetts to condemn without compensation, for another and a different public use, property in the nature of structures created and used by municipal corporations in the exercise of a public easement or franchise like that in question, granted through the general law of a state, there is nothing in the act warranting the conclusion that the state intended to transfer any such right to the United States. It results, therefore, as we have said, that the general government is proceeding in this case in its own right of eminent domain, under the limitations of the Constitution, to secure property for a public and paramount purpose upon just compensation; the state through its statute of approval and consent, having simply acquiesced in the idea that it may so proceed.

The situation, so far as the municipality is concerned, is this: The town of Nahant, under the general laws of the state, exercised the municipal right to build streets for the accommodation of public travel, and to construct water and sewer systems for the comfort and protection of the local public. So far as lands within ways dedicated to public use and travel are concerned, it is not seriously contended in argument that the municipality had any title thereto which it can set up for purposes of compensation. Therefore we need not deal with any possible question in that respect. It is contended, however, that property in structures, such as pipes and other material connected with sewer and water systems, and in artificial structures in connection with streets, may become the subject of municipal property, and thus stands differently.

Even if it be true, which we doubt, that a structure like the Brooklyn bridge (a public way resting at each end upon land dedicated by a municipality, under the laws of a state, to a public purpose) can be taken by the state, together with the land, for a second and different public use, without compensation; and, if it be true that the general government (a different entity or sovereign) may, under its own condemnatory proceedings, take land dedicated to a public state use, for a second though a different and Federal public use, without compensation, it would still be difficult to see how the proposition of Federal constitutional just compensation can be sustained upon that ground, and to the extent that the general government may, for its own use in connection with fortifications, warships, or other Federal defensive purposes, take the bridge (the iron, the steel, the granite, and other material in the artificial structure), which belong to the municipality, and may be worth millions of dollars, without any compensation or indemnity to the municipal entity which paid for it, and to which it belongs.

The act of Congress and the allegations in the pleadings contemplate just compensation for buildings and other structures as well as land.

The act of Congress authorizes condemnation of real estate by the United States, under judicial process, for public buildings or for other public uses. The petition directs itself against certain lands located in Nahant, particularly described by metes and bounds, and asks for condemnation thereof, "together with all roads, ways, and avenues included in the foregoing description, with all buildings and structures upon the described premises, all of which land taken is shown upon a plan annexed to this petition, entitled, 'Plan of the United States Reservation, Nahant, Massachusetts,' and to which reference is to be had for a more particular description of lands taken hereby." The petition then proceeds to ask, upon due notice to all the parties interested in the lands and parts thereof and rights therein, and after each and all parties interested have been heard, for "a faithful and impartial appraisement and valuation of said lands and ways, and interests therein, and any buildings standing on said lands, including all damages sustained by the owner or owners thereof."

It seems clear, therefore, that all structures in and upon the territory described, and all interests therein, have been taken; and this results from the fact that the petition, in pursuance of the high exercise of the paramount Federal right of eminent domain, directs itself, without reservation or qualification, against the territory described upon a plan, and all ways, avenues, buildings, and structures which the petition alleges have been taken; and the decree, as well, directs itself against the territory, "together with all roads, ways, and avenues included in the foregoing description, with all buildings and structures upon the described premises, all of which land is shown upon a plan," etc.; and the decree proceeds to condemn, without reservation, all such interests, and with apt words to vest the fee in the United States for its use forever.

The authorities, we think, sustain the text of Lewis on Eminent Domain in respect to what constitutes a taking of property,—that, whenever lawful rights of an individual to the possession, use, or enjoyment of his land are in any degree abridged or destroyed by reason of the exercise of the power of eminent domain, his property is pro tanto taken. Beyond question, the authorities sustain the proposition as well that, where the right to take property is exercised as a paramount right, under the doctrine of eminent domain, and under apt proceedings, which at once and without qualification or reservation take hold of the body of the estate, and leave open for adjustment and ascertainment the question of just compensation only, such taking constitutes a taking of the entire property, within the meaning of the law.

We think the statute and the proceedings reasonably and fairly contemplate constitutional just compensation for all property interests taken or destroyed. The right to compensation is an incident of the power to take, and, as said, in Monongahela Nav. Co. v. United States, 148 U. S. 312, 326, 37 L. ed. 463, 468, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 622, the just compensation provided for by the Constitution means emphatically a full and perfect equivalent for the property taken, and, in United States v. Gettysburg Electric R. Co. 160 U. S. 668, 680, 40 L. ed. 576, 581, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 427, the full value of the property taken is to be paid.

We do not deem it necessary to engage in an extended discussion of questions relating to municipal ownership in property or to enter upon a discussion of the confused state of the authorities in respect to the question of compensation when property already used for a public purpose is taken for a broader or another distinct public use by the sovereignty creating the franchise upon which the first public use was predicated. It is quite sufficient to say that the older authorities as to the reserved right of the state to condemn country roads for state use without compensation are at least obsolete so far as having application to municipal property rights under the recent extraordinary growth of municipal properties in modern times, and under modern legislative enactment. There is a broad distinction between rural highways and urban streets. Lewis, Em. Dom. § 91c, and notes.

The question of the reserved right of the state to alter, amend, and withdraw its franchises or easements, and the effect of the exercise of such right upon property based thereon, received discussion in § 68 of Dillon's Municipal Corporations, 4th ed. and notes thereto; and in § 71, and elsewhere, the subject of the legislative power over public and private property of municipalities.

Quite aside, however, from the extent of the right, or the limitations upon the right, of a state, under its reserved power, to devote private and public municipal property to a second public use, the weight of modern authority is altogether in favor of the proposition that structural properties created or acquired through the exercise of municipal functions in connection with a franchise or easement granted by the state will not be taken, even by such sovereignty, for a distinct and different public use, without compensation.

Speaking generally, the authorities sustaining the doctrine of a dedication to a second public use without compensation have reference to the rights of the original landowner, who has once been paid full compensation for the land taken for public purposes. This distinction should always be borne in mind, and it is difficult to see how, in principle, such authorities apply to the situation of a municipality which has not once been paid for its property dedicated to a public use, or to a situation where a municipality, through burdens of taxation resting upon its units, has created or acquired, in its own distinct municipal right, tangible property and structures which it holds as trustee for the beneficial use of its inhabitants and the local public. There would seem to be no reason why such property should not be treated, at least for purposes of constitutional just compensation, as private municipal property. The burden of its property creations, through taxation, rests upon the units of the local municipality. Property creations and existence are necessary incidents of municipal government. There is no just reason, under such circumstances, for saying that because of the ordinarily accepted legal fiction that structural property attaches to the legal title to the realty, and because the municipality holds the legal right to use the land, rather than the legal title to the land, the municipal trustee of the body politic which paid for the structural property should not have just compensation from a distinct and independent entity which takes it, not as owner of the land, but under arbitrary right, and for a purpose entirely different than that for which the property was originally designed and paid for, and to which it was originally dedicated. As between parties like these, where the entity taking the property is in a legal sense a stranger to the municipal right, it is difficult to see any difference in principle between municipal property consisting of flagstones, granite curbings, and lamp-posts, or other things which would be necessary and valuable for use in connection with the street system of a municipality, and municipal property consisting of waterworks, elaborate sewer pipes, or electric lighting systems, furnishing water or light upon money rates to individual users, or free to the inhabitants of the municipality, except the burden which results from taxation.

The situation in the case we are considering does not require an analysis of the many authorities in respect to municipal ownership and municipal right of compensation where condemnation is made by a state for a second public use; and our general observations in that respect only bear upon the question whether the state of Massachusetts undertook to transfer to the United States its right, if any, to take for a second use property of the character in question without compensation. In determining the question whether the state of Massachusetts, through its legislative act of 1902, to which we have referred, undertook to transfer to the United States any supposed right to condemn, without compensation, property resting upon its franchise, it must be borne in mind that corporate, charter, and contract rights are protected by the Constitution of the United States as property (West River Bridge Co. v. Dix, 6 How. 507, 12 L. ed. 535),—a doctrine fully recognized by the courts of Massachusetts (Boston Water Power Co. v. Boston & W. R. Corp. 23 Pick. 360; Central Bridge Corp. v. Lovell, 4 Gray. 474), as well as by the courts of the United States (Monongahela Nav. Co. v. United States, 148 U. S. 312, 37 L. ed. 463, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 622). It may be stated as an unquestioned rule that the right to take property already devoted to public use cannot rest in doubtful construction. The right must be given in express terms or by necessary implication. Boston Water Power Co.

v. Boston & W. R. Corp. 23 Pick. 360, 398; Springfield v. Connecticut River R. Co. 4 Cush. 63, 71, 72.

There is nothing in the terms of the Massachusetts act which makes the United States its successor in respect to the control of the state over its municipal or other franchises, or in respect to its right to take tangible property of municipal corporations; and the whole situation is such as to make it unreasonable that rights of successionship in that respect should result by implication. In the case of Monongahela Nav. Co. v. United States, 148 U. S. 312, 344, 37 L. ed. 463, 474, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 622, 633, to which we have referred, Mr. Justice Brewer, after referring to the Dartmouth College Case, 4 Wheat. 518, 4 L. ed. 629, as establishing the doctrine that rights created by an act of incorporation cannot be set aside by either party to it, says: "The state has never assumed to exercise any rights reserved in the charter. . . . So far as the state is concerned, all its grants and franchises remain unchallenged and undisturbed in the possession of the navigation company. The state has never transferred, even if it were possible for it to do so, its reserved rights to the United States government; and the latter is proceeding, not as the assignee, successor in interest, or otherwise of the state, but by virtue of its own inherent supreme power. . . . Our conclusions are that the navigation company rightfully placed this lock and dam in the Monongahela river; that, with the ownership of the tangible property legally held in that place, it has a franchise to receive tolls for its use; that such franchise was as much a vested right of property as the ownership of the tangible property; that the right of the national government, under its grant of power to regulate commerce, to condemn and appropriate this lock and dam belonging to the navigation company, is subject to the limitations imposed by the 5th Amendment, that private property shall not be taken for public uses without just compensation."

True, in that case the corporation was not a municipal corporation; still, in a municipal situation like the one before us, where the town is not claiming right to compensation for the land or the easement dedicated to the public under state authority,—a phase of the situation which we do not consider,—we are unable to see why the reasoning of the Monongahela Case does not apply with full force to the rights of a municipality in respect to tangible property which it is entitled, under the state law, to acquire and hold, and to the natural and reasonable consequences which may result from a taking by the United States.

This proceeding is one, as already said, 69 L. R. A.

in which the United States stands upon its inherent and independent right to take property for necessary public purposes under the constitutional limitation of just compensation. United States v. Gettysburg Electric R. Co. 160 U. S. 668, 675, 40 L. ed. 576, 577, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 427; Monongahela Nav. Co. v. United States, 148 U. S. 312, 37 L. ed. 463, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 622; Barron v. Baltimore, 7 Pet. 243, 8 L. ed. 672.

In his work on Municipal Corporations, 4th ed. §§ 66, 67, and notes, Judge Dillon observed that municipal corporations, as ordinarily constituted, possess a double character,—the one, governmental, legislative or public; the other, in a sense, proprietary or private,—and over its civil, political, or governmental powers the authority of the legislature is, in the nature of things, supreme and without limitation, unless the limitation is found in the Constitution of the particular state. But, in its proprietary or private character, the theory is that the powers are supposed not to be conferred primarily or chiefly from considerations connected with the government of the state at large, but for the private advantage of the compact community which is incorporated as a distinct personality or corporate individual; and as to such powers, and to property acquired thereunder, the corporation is to be regarded quoad hoc as a private corporation. Again, at § 68, that property acquired and owned by a municipal corporation by legislative consent is not subject to an unlimited power of the legislature over it, is consonant with natural justice. The need of having property and property rights is one of the main reasons why municipal corporations are created. Under the Roman law, as declared by Savigny (Jural Relations, § 85), "property capacity is the essential quality of a juristical person." While under the state authorities there is some confusion as to the extent to which this doctrine is accepted, the great weight of authority, as will be seen by reference to the authorities collected in the notes to which I have referred, sustains the principle of the necessary municipal right of holding property.

Again, according to Judge Dillon's text (§ 68), "if a municipal corporation, as representing a distinct community, be regarded as a legal person, the legislature, in effect, says to it, 'You may at your own expense acquire property:'" and in Richland County v. Lawrence County, 12 Ill. 1, 8, Judge Trumbull, in speaking of public municipal corporations, says: "The corporation is to be regarded as a private company. A grant may be made to a public corporation for purposes of private advantage, and, although the public may also derive a common benefit therefrom, yet the corporation stands on the same footing, as respects such grant, as would any body of persons upon whom like privileges were conferred;" and, in Montpelier v. East Montpelier, 29 Vt. 12, 19, 67 Am. Dec. 748, that "towns, and other public corporations may have private rights and interests vested in them under their charter; and as to those rights they are to be regarded and protected the same as if they were the rights and interests of individuals or of private corporations."

The theory of property rights of municipalities is fully recognized by the Supreme Court in St. Louis v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 148 U. S. 92, 37 L. ed. 380, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 485, as well as in Mt. Hope Cemetery v. Boston, 158 Mass. 509, 511, 35 Am. St. Rep. 515, 33 N. E. 695, which was a case where the double character of cities and towns was considered; and the court in the latter case, after stating the local doctrine of the power of the legislature in respect to property held in agency of the state government for strictly public purposes, declared that, "by a quite general concurrence of opinion, however, this legislative power of control is not universal, and does not extend to property acquired by a city or town for special purposes not deemed strictly and exclusively public and political, but in respect to which a city or town is deemed rather to have a right of private ownership, of which it cannot be deprived against its will, save by the right of eminent domain, with payment of compensation. This distinction we deem to be well founded; but no exact or full enumeration can be made of the kinds of property which will fall within it, because in different states similar kinds of property may be held under different laws, and with different duties and obligations, so that a kind of property might in one state be held strictly for public uses, while in another state it might not be. But the general doctrine that cities and towns may have a private ownership of property, which cannot be wholly controlled by the state government, though the uses of it may be in part for the benefit of the community as a community, and not merely as individuals, is now well established in most of the jurisdictions where the question has arisen."

As between a town and a state, the right of compensation for acquired property might depend in some cases upon the authority of the local municipality to hold property for a given purpose, and in other cases upon the question whether the town holds the property as the agent of the state, for strictly public or state purposes; but, however that may be, and without elaborating further these questions, which we deem in a sense immaterial in a case like the one before us, where the municipality was authorized by the state law to raise money from the local municipal body to construct ways and construct water and sewer systems, all in a sense public, though primarily for the benefit of the local municipal community, and where the municipality has acquired property for such purposes, we have no doubt of its right to recover just compensation therefor, when taken under the right of eminent domain by a power other and higher than the state.

This case, as we have already said, comes to us upon offers of proof and upon a general ruling. Upon propositions so general and unsubstantial as offers of proof, we do not feel called upon to define all the rules which may govern in respect to damages, or to describe the mode of ascertaining the measure of damages required by the constitutional provision in respect to just compensation; nor could we understandingly do so, under propositions so general, if we were disposed to. We cannot enter upon a field so broad and indefinite as that opened by general offers of proof, for the purpose of determining all possible questions involved. Upon actual trial, and upon actual proofs and distinct rulings, the situation would naturally be simplified, and the questions may be presented in one aspect or another; and we cannot now anticipate what questions would become material in the actual trial, if one is had. The general view now presented may then be changed in substantial respects. The only question for us to decide, in the present aspect of the case, is whether the municipality of Nahant had an interest in the property condemned, which it was entitled to have appraised, and for which it was entitled to have compensation. Our conclusion is that it had such an interest, and our decision does not go beyond the general question presented. We may, however, make general reference, without decision, to some of the questions discussed. If we were to undertake to anticipate and determine all possible questions upon these general offers of proof, we should have to consider the view expressed by Mr. Justice Brewer in the Monongahela Nar. Co. Case, 148 U. S. 312, 326, 37 L. ed. 463, 468, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 622, 626, that the constitutional combination of the two words "just compensation" means a full and perfect equivalent for the property taken, and that the just compensation is for the property, and not to the owner, which, according to the view of the Supreme Court in that case, takes a situation like this from the rule which permits benefits to the owner to be deducted from the values in ascertaining the measure of damage to which he is entitled.

We do not look upon this case as one in which counsel for the town are seriously contending for compensation for the state franchise in respect to the municipal interests within the territory condemned. It will probably be found that the great majority of cases which hold that the value of the franchise right is to be considered upon the question of compensation, like United States v. Great Falls Mfg. Co. 112 U. S. 645, 28 L. ed. 846, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 306, Great Falls Mfg. Co. v. Atty. Gen. (Great Falls Mfg. Co. v. Garland) 124 U. S. 581, 31 L. ed. 527, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 631, and the Monongahela Nav. Co. Case, 148 U. S. 343, 37 L. ed. 463, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 622, have reference to a franchise granted to a corporation only quasi public,—one where the right relates to a situation into which the public interest enters somewhat, but which chiefly involves an enterprise for remunerative results to the corporation.

Ordinarily structures and certain kinds of fixtures are compensated for by appraising them as a part of the realty. This is probably universally true where land is taken from the owner for public purposes. We have no doubt, however, upon principles of natural justice and of right, that a municipality should be compensated upon an appraisalment of its tangible property resting upon and under land which it does not own, but with which its property is connected in the exercise of a public franchise for public purposes; and, assuming this to be so, in estimating its value all the capabilities of the property, and all the uses to which it may be applied or to which it is adapted, are to be considered. 2 Lewis, Em. Dom. 1048; Smith, Modern Law of Mun. Corp. 719.

The petition prays for an impartial appraisalment of property taken, including "all damages sustained by the owner or owners thereof." Still, in view of the general character of the claim of the town, for indemnity for the interruption to its water and sewer systems which results from taking a part thereof, we do not feel called upon to determine whether, in arriving at just compensation, or, in other words, whether, in making the municipality whole by returning an equivalent for what has been taken, just compensation for property actually taken is to be ascertained by reference to its capabilities, and uses in connection with the part not taken, or (Lewis, Em. Dom. §§ 471, 471a) by ascertaining the difference between the value of the whole property before the taking and the value of the remainder after the taking, or by ascertaining the value of the part taken, together with the damage resulting to the parts of the system outside of the territory taken, by reason of the interruption or severance.

We do not think the claim or the offer of proof sufficiently definite to justify us in assuming to decide which rule should be applied. It is said in Lewis on Eminent Domain (§ 464) that, "when part is taken, just compensation includes damages to the remainder. Upon this point there is entire unanimity of opinion. 'The constitutional provision cannot be carried out, in its letter and spirit, by anything short of a just compensation for all the direct damages to the owner.'" To these propositions there are gathered many authorities in the notes contained in the second edition of that work. Dillon says: "Regard must be had to the condition as to the shape, use, and convenience in which the residue of the property will be left" (2 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 624), while Mr. Justice Peckham, speaking for the Supreme Court, leaves the question in this way: "As to the effect of the taking upon the land remaining, that is more a question of the amount of compensation. If the part taken by the government is essential to enable the railroad corporation to perform its functions, or if the value of the remaining property is impaired, such facts might enter into the question of the amount of the compensation to be awarded." United States v. Gettysburg Electric R. Co. 160 U. S. 668, 685, 40 L. ed. 576, 582, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 427, 431. See also Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 697, 700, and notes. United States v. Alexander, 148 U. S. 186, 37 L. ed. 415, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 529; United States v. Truesdell, 148 U. S. 196, 37 L. ed. 419, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 532; Great Falls Mfg. Co. v. Atty. Gen. (Great Falls Mfg. Co. v. Garland) 124 U. S. 581, 31 L. ed. 527, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 631; Pumpelly v. Green Bay & M. Canal Co. 13 Wall. 166, 177, 178, 20 L. ed. 557, 560; Laflin v. Chicago, W. & N. R. Co. 33 Fed. 415; 18 Am. Dig. Century ed. col. 1277, § 365, and numerous cases there cited.

We do not decide upon which view this cause should be submitted to the jury. Perhaps either would be correct. Any view which would give the town just compensation for its property taken would answer the requirement of the Constitution. It is possible that a verdict based upon the value of the structures and materials and other tangible properties of the town actually taken, together with a special verdict for the damage resulting to parts of property not taken, might solve the situation.

As we hold that the Federal proceeding takes hold of the situation ex proprio

vigore, and without regard to the state statute or the will of the state (Monongahela Nav. Co. v. United States, 148 U. S. 312, 341, 37 L. ed. 463, 473, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 622), we have no occasion to consider the question based upon the failure of the government to file a copy of the plan of the premises taken as required by § 4 of the Massachusetts act of May 6, 1902; and, as we hold that the property was taken by the act of the United States in its own right under its high prerogative of sovereignty and by virtue of its own proceeding, which antedated the assessment of the taxes in question, there is no occasion to consider that aspect of the case.

The decree of the District Court is so far opened as to permit further proceedings not inconsistent with the opinion of this court passed down this day, to the end that the town of Nahant may have just compensation for its property taken.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

J. T. WHEELER, Admr., etc., of Hizar Beaty, Deceased, Impleaded with Lieberman, Loveman, & O'Brien et al., Appt.,

v.

James N. CLARK et al.

(.....Tenn.....)

1. The rule that one in adverse possession under color of title of a tract of land is entitled to maintain replevin for logs cut thereon by one claiming to be the true owner, regardless of the true location of the ultimate title to the land, applies where the spot from which the logs were cut is annexed to the actual possession of a portion of the tract because within the boundaries of the paper title.
2. The deeds under which plaintiff in replevin claims possession of property from which the chattels were taken may be looked at for the purpose of defining plaintiff's possession, although the question of the ultimate title to the land cannot be gone into.

3. An entry, under a champertous deed, upon land of which another is in possession, does not confer upon the one making it the right, when sued in replevin for timber taken from the property, to force the former occupant to prove his title.
4. Actual possession by inclosure of a portion of land claimed under a paper title draws to it constructive possession of all land within the boundaries called for by the title papers.
5. A tract of land is sufficiently described in a deed by referring to it by the number of its government patent, in which it is definitely described.
6. That the title to property for which replevin is brought is shown to be in one of the plaintiffs is sufficient to sustain the action; and defendant cannot take ad-

NOTE.—Right to maintain replevin by or against one in adverse possession of land for things severed.

- I. The general rule.
 - a. In general, 732.
 - b. Reason of the rule, 732.
- II. Nature of the adverse possession.
 - a. In general, 734.
 - b. Incidental trial of title, 735.
- III. Replevin of fructus industriales, 737.

I. The general rule.

a. In general.

Generally speaking, the rule undoubtedly is that replevin, or an action of that nature, is not maintainable against one in the adverse possession of land, for things severed therefrom.

Thus, the owner of the freehold cannot maintain an action of detinue for things severed, if, at the time of the severance, he had not actual possession of the land which was then held and occupied adversely to him. Cooper v. Watson, 73 Ala. 252.

So, it is admitted in Leatherwood v. Sullivan, 81 Ala. 464, 1 So. 718, and Adler v. Prestwood, 122 Ala. 374, 24 So. 999, that, as a general rule, when the defendant in an action of detinue for chattels severed from land is in possession of the land from which the chattels were severed, holding adversely to the claimant (69 L. R. A.

and disputing his title, the action is not maintainable.

And so, the owner of land out of possession is not entitled, after he has established his right to the possession, to recover the fruits of the land from one who purchased them from an occupant who at the time was in the adverse possession of it. Johnston v. Fish, 105 Cal. 420, 45 Am. St. Rep. 55, 38 Pac. 979.

"When one who is in the adverse possession gathers a crop in the course of husbandry, or severs a tree or other thing from the land, the thing severed becomes a chattel; but it does not become the property of the owner of the land, for his title is divested,—he is out of possession, and has no right to the immediate possession of the thing. . . . The owner of the land cannot sue for the thing severed in trover or detinue as a chattel." Brothers v. Hurdle, 32 N. C. (10 Ired. L.) 490, 51 Am. Dec. 400, obiter.

Crops grown and harvested by one in the adverse possession of land may not be replevied by another, who also claimed the land by reason of an entry made under the timber-culture laws. Bathbone v. Boyd, 30 Kan. 485, 2 Pac. 664.

b. Reason of the rule.

The reason upon which this rule is broadly placed is that title to land cannot be tried in a transitory action.

vantage of the fact that other plaintiffs are not shown to have a right to the possession of any interest therein.

7. That one suing to recover logs cut from real estate is shown to have decedeed away a portion of the land, and that the grant is not shown not to have included the logs, are immaterial, where the grantee is joined as plaintiff in the action.
8. That logs for which replevin is brought were not all cut from plaintiff's land is immaterial, where the one from whose land they were cut transferred all his right to plaintiff before the bringing of the action.

(Wilkes, J., dissents.)

(February 18, 1905.)

A PPEAL by the administrator of Hizar Beaty, deceased, from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Fentress County in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to recover certain logs alleged to have been wrongfully removed from plaintiffs' property. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. John F. McNutt, for appellant:

Before plaintiffs are entitled to the judgment for the possession of the logs replevied in the case, they must show that they were the true and lawful owners of the lands from which said logs were cut and removed, or that they were in the actual and exclusive possession of said lands.

Collier v. Yearwood, 5 Baxt. 581.

Plaintiffs cannot recover where the property belongs to a third party.

McFerrin v. Perry, 1 Sneed, 314; Robb

An action of replevin does not lie for the purpose of litigating and determining the title to real estate between adverse claimants. Baker v. Campbell, 32 Mo. App. 529, obiter.

So, the owner of land may not bring replevin for chattels severed when the land is in the adverse possession of the defendant, or of a third person. The law does not permit him to assert his title to the land against the person in adverse possession in that manner. Anderson v. Hapler, 34 Ill. 436, 85 Am. Dec. 318.

And so, when the person severing timber from land is in the adverse possession thereof, the owner may not maintain detinue therefor, since title and right of possession of lands cannot be determined in such an action. Street v. Nelson, 80 Ala. 231.

An action in replevin is not maintainable by one not in the actual, exclusive possession of a quarry, for slates taken therefrom, whatever his title may be, against one who is in the possession under a claim of right. This decision is based upon the ground that title cannot be decided in a transitory action because that might lead to the trial of title of a coal mine in England in an action of replevin for coal dug out of the mine and carried to Pennsylvania; and title to the soil in a foreign nation might thus be tried in a transitory action. Brown v. Caldwell, 10 Serg. & R. 114, 13 Am. Dec. 660. This decision, however, is abrogated by a statute which now exists in Pennsylvania, providing as follows: "In all actions of replevin now pending, or hereafter brought, to recover timber, lumber, coal, or other property severed from realty, the plaintiff shall be entitled to recover, notwithstanding the fact that the title to the land from which said property was severed may be in dispute: Provided, said plaintiff shows title in himself at the time of the severance." Act May 15, 1871, P. L. 268, § 1.

The plaintiff out of possession cannot sue for property severed from the freehold when the defendant is in possession of the premises from which the property was severed, holding them adversely, in good faith, under the claim and color of title; in other words, the personal action cannot be made the means of litigating and determining the title to the real property as between conflicting claimants. Halleck v. Mixer, 16 Cal. 574.

And so, where defendant is in the actual possession of real estate, in good faith claiming title thereto, a party, upon the claim that he is the true owner of the real estate, may not, by claim and delivery, secure possession of a portion of a house severed by defendant from the land, and sold. The title to the land cannot be litigated in that kind of an action. Hines v. Good, 128 Cal. 38, 79 Am. St. Rep. 22, 60 Pac. 527.

In order to maintain an action of replevin for things severed from the realty, the plaintiff must have had the actual or constructive possession of the land; and, as the title to land cannot be tried ex directo, in replevin, if the series of acts, in which the severance and taking away has occurred, are sufficient to create an adverse possession in the defendant, replevin cannot be maintained. Washburn v. Cutter, 17 Minn. 361, Gil. 335.

The plaintiff may not introduce his title papers to show that he was the owner of land, in an action of replevin to recover grain harvested therefrom, when the defendant had been in possession of the land for several years. Caldwell v. Custard, 7 Kan. 303.

In an action of replevin brought by one in the actual possession of land under claim of right, for oats taken therefrom by parties attempting to take possession of part of the land, testimony to show that the plaintiff's possession of the land was not in good faith, but that she was merely acting for her father in obtaining title from the government because he could not enter the land, was inadmissible. "The controversy in the case was not as to the title of the land, but simply as to the possession thereof, and as to the ownership of the oats." Barnhart v. Ford, 37 Kan. 520, 15 Pac. 542.

A replevin action may not be made the means of litigating and determining the title to the realty as between the conflicting claimants; and therefore, in an action brought by one claiming to be the true owner of the premises, against another in the actual possession thereof and claiming title adversely to the plaintiff by reason of a tax deed, who had removed a house from the premises, an adjudication of the invalidity of the tax deed, and consequent rendition of judgment in favor of the plaintiff, was error. Rees v. Higgins, 9 Kan. App. 832, 61 Pac. 500.

The same principle holds good when a plaintiff in the adverse possession of lands brings an action of replevin for things severed during his occupancy.

Thus, in an action of replevin for crops,

v. Cherry, 98 Tenn. 72, 38 S. W. 412; 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 486.

The plaintiffs must prove either general or special property in themselves, or they cannot recover.

Parham v. Riley, 4 Coldw. 5.

The original owner of lands sold to pay taxes cannot maintain replevin for the timber cut by the purchaser between the times of sale and of redemption.

Cromelien v. Brink, 29 Pa. 522.

The trial judge erred in declining to pass on the title.

Hart v. Vinsant, 6 Heisk. 616.

Messrs. L. T. Smith, J. T. Wheeler, and A. M. Roberts also for defendants.

Messrs. Conatser & Case, for appellees: Plaintiffs below were not required to identify the logs cut from the land with absolute certainty after they had been mixed with logs from other land by defendants below.

Eldred v. Oconto Co. 33 Wis. 133.

Defendants had no possession of the land off which the logs were cut.

A champertous deed is no protection whatever for any purpose. It could not be offered as an outstanding title. It is void for all purposes.

Williams v. Hogan, Meigs, 189; Fowler v. Nixon, 7 Heisk. 728; Gheen v. Osborne, 11 Heisk. 70.

Description by reference to entry number was sufficient.

Smith v. Greaves, 15 Lea, 459; Solomon v. Thatcher, 2 Shannon, Cas. 37.

brought by, a plaintiff in the actual adverse possession of the land, the defendant cannot defend upon his alleged better title to the land. Lehman v. Kellerman, 65 Pa. 489.

II. Nature of the adverse possession.

a. In general.

The adverse possession, however, to be effectual in giving a right to the possession and disposition of the severed chattels, must be more than a mere unsubstantiated claim. It must be entered into and continued in good faith, and under at least claim, and perhaps color, of title.

Thus, an action to recover wood cut from land is maintainable by the true owner against the parties who cut the wood, who were in the adverse possession of the land at the time, but were so in possession without title, or color of title. Kimball v. Lohmas, 31 Cal. 154. The court in this case seems to regard the common-law rule to be that replevin cannot be maintained for property severed from the freehold while in the adverse possession of the defendant, no matter what may be the character of his possession in other respects,—whether founded upon title, or taken by bow and spear. In commenting adversely upon this rule, the court says: "Upon authority, it is not easy to say precisely what it is, or where it came from. The cases by no means agree, and, when they attempt a reason, they are equally wide apart. Considered by the light of principle, there seems to be very little principle, if any, involved. The wood in question, having been cut from the land of the plaintiff, is as much his property now as before it was cut. By the severance from the freehold it was changed from real to personal property, but its title was unaffected."

... If, then, it is his property, why is he not entitled to its possession? And, if entitled to the possession, why is he not entitled to an action for it?"

So, to defeat an action of replevin for trees cut, on the ground of disseisin of the plaintiff, there must be an actual, adverse occupation of the land, held in good faith under claim of title; and therefore, it appearing that the occupation was temporary only, and by persons camped on it for the purpose of felling trees to be rafted out, there was no permanent or continuous occupation of the land, and replevin by the true owner of the trees is maintainable. Phillips v. Gastrell, 61 Miss. 413.

It is settled that an action in replevin will not lie in favor of the legal owner of land for crops planted and harvested thereon by a person in the actual and exclusive possession of the land in good faith as a pre-emption claimant, holding the same adversely to all other persons. Smith v. Cunningham, 67 Cal. 263, 7 Pac. 679, obiter.

An action to recover grains sown and harvested by the defendant upon lands to which he claimed title, and of which he had the actual, adverse, and exclusive possession, cannot be maintained. Martin v. Thompson, 62 Cal. 618, Followed without opinion in Martin v. Durand, 62 Cal. 623.

And an action of replevin is not maintainable against defendants, who raised and harvested the wheat in controversy from land in which they were in the actual possession, claiming title thereto under an invalid conveyance from plaintiff, i. e., under color of title. Emerson v. Whitaker, 83 Cal. 147, 23 Pac. 285.

The court conceded, obiter, in Johnson v. Elwood, 53 N. Y. 431, that, if a plaintiff who was attempting to maintain an action of replevin for chattels severed from realty upon the ground of constructive possession under a tax deed which proved to be a nullity, had been in actual possession of the land under such a deed, it might have served as the foundation of title by adverse possession, which would have enabled the plaintiff to protect himself against mere trespassers and intruders.

An action of replevin is not maintainable for rails and posts made from trees cut from land, when the defendant at the time of the taking was in possession of the land under an actual claim of title. Snyder v. Vaux, 2 Rawle, 423, 21 Am. Dec. 466.

And so an action of claim and delivery, to recover logs severed from the land while the defendant was in possession thereof under a claim of title, is not maintainable. Harrison v. Hoff, 102 N. C. 126, 9 S. E. 638.

An action in replevin cannot be maintained against one who has purchased hay taken from a farm, from a party in possession of the farm claiming it as his own against the world, and holding it adversely,—the action being brought before the plaintiff recovered possession of the farm. Stockwell v. Phelps, 34 N. Y. 363, 9 Am. Dec. 710.

Only the party having the eldest entry is permitted to give it in evidence.

Wilson v. Kilcannon, 1 Overt. 202; Hendrick v. Dallum, 1 Overt. 427; Anderson v. Cannon, Cooke (Tenn.) 27; Conn v. Haislip, 1 Swan, 31.

Messrs. Evans & Snodgrass also for appellee Clark.

Neil, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought in the circuit court of Fentress county, in replevin, by defendants in error, to recover of plaintiffs in error 45 logs. The case was tried before Hon. D. L. Lansden, chancellor, sitting as circuit judge, without the intervention of a jury. He rendered a judgment in favor of Clark and others against Lieberman, Loveman, & O'Brien and the estate of Hizar Beaty (J. T. Wheeler, administrator), and the latter alone appealed. There was evidently a purpose on the part of Hizar Beaty, in taking the logs, to compel defendants in error to try the title to the land on which the logs grew, through the agency of the replevin suit; but His Honor found as a fact that the defendants in error were in possession of the land on which the logs grew at the time they were cut by the said Hizar Beaty, and he declined to consider the question whether the defendants in error had the superior title. He passed upon certain title papers of the plaintiffs in error, holding them void on the ground of champerty, for the purpose of

After the entry and occupation of defendant upon land under a claim of title, an action in replevin for crops severed is not maintainable against him by the dislodgee out of possession. De Mott v. Hagerman, 8 Cow. 220, 18 Am. Dec. 443.

A plaintiff not in the possession of land cannot maintain replevin against one in possession in good faith under a claim of right, although under a contract utterly illegal and void, for crops planted and harvested by him. Groome v. Almstead, 101 Cal. 425, 35 Pac. 1021.

It seems to be the opinion of the court in Brewer v. Fleming, 51 Pa. 102, that replevin will not lie against one in the actual possession of land under a claim of title, for timber, slate, or other products severed by him from the freehold. But this doctrine is abrogated in Pennsylvania by the statute set out in I., supra.

The purchaser of an equity of redemption in land, who makes an open and peaceable entry under a sheriff's deed, thereby becomes seized and possessed of the land conveyed to him, including the crops thereon; and may maintain an action of replevin against the former owners, who had continued to occupy two dwelling houses upon the premises, for hay taken by them from the land. Nichols v. Dewey, 4 Allen, 386.

One who entered upon a tract of land under a conveyance in fee, claiming title to it, and exercising acts of dominion over the whole, may maintain replevin for boards made from trees cut from a part of the land, in the nature of woodland, by a trespasser, and although that part was not inclosed, and no improvements had been made thereon, and no dominion exercised over it, except to use it for purposes of fuel and timber. Davis v. Easley, 13 Ill. 193.

A trespasser who goes upon lands of another without claim or color of title cannot acquire a right or title to crops or timber by severing and removing the same from the freehold; yet, if the owner has notice that the trespasser is upon the premises, exercising acts of ownership, and acquiesces therein; or if, upon a notice by the owner to the intruder to desist, the demand is refused, and he remains upon the premises, and continues to exercise acts of dominion,—such possession becomes actual and adverse to that of the owner, to the extent only, however, of the land actually occupied. The trespasser, therefore, cannot maintain an action of detinue against the legal owner for corn planted and 69 L. R. A.

harvested by the latter upon other portions of the tract of land than the part actually occupied by him. Stewart v. Tucker, 106 Ala. 321, 17 So. 385.

An owner of timber land, although not in actual possession thereof, may maintain replevin for timber cut therefrom against one who temporarily occupied the land while engaged in lumbering operations under the belief that the part occupied by him was within his lines. Young v. Herdic, 55 Pa. 172.

And so an action of replevin will lie by the owner of land, although not in actual possession thereof, against one who wrongfully enters upon it under a void deed, and cuts down and carries off timber and bark, when the latter had notice of the legal title of plaintiff; since his possession, which was merely temporary for the purpose of cutting the timber and bark, was not an adverse claim made in good faith. Youmans v. Francisco, 15 N. Y. Week. Dig. 312.

One in possession of land, claiming under a pre-emption right under the act of Congress June 1, 1840, cannot maintain replevin to recover rails made from timber upon the land, before his right to a pre-emption was proved and patent issued. Bower v. Higbee, 9 Mo. 259.

Where neither of the parties in possession of the land set up color or claim of title, but each was diligently seeking to acquire the title of the United States to the same parcel of public lands, in the honest belief that, under the laws of the United States, he was entitled to the pre-emption, and would ultimately acquire the legal title, an action of replevin will not lie in favor of one against the other for hay cut from the land. Page v. Fowler, 28 Cal. 605. This holding was restated as the court's opinion upon a subsequent appearance of the case, reported in 37 Cal. 100.

b. Incidental trial of title.

It being thus necessary that the adverse possession be in good faith, under claim, and perhaps color, of title, and more than a mere unsubstantiated claim, it is obvious that, notwithstanding the rule that title is not triable in a transitory action, the nature of the parties' claims must be to some extent inquired into in order to determine whether the adverse holding is sufficient to give the claimant the right to the possession and disposition of the chattels.

This doctrine and practice appear nowhere determining the question of conflicting possession.

The plaintiff in error appealed from the judgment of his honor, and has filed numerous grounds of error. These assignments cover a wide scope, ranging over the whole field of title, and, besides, raising numerous questions of evidence. In the view we take of the case, it will be necessary to notice only a few of the assignments.

There is some evidence in the record to support the finding of His Honor that the defendants in error were in possession of the land from which the logs were cut by Hizar Beaty at the time they were cut. So on this appeal that question must be determined in their favor. The land referred to was covered by grant No. 3,329, issued on the 22d of April, 1834, to Milton King. There are in the record two deeds purporting to convey the same land to Bruno Gernt, one of the defendants in error; a deed from A. Litton, Jane E. Litton, and Alice W. Litton, of date September 13, 1889; and a deed from Claiborne Beaty, of date March

5, 1890. There is also in the record a lease, of date August 3, 1896, made by Bruno Gernt, Sidney Beckwith, W. L. Jenks, W. W. Jones, and James N. Clark (defendants in error), to one Abe Franklin, covering this same land. There is also testimony in the record to the effect that, while Abe Franklin was holding under this lease, residing in a house built upon the land, the said Hizar Beaty entered upon the land and cut the logs. Upon the strength of this testimony, His Honor held that the defendants in error were entitled to recover in replevin, regardless of the question concerning the ultimate title to the land, since the special property conferred by possession is sufficient to support the action of replevin against a trespasser. We think His Honor's view was correct. The rule referred to is necessary to the preservation of the peace of society. If it should not be maintained, it would soon result that men, everywhere, in cases of disputed title to personal property, would seize the property by the strong hand, at the outset, for the purpose more clearly than in WHEELER v. CLARK, although there are other earlier decisions to the same effect.

So, the title to land may certainly be looked into to determine the rights of the parties, and incidentally tried in a transitory action, when necessary to establish the title to personal property severed from realty. Thus, in an action of replevin for hay claimed by plaintiff by reason of his ownership of the land, which he had inclosed and otherwise improved, against a defendant who broke down a portion of the fence, entered upon the land, and took possession, presumably under a claim of pre-emption, the latter is a naked trespasser, making an unwarranted entry upon the inclosure of another, and the granting of a nonsuit to him is error. Laurendeau v. Fugelli, 1 Wash. 559, 21 Pac. 29.

In an action of replevin for rails cut and split by the plaintiff on uninclosed land claimed by him, and afterwards hauled away and appropriated by defendant, who also claimed title to the land, it was held relevant to prove title to the land for the purpose of showing who had the right to the rails. The court uses the following language: "The question before the jury in this case was, In whom was the title or right of possession of the rails? This did not depend, necessarily, upon the question as to who had the title to the land. But, situated as the trees were out of which the rails were made, the land being uninclosed, and therefore not in the actual possession of either party, it became a legitimate and necessary inquiry to ascertain upon whose land they stand, and not for the purpose of trying the question of title to the land, but as a means of determining who had the right to the possession of the rails when made." Hart v. Vinsant, 6 Helsk. 610.

Where a party claiming title to land by reason of tax titles brings an action of replevin for the possession of logs severed from the land, against one claiming title thereto, the validity of his title may be inquired into by the court, not to determine who has the legal title to the land, but to determine who is the owner thereof, and entitled to the possession of the personal property. The court looks to the substance; and, when it can see that the action is one to determine the right to the possession of personal property, and not to try conflicting titles to land, it will proceed with the investigation, and permit the respective parties to make out their case by the best testimony in their power. Busch v. Nester, 70 Mich. 525, 38 N. W. 458.

As declared by the court in Harlan v. Harlan, 15 Pa. 507, 53 Am. Dec. 612: "The court looks to the substance; and, where it appears that in truth it is a trial of title, then it is properly ruled that replevin is not the proper action, but that it must be tried in another form."

Had a plaintiff proved that he derived his title from a state government patent; or had he proved that he was in actual possession of land when logs were cut therefrom,—he would have thereby made prima facie proof of ownership, and, to defeat an action in replevin, the burden would have been upon the defendants to show that the legal title was in some other plaintiff; but, had he been in the actual possession and occupancy of the land when the logs were cut therefrom, he could have maintained an action in replevin without making any proof of a paper title, unless the defendants proved an adverse title thereto of a higher character than a mere possessory one. Hungerford v. Bedford, 29 Wis. 345.

So, if a plaintiff was in the actual possession and occupancy of land when the trespass was committed thereon, he may maintain replevin without making any proof of a paper title, unless the defendant proved an adverse title thereto of a higher character than a mere possessory one. McNarra v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 41 Wis. 69, obiter.

It was held in Elliott v. Powell, 10 Watts. 453, 36 Am. Dec. 200, that, in an action of replevin brought by one in the possession of land for a crop severed therefrom, evidence was of forcing upon the adversary party the necessity of taking the initiative in a burdensome suit, and assuming the onus of proof as to title.

It is insisted that, if the chancellor was at liberty to decline to go into the final question of title to the land on which the logs grew, it was inconsistent and improper in him to look to the deeds above referred to for the purpose of defining possession. We do not think so. The use of deeds, and even title bonds, for this purpose is quite common. The question proposed for consideration was not one of title, but only of possession,—a distinct, independent, and legal inquiry under our system of real property law. To meet this special phase of the case made by the defendants in error, the plaintiffs in error offered in evidence in the court below a deed purporting to have been made by the Union Land, Coal, & Coke Company to the Cumberland Coal & Coke Company, of date September 24, 1899, covering the same land, and testimony tending to show that Hizar Beaty cut the logs under the authority of the latter company. The deed was objected to by the defendants in error on the ground of champerty, because the testimony showed that they (defendants in error) were in possession of the land, by a tenant residing thereon, when the deed in question was made. This objection was sustained by the chancellor, and the deed excluded. To this action error is assigned here by the plaintiffs in error. There can be no doubt, under our statute, that such a deed is void. Green v. Cumberland Coal & Coke Co. 110 Tenn. 35, 72 S. W. 459. But plaintiffs in error reply to this that even a void deed may be "color of title," under our decisions, and a possession thereunder, if held long enough, may, under the statute of limitations, ripen into a good title, which is, of course, true. From this it is urged that the entry upon the land under the champertous deed in question was lawful, and neutralized the prior possession under the two Gernt deeds referred to. We think the conclusion is based upon a false assumption. Possession under admissible on the part of the defendant, showing that he was the real owner and as such entered into possession, and harvested the crop, and had since remained in possession; and that the plaintiff was merely a trespasser. The court says: "It is a mistake to suppose that the title to real estate may not be incidentally tried in a transitory action. Cases may be put where the greatest injustice would result if this could not be done." But this decision is criticized in Lehman v. Kellerman, 65 Pa. 489, supra, 1, b, where the court says that, taken in the full extent of the principle stated in the opinion, the holding would conflict with subsequent, as well as previous, decisions. The court further points out, however, that, although the plaintiff was in the actual possession and sowed the grain, it does not appear that he did so under an adverse title; and that the opinion evidently proceeds upon the ground that there was no contested title, and that the defendant had an immediate right of entry.

III. Replevin of fructus industriales.

In a few decisions a different reason appears for refusing to allow replevin against an adverse possessor of land for disposing of crops, than the denial of trial of title in a transitory action.

Thus, in holding that an action to recover the possession of a quantity of prairie hay made from grass cut by one without right, although under a claim of right, he having purchased the right to make the hay of one who claimed to have authority to sell it, is not maintainable, the court says: "It is true the hay in stack is the grass which belonged to plaintiff, cut and cured, and preserved for use; but the labor of defendant, rendered in good faith under a claim of right, gave to the hay substantially all its value. . . . Therefore, the plaintiff should not be permitted to enjoy the fruits of defendant's labor without paying therefor." Lewis v. Courtright, 77 Iowa, 190, 41 N. W. 615.
69 L. R. A.

So, an action of replevin will not lie on the part of the true owner of land for crops raised and harvested on the land by parties holding the possession thereof adversely to him. The court says: "In such case it is well settled that the annual crops fructus industriales cannot be recovered by an action of replevin." Pennybecker v. McDougal, 46 Cal. 661.

He who is in possession of, and cultivates, a piece of land, and harvests a crop grown thereon, and severs the same from the soil, cannot be dispossessed of said crop by the owner of the land, in an action of replevin. "This we consider the well-settled law of this state." McAllister v. Lawler, 32 Mo. App. 91.

Crops were held not intended to be included by the words "other property" in the act of 1871, providing that, "in all actions of replevin now pending or hereafter brought to recover timber, lumber, coal, or other property severed from realty, the plaintiff shall be entitled to recover, notwithstanding the fact that the title to the land from which said property was severed may be in dispute;" and, therefore, it was held that replevin will not lie on the part of one claiming title to land, for crops harvested by another, who is in actual, adverse possession of the land under a claim of title. The court admits that the act of 1871 has changed the rule that replevin will not lie by one out of possession to recover against one in possession and claiming title, for chattels which had become such by severance from the land, so far as the property mentioned therein and other property of like character, such as slate, marble, iron ore, zinc ore, etc., are concerned; but, growing crops being produced by the labor of the adverse possessor, it would be a great hardship to subject him to a succession of actions for his various crops when harvested, and to the necessity of trying complicated and vexatious questions of title to land, in the determination of the ownership of his fruits, vegetables, and crops. Renick v. Boyd, 99 Pa. 555, 44 Am. Rep. 124.

M. M. M.

a false deed cannot, in the very nature of things, be rightful. In fact and in law it is wrongful against the person having the true title, and the true right of possession attendant upon that title, during every day it lasts, until the full term of seven years has been completed. When that time arrives, the possession having been open, notorious, adverse, and undisturbed, and the deed having been registered during the full term of seven years, a distinct right is conferred upon the hitherto wrongful possessor by positive law,—our statute of 1819, based upon a well-known public policy, which need not be more particularly referred to. Shannon's Code, § 4456. When this term of seven years has been thus completed under color of title, various questions may and do arise, in estimating the value of that possession, looking back over its course. Among these is the question of the neutralization of one possession by another. It is held that in the case of the interlap of grants, rival possessions within the interlap will neutralize each other, and the case must be determined upon the strength of title.

These doctrines find their most ordinary application in cases arising under the statute of limitations, albeit they are sometimes controlling in questions purely of possession. It is not true, however, that, if one be in actual possession of a portion of a tract of land, by a house or other inclosure built thereon, occupied by a tenant under a deed defining boundaries, under which state of facts the possession is extended by construction of law to the whole boundary covered by the deed (Mansfield v. Northcut, 112 Tenn. 536, 80 S. W. 437), another may enter upon the same land under a forged or a champertous deed, and force the former to bring ejectment against him, or proceed, after entering, to cut timber, and, when sued by the former in replevin for the timber itself, or when sued for the value, compel such prior possessor to try the title to the land on which the timber grew. Certainly, if such suit be brought within three years (Shannon's Code, § 5096) for possession against such interloper, the action would be one in forcible entry and detainer, and not ejectment; and in such an action the question of title would not arise, but only the question of prior possession. The same would necessarily be true of a suit brought within three years to recover for timber cut, whether in a direct action for the timber itself, as in the present case, or for the value of it. Whether this rule would be different after the expiration of three years, we need not consider, since the present action was brought within less than three months after the seizure of the logs. However, there can be no doubt that adverse possession of personal property for three years would vest title therein (Shannon's Code, § 4470; Morris v. Lowe, 97 Tenn. 243, 36 S. W. 1098) so as to bar an action for the property itself. But it is, beyond question, true that prior possession itself would furnish a sufficient basis of right to support an action against a trespasser for either real or personal property. Prior possession, in and of itself, confers a right as against all trespassers, or persons seizing property without due process of law; and the law will protect that right against such persons by restoring, through an appropriate possessory action, that possession, when it is violated in the manner indicated. Any other course of decision would soon fill the state with vexatious and wasteful litigation, if not with violence and bloodshed. Under the opposite theory, how easy it would be to disturb any man's title! And how great the reward for disrupting the peace of society! Any man coveting the land of another could cause a third party to make him a deed purporting to convey an estate in fee, and then enter upon the land and proceed to hold it, or even merely to cut timber; and, to enable the prior possessor to obtain redress, he must submit to a raking fire on his title, from turret to foundation stone. If such investigation reveal one spot of fatal weakness, his arms of both attack and defense are shattered in his hands, and the interloper is left in possession of the property; and this not because he has the better right, but because he was shrewd enough to discover the weakness of his victim's position, and bold enough to place himself in an attitude where that victim would be compelled to attack him under an irretrievable disadvantage, and to encounter inevitable defeat. The law does not encourage the spreading of such nets. The authorities support the principles above announced.

In Cartwright v. Smith, 104 Tenn. 689, 58 S. W. 331, it is said: "The gist of the action [replevin] is that the defendant is in possession of the property, and that plaintiff is entitled to the possession. Judge Caruthers, in treating the sections of the Code regulating actions of replevin, has said viz. 'Upon a fair construction of the whole of this act, and by it judging of the intention of the legislature, we are constrained to decide that it will lie in all cases where the plaintiff has a present right to the possession of any personal property in the possession of the defendant. In all such cases the property is unlawfully detained from the plaintiff by the defendant, and therefore falls within the plain language and meaning of the act." In accord: Shaddon v. Knott, 2 Swan, 358, 363, 58 Am. Dec. 63; Wilson v. McQueen, 1 Head, 17, 18; Brammell v. Hart, 12 Heisk. 366; Shields v. Dodge, 14 Lea, 356. And compare Crawford v. Bynum, 7 Yerg. 381; Criner v. Pike, 2 Head, 398; Carson v. Prater, 6 Coldw. 565; Southern R. Co. v. Hall, 107 Tenn. 512, 64 S. W. 481. "Where property which has been annexed to the freehold is severed therefrom, even by a wrongdoer, it becomes personal property, so as to become recoverable by an action of replevin." 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 481, and cases cited; 28 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 543. "Where the title to property which has become personally by reason of its severance from the soil or freehold depends upon the ownership of the real estate, it has been held that the true owner, if out of possession, could not in replevin recover the property, where its severance from the freehold was made by a person holding adversely and in good faith under claim and color of title, as the action of replevin could not be made the means of litigating and determining the title to real estate as between conflicting claimants." 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 486.

In Cobby on Replevin, 1890 ed., it is said: "Under the authorities, it is allowable in a replevin action to examine into the title of the real estate . . . just far enough to determine whether or not there are adverse claimants to the real estate. If there are, the validity of their claims cannot be tried in the replevin action; but, if there are not adverse claimants to the realty, the title may be shown in the replevin action, for the purpose above stated." §§ 353, 374-376, 382.

In Cooper v. Watson, 73 Ala. 252, 255, it is said: "The doctrine seems well settled, upon principle and authority, that, if the owner of the land be not in the actual possession,—if he can show title to things severed from it only by showing title to the land,—a personal action for the taking, conversion, or detention of such things will not lie. If he have the possession at the time of the severance, the rule is different. But if his possession is divested,—if his right lie in entry,—and the adverse possessor gathers a crop in the course of husbandry, or severs a tree or other thing from the land, the things severed are converted into chattels. But they do not become the property of the owner of the land. He is out of possession, and has no right to the immediate possession of such things; nor can he bring any action to recover them until 69 L. R. A.

he regains possession." "To hold the law otherwise," as said in Smith's Leading Cases, quoted in the preceding case, "would be to bring the title to the land in dispute in a transitory action, although the plaintiffs had not adopted proper means for reducing his title to possession. For, if the general right to land, unaccompanied by possession, were viewed as giving first a general right of property in whatever may be severed from the freehold, and then a consequent constructive possession, the only question in an action of trover or replevin brought against an actual possessor would be as to the party in whom the title to the realty lay."

The point may be enforced by a few excerpts from other authorities:

In Anderson v. Hapler, 34 Ill. 436, 439, 85 Am. Dec. 318, it is said: "Our statute gives the remedy where the goods or chattels have been wrongfully distrained or otherwise wrongfully taken, or shall be wrongfully detained. The possession of land was always a sufficient title thereto as against a stranger. The rightful owner could not forcibly enter and eject a disseisor, nor question his rights, excepting in a real or possessory action for the recovery of the land. The possessor of land might bring replevin for chattels severed from the freehold, and, as the ownership of lands drew to it the constructive possession, the owner might bring replevin for chattels thus severed where there was no adverse possession. But the owner could not bring replevin for chattels severed from land in the adverse possession of the defendant or of a third person. The law does not permit him to assert his title to the land against the person in adverse possession in that manner;" citing Morris, Replevin, 57, 58; 1 Smith, Lead. Cas. 485; 1 Chitty, Pl. 163; Eaton v. Southby, Willes, 131; Snyder v. Vaux, 2 Rawle, 427, 21 Am. Dec. 466; Vausse v. Russel, 2 McCord, L. 329; Mather v. Trinity Church, 3 Serg. & R. 509, 8 Am. Dec. 663; Baker v. Howell, 6 Serg. & R. 476; Brown v. Caldwell, 10 Serg. & R. 114, 13 Am. Dec. 660; Powell v. Smith, 2 Watts, 126; De Mott v. Hagerman, 8 Cow. 220, 18 Am. Dec. 443; Davis v. Easley, 13 Ill. 192.

In Stockwell v. Phelps, 34 N. Y. 363, 364, 90 Am. Dec. 710, it is said: "Replevin, or an action in the nature of replevin, in the cepit, can only be brought when trespass could be maintained, and that will only lie for an injury to land when the plaintiff is in possession (Rich v. Baker, 3 Denio, 79; De Mott v. Hagerman, 8 Cow. 220, 18 Am. Dec. 443); and . . . [one] being in the actual possession of the premises, claiming them as his own, is regarded as the owner, as to all the world, until after a judicial decision."

In Brown v. Caldwell, 10 Serg. & R. 114, 13 Am. Dec. 660, it is said: "Replevin is not the proper form of action to try title to land ex directo, though incidentally title to such action may sometimes be called in question. In Pennsylvania this action has been allowed a great sweep, and to embrace every question of property. But it is property in goods, and not in lands. It is to try the title to personal property, and not real estate. Replevin will not lie for a tract of land. Title cannot be decided in an action merely personal and transitory, no matter whether replevin, trover, or assumpsit. Nor can these actions be maintained by one not in the actual, exclusive possession, whatever his title may be, against one who is in the possession, claiming right. Here the possession is not vacant. The owner of the title is in the constructive, actual possession.

In Page v. Fowler, 28 Cal. 605, 610, it is said, quoting from Halleck v. Mixer, 16 Cal. 579: "The true rule is this: The plaintiff out of possession cannot sue for property severed from the freehold when the defendant is in possession of the premises from which the property was severed, holding them adversely, in good faith, under claim and color of title. In other words, the personal action cannot be made the means of litigating and determining the title to the real property as between conflicting claimants."

In Rees v. Higgins, 9 Kan. App. 832, 834, 61 Pac. 500, it is held that it is "not proper . . . to make the replevin action the means of litigating and determining the title to the real property as between conflicting claimants."

The reason underlying all these cases is that the primary consideration in a replevin action is the right of possession, and that, as to things severed from the realty, the possession of the land at the time determines the right of possession to such things, such person being in the adverse possession of the land, and claiming under color of title; that the court will determine the matter upon the right of possession, and not upon the title to the land; and finally, that in such an action the court will not permit the title of the land to be determined.

There is one exception to be noted. This is: Where neither party has actual possession of any portion of the land at the time the timber is cut, the right to the possession of such timber must be determined by the title to the land, since the law in that case would attach constructive possession of the 69 L. R. A.

land to the title. Hart v. Vinsant, 6 Heisk. 616. But even in such a case evidence of title is permitted, "not for the purpose of trying the question of title to the land," but for the purpose of determining the question of possession. Id. 618, 619.

Here it is necessary that we should pause for a moment, and note the meaning attached to the terms "actual possession" and "constructive possession" in the authorities.

Of course, it would be idle to attempt a review of the cases within the limits of a judicial opinion, so great is their number. But they are collected in 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 822-830; 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 745; 28 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 238, 239; 1 Cyc. Law & Proc. pp. 983, 1125, 1126. An examination of these authorities, text and notes, will disclose the following: There is some diversity in the use of the terms above referred to, but a substantial agreement concerning the true test of adverse possession in cases such as we have before us, wherein it appears there is actual possession of a portion of tract of land by one claiming under color of title defining boundaries. In the first authority cited in the last paragraph it is said: "It is well established that possession which is necessary to ripen into title must be actual, and to begin such possession, there must be an entry which will amount to an ouster of the true owner. It must be actual, either of all or part of the land claimed, as the same may be held with color of title or without; because constructive possession follows the title, and there cannot be two possessions of the same land at the same time, and the owner, being in possession by virtue of his title, remains until he is disseised by another entering and holding for himself." 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 822. "Mere naked possession without color of title is adverse only to the extent of the actual possession or inclosure. But an entry into possession under a conveyance from a person having color of title is presumed to be made according to the description in the deed, and his occupancy is construed as possession of the entire lot, where there is no actual adverse possession of the parts not actually occupied by him." Id. p. 824. "A man cannot by mere physical means retain land in his exclusive grasp. Possession may be more manifest as to a part than as to the rest. Therefore it is an established rule of law that the actual possession of a part is the possession of the entire tract or boundary covered by the occupant's title or claim of title. . . . What is the extent of his possession is to be determined by the limits of his title or color of title. An intruder without color of title is of necessity confined to his mere inclosure." Id. p. 825, notes, quoted from Core v. Faupel, 24 W. Va. 245. "The actual fencing and inclosing of the tract are not, unless expressly required by statute, essential to constitute adverse possession, but such acts are very decisive in determining possession and claim of ownership." Id. p. 828. "Fences are a means by which possession of land may be taken and held. They are not, however, the only means. There may be an actual possession without fences or inclosures of any kind, if it appears from other facts and circumstances that the plaintiff was exercising exclusive dominion and control over the land." 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 749. "When one is in actual possession of a portion of a given tract of land he will be held, in law, to be in possession of the remainder, if he holds under a deed or other color of title and there is no antagonistic or adverse possession." 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 750. "Actual possession, or possession in fact, exists where the thing is in the immediate occupancy of the party, or his agent or tenant." 28 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 238. "Constructive possession, or possession in law, as it is sometimes called, is that possession which the law annexes to the legal title or ownership of property where there is a right to the immediate actual possession of such property, but no actual possession." Id. 239. In the notes to the page last cited we find the following: "Constructive possession is 'a possession in law, without possession in fact.' Hodges v. Eddy, 38 Vt. 327. . . . Properly speaking, constructive possession is that possession which the law annexes to the title. M'Colman v. Wilkes, 3 Strobb. L. 471, 51 Am. Dec. 637. Possession which, as an inference of law, arises presumptively from the legal title, is a mere constructive possession, and is founded on the existence of title in some form. Jeffrey v. Owen, 41 N. J. L. 260. . . . Constructive possession is that which exists in contemplation of law, without actual personal enjoyment or occupation. Newcome v. Crews, 98 Ky. 339, 32 S. W. 947; Jeffrey v. Owen, 41 N. J. L. 260; Brown v. Volkening, 64 N. Y. 80; Foust v. Territory, 8 Okla. 541, 58 Pac. 728. Constructive possession is such a possession as the law carries to the owner by virtue of his title only, there being no actual occupation of any part of the land by anybody. Mitchell v. Bridgers, 113 N. C. 63, 18 S. E. 91; Graham v. Houston, 15 N. C. (4 Dev. L.) 232. Constructive possession may exist without an actual pedis possessio, where there is a present right, and the possession is either vacant, or is consistent with the right of the owner to an immediate and actual possession by himself. Sullivan v. Sullivan, 66 N. Y. 37."

In 1 Cyc. Law & Proc. pp. 982, 983, it is said: "That an adverse claim to land may ripen into a perfect title by virtue of the statutes of limitations, it is primarily essential that the possession relied upon be actual." On page 1125 it is said: "The general rule is well settled that where a party enters, under color of title, into the actual occupancy of a part of the premises described in the instrument giving color, his possession is not considered as confined to that part of the premises in his actual occupancy, but he acquires possession of all the lands embraced in the instrument under which he claims." In a note on page 983 it is said: "Actual possession may consist either in an occupancy in fact of the whole tract claimed, or of an occupancy of part thereof in the name of the whole, where there is sufficient evidence of the bounds of the whole that is claimed as one entirety, and the circumstances are such that the law extends the possession of the part that is occupied to these bounds. This latter may be termed a 'virtual possession,' in order to distinguish it from the other kind of actual possession, which is called 'substantial' or pedis possessio. But whatever terms may be used to give precision to the subject, the attributes which pertain to an actual possession belong to it, whether it be substantial or virtual. M'Colman v. Wilkes, 3 Strobb. L. 465, 51 Am. Dec. 637."

In our own case of Hebard v. Scott, 95 Tenn. 467, 32 S. W. 390, it was held that "the occupation of part of a tract of land, claiming the whole, under a paper title defining its boundaries, is effective possession of the whole tract under the statutes of limitation." To the same effect are Winters v. Hainer, 107 Tenn. 337, 64 S. W. 44; Turnage v. Kenton, 102 Tenn. 328, 52 S. W. 174; Hunter v. Bills, 3 Tenn. Cas. 97, 101; Elliott v. Cumberland Coal & Coke Co. 109 Tenn. 745, 71 S. W. 749. We have one or two cases in our Reports which, upon casual reading, would seem to indicate that there must be an inclosure of the whole tract claimed, even when the party claims under color of title; but, upon careful reading of these cases in connection with the cases cited in them (Pullen v. Hopkins, 1 Lea, 741; Hicks v. Fredericks, 9 Lea, 491), it is clear that what is meant is simply that there must be some sort of inclosure upon some part of the land, as a house, a fenced field, or other "improvement," as visible evidence of possession, where the land is capable of such use, and not that the whole tract of land must be inclosed.

The latest cases we have upon the subject of adverse possession are Green v. Cumberland Coal & Coke Co. 110 Tenn. 35, 72 S. W. 459, and Mansfield v. Northcut, 112 Tenn. 536, 80 S. W. 437,—both cited supra.

In the first of these cases it is said: "Where there is no part of the land in actual possession, the constructive possession is with the party holding the superior legal title; but, where a portion of the land is in actual adverse possession, the party so holding has constructive possession of all the premises outside of his inclosure to the limits of his claim or assurance of title; and such constructive possession is superior to that which results merely from the ownership of the legal title, and is sufficient to put in operation the statutes of limitation to the entire tract."

In the second case it is said: "The Northcuts had actual possession of a small house upon the land occupied by Mrs. Mansfield as their tenant, claiming to the extent of the boundaries called for in their title papers. The remainder of the tract was uninclosed. A claimant of the land under a hostile title to that of defendants in error built a cabin upon a different part of the premises, and induced Mrs. Mansfield to move into it and attorn to him, and this action [forcible entry and detainer] was brought to dispossess her. Defendants in error, under these facts, had possession of the entire tract,—actual possession of the house occupied by their tenant, and constructive possession of the remainder. Constructive possession of this nature, connected as it is with actual possession of a part of the premises is of a higher character than that which follows the legal title. It will perfect a defective title, under the statute of limitations, and raise a presumption of grant, when held for sufficient periods of time. . . . We think that constructive possession of this character is sufficient to enable a claimant so holding to maintain this action."

It is perceived that the species of "constructive possession" enforced in these two cases in no wise differs from the "effective possession" mentioned in Hebard v. Scott, and the "virtual possession" mentioned in McColman v. Wilkes, 3 Strobb. L. 465, 51 Am. Dec. 637, and that the attributes which pertain to an actual possession belong to it. It is further apparent that the learned justice who prepared the opinion in the cases quoted from carefully distinguished the kind of constructive possession—"effective possession" or "virtual possession"—enforced in those cases from the general constructive possession which the law attaches to the title where there is no actual possession in the owner of the title, and no one in adverse possession. It is also perceived that the learned justice differentiated this "effective possession" or "virtual possession" from technical "actual possession" merely for the sake of scientific precision or logical accuracy of thought, and that he not only did not assign to it a different office and effect from that belonging to actual possession, but blended the two and gave them the same effect; that is, treated both as constituting, in effective operation, a single possession. In so treating them, the opinions referred to not only held the court in line with its former adjudications above referred to with approval, but preserved its harmony with the overwhelming weight of authority in this country upon the special phase of the question herein considered, as shown by the excerpts which we have made from the text-books quoted above, and as exhibited by the vast number of cases cited in the notes on the pages referred to.

The substance of the whole matter, as applied to the present controversy, is that, the defendants in error being in actual possession of a part of the tract on which the timber grew, by their tenant living in a house built upon the tract, holding under color of title, and claiming the land as their own at the time the timber was felled and the logs taken away, their possession extended to the limits or boundaries contained in their title papers, which covered the space where the trees grew. This possession was the "effective possession" or "virtual possession" described above, and was an "adverse possession," in the sense in which that term is used in the law. Being thus in adverse possession of the land, they were likewise in adverse possession of the timber which grew upon it, and, when it was felled and the logs hauled away, these logs were taken from their possession; and, within the authorities cited, and under the principles stated, they were entitled to pursue the logs by the appropriate possessory action (replevin); and, to sustain the action, they did not need to go further than prove their status as above outlined, and the taking, without deraining title or going into a controversy with the person taking the logs concerning the true title to the land. Any other view would place the court in the novel position of holding that one in adverse possession of land, claiming under color of title, may recover the land itself from a trespasser by a possessory action, but must bring ejectment for timber cut from it, or (the same thing, in substance) must sustain his possessory action for the timber (replevin) by the character of testimony required only in ejectment cases.

So, recurring to the special point previously mentioned, we conclude that the deed of the Cumberland Coal & Coke Company, even if admitted in evidence, could not protect Hizar Beaty's estate against recovery in the present action.

It is insisted by the plaintiffs in error that his exception to the two Gernt deeds above referred to should have been sustained. We do not think so. The exceptions were, in substance, that those two deeds did not describe any land. This is a mistake. They refer to the grant by its number, and it describes the land. Id certum est quod certum reddi potest.

It is insisted that the defendants in error do not show a right to the possession of any interest in the logs sued for, and that there can be no recovery in replevin in such a case. To this it need only be replied that the whole possessory right is shown to be in Bruno Gernt. It is immaterial to the plaintiffs in error if he join others with him in the suit, and share his recovery with them.

It is said that, after the date of his deeds above referred to, Bruno Gernt executed a deed to Sydney Beckwith to an undivided 450-acres interest in the land covered by grant No. 3,329 and that it does not appear but that the logs in question, or some of them, were cut from said Beckwith's land. This is an immaterial matter to the plaintiffs in error since Beckwith joined in the suit below.

It is said that part of the logs in question were cut from the land of Marion Stephens, and part from the land claimed by the defendants in error, and that it is impossible to distinguish them. This is immaterial, also, since it appears that Marion Stephens transferred his right in the logs, whatever it might be, to the defendants in error prior to the bringing of the suit below.

The foregoing sufficiently disposes of the real matters in controversy, and we need not refer to or consider the other errors assigned.

It results that the judgment of the court below must be affirmed.

Wilkes, J., dissenting:

I do not concur with the majority opinion. There is no principle better established than that in an action of replevin the plaintiff must show either a general or special property or ownership in himself.

In Parham v. Riley, 4 Coldw. 5, it is said: "The purpose of the action of replevin is to recover in specie the personal chattel which has been taken and detained from the owner's possession. Under the plea of 'not guilty.' It is competent for the defendant . . . to show that the title to the property replevied is not in the plaintiff, but in himself or a third person, and thereby defeat the action. The plaintiff cannot succeed unless he prove either a general or special property in himself. . . . [Hence], property acquired by robbery does not vest such title in the trespasser as will authorize him to maintain the action."

Under the plea of not guilty, in an action of replevin, "the material inquiry is as to the property of the plaintiff, which he must be prepared to prove. If this issue is found against him, he cannot succeed." 2 Greenl. Ev. 563.

"The plaintiff cannot succeed, then, unless he is prepared to prove either a general or special property in himself, and will be defeated if the proof shows the right to the property and possession is in a stranger, . . . It is enough for this case to say that the present defendant has a right to show that the plaintiffs have no title, or that the legal right to the property is outstanding in . . . anyone else; and, if he succeeds in doing so, the plaintiffs must be defeated." McFerrin v. Perry, 1 Sneed, 316.

In the case at bar the plaintiff is relieved by the majority from showing property or title in himself, and his right to recover is made to depend upon constructive possession, although actual possession would not suffice unless the right to that possession is shown by the proof. See also Collier v. Yearwood, 5 Baxt. 581.

To the same effect is Hart v. Vinsant, 6 Heisk. 618. In that case it is said: "Situated as the trees were out of which the rails were made,—the land being uninclosed, and therefore not in the actual possession of either party,—it became a legitimate and necessary inquiry to ascertain upon whose land they stand, not for the purpose of trying the question of title to the land, but as a means of determining who had the right to the possession of the rails when made."

In Clement v. Wright, 40 Pa. 250, it is said: In the absence of any actual adverse possession of wild timber land, the law casts the possession on the owner; and proof of title was therefore admissible, not for the purpose of trying the title, but to prove possession in the rightful owners, which possession defendant had acquired by purchase. To the extent that it was legitimate and necessary to inquire into the ownership or right of possession of the rails, it was incumbent on both parties to adduce the best evidence of title. It was also erroneous to exclude the title papers of defendant.

The action of replevin is based upon the trespass in the taking; and in such actions of trespass the plaintiff must show an actual possession, or a valid title in himself to the premises in dispute. Snoddy v. Kreutch, 3 Head, 303; Large v. Dennis, 5 Sneed, 597.

The title required in cases of replevin is the same as in actions of trover. Cobbey, Replevin, § 89. When a plaintiff is in actual possession, he need not derain his title, as against a naked trespasser. Large v. Dennis, 5 Sneed, 597.

But constructive possession can never be determined to be in any other than the legal owner of the premises. Therefore the plaintiff in this action, where brought for a casual trespass to wild and unoccupied lands, must show title to the premises. Polk v. Henderson, 9 Yerg. 310; Douling v. Hickmon, 4 Hayw. (Tenn.) 170; West v. Lanier, 9 Humph. 771; Bailey v. Massey, 2 Swan, 168.

As we understand the opinion of the majority, any person having constructive possession, but not actual occupancy, of premises, may bring an action of replevin for timber cut. If so, then, in case of an interlap or any other conflict of title, in which both parties have possession of part and title papers for the remainder, either party may bring replevin against the adverse claimant, without showing title and ownership, because each has constructive possession of the same grade and dignity. In addition, it is a solecism to speak of constructive possession which is not based upon ownership and title, for, in order to show constructive possession, title and ownership must appear as its basis. The correct doctrine, as I understand it, is that a party in actual possession or occupancy of land, as when it is inclosed, etc., may maintain replevin against a naked trespasser who does not claim title. But where there are two parties claiming title to land, and neither in occupancy, neither may maintain replevin for timber cut on the disputed premises, and certainly not without showing "ownership," which in the case of real estate is synonymous with "title," and title cannot be tried in an action of replevin. As is said in Cobbey on Replevin, § 376. 'In replevin for logs cut and removed by defendants from the land to which plaintiff claims title, proof that the plaintiff was in actual possession and occupancy of the land at the time of such cutting and removal is sufficient to enable him to maintain the action, without proof of a paper title, unless the defendants prove an adverse title thereto of a higher character than a mere possessory title. But where the land was unoccupied when the logs were taken, plaintiff must show that he is the real owner, and trace his title to the government. Where a trespasser settled on timber land for the purpose of cutting the timber thereon, such settlement does not constitute him an adverse claimant, and the true owner may bring replevin for the logs and the timber so cut." To the same effect see also, 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 486, § 8; Hungerford v. Redford, 29 Wis. 345; McNarra v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 41 Wis. 69; Wadleigh v. Marathon County Bank, 58 Wis. 546, 17 N. W. 314.

The majority opinion refers to Cobbey on Replevin, §§ 353, 374-376, 382; and § 353 is copied, which explicitly and directly supports this dissent, by stating, in substance, that, where there are adverse claimants to land, replevin will not lie for timber cut by one of them. Section 376 we have already copied. The gist of that section is that, when the land is unoccupied when the logs are taken, the plaintiff must show that he is the real owner, and trace his title to the government. So in § 354 it is said: "Where the land is wild, uninclosed, the plaintiff must show a good legal title, as constructive possession follows the legal title." Johnson v. Elwood, 53 N. Y. 431. To the same effect is Hart v. Vinsant, 6 Heisk. 616.

In Hungerford v. Redford, 29 Wis. 345, it is said: "Action to recover the possession of a quantity of pine logs, alleged to have been cut by the defendants on a certain tract of land belonging to the plaintiff, and by them removed therefrom. The complaint is in the usual form. The answer is a general denial, and an averment that the land upon which the logs were cut and from which they were removed belongs to the defendants. The plaintiff recovered judgment in the circuit court, from which the defendants have appealed. 1. It appears by the evidence that the land from which the logs were taken was unoccupied; and it was therefore necessary that the plaintiff should prove that he was the owner thereof before he could recover the logs. The owner of the land is the owner of the logs, and entitled to the possession of the same. To prove his title to the land, the plaintiff gave in evidence a conveyance thereof executed by Eli P. May and wife to Wm. B. Ogden, dated January 21, 1857; also conveyances of the same land executed by Ogden to Flagg, by Flagg to Rumsey, and by Rumsey to the plaintiff. The latter of these conveyances is dated August 17, 1868. This is all of the testimony relating to plaintiff's title to the land, and it is clearly insufficient. It fails entirely to show that May or any other grantor in either of the above-mentioned conveyances had any title to the land, and hence fails to show that the plaintiff has title thereto. A merely colorable title in the plaintiff is not alone sufficient to entitle him to judgment in an action like this, where, as in this case, the land is unoccupied. Had he been in the actual possession and occupancy of the land when the logs were cut, he could have maintained this action without making any proof whatever of a paper title, unless the defendants proved an adverse title thereto of a higher character than a mere possessory one. But the plaintiff was not in actual possession of the land when the logs were cut, which was in winter of 1868, 1869, and he shows no title in himself to the land, except one which is merely colorable. If the plaintiff is not the real owner of the land, and the defendants shall be compelled to pay the judgment which he recovered against them in the circuit court, what rule of law will prevent such owner from bringing an action against them for the same logs, and recovering therein? No such rule has been contended for in this case, and we are not aware that there is any such rule. The fact that a recovery by the holder of a merely colorable title is no bar to a recovery by the real owner demonstrates that none but the real owner can recover."

In McNarra v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 41 Wis. 74, it is said: "The title necessary to be proved in order to maintain the action is the same as in an action of trespass quare clausum fregit or in replevin for timber cut and removed by a trespasser from the lands of the plaintiff. In either case, if the lands upon which the trespass was committed were vacant and unoccupied, the plaintiff must prove his title thereto, or he cannot recover. But if he was in the actual possession and occupancy of the land when the trespass was committed, he may maintain trespass or replevin, according to the exigencies of the case, without making any proof of a paper title, unless the defendant prove an adverse title thereto of a higher character than a mere possessory one. Hungerford v. Redford, 29 Wis. 345. In this case the plaintiff showed himself in actual possession of the land at the time of the injury, and the defendant did not show or attempt to show any outstanding adverse title thereto. Hence the plaintiff's possession was sufficient to sustain the action, and he was not required to establish a higher or better title."

In the present case there is a claim of title by both parties. Neither is in actual possession or occupancy. Both are in constructive possession. According to the majority, each would have a right to replevy from the other, and no inquiry of ownership or title is allowable.

One may have a slightly higher grade of constructive possession; but this could only be determined by a comparison of titles, 69 L. R. A.

which is not allowed. Both have constructive possession, and, under the opinion of the majority, each may maintain replevin; but neither is required to show ownership or title on which constructive possession is based.

This is a new doctrine, not supported by reason or authority, and I most respectfully dissent from such holding. In dissenting, I controvert none of the authorities cited by the majority, but, so far as they are applicable, they support the view expressed in this dissent. The majority hold that title cannot be inquired into, and at the same time proceed to inquire into the title to see whether the plaintiff has constructive possession. Not only so, but they pass upon defendant's title, and pronounce it champertous. As to the difference between actual and constructive possession, and the different grades of constructive possession the mass of authorities cited by the majority is wholly unnecessary. The entire subject is fully, ably, and exhaustively discussed in Green v. Cumberland Coal & Coke Co. 110 Tenn. 35, 72 S. W. 459; but I think much of the reasoning of the majority opinion in this case is in conflict with the holding in the Cumberland Coal & Coke Case.

The case of Mansfield v. Northcutt, 112 Tenn. 536, 80 S. W. 437, holds that constructive possession is sufficient to sustain the action of forcible entry and detainer. But the action of forcible entry and detainer is maintained upon grounds different from an action of replevin. The only question in an action of forcible entry and detainer is one of possession. Title or ownership is not necessary to be shown. Only two questions are inquired into, viz: (1) Who was in possession? (2) How was that possession lost? Davidson v. Phillips, 9 Yerg. 95, 30 Am. Dec. 393. A trespasser who has no title whatever may recover from the true owner if his possession is disturbed. Ibid. And the statute expressly provides that in such actions the estate or merits of the title shall not be inquired into. Shannon's Code, § 5103. But in replevin, ownership and right to possession must be shown, and not mere actual possession alone. McFerrin v. Perry, 1 Sneed, 317, and other cases cited, supra.

But I will pursue the matter no further; simply contenting myself with the statement that I am of the opinion the cases cited by the majority opinion do not lead to the result reached, but to the contrary. I cite in support of this dissent the following authorities relied on by the majority: 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 486; Cobbey, Replevin, §§ 353, 376, and other sections; Cooper v. Watson, 73 Ala. 252, 255;

Anderson v. Hapler, 34 Ill. 436, 439, 85 Am. Dec. 318, and cases cited; Stockwell v. Phelps, 34 N. Y. 363, 90 Am. Dec. 710; Page v. Fowler, 28 Cal. 605, 610; Rees v. Higgins, 9 Kan. App. 832, 834, 61 Pac. 500; Hart v. Vinsant, 6 Heisk. 616, directly in point.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE RAILROAD COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

E. C. DILLARD.

(.....Tenn.....)

1. The conductor of a passenger train cannot be regarded as in a separate department of service from a brakeman of a freight train, so as to render the railroad company liable for injury to the latter by his negligence.
2. After a master has exercised due care in the selection of servants, the danger arising from the negligence of a fellow servant is one which is voluntarily assumed by a person going into the service of the master; it being a risk for which satisfactory compensation is presumed to have been rendered by the larger wages he can earn in such service than in other employments.

(March 18, 1905.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Sumner County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by negligence for which defendant was responsible. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Seay & Seay for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. B. F. Proctor and J. D. G. Morton for defendant in error.

NEIL, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought in the circuit court of Sumner county to recover damages for an injury inflicted upon the foot of the defendant in error in a collision that occurred in November, 1902, at Hendersonville, on the line of the plaintiff in error, between a freight train and a passenger train. There were verdict and judgment in the court below and the railway company, after motion for a new trial had been overruled, appealed and assigned errors.

The defendant in error was a brakeman on the freight train. The declaration contained counts on the negligence of the train despatcher, the negligence of the conductor of the freight train, and the negligence of the conductor of the passenger train. To the last-mentioned count—the third—there was a demurrer filed, raising the question that the conductor on the passenger train stood in the relation of fellow servant to the train crew of the freight train, and hence to the defendant in error, the brakeman on that train; and therefore the company would not be liable to him for an injury caused by the negligence of such passenger conductor. This demurrer was overruled by the circuit-court judge, and his action on this matter forms the subject of the first assignment of error, which we shall now proceed to consider.

The first assignment of error raises the question whether the conductor on the passenger train was the fellow servant of the brakeman on the freight train, or whether such conductor stood in the relation of vice principal to the brakeman.

In our latest case upon the subject (Ohio River & O. R. Co. v. Edwards, 111 Tenn. 31, 76 S. W. 897) it is said: "The mere superiority in dignity, grade, or compensation, in favor of one servant of a common principal over other servants, is not a mark by which to distinguish whether or not the former is a vice principal. . . . The most general test is that, in order to be a vice principal, a servant must so far stand in the place of his master as to be charged in the particular matter with the performance of a duty towards the inferior which, under the law, the master owes to such servant,—as furnishing tools (Guthrie v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 11 Lea, 372, 47 Am. Rep. 286), or machinery and appliances (Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Lahr, 86 Tenn. 335, 341, 6 S. W. 663), or giving orders with respect to work to be done by the subordinate (Nashville O. & St. L. R. Co. v. Handman, 13 Lea, 423, 429). A test frequently stated in our cases is the authority to give orders, as a vice principal, to the subordinate servant, in directing him when, where, and how to work. . . . Some illustrations of the foregoing are seen in the following cases: Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Bowler, 9 Heisk. 866; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Northington, 91 Tenn. 56, 16 L. R. A. 268, 17 S. W. 880; Chattanooga Electric R. Co. v. Lawson, 101 Tenn. 408, 409, 47 S. W. 489. In these cases a section boss was held to stand NOTE.—As to when conductor is deemed to be a coservant of other railroad employees, including his relation to members of crews of other trains, see also note to Jackson v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. 46 L. R. A. 337.

For a case in this series holding that conductor of one train is not a fellow servant of a L. R. A.

brakeman on another train, see Daniel v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 16 L. R. A. 383.

On the question whether railroad servants working on different trains are fellow servants generally, see cases in note to Sofield v. Guggenheim Smelting Co. 50 L. R. A. 431.

as a vice principal to the section hands under him because he had power to order them with respect to their work, and also because it was his duty to see that they had proper tools with which to work. In East Tennessee & W. N. C. R. Co. v. Collins, 85 Tenn. 227, 1 S. W. 883, and Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Martin, 87 Tenn. 398, 3 L. R. A. 282, 10 S. W. 772, it was held that the engineer was the vice principal of the brakeman on a train, when, in the absence of the conductor, he had power to give the brakeman orders in respect to his work, but otherwise not; and in East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Wright, 100 Tenn. 56, 42 S. W. 1065, it was held that the conductor stands as vice principal to all of the train force, because they are all under his orders." To the same effect, Illinois C. R. Co. v. Spence, 93 Tenn. 173, 42 Am. St. Rep. 907, 23 S. W. 211.

The conductor of the passenger train in question, however, had no power to give orders to the brakeman on the freight train. This ground for adjudging the relation of vice principal and of servant thereunder did not, therefore, exist. Was the conductor of the passenger train charged with any of the personal duties of the master towards the brakeman on the freight train? Was he charged with the duty of furnishing tools and appliances or a safe place to work? There is nothing to show that he was charged with such duties. Was the passenger conductor in charge of, or engaged in, a separate department of the master's business?

In this state the departmental doctrine is recognized in railway cases. The grounds on which it rests are thus stated in Coal Creek Min. Co. v. Davis, 90 Tenn. 711, 719, 720, 18 S. W. 387, 389: "The doctrine rests upon the theory that the vast extent of the business of railway companies has led to the division of their business into separate and distinct departments; that, by reason of this division, a servant in one branch or department has no sort of association or connection with one in another department; that this absence of association gives the servant no opportunity of observing the character of a servant in another department of labor, and no opportunity to guard against the negligence of such servant. The want of consociation is the idea underlying this limitation. This rule has not been extended by us beyond railroad corporations, and we are not disposed to extend it further than to the class of employments to which it has been heretofore limited."

Under this doctrine, it has been held that a track repairer was in a different department from, and hence not the fellow servant of, the crew of a train running upon the track (Haynes v. East Tennessee & G. R.

Co. 3 Coldw. 222); for the same reason, that a section foreman was not the fellow servant of the train crew (Nashville & C. R. Co. v. Carroll, 6 Heisk. 347, 361); that a watchman was not the fellow servant of an engineer (Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Robertson, 9 Heisk. 276); a telegraph operator at a way station not the fellow servant of the conductor of a train (East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. De Armond, 86 Tenn. 73, 6 Am. St. Rep. 816, 5 S. W. 600); a car inspector not the fellow servant of the crew of a switch engine (Taylor v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 93 Tenn. 307, 27 S. W. 663); a depot agent not the fellow servant of the conductor of a train (Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Jackson, 106 Tenn. 438, 61 S. W. 771); a bridge crew not the fellow servant of the crew of a freight train (Freeman v. Illinois C. R. Co. 107 Tenn. 340, 64 S. W. 1); and an engineer not the fellow servant of a telegraph operator (Illinois C. R. Co. v. Bentz, 108 Tenn. 670, 58 L. R. A. 690, 91 Am. St. Rep. 763, 69 S. W. 317).

We have no case holding that separate trains constitute separate and distinct departments of railway service; nor do we think they can be so treated on principle. The reason underlying the departmental doctrine resides in, as already stated, the need of consociation to enable coemployees to judge of the caution, diligence, and efficiency of each other, in order that they may properly protect themselves against negligence. In distinct departments of the service they are regarded as constantly working apart from each other, without the opportunity of mutual observation and criticism. This reason, however, cannot be held to apply to the crews of different trains running upon the tracks of the same company. It does not appear that such crews are permanently attached to any special trains. Moreover, even if not associated upon the same train, the crews of each train, in passing and repassing and in mingling with each other in the handling of traffic in the course of their work, necessarily have an opportunity of judging to some extent how the various trains are managed by the people who man them. At best, the amelioration of the dangers incident to a hazardous business cannot be very great for the servants of a common master, even when they work in the same department, where the number of such coemployees is great, as very often happens in the railway business, and in other kinds of business.

If the conductor of the passenger train in question had no control over the brakeman on the freight train, or was not charged with any duty of the master towards him, as in the furnishing of tools and appliances or a safe place to work, or was not in a different department of the master's service (and we have seen that he had no such powers and bore no such relation), which are the only exceptions our cases recognize as taking co-employees out of the class of fellow servants, then the said conductor and brakeman were fellow servants, and the master was not liable for the injuries inflicted upon one by the negligence of the other. This conclusion seems inevitable, on principle.

The weight of authority likewise supports this conclusion. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Andrews, 17 L. R. A. 191, 1 C. C. A. 636, 6 U. S. App. 75, 50 Fed. 728; Kerlin v. Chicago, P. & St. L. R. Co. 50 Fed. 186-188; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Needham, 25 L. R. A. 837, 11 C. C. A. 56, 27 U. S. App. 227, 63 Fed. 107, 112; Northern P. R. Co. v. Mase, 11 C. C. A. 63, 27 U. S. App. 238, 63 Fed. 114; McMaster v. Illinois C. R. Co. 65 Miss. 264, 268, 7 Am. St. Rep. 654, 657, 4 So. 59; Pittsburg Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Devinney, 17 Ohio St. 197. There are other cases holding a contrary view. Mad-den v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 28 W. Va. 617, 618, 57 Am. Rep. 695-697; Daniel v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 36 W. Va. 397, 411, 413, 417, 419, 16 L. R. A. 383, 387, 389, 390, 32 Am. St. Rep. 870, 882, 885, 888, 889, 15 S. E. 162; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Edmund, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1049, 64 S. W. 727. The Kentucky case is based, in substance, on the ground that separate trains constitute separate departments or that they are equivalent thereto, because the crews of such separate trains are "so disconnected as not to give the one a right or opportunity for controlling, admonishing, or even observing the manner of the collaborators doing his work." We have already held this distinction inadmissible, in a former part of this opinion. The substance of the West Virginia cases (both collision cases), as we understand them, is that it is the personal duty of the master to keep the way clear, and that each conductor in charge of a train should be regarded as representing the master for that purpose. We think this view is fully met by the reasoning of Sanborn, J., in St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Needham, 25 L. R. A. 837, 11 C. C. A. 56, 27 U. S. App. 227, 63 Fed. 107, 112. In that case it appeared there was a rule of the company which provided "that conductors of all trains, when approaching meeting points where they are to take the siding, must go to the forward part of trains, and attend to the switch in person. On train leaving the siding, they must set up switch for the main track in person. Conductors must not assign this duty to anyone, but must attend to it in person in every instance." The decedent was a fireman on a passenger train running south from Little Rock, Arkansas, 69 L. R. A.

December 16, 1889. About two hours before this passenger train arrived at Alexander, a station 10 miles south of Little Rock, the conductor of a construction train of the railroad company caused the switch of the spur track at that place to be opened, ran his train upon that track and then ran it north to Little Rock, and left the switch open, when it was his duty to close it. The passenger train ran into the open switch, and Mr. Needham was killed. In answer to the contention that it was the personal duty of the master to make and keep the way safe, the court, among other things, said: "The line of demarcation between the absolute duty of the master and the duty of the servants is the line that separates the work of construction, preparation, and preservation from the work of operation. Is the act in question work required to construct, to prepare, to place in a safe location, or to keep in repair the machinery furnished by the employer? If so, it is his personal duty to exercise ordinary care to perform it. Is the act in question required to properly and safely operate the machinery furnished, or to prevent the safe place in which it was furnished from becoming dangerous through its negligent operation? If so, it is the duty of the servants to perform that act, and they, and not the master, assume the risk of negligence in its performance. The roadbed, ties, tracks, stations, rolling stock, and all the appurtenances of a well-equipped railroad together constitute a great machine for transportation. It is the duty of the railroad company to use ordinary care to furnish a sound and reasonably safe machine, to use due diligence to keep it in proper repair, and to use ordinary care to employ reasonably competent servants to operate it; but, when this duty is performed, the duty rests upon the servants to operate it carefully. In the case before us there is no evidence that the conductor who negligently left the switch open was not selected with reasonable care. There is no claim that there was any defect in the switch that hindered or prevented the conductor from closing it. The company furnished a switch sufficient to move the rails, and used due care in selecting the servant to operate it. Before this servant commenced to operate it, the switch was closed, so that the passenger train on which the decedent was killed might have passed in safety. It became the duty of the conductor, in the operation of the railroad, to open this switch, and to run his train through it upon the spur track. He did so. It then became his duty to take his train off the spur track and to close the switch. He took his train off and proceeded south, but carelessly left the switch open. His negligence was not in the construction, preparation, or repair of the railroad, but in its operation. The railroad was safe before he made it unsafe by his negligence in operating it, and he was discharging none of the personal duties of the master, but one of the duties of the servant, when he became guilty of the fatal negligence. Any other holding would annihilate the now settled rule of liability for the negligence of fellow servants. It will not do to say that the timely movement and fastening of a switch in the ordinary operation of a railroad is requisite to provide a safe place for the next train to be operated in, and hence is one of the personal duties of the master. Under such a rule, it would become the absolute duty of the master to so operate all switches, all turntables, the levers of all engines, all brakes, all cars, and every appurtenance of the railroad, that every place upon it should at all times be safe, and no negligence of any employee could ever cause an injury to another servant for which the master might not be held liable. At the instant of the injury every place in which an injury is inflicted is unsafe. The test of liability is not the safety of the place nor of the machinery at the instant of injury, but the character of the duty, the negligent performance of which caused the injury. Was it a duty of construction, preparation, or repair, or was it a duty of operation of the machine? In our opinion, the duty of opening and closing a switch in the ordinary operation of a railroad is not one of the personal duties of the master, but a duty of operation,—a duty of the servant,—for negligence in the discharge of which another servant of the same master, engaged in operating a train over the same railroad, cannot recover."

And it was well said by Brewer, J., in Howard v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. 26 Fed. 837, 842,—a collision case: "It will not do to say that, because Ryan's engine was in the way, and collided with decedent's train, the track was not clear, and therefore the master had failed in his duty of providing a safe place for the employee to work in and upon. The negligent use by one employee of perfectly safe machinery will seldom be adjudged a breach of the master's duty of providing a safe place for other employees. Such a construction would make any negligent misplacement of a switch, any negligent collision of trains, even any negligent dropping of tools about a factory, a breach of the duty of providing a safe place. The true idea is that the place and the instruments must in themselves be safe, for this is what the master's duty fairly compels, and not that the master must see that no negligent handling by an employee of the machinery shall create danger. Neither can it be said that Ryan and decedent were engaged in a different class of work. Both were employed in the movement of trains,—the same kind of service. True, they were on different trains, and at the time of the accident had no opportunity of noticing the conduct of each other until too late to prevent the collision. But, being engaged in the same kind of service, and on the same division, they must naturally have often been thrown into contact and had ample opportunities for mutual supervision. To subdivide beyond the class of service, into the place of work, would carry the exception beyond well-recognized limits. It would make the trainmen on one train not fellow servants with those on another; the carpenters and machinists in one room strangers in service to those of another; one gang of section men not coemployees with another,—and all because at the time their places of work happened to be different."

To admit the qualification into the law of master and servant sought to be introduced in this case, making the conductor of one train the vice principal of employees upon another train, thereby declaring each train to constitute a separate department of the service, would practically break down the whole law of fellow servants as previously understood in this state. The law as it exists in this state is not unfair either to the master or the servant. While, on the one hand, it seems, on a casual view, that it is a hardship upon the servant to deny him relief for an injury inflicted upon him by the negligence of a fellow servant in whose selection he had no voice, yet it seems equally hard to make the master liable to one of his servants for the negligence of another servant when he (the master) has exercised due care in selecting such servant. What more could he do? It is impossible that he should supervise and control every act of his servants. Yet if he is made liable to each of his servants for every act of all of his servants in the course of the employment,—and there may be, and there often are, thousands of them,—the law then places upon him a duty which everyone knows that no one can discharge. The true and just view is that expressed in our cases,—that, after the master has exercised due care in the selection of his servants, the danger arising from the negligence of a fellow servant is a danger which one going into the service voluntarily assumes; and it is a risk for which it is presumed he is satisfactorily compensated by the larger wages he can earn in the service than in other employments. In this state we have already narrowed the field covered by the law of fellow servants by withdrawing from it cases wherein one servant of the master is set over other servants, with power to command them in their work, and by the introduction of the departmental doctrine as construed and applied in our previous cases, and have added cases arising under these to the master's generally recognized duty of furnishing safe tools and appliances, a safe place to work, and the selection of reasonably competent servants. We deem it inexpedient to make any further extension than may follow from a natural and reasonable development of the principles already adjudged. We do not think the case now put before us lies within the path of that development.

We are of opinion, therefore, that the circuit judge committed error in not sustaining the demurrer to the third count of the declaration, and the first assignment is sustained.

Other assignments of error are disposed of in a memorandum opinion filed with the record, and need not be further referred to here.

Reverse and remand.

City of MEMPHIS et al., Appts.,
v.

Margaret HASTINGS.

(118 Tenn. 142.)

1. The legislature may authorize a municipal corporation to condemn for park purposes and boulevard land near to, but outside of, its corporate limits.
2. The condemnation of land for a boulevard connecting public parks is not unlawful on the ground that it is for mere convenience or pleasure, not for necessity.
3. An amendment to a city charter authorizing the condemnation of land outside the city limits for park purposes is not invalid for not providing compensation to the owner of the land taken, where it provides that the proceedings for the exercise of the power of condemnation shall be the same as that now provided by law for the taking of private property for public use, and the charter of the city incorporates within itself the general condemnation statutes of the state.
4. A provision in a statute authorizing the condemnation of land for boulevards to connect parks is covered by a title stating the object of the statute to be to authorize the acquisition, improvement, and maintenance of parks.

NOTE.—For a collection of authorities upon the right to take property for the comfort and pleasure of the public, see Knowlton v. Williams, 47 L. R. A. 314.
69 L. R. A.

5. The creation of a park commission and a board of park commissioners is within the purview of a title authorizing the acquisition, maintenance, and improvement of parks.
6. An amendatory act, whose caption merely recites the title of the original act, without enlarging its scope, is constitutional and valid, providing its purview is germane to the title of the original act.

(July 6, 1904.)

APPEAL by petitioners from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Shelby County dismissing a petition for the condemnation of land for the construction of a park boulevard. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. L. B. McFarland, with Mr. J. W. Canada, for appellants:

The legislature may empower a city to spend money on improvements on roads outside of the city limits, and levy a tax therefor.

Hagood v. Hutton, 33 Mo. 244.

And to enforce police ordinances.

Van Hook v. Selma, 70 Ala. 361, 45 Am. Rep. 85; Emeric v. Indianapolis, 118 Ind. 279, 20 N. E. 795.

And to condemn property beyond its limits.

Houghton v. Huron Copper Min. Co. 57 Mich. 547, 24 N. W. 820; Warner v. Gunnison, 2 Colo. App. 430, 31 Pac. 238; Lester v. Jackson, 69 Miss. 887, 11 So. 114; Chambers v. St. Louis, 29 Mo. 543; Newman v. Ashe, 9 Baxt. 380; Hagood v. Hutton, 33 Mo. 244; Thompson v. Moran, 44 Mich. 605, 7 N. W. 180; Warner v. Gunnison, 2 Colo. App. 430, 31 Pac. 238.

Where there is a general law in existence, giving to municipalities or other bodies the right of condemnation, and providing for compensation to the landowners whose property is taken, special acts passed thereafter, extending or enlarging the right of condemnation, are not fatal if they fail to provide for compensation.

Jennings v. LeRoy, 63 Cal. 397; Warner v. Hennepin County, 9 Minn. 139, Gil. 130; Cherry v. Keyport, 52 N. J. L. 544, 20 Atl. 970; Clarke v. Blackmar, 47 N. Y. 150; Re New York Elev. R. Co. 70 N. Y. 327, Affirming order, 7 Hun, 239; Sveikhard v. Michels, 81 Hun. 325, 29 N. Y. Supp. 777, 30 N. Y. Supp. 1135, 8 Misc. 568, 29 N. Y. Supp. 777; Re Sharet's Road, 8 Pa. 89; Smedley v. Ervin, 51 Pa. 445; Wister v. Philadelphia, 6 Legal Gaz. 51, 31 Phila. Leg. Int. 53; Tuttle v. Knox County, 89 Tenn. 157, 14 S. W. 486.

Park ways are incidental and ancillary to parks, and an essential part of the improvement of parks and a park system.

Re New York, 34 Hun, 444, Affirmed in 99 N. Y. 569, 2 N. E. 642; People ex rel. Seaver v. Green, 52 How. Pr. 440; Re Prospect Park & C. I. R. Co. 67 N. Y. 371; Luehrman v. Taxing District, 2 Lea, 430; Brandon v. State, 16 Ind. 197; Ex parte Griffin, 88 Tenn. 548, 13 S. W. 75; Cannon v. Mathes, 8 Heisk. 523; Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 93; State v. Yardley, 95 Tenn. 555, 34 L. R. A. 656, 32 S. W. 481; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Crider, 91 Tenn. 494, 19 S. W. 618.

Land taken by a city for purposes of parks, park ways, or for places of recreation and amusement for the public, and advantageous to the public for recreation and health, is taken for public use; and the power of eminent domain extends thereto.

United States v. Cooper, 9 Mackey, 104; Shoemaker v. United States, 147 U. S. 282, 37 L. ed. 170, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 361; United States v. Gettysburg Electric R. Co. 160 U. S. 668, 40 L. ed. 576, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 427; Rowan v. Portland, 8 B. Mon. 232; County Court v. Griswold, 58 Mo. 175; Re Central Park, 63 Barb. 282; 1 Lewis, Em. Dom. § 176, p. 443; West Chicago Park v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 103 Ill. 33; Higginson v. Nahant, 11 Allen, 530; Re Bushwick Ave. 48 Barb. 9; Re Niagara Falls & Whirlpool R. Co. 108 N. Y. 375, 15 N. E. 429; Brooklyn Park v. Armstrong, 45 N. Y. 234, 6 Am. Rep. 70; Re New York, 99 N. Y. 569, 2 N. E. 642; 10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 1084, 1085; People ex rel. Wilson v. Salomon, 51 Ill. 37; Foster v. Park Omra, 133 Mass. 321; State Park v. Henry, 38 Minn. 266, 36 N. W. 874; Re Central Park, 50 N. Y. 493; Re Washington Park, 52 N. Y. 137; Root's Case, 77 Pa. 276.

Messrs. Randolph & Randolph for appellee.

McAlister, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This record presents a petition exhibited in the circuit court of Shelby county, asking the condemnation of a certain strip of land, 900 feet long and 50 feet wide, belonging to the defendant, for the purpose of extending a boulevard along the west side of Trezevant avenue. It is alleged therein that, under and by virtue of chapter 142, p. 250, of the Acts of 1899, the city of Memphis is empowered to purchase by private negotiation, or acquire by condemnation, a park way for the purpose of connecting the city with any parks that might be established, or for the purpose of connecting the parks with each other. It is further alleged that, for the purpose of carrying out 69 L. R. A.

the powers conferred by said act, the city was authorized to establish by ordinance a park commission, composed of three members, and that Robert Galloway, L. B. McFarland, and J. R. Godwin had been legally elected, and now constitute said park commission. It is further alleged that on the 5th of November, 1903, an ordinance was passed authorizing and directing the park commissioners to obtain, establish, and construct a system of park ways in and around the city of Memphis; that, under and by virtue of this ordinance, the park commission did, on the 9th day of January, 1904, establish said park way so as to begin at Overton park, and run thence south along and with Trezevant avenue to a point 700 feet south of the right of way of the Southern Railway Company, thence west to Cooper avenue, thence south along Cooper avenue to Lamar Boulevard, and thence in a westerly and southwesterly direction to Kerr avenue, and along and with Kerr avenue to Riverside Park and the Mississippi river; said park way to be 200 feet in width as far south as Union avenue, and for the balance of the distance to average 150 feet in width. It is then alleged that, in order to construct this park way or boulevard, a certain portion of the property of defendant is required, and that the object of this petition is to acquire the same by condemnation proceedings.

The prayer of the petition is that the city of Memphis be decreed an easement or right of way to the strip of land described, and that the court issue its writ of inquiry of damages to the sheriff, commanding him to summon a jury, to be named by the court, to inquire into and assess the damages of the defendant by reason of the taking of the strip of land described.

The defendant resisted the condemnation of said land, and in her answer relied upon the following grounds, viz: (1) Because the city of Memphis is attempting to condemn property for public uses situated outside of its corporate limits, and that any act authorizing the exercise of the power to condemn land lying wholly without its corporate limits is unconstitutional and void. (2) That the said chapter 142, p. 250, of the Acts of 1899, is in violation of article 1, § 21, of the Constitution of Tennessee, and is also in violation of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, because it does not provide for just compensation to be paid to the owner of the property sought to be condemned, and that the mode and manner of ascertaining such compensation, and enforcing the same, is not fixed and established in said act. (3) That it violates article 2, § 17, of the Constitution of Tennessee, because the body of the act provides for subject-matters outside of the title, and not in any sense germane to the subject suggested by it.

The cause was heard at the March term, 1904, by the Honorable J. P. Young, who was of opinion that the act of 1899 was unconstitutional, because the subjects of the act are not embraced in the title; and further, that said act makes no provision for compensating the owners of property so condemned for a park boulevard; and further, that such a boulevard connecting the parks is a public convenience, and not a public necessity. The court thereupon dismissed the petition. The city appealed, and has assigned errors.

Chapter 142, pp. 250-252, Acts 1899, § 1, provides as follows: "The parks, or lands to be used for park purposes, may be purchased either by private negotiation or by condemnation, as hereinbefore provided, as may be determined by the legislative council. If the parks, or land for park purposes, be purchased by private negotiation, the negotiation shall be conducted by such member or members of the legislative council as shall be designated by said council; but no purchase shall be effected until the same has the approval of the majority of the legislative council. And said parks, or land for park purposes, may be purchased either within or without the limits of such taxing districts or cities, but not more than 10 miles from the nearest point on the limits of such taxing districts or cities, as such limits may be at the time of such purchase."

Section 2: "Any such taxing district or city may condemn parks or land for park purposes under the power of eminent domain, and such taxing districts and cities are hereby expressly given the power to condemn, for park purposes, the yards, switches, tracks, the depot and property of any character, of any railroad company, and also the property of any manufacturing establishment, and also the property of any other person or corporation either within or without the limits of said taxing district or city, but not over 10 miles beyond the nearest point in said limits as such limits may be at the time of such condemnation; and the proceedings for the exercise of this power of condemnation shall be the same as that now provided by law for the taking of private property for public uses."

Section 3: "That, in order to raise the means necessary to purchase or condemn parks, or land for park purposes, such taxing districts or cities are hereby authorized and empowered to issue their coupon bonds to any amount not exceeding $250, 69 L. R. A.

000, bearing a rate of interest not exceeding 5 per cent maturing at such time, callable in such manner as the legislative council may determine, and payable in lawful money of the United States of America," etc.

Section 4: "That such taxing district or city is authorized and empowered to levy a special park tax only so long as said bonds shall remain outstanding," etc.

Section 5: That such taxing district or city shall have the power to purchase by private negotiation, or acquire by condemnation, a park or park ways, either running from said taxing district or city to any such park, or running between and connecting such parks; and such taxing district or city may purchase or condemn such park ways either within or without the limits of such taxing district or city, but in no case more than 10 miles beyond the nearest point of the limits of such taxing district or city as the same may be at the date of such purchase or condemnation; and the proceeds of the bonds aforesaid may be used for improving or maintaining such park ways."

Section 6 provides for the creation of a park commission by the legislative council of such taxing district, to be composed of three members, who shall be elected by said legislative council.

Section 7 provides that the legislative council of such taxing district or city shall have full and ample power to establish, by ordinance, rules and regulations to govern said park commission, and to govern the employment and discharge of such employees, and to fix the official bonds and the compensation of such park commissioners and employees.

The first objection to this act is that it undertakes to permit the municipal authorities to condemn land for parks and for the building of park ways situated beyond the municipal limits; and it is insisted that the legislature has no power to delegate such authority.

An examination of the act of 1899 will show that it is an amendment to chapter 11, p. 15, of the Acts of 1879, constituting the city of Memphis a taxing district, and providing a local government for the same.

Section 20 of chapter 11, p. 28, of the Acts of 1879, provides: "That private property within the taxing district may be taken for public use in the manner now provided by law for the application of private property to public use."

It is insisted that, under the original charter just recited, conferring upon the city of Memphis the right of eminent domain, the exercise of that power was expressly limited to property lying within the corporate limits. But it is manifest that the act of 1899 has enlarged the exercise of the right of eminent domain by the corporate authorities of the city of Memphis so as to permit property situated beyond the corporate limits to be appropriated and condemned for the purpose of establishing parks, and connecting them by boulevards with the city and with each other.

It is insisted, moreover, on behalf of appellee, that there is a distinction between a grant of authority from the legislature to a municipal corporation to exercise the right of eminent domain in the condemnation of property situated beyond the corporate limits for the establishment of a park, and the grant of such authority for the building of a boulevard connecting such parks. The position is that, while a park may be a matter of public necessity to the inhabitants of a crowded city, as a means of furnishing them healthful recreation, yet no such necessity exists for the condemnation of land for the building of a boulevard merely to connect such parks.

The record discloses that the boulevard in question is to be about 3 miles long, entirely without the city limits, and at its narrowest point 150 feet wide, and at its greatest 200 feet. It is shown that the route to be followed by the park way is over country roads that are now in existence, and the land of defendant is sought for the purpose of widening the roads as they now exist. It is said the entire length of the proposed park way now forms one continuous public road extending between the two parks; and, while it is admitted that a wide road connecting them is a matter of great public convenience, it is not a matter of public necessity, and hence is not subject to be taken in the exercise of the city's right of eminent domain.

In Newman v. Ashe, 9 Baxt. 380, it was held that, while the charter of the city of Knoxville did not in express terms confer the power to purchase and hold real estate outside of the corporate limits for the purpose of constructing waterworks, it did so by necessary implication. The power to construct waterworks—a legitimate corporate purpose—is expressly given, and the authority is given to the mayor and aldermen to protect from injury, by adequate penalties, the pipes, hydrants, or fixtures, buildings, or improvements, belonging to, or in any way pertaining to, said waterworks, whether within or without the limits of said corporation.

In Thompson v. Moran, 44 Mich. 605, 7 N. W. 180, an act of the legislature giving the city the right to purchase, improve, and control Belle Isle park was sustained, notwithstanding the fact that it was situated beyond the corporate limits of Detroit.

Warner v. Gunnison, 2 Colo. App. 430, 31 Pac. 238; Dill. Mun. Corp. 3d ed. §§ 146, 597 et seq.; Houghton v. Huron Copper Min. Co. 57 Mich. 547, 24 N. W. 820; Lesster v. Jackson, 69 Miss. 887, 11 So. 114; Chambers v. St. Louis, 29 Mo. 543; Hagood v. Hutton, 33 Mo. 244.

It will be observed that, under the act of 1899, the city is authorized to exercise the right of eminent domain in condemnation of property either for parks, or park purposes, or park ways, within a limit of 10 miles from the nearest point of said taxing district or city. It was argued at the bar that it would be a great stretch of power on the part of the legislature to permit the municipal corporation to acquire land for public purposes in remote portions of the state; but, as already seen, the power conferred by the act of 1899 upon the municipality of Memphis must be exercised on land situated adjacent or contiguous to the corporate limits, and within a distance of 10 miles from its nearest point.

Moreover, it appears from the record that the boulevard sought to be condemned is at all points within 1 mile of the corporate limits of the city of Memphis.

The next objection is that the condemnation of the land of the defendant is not a public necessity, but merely a public convenience; and, for that reason, the act of the legislature, so far as it attempts to authorize such appropriation, is unconstitutional and void. Mr. Lewis, in his work on Eminent Domain (vol. 1, § 175), says: "Pleasure and recreation are not only essential to health, but tend to the improvement of character. No better instance of a public use can be given than that of a public square or park in the midst of, or convenient to, a dense population. Private property may be taken for the purpose of securing such means of recreation and health. A park is a public use, though not located in a city or town, but only in the vicinity of it. Land may be taken on each side of a highway to be kept open for courtyards and ornament. Highways may be laid out for the purpose of affording access to a position which commands a fine view, or for accommodating pleasure driving. The taking of a large tract in the Adirondacks for a state park was held to be for a public use. So, limiting the height of buildings around a public park or square."

It will be observed, the author states that a park is a public use, though not located in a city or town, but only in the vicinity of it; and, further, that land may be taken for driveways, or for accommodating pleasure driving. In the case of West Chicago Park v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 103 Ill. 33, it was held that land might be condemned for building a boulevard running from the south end of Douglas park to the Illinois & Michigan Canal.

"A public park is a public use." United States v. Cooper, 9 Mackey, 104.

"Land taken in a city for public parks and squares advantageous to the public for recreation, health, or business is taken for a public use, and the power of eminent domain extends thereto." Shoemaker v. United States, 147 U. S. 282, 37 L. ed. 170, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 361.

"The purpose of preserving and marking on the site of the battle of Gettysburg the positions occupied by the different military organizations at that battle is a public use or purpose for which Congress may authorize the condemnation of the necessary land." United States v. Gettysburg Electric R. Co. 160 U. S. 668, 40 L. ed. 576, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 427.

"The right of the public at large to acquire easements over the lands of individuals is not confined to public highways, but extends to many other easements and uses." such as public parks and grounds. Rowan v. Portland, 8 B. Mon. 232.

The legislature, in 1874, authorized the appropriation of land for a public park for the benefit of the inhabitants of St. Louis county located outside the city. Held to be a public use, although chiefly beneficial to the citizens. County Court v. Griswold, 58 Mo. 175.

Land taken in a city for public parks and squares by authority of law, whether advantageous to the public for recreation, health, or business, is taken for a public use; and it is no valid ground of objection to the confirmation of a report of commissioners for opening a new park that the lands embraced in such park are not all contiguous, and that there are intervening blocks and spaces not taken, where such intervening spaces are not so large as to interfere with the integrity or continuity of the plan, or the equalizing of the assessments.

They contribute to the health and enjoyment of the people, and are laid out with drives and ways for public use. The proceedings in the case of Higginson v. Nahant, 11 Allen, 530, and Mt. Washington Road Co.'s Petition, 35 N. H. 134, were justified on the ground that they were public highways in the ordinary sense, although primarily intended as pleasure drives. Re New York, 99 N. Y. 569, 2 N. E. 642.

"Land taken in a city for a public park whether advantageous to the public for recreation, health, or business, is taken for a public use. And the land may be condemned 69 L. R. A.

under the power of eminent domain, not only for public parks in cities, but it may be condemned in a county for the inhabitants of the county." 10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 1084, 1085; Re Central Park, 63 Barb. 282; People ex rel. Wilson v. Salomon, 51 Ill. 37; Foster v. Park Comrs. 133 Mass. 321; State Park v. Henry, 38 Minn. 266, 36 N. W. 874; Brooklyn Park v. Armstrong, 45 N. Y. 234, 6 Am. Rep. 70; Re Central Park, 50 N. Y. 493; Re Washington Park, 52 N. Y. 137; Root's Case, 77 Pa. 276; County Court v. Griswold, 58 Mo. 175.

It is next objected that the act of 1899 makes no provision for compensation to the owner of land condemned for parks or park purposes. In Watauga Water Co. v. Scott, 111 Tenn. 321, 76 S. W. 839, it was said by this court, viz.: "It is a fundamental principle of the law of eminent domain and the taking of property for public use that it can only be done by making just compensation to the person whose property is taken for its reasonable value, and any legislation which confers the right of eminent domain can only be valid upon condition that such compensation is provided for, and the mode and manner of ascertaining and enforcing the same is fixed and established."

Article 1, § 21, of the Constitution, provides, viz.: Private property shall not be taken or applied to public use without just compensation being made therefor.

It is insisted that this indispensable requirement to the exercise of eminent domain for any purpose has not been observed by this act. It is said, however, that the act of 1899 is only an amendment to chapter 11, p. 23, Acts 1879, the original charter of Memphis, which does provide, viz.: "That the private property within the taxing district may be taken for public use in the manner now provided by law for the application of private property to public use."

It will be remarked that, while the right to take property for public use under the act of 1879 is confined to property situated within the taxing district, the amendatory act of 1899 extends the right to be exercised over property located beyond the limits of the taxing district, and within 10 miles of its nearest point. It is in this respect only that the original act is amended. It will be noticed that the original act of 1879 does not in terms provide for compensation to the landowner, yet it says it may be taken for public use in the manner now provided by law, etc.

Now it is insisted that § 20, chap. 11, p. 28, of the Acts of 1879, just quoted, incorporates into the taxing-district charter the general law upon the subject of eminent domain, and, among other provisions, the obligation of just compensation to the owner.

Again it is provided by § 2 of chapter 142, p. 250, Acts 1899, viz.: "Sec. 2. Be it further enacted, That any such taxing district or city may condemn parks, or land for park purposes, under the power of eminent domain; and such taxing districts or cities are hereby expressly given the power to condemn, for park purposes, the yards, switches, tracks, the depot and property of every character, of any railroad company, and also the property of any manufacturing establishment, and also the property of any other person or corporation, either within or without the limits of said taxing district or city, but not over 10 miles beyond the nearest point in said limits, as such limits may be at the time of said condemnation; and the proceedings for the exercise of this power of condemnation shall be the same as that now provided by law for the taking of private property for public uses."

It will be observed that, by virtue of this amendment, land for parks, or park purposes, outside of the city limits, may be condemned, "under the power of eminent domain;" and "the proceedings for the exercise of this power of condemnation shall be the same as that now provided by law for the taking of private property for public use."

We are clearly of opinion that the amendatory act of 1899 became incorporated with the act of 1879 chartering the city of Memphis, and that the general statutes of the state providing for the condemnation of private property for public uses were thereby imported into the original charter as fully as though they had been specifically designated by chapter and section of the Code. The general law providing for the taking of private property for internal improvements is set out in §§ 1844 et seq., Shannon's Code. These sections provide as follows:

"Sec. 1844. Any person or corporation authorized by law to construct any railroad, turnpike, canal, toll bridge, road, causeway, or other work of internal improvement, to which the like privilege is conceded, may take the real estate of individuals, not exceeding the amount prescribed by law or by the charter under which the person or corporation acts in the manner and upon the terms herein provided.

"Sec. 1845. The party seeking to appropriate such land shall file a petition in the circuit court of the county in which the land lies, setting forth, in substance, (1) the parcel of land a portion of which is wanted and the extent wanted; (2) the name of the owner of such land, or, if unknown, stating the fact; (3) the object for which the land is wanted; (4) a prayer that a suitable portion of land may be decreed to the petitioner, and set apart by metes and bounds.

"Sec. 1846. Notice of this petition shall be given to the owner of the land, or, if a nonresident of the county, to his agent, at least five days before its presentation."

"Sec. 1849. After the requisite notice has been given, if no sufficient cause to the contrary is shown, the court shall issue a writ of inquiry of damages to the sheriff commanding him to summon a jury to inquire and assess the damages."

"Sec. 1856. The jury will then proceed to examine the ground, and may hear testimony, but no argument of counsel; and set apart by metes and bounds a sufficient quantity of land for the purposes intended, and assess the damages occasioned to the owner thereby.

"Sec. 1857. In estimating the damages the jury shall give the value of the land without deduction; but incidental benefits which may result to the owner by reason of the proposed improvement may be taken into consideration in estimating the incidental damages."

"Sec. 1859. If no objection is made to the report, it is confirmed by the court, and the land decreed to the petitioner upon payment to the defendants, or to the clerk for their use, [the amount] of the damages assessed, with costs."

"Sec. 1865. No person or company shall, however, enter upon such land for the purpose of actually occupying the right of way until the damages assessed by the jury of inquest and the costs have been actually paid; or, if an appeal has been taken, until the bond has been given to abide by the final judgment, as before provided.

"Sec. 1866. If, however, such person or company has actually taken possession of such land, occupying it for the purposes of internal improvement, the owner of such land may petition for a jury of inquest, in which case the same proceedings may be had, as near as may be, as hereinbefore provided, or he may sue for damages, in the ordinary way, in which case the jury shall lay off the land by metes and bounds, and assess the damages as upon the trial of an appeal from the return of a jury of inquest."

These sections of Shannon's Code substantially embrace the proceedings that are required to be taken for the condemnation of private property for any public use, which provisions, it will be observed, afford the landowner an ample remedy to receive just compensation for the land taken.

As already stated, in the opinion of the court, these sections of the Code, by the references to them found in the original charter of 1879, as well as in the amendatory act of 1899, have become an integral part of the charter of the city of Memphis.

It is next insisted that the body of the act of 1899 contains subjects which are not embraced in, or germane to, its title. The caption of the act is: "An Act to Amend an Act Entitled an Act to Establish Taxing Districts in This State, and to Provide a Means of Local Government for the Same, being Chapter 2 of the Acts of 1879 and the Acts Amendatory Thereof, so as to Authorize and Empower the Taxing Districts and Cities Organized under Said Act to Acquire, Improve, and Maintain Parks for the Benefit of the Public. Acts 1899, p. 250, chap. 142.

It is said, in the first place, that nothing is stated in the title in respect to acquiring, improving, and maintaining roadways or boulevards; but the title limits the right to acquiring, improving, and maintaining parks for the benefit of the public.

It is insisted that the body of the act authorizing the acquisition or condemnation of land for park ways or boulevards extending through the country merely for the purpose of connecting two parks with each other is not germane to the title.

This criticism upon the act cannot be maintained. It would be too narrow a construction of the act to exclude from its scope the building of boulevards or driveways necessary to connect two parks situated in remote parts of the city. Moreover, the legislature has not defined the shape or extent of the parks to be laid out under the provisions of this act, but has left that matter exclusively to the taste and discretion of the park commissioners and the legislative council. These authorities, in the exercise of their judgment, instead of laying out one park within the corporate limits of the city, have provided for the opening of two parks,—one situated northeast of the city, and known as "Overton park," and the other located southwest of the city, and designated as "Riverside park." For the convenience of the public, it was necessary that these two parks should be connected by a driveway, which, as now designed by the park commissioners, has become a part of the parks themselves. It is wholly immaterial how irregular and eccentric the shape of the parks thus constructed may appear, since that matter is confided exclusively to the judgment of the park commissioners. Everything that pertains to the building, extending, or connecting the parks authorized to be built under the provisions of the amendatory act of 1899 is necessary, and by implication within the general purview of the act.

In Re New York, 34 Hun, 444, the court 69 L. R. A.

said: "The park ways designated and described in the act are designed for avenues uniting four of the parks. As they have been described, they are peculiarly appropriate for that purpose, and may well be regarded as incidents to, or extensions of, the areas of the parks themselves. The one, uniting what has been designated as the Van Cortlandt and Bronx parks, is intended to consist of about 80 acres of land devoted to a park way 600 feet in width and nearly 1 mile in length. Another, similarly to unite the Bronx and Pelham parks, includes an appropriation of about 91 acres of land, exclusive of an existing boulevard. The width of this park way will be 400 feet, and its length about $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles. The third is of minor importance, and is designed to serve as a similar avenue between what is called the Crotona and the Bronx parks." People ex rel. Seaver v. Green, 52 How. Pr. 440.

The court of appeals of New York, in Re New York, 99 N. Y. 576, 2 N. E. 642, in dealing with a similar subject, said as follows: "The title . . . is, 'An Act Laying out Public Places and Parks and Park Ways in the 23rd and 24th Wards of the City of New York and in the Adjacent District of Westchester County, and Authorizing the Taking of Lands for the Same' (Laws of 1884, chap. 522, p. 625), and is claimed to violate § 16, art. 3, of the Constitution, requiring that a private or local bill shall embrace but one subject, which shall be expressed in the title. Section 6 of the park act authorizes the use of a portion of Van Cortlandt park for the purpose of a rifle range and military parade ground, and § 12 extends over the whole of the newly acquired territory the jurisdiction of the department of public parks, which by the city charter of 1873 was made the dominant authority for their maintenance and protection. It is insisted that two new and separate subjects were thus injected into the body of the act, without hint or reference in the title. The criticism is quite too rigid and narrow. It would lead up to a condemnation which few titles would escape, until they became cumbersome and awkward digests of the details of their enactments. What are here denominated new subjects are fairly and reasonably elements and details of the laying out of new parks and the acquisition of lands therefor, and so embraced in the one general subject of the bill."

It is also objected that the body of the act authorizing the creation of a park commission and the election of commissioners presents another subject that is not embraced within the title of chapter 142, p. 250, Acts 1899.

This objection is also untenable, since the creation of a park commission and a board of park commissioners is clearly within the purview of an act which authorizes the city of Memphis to acquire, improve, and maintain parks for the benefit of the public. A park commission is a useful and almost indispensable instrumentality for the maintenance and supervision of a system of public parks. Other criticisms of a similar nature are made on this act, but none are well taken, since, in our opinion, they are all settled by the rule laid down in Hynan v. State, 87 Tenn. 109, 1 L. R. A. 497, 9 S. W. 372. The rule therein announced is that an amendatory act whose caption merely recites the title of the original act, without enlarging its scope, is constitutional and valid, provided its purview is germane to the title of the original act.

All of the subjects which are claimed by counsel for defendant in error to be outside of the title of the amendatory act are clearly within its purview, since they all relate to the one subject-matter embraced in the title, vis., the acquisition, improvement, and maintenance of parks for the benefit of the public. It results that the judgment below was erroneous, and is reversed, the demurrer overruled, and the cause remanded.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, SIXTH CIRCUIT.

George E. KINZEL, Admr., etc., of Joseph H. Kinzel, Deceased, Plff. in Err.,
v.

ATLANTA, KNOXVILLE, & NORTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

(137 Fed. 489.)

A railroad engineer who obeys, although reluctantly, an order to take his train through a mountainous region on its regular trip at a time of heavy rains, when land slides are anticipated, assumes the risk of such slides, and cannot hold the company responsible in case his train is carried from the track by a slide which comes upon it so suddenly that there is no time to escape, and the danger of which was not observed by a track inspector, who had passed the spot just before the train reached there; since it must be regarded as pure accident.

(May 11, 1905.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Tennessee to review a judgment in favor of defendant in an action to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of plaintiff's intestate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Argued before Severens and Richards, Circuit Judges, and Cochran, District Judge. Messrs. V. A. Huffaker and Pickle & Turner, for plaintiff in error:

There was no express contract of assumption of risks by the intestate at any time.

NOTE.—For a case in this series holding that the negligence of the conductor of a freight train in going forward with the engine to examine culverts after a storm under the order of the road master is a question for the jury, see Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Fowler, 48 L. R. A. 531.

As to servant's right of action generally for injuries received in obeying direct command, see also Dalemand v. Saalfeldt, 48 L. R. A. 753, and note; Finn v. Cassidy, 53 L. R. A. 877; and Illinois Southern R. Co. v. Marshall, 66 L. R. A. 297.

49 L. R. A.

The risks that are assumed by the servant, as an implied condition or incident of his contract of employment, are "ordinary risks" of the service. "Ordinary risks" are those obviously incident to the work.

Winkler v. St. Louis Basket & Box Co. 137 Mo. 394, 38 S. W. 921; Hannigan v. Lehigh & H. River R. Co. 157 N. Y. 244, 51 N. E. 992; Consolidated Coal Co. v. Haenni, 146 Ill. 614, 35 N. E. 162; Doyle v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 42 Minn. 79, 43 N. W. 787; Davis v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 152 Pa. 314, 25 Atl. 498; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Arochibald, 170 U. S. 665, 42 L. ed. 1188, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 777; Worlds v. Georgia R. Co. 99 Ga. 283, 25 S. E. 646; Jenney Electric Light & P. Co. v. Murphy, 115 Ind. 566, 18 N. E. 30; Chocataw O. & G. R. Co. v. McDade, 50 C. C. A. 591, 112 Fed. 891, Affirmed in 191 U. S. 68, 48 L. ed. 101, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 24.

Employees do not assume the risks of the negligence of the company.

Chocataw, O. & G. R. Co. v. McDade, 50 C. C. A. 591, 112 Fed. 891, 191 U. S. 67, 48 L. ed. 100, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 24.

The risk to which deceased was subjected, and which caused his death, was one traceable directly and alone to defendant's negligence.

It is the duty of the employer to furnish and maintain safe places for his employees to work, which, in the case of railroads, means safe roadbed and track.

Hugh v. Texas & P. R. Co. 100 U. S. 213, 25 L. ed. 612; Union P. R. Co. v. Daniels (Union P. R. Co. v. Snyder), 152 U. S. 684, 38 L. ed. 597, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 756; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 37 L. ed. 772, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 914; Chocataw, O. & G. R. Co. v. McDade, 191 U. S. 67, 48 L. ed. 100, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 24; Northern P. R. Co. v. Babcock, 154 U. S. 190, 38 L. ed. 958, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 978.

Union P. R. Co. v. O'Brien, 161 U. S. 451, 40 L. ed. 766, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 618; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Archibald, 170 U. S. 670, 42 L. ed. 1191, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 777.

The master's care and diligence as regards safety of place to work, etc., must be such as "the exigency reasonably demands."

Union P. R. Co. v. O'Brien, 161 U. S. 451, 40 L. ed. 766, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 618; Hough v. Texas & P. R. Co. 100 U. S. 213, 25 L. ed. 612; Georgia P. R. Co. v. Dooly, 12 L. R. A. 342, note, 86 Ga. 294, 12 S. E. 923.

The employee may unquestionably assume that the employer has performed his duty, in this regard, and proceed in the service, relying upon such performance of duty by the employer without question or investigation.

Texas & P. R. Co. v. Archibald, 170 U. S. 665, 42 L. ed. 1188, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 777; Union P. R. Co. v. O'Brien, 161 U. S. 451, 40 L. ed. 766, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 618, 49 Fed. 538; James B. Clow & Sons v. Boltz, 34 C. C. A. 550, 92 Fed. 572; New York N. H. & H. R. Co. v. O'Leary, 35 C. C. A. 562, 93 Fed. 737; Valley R. Co. v. Keegan, 31 C. C. A. 255, 58 U. S. App. 377, 87 Fed. 849; Rockport Granite Co. v. Bjornholm, 53 C. C. A. 429, 115 Fed. 947.

This duty of the master to protect his servant against injury by keeping him in a safe place to work, and out of an unsafe one, is a positive, active duty of the master that he cannot delegate to anyone, even to a fellow servant, so as to defeat his own liability for its breach.

Union P. R. Co. v. Daniels (Union P. R. Co. v. Snyder), 152 U. S. 684, 38 L. ed. 597, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 756; Neeley v. Southwestern Cotton Seed Oil Co. 13 Okla. 356, 64 L. R. A. 145, 75 Pac. 537; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Swett, 92 Am. Dec. 206, and note, 45 Ill. 197.

It is no answer to his failure to maintain safety of place that the master made the place safe originally, and has kept a sufficient force to inspect and repair it, where there was failure to repair before the servant was sent into the unsafe place.

Union P. R. Co. v. Daniels (Union P. R. Co. v. Snyder), 152 U. S. 684, 38 L. ed. 597, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 756; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Archibald, 170 U. S. 665, 42 L. ed. 1188, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 777, Affirmed and Applied in Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. McDade, 191 U. S. 67, 48 L. ed. 100, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 24; Georgia P. R. Co. v. Dooly, 12 L. R. A. 343, note, 86 Ga. 294, 12 S. E. 923; Union P. R. Co. v. Fort, 17 Wall, 553, 21 L. ed. 739.

The servant will be repelled on the ground of contributory negligence, in cases of this character, only where he has full knowledge of the existence of the defects, and full appreciation of their dangerous character, and has recklessly and with such knowledge encountered the same.

Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. McDade, 191 U. S. 68, 48 L. ed. 100, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 24; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Archibald, 170 U. S. 665, 42 L. ed. 1188, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 777; Houston E. & W. T. R. Co. v. De Walt, 96 Tex. 121, 97 Am. St. Rep. 893, 70 S. W. 531; Stephens v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 96 Mo. 207, 9 Am. St. Rep. 336, 9 S. W. 589; Ittner Brick Co. v. Killian (Neb.) 93 N. W. 951; Delaware River Iron-Ship Bldg. & E. Works v. Nuttall, 119 Pa. 149, 13 Atl. 65; Williams v. Clark, 204 Pa. 416, 54 Atl. 315; Harrison v. Denver & R. G. W. R. Co. 7 Utah, 523, 27 Pac. 728; McArc v. Tourtellotte, 167 Mass. 69, 48 L. R. A. 542, 44 N. E. 1071; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Bayfield, 37 Mich. 205; Harder & H. Coal Min. Co. v. Schmidt, 43 C. C. A. 532, 104 Fed. 282; Goldthorpe v. Clark-Nickerson Lumber Co. 31 Wash. 467, 71 Pac. 1091; English v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 24 Fed. 906; O'Maley v. South Boston Gaslight Co. 158 Mass. 135, 47 L. R. A. 164, 32 N. E. 1119; East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Duffield, 12 Lea, 63, 47 Am. Dec. 319.

Messrs. Smith, Hammond, & Smith and Cornick, Wright, & Frantz for defendant in error.

Richards, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a suit for the wrongful death of the plaintiff's intestate, Joseph Kinzel, who was a locomotive engineer in the employ of the defendant company, and lost his life in the wreck of his engine, caused by a landslide in the mountains of Tennessee. The court below twice directed a verdict for the defendant on the ground that Kinzel's death was the result of a pure accident, for which the railway company was not to blame, and the risk of which he had assumed. This action is here for review.

The material facts are conceded. Kinzel had been a locomotive engineer for seven years, and for three years had run a freight train south from Knoxville through the mountains into Georgia. Two or 3 miles south of the station of Wetmore the mountainous region began, and continued for about 22 miles. For the most of this distance the railroad ran along the side of the mountains, at the foot of which flows the Hiawassee river. The steepest part of the line began at Appalachia, about 20 miles south of Wetmore, and extended several miles south to Farner, which is near the summit. Beyond Farner is Blue Ridge, Georgia. Naturally the portion of the line most liable to landslides was that between Appalachia and Fanner. The portion between Wetmore and Appalachia was regarded as comparatively safe. The accident occurred about 6 or 7 miles south of Wetmore, about 11 o'clock on the night of February 27, 1902. That day Kinzel was engaged as usual, in running freight train No. 13 from Knoxville to Blue Ridge. He left Knoxville at 12:30 P. M., and arrived at Wetmore at 5:30 P. M., about two hours late. He was drawing a train of twelve cars, loaded with coal and coke. It had been raining for two or three days, and slides and washouts were anticipated in the mountains. Because of this, trains Nos. 11, 12, and 14, of that date, between Blue Ridge and Knoxville, were annulled. This left but one train going north (No. 2, a passenger train) and one train (No. 13, Kinzel's freight) running south. The passenger train, No. 2, was delayed by small slides in the mountains, and did not reach Wetmore until after 9 o'clock. In the meantime Kinzel, acting under a special order, went back to Grady with his engine, and brought four camp cars, with track tools and men, to Wetmore, for the purpose of taking them along with his train up into the mountains to repair the track next day. Passenger train No. 2, when it arrived at Wetmore, reported that it had struck several small slides, that a large one fell in behind it, and that it did not think No. 13 could get through that night. Before the arrival of No. 2 at Wetmore, Kinzel asked the operator to tell the train despatcher that he did not want to go through that night, because it was not safe, and that he could not go through anyhow. The reply came back that he would have to proceed with his train, and cautioned him to run slowly and carefully, and look out for slides. About 9:30 he pulled out south, having cut off two of his loaded cars, and attached the four camp cars which were needed for the next day's work in the mountains. The primary object of sending Kinzel's train from Wetmore south that night was to get the extra track gang from Grady to the mountain line, in order to open the road for the next day's business. The secondary purpose was to advance the freight as far as Appalachia. There was no idea of any serious trouble between Wetmore and Appalachia. The trouble was usually between Appalachia and Fanner. Kinzel proceeded south, observing the caution to run slowly. The track was being patrolled by an extra gang of track walkers. About 6 or 7 miles south of Wetmore, where the road ran along the foot of the mountain about 20 feet above the river, and when Kinzel was in sight of the light of 69 L. R. A.

the section foreman, who had a few minutes before passed along where he was then running, suddenly and without warning a slide occurred under or directly in front of the engine, which carried the track and engine down into the river. The section foreman was within 300 or 400 yards of the engine, watching it, when the slide carried it down. Kinzel, though terribly hurt, was still alive when taken out of the wreck. He told the foreman that he saw his light, and thought everything was all right, but the slide came in on him, giving him no chance to avoid it.

There was no testimony tending to show that the defendant was to blame for the slide which caused the accident. There was in Union P. R. Co. v. O'Brien, 161 U. S. 451, 40 L. ed. 766, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 618. For aught that appeared, the roadbed was properly constructed, and the track that night was exceptionally well patrolled. It was not in Fisher v. Oregon Short Line & U. N. R. Co. 22 Or. 533, 16 L. R. A. 519, 30 Pac. 425. The section foreman passed along on his round of inspection but a few minutes before the slide took place, and there was nothing to indicate trouble ahead. The track and its surroundings appeared to be all right.

The plaintiff's case therefore rests solely on the claim that the defendant was at fault in sending Kinzel into the mountains that night. It is insisted he was ordered into a place of unusual danger, despite his protest and against his will, and was thus exposed to perils known to the company, but of which he was ignorant, with the result described. In other words, it is insisted he was the victim of a negligent order which subjected him to risks outside his regular employment. If this claim found support in the testimony, there might have been a case for the jury. But there was no order given him, in the sense claimed. Kinzel was not engaged in extraordinary work under a special order. He was on his regular run. It is true, he was being exposed to an additional risk by reason of the weather. A railroad in a mountainous region is liable to slides and washouts in rainy weather. This is a matter of common knowledge. Kinzel knew this when he took the job. And of course he assumed the risk. It was one of the risks of his employment. Union P. R. Co. v. O'Brien, 161 U. S. 451, 456, 40 L. ed. 766, 770, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 618, 1 C. A. 354, 4 U. S. App. 221, 49 Fed. 538. Rains will come in mountains as well as elsewhere, but trains must be run, and roads kept open for traffic, notwithstanding the increased risk to operatives.

Moreover, the record contains plenty of proof that Kinzel was advised on the day of the accident of the increased risk of the situation. He reached Wetmore two hours late. He was ordered to wait there for the passenger train coming north, which did not arrive until 9 o'clock. In the meantime he was sent to Grady for the extra track gang. This advised him there was trouble in the mountains. Because he anticipated trouble ahead—feared there might be slides on the track—he asked to be allowed to stay at Wetmore overnight. The exigencies of the situation would not permit the granting of the request. It was necessary to get the extra gang through to Appalachia that night, so as to put the track between there and Farner in condition for the next day's business. So he was told to proceed, but to run slowly and carefully and look out for slides. This again was notice and warning that there was danger of slides ahead. It is to be observed, however, that the order was not a special one. It did not require exceptional work,—work outside his line of duty. It only required him to do the work he had undertaken to do when he accepted the job. When he pulled out of Wetmore that night, although he did so reluctantly, he nevertheless assumed the risk. He did only what every engineer must do under like circumstances. 1 Labatt, Mast. & S. § 438, and cases cited; Linch v. Sagamore Mfg. Co. 143 Mass. 206, 210, 9 N. E. 728; Toomey v. Eureka Iron & Steel Works, 89 Mich. 249, 50 N. W. 850; Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Hennessey, 38 C. C. A. 307, and note, p. 314, 96 Fed. 713.

Kinzel's reluctance to go on that night was due to the fact that he feared that in the darkness he might run into obstructions. The declaration averred there were obstructions known to the company, of which he was not advised, that caused the accident. If the proof had in any degree supported this averment,—if it had tended to show that there were dangerous obstructions on the track which were known to the company, and that, in spite of his protest the company had ordered him on without advising him of their presence, and without taking proper steps to protect him against them,—another case would be presented. But the accident was not due to an obstruction into which Kinzel ran because of the darkness. Every reasonable precaution was taken by the company to protect him against obstructions. He was warned to run slowly and look out for slides, and the track was carefully patrolled. Everything was done that could be done. The slide which caused the accident was not known to the company when it directed Kinzel to proceed south. It had not then occurred, and could not have been anticipated. The track was clear when Kinzel reached the place of the accident, and the light of the trackman who had preceded him but a few minutes was in sight. The slide came on so suddenly that Kinzel could not avoid it. He did not run into the slide because of the darkness, but the slide virtually ran into him. In an instant the track was swept from under him. The result would have been the same if, under similar circumstances, the slide had occurred during the daytime. We agree with the court below that it was a case of pure accident, for which the company cannot be held liable.

The judgment is affirmed.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

W. D. BRANNON

v.

Elizabeth CURTIS.

(98 Tenn. 153.)

1. The rental value of the premises during the possession of the vendee must be deducted from his recovery for breach of a covenant of seisin, which is made by an outstanding contingent remainder, where his deed gave him at least a life estate, and the life tenancy has continued so as to preclude the remainder-men from demanding rents for any part of the time.
2. Restoration of possession is an indispensable ingredient of a decree in equity in favor of a vendee for breach of a covenant of seisin made by an outstanding contingent remainder, where his deed gave him at least a life estate, and he has had the benefit of possession.

3. A recovery for improvements to the extent that they may have permanently enhanced the rental or usable value of the life estate may be allowed to the vendee, with his purchase money, interest thereon, and taxes paid, on breach of a covenant of seisin made by an outstanding contingent remainder, when his recovery in equity is conditioned on his restoration of possession to the vendor, and his accounting for his use of the premises.

(February 6, 1897.)

NOTE.—See the following case of Gerbert v. Sons of Abraham, and note.

69 L. R. A.

CROSS-APPEALS from a decree of the Court of Chancery Appeals modifying a decree of the Chancery Court for Davidson County which set aside, under a bill of review, a decree which had been passed for the rescission of a contract to purchase real estate; the plaintiff appealing from so much of the decree as denied him a recovery for improvements, and defendant appealing from so much as refused to compel plaintiff to restore what he had received under the contract. Modified.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. John B. Daniel, for plaintiff, Brannon:

The very fact that Brannon came into court and asked and obtained a rescission was in law a restoration, and had that effect.

Kincaid v. Brittain, 5 Sneed, 124, Rawle, Covenants for Title, pp. 100-105; Park v. Cheek, 4 Coldw. 28; Recohs v. Younglove, 8 Baxt. 387.

Where suit is brought upon breach of any of the covenants and judgment obtained, and that judgment satisfied, it will have the effect to preclude the vendee from asserting any rights to the property conveyed to him out of the conveyance to which the action arose.

2 Sutherland, Damages, 265; Tucker v. Clarke, 2 Sandf. Ch. 96; Noonan v. Ilsley, 21 Wis. 146; Porter v. Hill, 9 Mass. 36. 6 Am. Dec. 22; Stinson v. Sumner, 9 Mass. 150, 6 Am. Dec. 49; Blanchard v. Ellis, 1 Gray, 202, 61 Am. Dec. 417; Parker v. Brown, 15 N. H. 188.

The covenant of seisin is broken as soon as made, if in fact the vendor did not have a good title.

Kincaid v. Brittain, 5 Sneed, 120; Park v. Cheek, 4 Coldw. 20.

Ordinarily the measure of damages is the purchase money and interest. The courts modify the rule to suit the facts of any particular case, to the end that the equity of the case may be met. The general statement of the rule has not any reference to improvements which the vendee placed upon the property to the extent that such improvements have permanently enhanced the value of the property.

2 Sutherland, Damages, 285; Morrison v. Underwood, 20 N. H. 369; Hartford & S. Ore Co. v. Miller, 41 Conn. 112, Rawle, Covenants for Title, 236; Staats v. Ten Eyck, 3 Caines, 111, 2 Am. Dec. 254.

In this case the damage incurred is the direct result of a breach of the contract, and a result which must have been contemplated by the party entering into the covenant.

Mayne, Damages, 2d ed. 147; Dart, Vendors, 4th ed. 726.

The decree is as absolutely binding and conclusive on Mrs. Curtis as if she had been personally served with the process, and had defended.

69 L. R. A.

Under no circumstances can any defense be made after twelve months, when attachment has been properly issued and levied.

Mulloy v. White, 3 Tenn. Ch. 9; Claybrook v. Wade, 7 Coldw. 562; Bledsoe v. Wright, 2 Baxt. 471.

Mr. A. S. Colyar for defendant.

Caldwell, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a bill of review. In the year 1885 the complainant, Mrs. Elizabeth Curtis, sold and conveyed to the defendant, W. D. Brannon, a small building lot in the city of Nashville at the price of $900. The deed executed contained a covenant of seisin in fee, and the vendee went into actual possession. He improved the lot, and is still in possession. In a litigation between other parties about a tract of land including this lot, the court, at its December term, 1892, in construing a certain device, adjudged that one Overton, whose deed constituted a link in the title of Mrs. Curtis to this lot, did not in fact own the fee, but that his ownership was subject to a contingent remainder in favor of any child or children he might leave surviving at his death. On account of that adjudication, and the consequent impairment of his title, Brannon thereafter, while still in possession of the lot, and before the falling in of the life estate, filed his bill against Mrs. Curtis in the chancery court of Davidson county, alleging her nonresidence, and the breach of her covenant of seisin, and seeking a recovery against her for the $900 paid for the lot, with interest, for $560 for improvements by him placed upon the land, and for $60 taxes paid thereon. The bill was taken for confessed against Mrs. Curtis, and thereafter a final decree was rendered against her. This decree allowed Brannon a full recovery for all he claimed, and directed a sale of the property attached, without requiring him to surrender possession, or to account for mesne profits. In January 1896, after the sale of the property attached, and before confirmation, Mrs. Curtis filed the present bill to review the final decree against her, under Brannon's bill, for errors of law alleged to be apparent upon its face, and for newly discovered evidence. Brannon's demurrer to this bill was overruled by the chancellor, who adjudged that the decree impeached was erroneous in law upon its face in three particulars: First, because it allowed the vendee a full recovery of purchase money and interest thereon, without abatement for rents and profits; secondly, because it allowed such recovery without restoring the possession to the vendor; and, thirdly, because it allowed a recovery for improvements without proper cause shown. And thereupon the chancellor further adjudged that the said decree be reviewed, reversed, and set aside, for the reasons stated, and that a reference be had to ascertain the value of the rents and profits of the lot since the vendee went into possession. The court of chancery appeals affirmed the decree under the bill of review in so far as it denied Brannon a recovery for improvements, but reversed it, and restored the decree under the original bill, in other respects. Both parties have appealed, and in this court complain of such parts of the decree of the court of chancery appeals as are adverse to them, respectively.

1. A covenant of seisin is an assurance to the vendee that the vendor has the very estate, in quantity and quality, which he purports to convey. It is a personal covenant in præsenti, and, if not true, is breached the instant it is made, and an immediate right of action accrues to the vendee for its breach, without and before eviction. These well-settled propositions are announced in the following cases,—partly in some and partly in others,—and as many more cases to the same effect could readily be cited: Kincaid v. Brittain, 5 Sneed, 119; Recohs v. Younglove, 8 Baxt. 387; Park v. Cheek, 4 Coldw. 28; Robinson v. Coulter, 90 Tenn. 707, 25 Am. St. Rep. 708, 18 S. W. 250; Baird v. Goodrich, 5 Heisk. 23; Pollard v. Dwight, 4 Cranch, 421, 2 L. ed. 666; Le Roy v. Beard, 8 How. 451, 12 L. ed. 1151; Peters v. Boicman, 98 U. S. 58, 25 L. ed. 91; Logan v. Moulder, 1 Ark. 313, 33 Am. Dec. 338; Baker v. Hunt, 40 Ill. 264, 89 Am. Dec. 346; Clement v. Bank of Rutland (Clement v. National Bank) 61 Vt. 298, 4 L. R. A. 425, 17 Atl. 717; Gilbert v. Bulkley, 5 Conn. 262, 13 Am. Dec. 57; Dale v. Shively, 8 Kan. 276; Real v. Hollister, 20 Neb. 112, 29 N. W. 189; Murphy v. Price, 48 Mo. 247; Bickford v. Page, 2 Mass. 455; Wilson v. Cochran, 46 Pa. 229; Abbott v. Allen, 14 Johns. 252; Fitzhugh v. Croghan, 2 J. J. Marsh. 429, 19 Am. Dec. 139; Price v. Deal, 90 N. C. 290; Brandt v. Foster, 5 Iowa, 287; Morse v. Garner, 47 Am. Dec. 570, and note (1 Strobh. L. 514); Backus v. McCoy, 3 Ohio, 211, 17 Am. Dec. 585; Laurence v. Montgomery, 37 Cal. 183. See also 2 Sutherland, Damages, 2d ed. § 592; Rawle, Covenants for Title, 5th ed. § 58; 4 Kent, Com. *471; 2 Devlin, Deeds, § 942.

2. If the breach be total, or such that the vendee may so treat it, the measure of damages is, ordinarily, the amount of consideration paid, with interest thereon. Kincaid v. Brittain, 5 Sneed, 119; Park v. Cheek, 4 Coldw. 27; Recohs v. Younglove, 8 Baxt. 387; Logan v. Moulder, 1 Ark. 313, 33 Am. Dec. 344; Bibb v. Freeman, 59 Ala. 612; 69 L. R. A.

Backus v. McCoy, 3 Ohio, 211, 17 Am. Dec. 585; Herndon v. Harrison, 34 Miss. 486, 69 Am. Dec. 399; Swofford v. Whipple, 3 G. Greene, 261, 54 Am. Dec. 498; Gilbert v. Bulkley, 5 Conn. 262, 13 Am. Dec. 57; Meeklem v. Blake, 99 Am. Dec. 73, note (22 Wis. 495); 4 Kent, Com. *475; 2 Sutherland, Damages, § 593; Rawle, Covenants for Title, § 158; 3 Sedgw. Damages, 8th ed. § 966; 2 Devlin, Deeds, § 894.

3. The recovery of the consideration and interest is subject, however, to abatement for rents during the vendee's possession, when it appears that he cannot be made liable therefor to the owner of the paramount title. A vendee, having enjoyed the advantages of possession at the expense of his vendor, is bound, especially in a court of equity, to account for those advantages when he demands repayment of the purchase money with interest. He cannot, in such a case, hold benefits, and at the same time recover as if he had not received them. Some of the authorities treat liability for rents as the reason for allowing interest on the consideration paid. Kent says: "The interest is to countervail the claim for mesne profits, to which the grantee is liable." 4 Kent, Com. *475. Sutherland says: "Possession without title may compensate for the interest on the purchase money, if there be no liability, which will be enforced to the real owner." 2 Sutherland, Damages, § 598. In Flint v. Steadman it was ruled that the vendee, who had been in possession in such manner as not to be accountable for the use of the premises, could recover only the purchase money without interest. 36 Vt. 210. We see no good reason for limiting the vendee's liability for rents to the interest on the purchase money if they have in fact been of greater value. He should account for all the benefits he has derived from the possession, and, if not responsible therefor to some other person, his vendor should have an abatement to that extent. "The whole consideration money and interest cannot be the criterion of damages, except in those cases where the purchaser derives no benefit from the conveyance." 2 Sutherland, Damages, § 597. "But if some title passes, though so far short of that covenanted for that the grantee is clearly not bound to retain it for a proportional part of the purchase money, on tendering a reconveyance and surrendering possession recovery may be had of the entire consideration[money] and interest, together with taxes paid, less the value of rents received." Id. § 599. This last proposition is based upon the decision in Frazer v. Peoria County, 74 Ill. 282, which goes further than the text, and holds that the grantee must answer not only for "rents received," but also for those that "could have been received from the property." Id. 292. It is said in another case that, if the vendee takes any benefit, directly, or indirectly, from the deed, he must be charged with that benefit in the assessment of his damages. Hartford & S. Ore. Co. v. Miller, 41 Conn. 113. This court, in Park v. Cheek, which was an action at law for a breach of a covenant of seisin, said: "The defendant will have the right, where the plaintiff seeks . . . to recover the purchase money and interest, to set off the rents and profits of the land, and such damages as may be sustained by reason of the plaintiff removing and appropriating any permanent improvements the defendant may have erected on the premises." 4 Coldw. 28.

4. Having been in rightful possession under a deed passing a good and perfect title to at least a life estate in the land conveyed, and the life tenant being still alive, so as to preclude the remainder-men from demanding rents for any part of the time, the vendee in the present case was liable to his vendor for the rental value of the premises from the inception of his possession to the date of the decree, and it was an error of law not to reduce the vendee's recovery to that extent.

5. The original decree was further erroneous in that it allowed the vendee a full recovery for the breach of the covenant of seisin as in case of a total failure in title, or of rescission without at the same time requiring him to surrender possession of the land. It may be true, as suggested by some of the authorities, that such a recovery will, by operation of law, revert the vendor with such title as he had originally (Kincaid v. Brittain, 5 Sneed, 124; Robinson v. Coulter, 90 Tenn. 709, 25 Am. St. Rep. 708, 18 S. W. 250; Recohs v. Younglove, 8 Baxt. 388; Rawle, Covenants for Title, § 184), and it may likewise be true, as suggested by the learned court of chancery appeals and by the same authorities, that such a recovery even at law, would authorize an action by the vendor to regain possession; but that is not enough in a court of equity. In that forum the vendee will not be allowed a full recovery, except upon the surrender of possession. Restoration of such possession as the vendee has is an indispensable ingredient of the decree. It is one of the things essential to the right of full recovery, and without it the conscience of the court is not moved in his favor. In all matters of rescission, and in all relief akin to rescission, a court of equity will invariably put the parties as nearly in statu quo as possible. Hill v. Harriman, 95 Tenn. 305, 32 S. W. 69 L. R. A.

202; Conner v. Henderson, 15 Mass. 319, 8 Am. Dec. 103; Adams, Eq. 191; 2 Kent, Com. * * 475, 476, 480; Blackburn v. Smith, 2 Exch. 783; 2 Warvelle, Vendors, § 29; Shively v. Semi-Tropic Land & W. Co. 99 Cal. 259, 33 Pac. 848; Farmers' Bank v. Groves, 12 How. 51, 13 L. ed. 889; Gay v. Alter, 102 U. S. 79, 26 L. ed. 48; Brown v. Witter, 10 Ohio, 142; Coffee v. Ruffin, 4 Coldw. 516; Pharr v. Bachelor, 3 Ala. 245; 21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 84-87, and citations; Coolidge v. Brigham, 1 Met. 547; Kansas City Land Co. v. Hill, 87 Tenn. 589, 5 L. R. A. 45, 11 S. W. 797; Johnson v. Jackson, 27 Miss. 498, 61 Am. Dec. 522; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Richards, 30 L. R. A. 33, and notes, 44, 45 (162 Ill. 59, 38 N. E. 773).

Never, when adequate relief can be granted to both parties, will it be given to one and withheld from the other. Had Brannon sued at law, the measure of damages would have been the difference between the value of the life estate acquired and the fee contracted for. Recohs v. Younglove, 8 Baxt. 385; 2 Devlin, Deeds, § 901. It is only in a court of equity, and upon the ground of rescission, that he can have the larger recovery. Being in that forum, and seeking relief upon that ground, he must, by the same decree, surrender the possession, and account for meane profits as well. Asking equity, he must do equity. It has been said, and upon good reason, that a vendee in like situation with Brannon should reconvey or tender a reconveyance before asking a recovery for the breach of a covenant of seisin. Frazer v. Peoria County, 74 Ill. 291; 2 Sutherland, Damages, § 599. Rawle remarks that "it would, perhaps, be a matter of prudence for the purchaser to offer such a reconveyance before or at the time of the trial, although it would be no bar to his action that he had not done so." Rawle, Covenants for Title, § 185. In Mecklem v. Blake the court ruled that a grantee desiring to rescind and recover purchase money and interest must tender a reconveyance, and offer to restore possession. 22 Wis. 495, 99 Am. Dec. 68.

6. At an early period in American jurisprudence it was decided that a vendee suing for a total breach of the covenant of seisin could not augment his recovery by showing a rise in value, whether the enhancement arose from extrinsic causes, as in Staats v. Ten Eyck, 3 Caines, 111f, 2 Am. Dec. 254, or from improvements placed upon the land by him, as in Bender v. Fromberger, 4 Dall. 442, 1 L. ed. 901, and Pitcher v. Livingston, 4 Johns. 1, 4 Am. Dec. 229; and such is the general rule prevailing at this day. 4 Kent, Com. *475; Rawle, Covenants for Title, §

158; 3 Sedgw. Damages, §§ 958, 961; 2 Sutherland, Damages, § 593; 2 Devlin, Deeds, § 894; and cases cited by the text writers, and in note to Mecklem v. Blake, 99 Am. Dec. 73. Perhaps the most important reason underlying this rule is the fact that the vendor ordinarily receives no benefit whatever from the enhanced value of the land. He does not, in the usual case, actually regain the land, but it goes to the owner of the paramount title, with all its enhancement.

7. But the present case is not the usual one, and the reason for the rule is not entirely applicable. It applies as to the remainder estate, but not as to the life estate. There is no paramount ownership of the life estate. The vendor is actually restored to the possession of the property in its improved condition, and is, undoubtedly, entitled to its free use and enjoyment so long as the life tenant shall survive. Moreover, in the account for rents she will have advantage of the improvements, since the amount of her credit for mesne profits will be determined from the annual rental or usable value of the land with the improvements upon it. Such equitable circumstances impel a court of conscience to grant the vendee a recovery for improvements to the extent that they may have permanently enhanced the rental or usable value of life estate.

Enter decree in accordance with this opinion, and remand for an account, in which Brannon will be credited with (1) purchase money and interest, (2) taxes paid, and (3) improvements, so far as they may have enhanced the rental or usable value of the life estate, and charged with the annual rents or use of the premises in the condition in which they may have been from time to time.

NEW JERSEY COURT OF ERRORS AND APPEALS.

Peter GERBERT, Exr., etc., of John Snyder Deceased, Plff. in Err.,
v.

CONGREGATION OF THE SONS OF ABRAHAM.

(59 N. J. L. 160.)

*1. In an action on contract for breach of covenant to convey real estate with warranty of title, where the vendor's title is defective, nominal damages, only, can be recovered.

2. Where there is a contract to convey unimproved land with warranty of title, and the vendee, before conveyance is to be made, erects buildings upon the land without the request of the vendor, in an action on contract to recover damages for failure to convey, the vendor's title proving defective, the value of the buildings cannot be recovered by the vendee.

(November 23, 1896.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Essex County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for breach of contract to convey certain real estate. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Collie & Swayze, with Messrs. Blake & Howe, for plaintiff in error:

The plaintiff below was not entitled to recover more than nominal damages for the breach of the covenant to convey.

If Snyder had made a conveyance in his lifetime to the defendant in error, containing a covenant of warranty, and there had been an ouster by the remainder-men, and the defendant in error had brought an action for damages growing out of the breach of the covenant of warranty, it would have been entitled to recover, as damages, only the consideration money named in the deed, together with interest thereon not exceeding six years antecedent to the eviction, together with costs; and, in the event that the purchase money was wholly unpaid, it would then have recovered only nominal damages.

Stewart v. Drake, 9 N. J. L. 139; Holmes v. Sinnickson, 15 N. J. L. 313; Morris v. Rowan, 17 N. J. L. 304.

There ought to be, in our own state, a uniformity of doctrine as to the subject of damages where the injury is the same.

Since the decision of Drake v. Baker, 34 N. J. L. 358, the English cases relied on for that decision have been overruled, and have been declared not to express the law on the subject.

Bain v. Fothergill, L. R. 7 H. L. 158; Rowe v. School Board, L. R. 36 Ch. Div. 619.

If the defendant in error was entitled to recover substantial damages for the loss of its bargain, the trial court erred in including therein the sum of $2,632.99, the cost of the improvements put by the lessee upon the property. Improvements of the character in question were not removable as between landlord and tenant; but, assuming that they were removable, then, under the facts in this case, no damages can be claimed based upon their value. If they were not removable fixtures, as between landlord and tenant, then the tenant could have no claim against the landlord for payment therefor.

*Headnotes by VAN SYCKEL, J.

NOTE.—As to measure of damages for failure to convey real estate, see Morgan v. Bell, 16 L. R. A. 614, also the case immediately preceding this one.
69 L. R. A.

Kutler v. Smith, 2 Wall. 491, 17 L. ed. 830; Taylor, Land. & T. § 552; Lee v. Risdon, 7 Taunt. 188; Thresher v. East London Waterworks, 2 Barn. & C. 608; Loughram v. Ross, 45 N. Y. 792, 6 Am. Rep. 173; Shepard v. Spaulding, 4 Met. 416.

It was stipulated in the original lease that the new demise should be "upon the same terms as to the amount and payment of rent." By this stipulation, it was cut off from claiming the right, under the new demise, to reserve to itself the right to remove the "improvements." As a consequence, it cannot now have any claim for damages by reason of any supposed interest in the "improvements," as connected with any breach of any covenants in relation to such new lease or renewal.

Lanigan v. Kille, 97 Pa. 120.

Even where the improvements were made by a vendee in possession, and the vendor is unable to make title, it has been decided that, neither with nor without a covenant on the subject, can the vendee recover for improvements made.

Dorsey v. Jackman, 1 Serg. & R. 42, 7 Am. Dec. 611; Staats v. Ten Eyck, 3 Caines, 111, 2 Am. Dec. 254; Pitcher v. Livingston, 4 Johns. 1, 4 Am. Dec. 229; Bender v. Fromberger, 4 Dall. 436, 1 L. ed. 898; Hayden v. Mentzer, 10 Serg. & R. 329; Bolton v. Johns, 5 Pa. 145, 47 Am. Dec. 404; Smith v. Smith, 28 N. J. L. 217, 78 Am. Dec. 49; Gillet v. Maynard, 5 Johns. 85, 4 Am. Dec. 329; Shreve v. Grimes, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 224, 14 Am. Dec. 117; Freeman v. Headley, 33 N. J. L. 538; Worthington v. Warrington, 8 C. B. 134; Engel v. Fitch, L. R. 3 Q. B. 328; Bain v. Fothergill, L. R. 7 H. L. 188; Schreiber v. Dinkel, 54 L. T. N. S. 911.

Mr. James E. Howell, for defendant in error:

Snyder agreed to sell the land for $7,000. At the time the covenant was broken the court below found that the land was worth $375 a foot, making $9,750. Deducting the price agreed to be paid, the court found that the damages on this branch of the case amounted to $2,750. This seems to be entirely within the opinion of the court in Drake v. Baker, 34 N. J. L. 358.

King v. Ruckman, 24 N. J. Eq. 305.

Even if the building had been removable as between the church corporation and John Snyder, it was not removable as between the church corporation and the reversioner.

Erickson v. Bennet, 39 Minn. 326, 40 N. W. 157; Sedgw. Damages, 8th ed. §§ 1001, 1017; Bellamy v. Ragsdale, 14 B. Mon. 364; Skeard v. Welburn, 67 Mich. 389, 34 N. W. 716.
69 L. R. A.

The English rule, which, in a case of fraud on the part of the vendor, would drive the vendee to an action for deceit, has not been generally adopted in America.

Maupin, Marketable Title to Real Estate, § 90.

Van Syckel, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 1st of March, 1884, the plaintiff's testator, John Snyder, entered into a lease with the defendant in error for premises known as "No. 226 Washington street," in the city of Newark, New Jersey, for the term of five years from April 1, 1884. The lease contained a stipulation for a further term of five years, provided notice should be given by the lessee, three months before the expiration of the term, of the election of the lessee to take a further term. On the 12th of October, 1888, notice was given by the lessee that a further term was desired. No new lease was actually executed, but the lessee continued in possession of the premises after the expiration of the first term. The plaintiff's testator died in April, 1892, during the running of the second term of five years. The lease of March 1, 1884, contained the following clause. "And, further, that if the said party of the second part shall desire to purchase the demised premises, that he [the lessor] will any time during the tenancy hereby created or agreed upon, for the consideration of seven thousand dollars, sell and convey by warranty deed, with the usual covenants, free and clear of all encumbrances, the demised premises to the said party of the second part, or such person or persons as they shall desire, upon their giving to him, his heirs, executors, or administrators notice that they desire such conveyance; such conveyance to be made within thirty days after giving of such notice, and the payment of rent to cease at the delivery of such deed; and, if not delivered within the said thirty days, then said rent to cease at the end of that time."

After the death of Snyder, the lessor, to wit, on the 1st day of June, 1892, a demand was made upon the executor of Snyder for a conveyance pursuant to the aforesaid provision. He was unable to make a conveyance because the testator had a life estate only, in the premises as tenant by the curtesy; the title to the property having been in the wife at the time of her decease, which was before the lease was made. This suit was instituted for a breach of the covenant to convey pursuant to the demand made upon the lessor's executor.

The sole question to be decided is the measure of damages in this action on contract. Immediately after entering into possession under the lease in 1884, the defendant in error built a synagogue upon the premises, and expended thereon over $2,600. This money was expended before a demand for a renewal of the lease, and several years before a conveyance was demanded. On the trial below, the defendant in error recovered damages for the loss of its bargain arising out of the increased value of the land, and also damages for the loss of the building which had been erected upon the premises. Upon the question as to damages arising from an appreciation in the value of the land, the trial judge was bound by the decision of the supreme court of this state in Drake v. Baker, 34 N. J. L. 358, and he properly followed that case.

The first question to be determined is whether the rule adopted by our supreme court in Drake v. Baker shall be adhered to. Under the long-settled law of this state, if Snyder had conveyed in his lifetime to his lessee with a covenant of warranty, and if thereafter the grantee had been evicted by the remainder-men, in an action on contract for damages flowing from a breach of the covenant of warranty, the only damages recoverable would have been the consideration money paid and the interest thereon; and, if the purchase money was wholly unpaid, nominal damages, only, could have been recovered. Stewart v. Drake, 9 N. J. L. 139; Holmes v. Sinnickson, 15 N. J. L. 313; Morris v. Rowan, 17 N. J. L. 304. This rule has been so long recognized in our jurisprudence that it cannot now be subverted. That there is no substantial difference in the injury resulting, where there is an ouster after conveyance with warranty, and where there is a refusal of conveyance in pursuance of the contract to convey, when the vendor is unable to make title, which can reasonably support a rule for damages in the former case wholly different from that which prevails in the latter case, is too obvious to require discussion. The injury in both cases is the same,—the loss of the property; the loss of such profit as would have been incident to increased value. The loss in both cases arises from the breach of the vendor's covenant on account of the defect in his title. There can, therefore, be no solid basis for diversity in the rule of damages applicable to the two conditions, and the rule should be unified if there is no serious obstacle in the way.

The rule in Drake v. Baker was adopted upon the authority of the English cases, which at the time of the decision of that case had limited the application of the rule laid down in Flureau v. Thornhill, 2 W. Bl. 1078, that on breach of contract to convey, where the vendor's title proved defective, nominal damages, only, could be recovered. The exceptions ingrafted upon Flureau v. Thornhill in Pounsett v. Fuller, 17 C. B. 660; Robinson v. Harman, 1 Exch. 850; Engel v. Fitch, L. R. 3 Q. B. 315; and Hopkins v. Grazebrook, 6 Barn & C. 31,—all cited in Drake v. Baker, and there relied upon,—greatly narrowed the sphere in which Flureau v. Thornhill would be a controlling authority. Since Drake v. Baker was decided, this rule has been most elaborately and exhaustively discussed and reviewed in the House of Lords in England in the case of Bain v. Fothergill, L. R. 7 H. L. 158, and the rule in England finally settled by discarding the distinctions which had been previously ingrafted upon the case of Flureau v. Thornhill in the cases relied upon in our court in Drake v. Baker. In Bain v. Fothergill the defendants were in possession of a mining royalty, under a written agreement for a lease, of which they had taken an assignment from one H. In H.'s agreement for a lease with the owners, it was stipulated that he should not assign without their permission. The defendants contracted with the plaintiff to sell their interest in the royalty, and this action was for the breach of that contract, in consequence of the inability of the defendants to make title for want of the owners' assent to the assignment to them. The owners were willing to consent to the assignment to the plaintiff if he would stipulate not to assign without their permission. One of the defendants knew that this consent was necessary; the other did not. The court of exchequer held the case to be within the rule in Flureau v. Thornhill, and gave judgment for nominal damages only. The case was carried to the House of Lords, and there affirmed. Three questions were propounded by the Lord Chancellor to the judges: (1) Whether, upon a contract for the sale of real property, where the vendor, without his default, is unable to make a good title, the purchaser is by law entitled to recover damages for the loss of his bargain. To this the answer was, he is not entitled. (2) Whether the actual possession of the property, the subject of the contract, is essential to bring the case within the rule laid down in Flureau v. Thornhill. To this the answer was in the negative. (3) Whether, if the rule of law is correctly laid down in Flureau v. Thornhill, the circumstances of the present case distinguish it, and take it out of that rule. To this the reply was also in the negative. The discussion in Bain v. Fothergill is most able and interesting, and, after a thorough review of all the previous English cases, the House of Lords expressed the opinion that Flureau v. Thornhill was established law, and that Hopkins v. Grazebrook was no longer the rule; that Flureau v. Thornhill applied to every case where the vendor failed to convey through inability to make title; that the rule was the same whether the vendor had been guilty of fraud or not, for the motive of the defendant was immaterial in measuring damages for breach of contract; and that, therefore, even if there had been fraud, the vendee could not have recovered substantial damages in contract, but must have proceeded in an action for deceit. The cases upon which the doctrine approved in Drake v. Baker was rested having been so completely overruled by the English court, that case should, in our judgment, be now disregarded, and the law in this state be made harmonious in the two instances, where there is in all material respects precise similarity of circumstances, and no difference of substance upon which to support a difference in the rule of damages. Where fraud or deceit enters into the transaction, the vendee should be left to his action for deceit to recover for the loss he may sustain thereby. On this branch of the case nominal damages, only, should have been recovered. The only question submitted to this court in the case of Sons of Abraham v. Gerbert, 57 N. J. L. 395, 31 Atl. 383, was whether the covenant to convey applied to the renewal period of five years. The rule of damages applicable to the case was not discussed; nor did the court intend to make any deliverance on that subject.

The question remains whether the lessee was entitled to recover for the cost of the improvements put upon the premises, as before stated. The first term under the lease ran from April 1, 1884, to April 1, 1889. The improvements included in the damages recovered below were all made soon after the lessee entered into possession in 1884, and the demand for a conveyance was not made until after the lessor's death, in 1892. The lease contained the following covenant: "And the said party of the second part [the lessee] hereby agrees that all improvements of any kind made on or about the said premises shall be and become the property of said party of the first part at the expiration of this lease or any renewal thereof." The covenant in the lease is simply to convey land; there is no agreement to convey land and buildings erected thereon by the lessee after entry. Under the common-law rule, buildings erected on the premises by the tenant become part of the freehold, and are the property of the lessor, without any allowance to the tenant. An exception has been ingrafted on this rule, that under certain circumstances gives the tenant the right of removal before the expiration of his term. But the common-law rule is still so rigidly adhered to that if a tenant, at the end of his term, renews his lease, and thereby acquires a new interest in the premises, his right to remove improvements is forfeited, unless he takes the precaution to reserve such right in the renewal lease. This is the established English rule, and it has also received the sanction of the New York court of appeals in Loughran v. Ross, 45 N. Y. 792, 6 Am. Rep. 173, where the English cases are cited and relied upon. In Smith v. Smith, 28 N. J. L. 208, 78 Am. Dec. 49, Chief Justice Green distinguishes between a vendee in possession under a parol agreement to purchase, who makes improvements expecting them to be for his own benefit, and not at the instance of his vendor, and a tenant who makes improvements under the assurance of his landlord that he shall have a conveyance of the premises with the improvements. In the former case he denies the right of the vendee to compensation on failure to obtain a conveyance. This accords with the doctrine of the English court as pronounced in Worthington v. Warrington, 8 C. B. 134. There the party entered into possession under an agreement for a two-years term with leave to make improvements at his own expense, with the option of purchasing at any time during the two years. The lessor, it afterwards appeared, had no title to the premises, and the action was brought to recover damages for breach of the contract, and for the cost of the improvements. The court said: "If the purchaser thinks proper to enter into possession, and to incur expenses in alterations before the title is ascertained, he does so at his own risk. I see nothing in this case to distinguish it from the ordinary one. The plaintiff should have taken care to ascertain that the title was good, before he proceeded to lay out money upon the premises." The reason which lies at the foundation of the rule in Flureau v. Thornhill pertains here, and is clearly expressed by Lord Hatherley in Bain v. Fothergill. In distinguishing Engel v. Fitch, he said: "The vendor in that case was bound by his contract . . . to do all that he could to complete the conveyance. Whenever it is a matter of conveyancing, and not a matter of title, it is the duty of the vendor to do everything that he is enabled to do by force of his own interest, and also by force of the interest of others whom he can compel to concur in the conveyance. . . . The foundation of the rule [in Flureau v. Thornhill] has been already more clearly expressed by my noble and learned friend who has preceded me, in saying that, having regard to the very nature of this transaction in the dealings of mankind in the purchase and sale of real estates it is recognized on all hands that the purchaser knows on his part that there must be some degree of uncertainty as to whether, with all the complications of our law, a good title can be effectively made by his vendor, and, taking the property with that knowledge, he is not to be held entitled to recover any loss on the bargain he may have made, if, in effect, it should turn out that the vendor is incapable of completing his contract in consequence of his defective title."

In this case it must be held that the lessee made the improvements at his own risk, and not under an assurance that a title would be given including such improvements, inasmuch as they were made long before the lessee announced his election to purchase. The rights of the parties must be adjudged according to the status at the time the improvements were made, and that was the relation of landlord and tenant. The question now under discussion does not in fact differ from the question previously disposed of. By the renewal of the lease without any provision as to the buildings put upon the premises by the tenant, such buildings, as before stated, became incorporated with the real estate, and were the property of the lessor and the remaindermen. The subsequent election of the tenant to take a conveyance gave him a right to a conveyance of the real estate of which the buildings were part, and from which they were no longer, in legal contemplation, separate. The buildings could no longer be considered as improvements made by the lessee. The recovery of nominal damages for failure to convey will satisfy the legal claim for damages for failure to convey both land and buildings, the two being now one and inseparable. Where there is a contract to convey unimproved land, and the vendee, before conveyance, erects buildings upon it without the request of the vendor, it would be a rule of exceeding hardship which compels the vendor, when his title proves defective, to pay the cost of such improvements to any extent which the vendee might choose to put upon it. Such a result could not reasonably be supposed to have been within the contemplation of the parties when the contract was executed. The vendor would be compelled to pay for improvements which he did not authorize to be made, and from which he would derive no benefit whatever if the vendee failed to perform on his part. In my opinion, the judgment below was also in this respect erroneous, and it should therefore be reversed.

69 L. R. A.

Andrew ALBRIGHT, Plff. in Err.,

v.

SUSSEX COUNTY LAKE & PARK COMMISSION.

(71 N. J. L. 303, 309.)

*1. The right to fish in an inland lake in New Jersey cannot be separated from the ownership of the lake, and taken under the power of eminent domain, because, first, the natural supply of fish therein is so small as to be incapable of meeting a public demand; and, second, the object of acquiring such a right is not use, which implies utility, but mere sport or pastime. Query: Is the value of such a right capable of estimation, so that a compensation may be awarded therefor which shall be just with respect both to the private owner and to the public purchaser?

On Rehearing.

2. In "An Act to Acquire Rights of Fishing Common To All in Fresh-Water Lakes in Certain Counties," etc., approved March 22, 1901 (P. L. p. 333), the unconstitutionality of the provisions intended to delegate the power of eminent domain renders the whole act invalid.

(Gummere, Ch. J., and Vroom, J., dissent from paragraph 1.)

(February 29, 1904.)

ERROR to the Supreme Court to review a judgment upholding a proceeding instituted for the purpose of obtaining the right of fishery in a private lake. Reversed. The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Charles D. Thompson and Charles L. Corbin for plaintiff in error.
Messrs. Griggs & Harding for defendant in error.

Dixon, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

"An Act to Acquire Rights of Fishing Common to All in Fresh-Water Lakes in Certain Counties, to Acquire Lands Adjoining Thereto for Public Use and Enjoyment Therewith, and to Regulate the Same" (P. L. 1901, p. 333, chap. 161), declares that in any county of the state wherein are fresh-water lakes having an area of water surface exceeding 100 acres a commission may be appointed, which shall have power to take in fee or otherwise by purchase, gift, devise, or eminent domain, and to maintain and make available to the public, the right of fishing in such lakes. Under this statute a commission has been appointed in Sussex county, and is attempting to take by eminent domain the right of fishing in Swartswood lake, which belongs to the plaintiff in error. The plaintiff resists this attempt upon the ground mainly that the power of eminent domain cannot constitutionally be exercised for the stated purpose. In olden times the eminent domain seems to have been employed only in cases of state necessity, and there is no instance of its exercise in New Jersey prior to 1776 except for highways. But undoubtedly its scope has been much enlarged in recent times to keep pace with the advance in social conditions. Scudder v. Trenton Delaware Falls Co. 1 N. J. Eq. 694, 23 Am. Dec. 756. Still, even as late as 1852 Chief Justice Green spoke of the objects for which the state exercises this power as being few in number. Smith v. Applegate, 23 N. J. L. 357. Under our state Constitution (art. 1, § 16) private property can be taken only for public use. Whether the end sought to be attained by the taking is a public use is a question to be determined by the courts, although it is said there is a presumption in favor of a use declared by the legislature to the public. Mills, Em. Dom. § 10; Lewis, Em. Dom. § 158; Scudder v. Trenton Delaware Falls Co. 1 N. J. Eq. 694, 727, 23 Am. Dec. 756; Olmsted v. Morris Aqueduct, 47 N. J. L. 311; National Docks R. Co. v. Central R. Co. 32 N. J. Eq. 755, 764. The language of the Constitution does not authorize property to be taken "for public enjoyment," or "for public purposes," or generally "for the public." Its expression is "for public use," which implies an idea of utility, of usefulness, not necessarily inherent in the other phrases mentioned. The duty is therefore devolved upon this court to determine whether the object to be subserved by the condemnation of the right to fish in the plaintiff's lake is a public use.

*Headnotes by DIXON, J.

NOTE.—For a full review of the whole subject of the right to fish, see note to State v. Shaw, 60 L. R. A. 481.

In order that a use may be public, it is not essential that the whole community should be able directly to participate in it. Thus, a free school for children is for a public use, although only a fraction of the community can attend it. But it is essential that the utility should in a substantial measure concern the public; as, for example, the education of the young concerns the community. The right to be condemned under this statute is merely the right to fish. Such a right is in the ancient legal French called a right profit à prendre, a right so peculiarly for personal enjoyment that it is incapable of being acquired by the general public, either by custom (Cobb v. Davenport, 32 N. J. L. 369), or by dedication (33 N. J. L. 223, 97 Am. Dec. 718; Albright v. Cortright, 64 N. J. L. 330, 48 L. R. A. 616, 81 Am. St. Rep. 504, 45 Atl. 634). No doubt there is a public right of fishing recognized by municipal law. It exists in the water of the ocean along the coast, and in the arms of the sea as far as the tide ebbs and flows. But this right differs from that now under consideration in several important respects. In the first place, it is a mere incident of the public ownership of the public waters, while the object of the present proceedings is to sever the right of fishing from the title to the lake, and give it an independent existence. If the legislature had provided for the condemnation of the lake, so as to confer upon the public the right of resorting thereto for all purposes to which it is adapted, the condemnation might then have been supported on the precedents which find a public use in parks, and the right to fish would have passed as an incident of the public title. But under this statute the ownership of the lake is to remain private. In the next place, the natural supply of fish in the public waters is practically inexhaustible if the right to fish therein be subjected to such regulations as will reasonably guard it for the free enjoyment of the general public. But the natural supply of fish in the inland lakes of New Jersey is so small that, if the right to catch fish therein were exercised by persons sufficiently numerous, to be deemed the public, the supply would soon come to an end. Lastly, fishing in the public waters has from time immemorial constituted an industry fostered by law for the supply of the general market, while fishing in these private waters has been and can be only for individual amusement and gain. We think, therefore, that for present purposes there is no substantial resemblance between the common right to fish in public waters and the right now in question.

I turn, then, to the consideration of the matter in view of the rules which have been laid down as aids in determining what is a public use within the meaning of this provision of the Constitution. A definition of the phrase has not, I think, been judicially attempted, but among the statements of the doctrine to be found in the books that of Prof. Cooley seems most likely to subserve the general welfare for which the constitutional power is delegated, and at the same time to protect private property, which is equally a ward of our Constitution. He says (Const. Lim. 6th ed. 655): "The reason of the case and the settled practice of free governments must be our guides in determining what is or is not to be regarded a public use, and that only can be considered such where the government is supplying its own needs, or is furnishing facilities for its citizens in regard to those matters of public necessity, convenience, or welfare which, on account of their peculiar character, and the difficulty . . . of making provision for them otherwise, it is alike proper, useful, and needful for the government to provide." Applying this as the test, the present statute cannot be supported. The right to be enjoyed under this statute is necessarily the right of each individual who exercises it to abstract from what is designed by the statute to be a common stock such portion as he can secure, and to appropriate that to his own benefit. This is for private, rather than public, advantage. The statute does, indeed, contemplate the acquisition of the common stock by public agents, but they are to acquire it for private benefit. If the common stock thus to be acquired were capable of supplying an unlimited number of persons, then they might be deemed in a constitutional sense the public; but, as already stated, the stock would be quite inadequate for such a demand. The fact that a small supply is tendered free to the first takers does not show that the public can enjoy it.

But not only does the Constitution require that the property taken should be for the public; it is also necessary that it should be for use. The chief purpose in the enjoyment of the property must be utility. But it cannot be doubted that the main object of the present statute is to furnish a means of amusement or sport to the few persons who have the inclination and leisure for such pastime. The public utility to be subserved by such indulgence is imperceptible. "The reason of the case" therefore does not seem to warrant the conclusion that the proposed taking is "for public use." When we look to "the settled practice of free governments," we find no parallel for the present enterprise. There are many instances of the exercise of eminent domain for the purpose of furnishing facilities to be enjoyed by individuals; such are parks, highways, ferries, railways, telegraph and telephone lines, etc. But these differ from the right now under consideration in important respects. First, they are essentially useful; secondly, they are used by great numbers of people; and, thirdly, their use by the individual abstracts nothing appreciable from the common opportunity of use. There are also some instances of the exercise of the power in order to afford facilities for private enjoyment where it is intended that each individual shall abstract a portion from the common stock. An example appears in the condemnation of water for domestic purposes in populous neighborhoods. But here, also, marked differences from the present scheme are observable. The end sought is utility of the greatest urgency, and the natural supply is so abundant that private abstraction cannot exhaust it. In all such instances these characteristics will be found in substantial measure to make them of use to the public. We have found no instance of the exercise of the power in order to afford a means of pastime capable of being enjoyed by only a few persons.

There is another consideration deserving of some weight. The Constitution requires that on taking private property for public use just compensation should be made to the owner; and this implies that the property taken shall be reasonably capable of just estimation. The lake itself could no doubt be fairly appraised, as could, probably, the right of any individual, or of any specified number of individuals, to fish therein. But I know of no criterion by which the right of an unlimited number of persons to spend their time upon the lake for the purpose of catching fish could be valued. It might be that the appraisers would evade the difficulty by awarding to the owner the full value of the lake; but in that case justice would require that the lake itself, and not a mere incidental right in it, should become public property. We think, therefore, that neither in the reason of the case, nor in the settled practice of free governments, is there legal support for the proposed condemnation.

The power of eminent domain is one of the extreme powers of government. When employed for the purpose of enabling it to perform its own functions, its scope is limited only by the wisdom of the legislature. But, when it is exerted with the view of furnishing facilities to private individuals, it so easily runs into the taking of one man's property to give it to others, in disregard of that right which the Constitution declares to be inalienable,—the right of protecting property,—that it behooves the courts, where private owners can be fully heard in their own behalf, to take care that constitutional rights are guarded and constitutional limitations observed. On full consideration, we are constrained to adjudge that the present proceedings are designed to take the plaintiff's property for other than the public use, and are therefore illegal.

The judgment of the Supreme Court should be reversed and a judgment entered setting aside the proceedings taken under the statute.

Gummere, Ch. J., and Vroom, J., dissent.

A reargument having been granted, Dixon, J., on November 14, 1904, handed down the following additional opinion:

In the opinion delivered in this cause February 29, 1904 (71 N. J. L. 303, ante, 768, 57 Atl. 398), it was assumed that, if the provisions of the act of March 22, 1901 (P. L. p. 333), so far as they relate to the power of eminent domain, were unconstitutional, the proceeding under review must necessarily be illegal. This assumption was unwarranted, because the proceeding was merely an affirmation by the supreme court of the appointment of commissioners under that statute, and, as the statute purported to confer upon such commissioners other powers than that of eminent domain, it did not follow as a matter of course that their appointment would be nugatory if the attempt to delegate the power of condemnation failed. This mistake having been called to the attention of the court by an application for a rehearing, the court ordered that the following question should be argued: "Assuming that the provisions of chapter 161 of the Laws of 1901, relating to the power of condemnation, are unconstitutional, should the judgment of the supreme court in this case be reversed." This argument having been heard, the question is now before us for decision.

The act purports to authorize the acquisition of the rights contemplated "by purchase, gift, devise, or eminent domain." P. L. p. 335, § 2. But almost all the provisions of the statute relate to the acquisition by purchase or condemnation, and it is incredible that the act would have been passed merely to permit the acceptance of gifts or devises. The only substantial powers were those of purchase and condemnation. The question therefore is, Should the invalidity of the grant of the power to condemn defeat the grant of the power to buy?

The general rule with regard to the validity of a statutory scheme, some feature of which proves to be unconstitutional, is that, if the objectionable feature be not so important to the legislative design as to warrant the opinion that the scheme would not have been authorized without it, then the residue of the scheme will be upheld; otherwise the entire scheme will fail. Johnson v. State, 59 N. J. L. 535, 38 L. R. A. 373, 37 Atl. 949, 39 Atl. 646. The scheme designed by the statute under consideration was the acquisition by any county, at public expense, of a common right to fish in fresh-water lakes within the county. The lakes falling within the purview of the act are now private property, and, unless the power of eminent domain can be exercised, the right desired can be obtained only at such price as the owners may be willing to accept. Some counties have not more than one of these lakes, and consequently in those counties there could be no competition among private owners to keep their demands within reasonable bounds. With such conditions in view, the duty of the legislature could best be fulfilled by providing some guard against an extravagant disbursement of public funds; and, for the purpose of discharging this duty, we think the legislature intended to confer upon the counties the right to have the price fixed by disinterested appraisers under the power of eminent domain. To infer, from the attempt to delegate an authority thus shielded from imposition, a willingness to dispense with the safeguard and yet continue the authority, would be unreasonable. Our conclusion is that the vice of the condemnation provision infects the whole act.

The judgment of the supreme court should be reversed, and the order appointing commissioners should be set aside.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

F. M. LOOMIS, Appt.,

v.

Charles WALLBLOM et al., Respts.

(.....Minn.....)

*1. A full discharge of individual

*Headnotes by JAGGARD, J.

NOTE.—Discharge of partnership liability in individual bankruptcy proceedings.

I. Scope, 772.

II. Provability of partnership debts in individual proceedings.

a. Introductory, 772.

b. In general, 773.

c. Exceptions.

1. Absence of joint assets or solvent partners.

(a) In general, 775.

(b) When partnership assets have been assigned to bankrupt, 777.

2. Fraudulent abstraction of partnership funds by bankrupt, 777.

liability of one partner on a firm debt may be had in bankruptcy proceedings concerning that partner only.

2. Such discharge is a good defense in an action brought against two partners to renew a judgment on a partnership debt, the process in which action was served only on the partner who

II., c—continued.

3. Right of petitioning joint creditor to prove, 778.

III. Discharge of partnership liability in individual proceeding.

a. Discharge of liability by reason of provability of claim.

1. In general, 778.

2. The English doctrine, 779.

b. Necessity of making firm or co-partners parties.

1. Under bankruptcy law of 1887.

(a) In general, 780.

(b) In absence of joint assets, 782.

had been duly discharged in bankruptcy proceedings, where it appeared that, many years before, the parties had dissolved the firm, and the firm had, to the actual knowledge of the judgment creditor, made an assignment of all unexempt firm and individual property under a state insolvency law; and where it did not affirmatively appear that any firm assets now exist; and where it appeared that the claim was properly scheduled, and notice thereof was duly given.

3. Held, that the claim was duly scheduled on the facts here presented.

(April 7, 1905.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from an order of the District Court for Ramsey County denying a motion for new trial after verdict in defendants' favor in an action brought to renew a judgment. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. James E. Trask, for appellant:

Wallblom's discharge in bankruptcy did not terminate the existence of, or discharge the debt against, the partnership, or take away plaintiff's right to renew the partnership judgment in an action against Wallblom and Thorsell as partners.

When the essential rights of the parties are influenced by the nature of the original contract, the courts will look into the judgment for the purpose of ascertaining what the original contract was.

Owens v. Bowie, 2 Md. 457; Second Nat. Bank v. Townsend, 114 Ind. 534, 17 N. E. 116.

The National Wall Paper Company never appeared in the bankruptcy proceedings, or had any actual notice thereof.

Tyrrel v. Hammerstein, 33 Misc. 505, 67

III., b.—continued.

2. Under bankruptcy law of 1898.

(a) In general, 783.

(b) In absence of joint assets, 784.

I. Scope.

Since the bankruptcy act of 1898 provides that "a discharge in bankruptcy shall release a bankrupt from all of his provable debts;" and since some of the other bankruptcy acts in England (6 Geo. IV. chap. 16, § 121; 24 & 25 Vict. chap. 134, § 161; 46 & 47 Vict. chap. 52 § 30 (2)), and in this country (Act 1800, § 34; Act 1841, § 4; Act 1867, § 19), contained similar provisions,—it has seemed necessary to include, besides decisions upon the specific point which is the subject of this annotation, also those cases in which the question arises of the provability of partnership debts in individual proceedings in bankruptcy. This necessitates, of course, the inclusion of those cases holding joint debts payable out of the separate estate under certain conditions. All decisions under insolvency acts have been excluded.

II. Provability of partnership debts in individual proceedings.

a. Introductory.

Whether partnership debts are provable in an individual proceeding in bankruptcy is a question resting in much confusion and conflict. Its solution is affected by the way the courts dispose of another question, which is the real one to be dealt with, viz., whether, and, if so, under what circumstances, joint debts are payable out of a separate estate. If they are so payable, they are of course provable in an individual proceeding. The difficulty the courts have experienced in dealing with this latter question has arisen largely by reason of the equity rule that the joint estate is applicable to partnership debts, and the separate estate to separate debts, and, on the other hand, by the desirability, in bankruptcy proceedings, of releasing a bankrupt from all claims against him, both joint and separate. The various complications that arose in the minds of the courts 69 L. R. A.

endeavoring to settle this question are obvious upon reflection. Thus, if a joint creditor were allowed to prove his claim in an individual proceeding, and receive a dividend pari passu with the separate creditors, when joint assets existed, he would have a great advantage over them, since he could still resort to the joint estate, and they could not, unless a surplus existed therein; also, if a joint claim was proved against one partner individually, and a dividend received thereon, that entailed a cumbersome suit in equity on his part for contribution from the remaining partners. The theory that the assignee in the individual proceeding might, if joint creditors proved their claims therein, take possession of the bankrupt's interest in the partnership property, and then grant a dividend pari passu to all alike, was advocated by some, but held untenable by others on the ground that such an assignee could have no power or authority to meddle with partnership property. Some courts, following strictly the equitable rule of distribution, were of opinion that the joint creditor must be allowed no dividend out of the separate estate until the separate creditors were paid in full, but the hardship of this doctrine was obvious when no joint assets, or only a very small amount, existed; since joint debts are equally binding obligations upon the bankrupt as are his separate debts.

The earliest rule in England, in support of which no specific decisions are found, but which is referred to by later judges, was that a joint creditor, where there was a separate commission, was to be admitted to prove his claim, but only for the purpose of assenting to or dissenting from the certificate, and receiving a dividend out of any surplus there might be beyond the amount of the separate debts.

Lord Thurlow, in 1784, made a new rule, that joint debts should be provable in a separate commission, and payable pari passu with the separate creditors out of the bankrupt's estate, which should be composed of his separate estate and his moiety of the joint estate taken possession of by the assignee in the separate proceedings.

Lord Loughborough, in 1796, dissented from Lord Thurlow's rule, not being able to get away from the equity doctrine that partnership debts are payable out of the joint estate, and sepa-

N. Y. Supp. 717; Fider v. Mannheim, 78 Minn. 309, 81 N. W. 2; Collins v. McWalters, 35 Misc. 648, 6 Am. Bankr. Rep. 593, 72 N. Y. Supp. 203; Liesum v. Kraus, 35 Misc. 376, 71 N. Y. Supp. 1022.

Not only is the joint partnership liability of the firm of Wallblom & Thorsell unaffected by the individual discharge of Wallblom, but the individual or several partnership liability of Wallblom, which is a part of, or incident to, said joint partnership liability, is also unaffected by such discharge.

It is nowhere provided in the act of Congress that the individual discharge of a person shall release the debts of any partnership of which such person may chance to be a member.

A partnership is a distinct entity, and the release or discharge in bankruptcy of Wallblom upon his individual petition could no more discharge the debts of the partnership of Wallblom & Thorsell than it could the individual debts of Thorsell.

Re Mercur, 58 C. C. A. 472, 122 Fed. 388; Strause v. Hooper, 5 Am. Bankr. Rep. 225; Re Meyer, 39 C. C. A. 368, 3 Am. Bankr. Rep. 559, 98 Fed. 976; Re Grant Bros. 5 Am. Bankr. Rep. 837; Re Kersten, 6 Am. Bankr. Rep. 516, 110 Fed. 929; Re Borden, 4 Am. Bankr. Rep. 31, 101 Fed. 553; Re Farley, 8 Am. Bankr. Rep. 266, 115 Fed. 359.

A partnership, in the eyes of the law, continues to exist as such as long as any of its debts remain unpaid or undischarged; and, until the debts of a partnership have been paid or satisfied, it cannot be said that

b. In general.

In 1784, Lord Chancellor Thurlow, in Es parte Cobham, 1 Bro. Ch. 576, said that the question of the provability of joint debts against the separate estate of one of the partners had never been decided; but that he did not see why the rule applying to the case of separate creditors proving debts under a joint commission was not applicable, his only doubt being to what extent this benefit should be allowed; that it would be hard that the joint creditors should come upon the separate estate to the prejudice of the separate creditors, and still have an exclusive power of coming upon the joint estate; and, therefore, that he thought that the separate assignees might, if they pleased, possess themselves of the bankrupt's proportion of the partnership effects, and then both the joint and separate creditors could come in pari passu upon both funds.

In the following year (1785), in Es parte Hodgson, 2 Bro. Ch. 5, he held that a partnership debt was provable under a separate commission, saying that debts, whether sole or joint, ought to be paid pari passu with the separate creditors out of the bankrupt's estate, which is composed of his separate estate and his moiety of the joint estate.

These cases announce what is called Lord Thurlow's rule; and for a few years thereafter the question was regarded as settled.

Thus, joint creditors were admitted to prove their debts in a separate commission against one partner, and take a ratable dividend with the rest of the creditors. Es parte Page (1786) 2 Bro. Ch. 119.

It was declared settled that joint creditors might prove under a separate commission. Es parte Flintum (1786) 2 Bro. Ch. 120.

A joint creditor is entitled to prove his debt under a separate commission, taken out against one of the partners. Lord Thurlow, Es parte Copland (1787) 1 Cox, Ch. Cas. 420.

Creditors of partners on a bond for money which came to the use of the partnership were held entitled to prove their claim against the joint estate, or the separate estates, of the partners. Es parte Clowes (1789) 2 Bro. Ch. 595.

But, in 1796, Lord Loughborough, in Es parte Elton, 3 Ves. Jr. 238, upon the ground that each estate should bear its own debts, rate debts out of the separate estate, and also on account of the inconvenience, as it seemed to him, of a bankrupt, out of whose estate a joint debt was paid, being obliged to institute proceedings in equity against the other partners for contribution. He therefore went back nearly to the old rule, and announced that joint creditors could prove their claims in a separate proceeding, but could not receive a dividend until an accounting was had of the two estates, so that a settlement of the two classes of claims could be made according to the equity rule of distribution.

Then, some decisions went still farther, and held that, if there was any joint estate at all, however trifling, the joint creditor could not prove against the separate estate, and share therein,—at least until the separate debts were paid.

All along, from 1785 down, there had been decisions that, if there was no joint estate in existence, then the joint creditors could prove their claims, and share pari passu with the separate creditors in an individual proceeding.

Other exceptions to the denial of the joint creditor's right to share in the separate estate came to be made during that time and since, by statute and decisions. Thus, it has been held that, when partnership funds had been fraudulently abstracted by the bankrupt, the joint creditors might prove against and share in his separate estate; and when the joint creditor, desiring to prove his claim, was the petitioning creditor in the individual proceeding, he was allowed to do so; so, too, when partnership assets had been assigned to the bankrupt upon condition that he meet the partnership debts, joint creditors were allowed to prove their claims against him.

Therefore, if it is justifiable to draw any rule from the decisions as they stand, it is that joint debts are provable in a separate commission for some purposes, but are not payable out of the separate estate; this prohibition against sharing in the estate, however, not being applicable when there are no joint assets; when the bankrupt has fraudulently abstracted firm funds; when he has received an assignment of the partnership assets; or when the joint creditor, desiring to prove and share in the separate estate, is the petitioning creditor himself.

there has been any "final settlement thereof" under § 5 of the bankruptcy act.

Re Freund, 1 Am. Bankr. Rep. 25; Re Noonan, 3 Biss. 491, Fed. Cas. No. 10,292; Hudgins v. Lane, 2 Hughes, 361, Fed. Cas. No. 6,827; Re Mercur, 58 C. C. A. 472, 122 Fed. 388.

Neither a copartnership, nor a corporation, can withdraw its debts from the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court by an attempted dissolution.

Re Storck Lumber Co. 8 Am. Bankr. Rep. 86; Re Independent Ins. Co. Holmes, 103, Fed. Cas. No. 7,017; Scheuer v. Smith, & M. Book & Stationery Co. 7 Am. Bankr. Rep. 384.

The trustee in bankruptcy of an individual bankrupt is not entitled to take, hold, recover, or administer the assets of any firm of which such bankrupt may be a member, there having been no adjudication in bankruptcy against such firms.

Re Mercur, 58 C. C. A. 472, 122 Fed. 388; Re Meyers, 2 Am. Bankr. Rep. 714, 96 Fed. 408, 3 Am. Bankr. Rep. 260, 97 Fed. 757; Nutting v. Ashcroft, 101 Mass. 300; Am-sinck v. Bean, 22 Wall. 404, 22 L. ed. 804; Strause v. Hooper, 5 Am. Bankr. Rep. 225.

Inasmuch as a partnership is a distinct entity, and the bankruptcy act (providing the only way by which a partnership can be adjudged bankrupt) applies equally to all partnerships, whether defunct or going concerns; and inasmuch as a partnership continues to exist in the eyes of the law so long as it has unpaid debts, and the made a change in the rule. He admitted joint creditors to prove claims in a separate commission, but ordered the dividend reserved until an account was taken of what they had, or might have, received from partnership effects.

And, again, in 1799, in Ex parte Abell, 4 Ves. Jr. 837, he held, upon the ground that the separate estate should be applied first to the separate debts, that, upon the proof of a joint debt in a separate commission, payment of dividend should be refused until the separate creditors had each received 20s. in the pound.

The rule thus laid down was called Lord Loughborough's rule, and was followed in a number of subsequent decisions.

Lord Eldon, in Ex parte Clay (1802) 6 Ves. Jr. 813, reviews the situation up to that time in the following language: "The rule that prevailed in Lord Hardwicke's time, and down to the time of Lord Thurlow, was, that joint creditors should not be admitted to prove under a separate commission for the purpose of receiving dividends with the separate creditors. Lord Thurlow altered that upon much consideration, thinking the joint creditors ought to be admitted with the separate creditors; and left it so when he left this court. Lord Loughborough thought that was not right, and got back again not quite to the old rule; but he settled it that they should prove only for the purpose of keeping separate accounts, but not to receive a dividend." The order was taken according to Lord Loughborough's rule.

Joint creditors were admitted to prove their claims in a separate commission, and also to take dividends provided they paid the separate creditors, in Ex parte Chandler (1803) 9 Ves. Jr. 35.

Joint creditors were allowed to prove their debts under a separate commission, for the purpose only of assenting to, or dissenting from, the certificate, not to receive dividends, in Ex parte Taitt (1809) 16 Ves. Jr. 196.

It was declared in Heath v. Hall (1812) 4 Taunt. 326, that a joint creditor had a right to prove his debt against the separate estate of one of the partners, although he could not receive a dividend until the bankrupt's separate debts were fully paid.

A partnership debt may not be proved against the separate estate of a bankrupt partner so as to come in competition with the separate creditors. Ex Parte Clark (1864) 10 L. T. N. S. 165.
99 L. R. A.

A provision embodying Lord Loughborough's rule was enacted in the bankruptcy act of 6 Geo. IV., chap. 16, § 62, to the effect that a joint creditor might prove his debt in a separate commission for the purpose of voting as to assignees, but could not receive a dividend out of the separate estate until all of the separate creditors were paid in full.

A similar provision is contained in 12 & 13 Vict., chap. 106, § 140, law of 1849.

Also in 46 & 47 Vict., chap. 52, § 59 (1), law of 1883, it is provided that a joint creditor shall not receive a dividend out of the separate estate until the individual creditors are paid in full.

In an American decision under the bankrupt law of 1800, which was almost a copy of the English bankruptcy law in force at that time. Lord Loughborough's rule was considered, but construed somewhat differently. The court held partnership debts provable under the bankruptcy law, without regard to whether there were joint assets or not; but that equity would restrain the collection of a dividend until it could be ascertained what, according to the equitable rule of distribution, it ought to be. Tucker v. Oxley (1809), 5 Cranch, 34. 3 L. ed. 29.

Later, in Re Frear (1868) 2 Ben. 467, Fed. Cas. No. 5,074, under the bankruptcy act of 1867, it was held that joint debts were provable in an individual proceeding, whether there were any assets of the partnership or not; and that, if such assets existed, they were to be administered according to § 36 of the bankruptcy act of 1867, which provides for an accounting of the two estates, and administration of the proceeds according to the principles of the equity rule.

So, in Re Bates (1900) 100 Fed. 263, under the bankruptcy act of 1898, a partnership debt was held provable in an individual proceeding, notwithstanding there were joint assets. The court said that, whether a debt is provable depends upon the nature of the liability, and not upon whether there are assets applicable to it. It was further held that the proceeds of the two estates must be accounted for and administered according to the statute, which provided for the application of individual assets to individual debts, and joint assets to joint debts, according to the equitable rule.

affairs of an insolvent firm which has not been adjudged bankrupt cannot be administered in the individual bankruptcy proceedings of a member of such firm,—the discharge in bankruptcy of an individual upon his individual petition, asking only for a discharge from his individual debts, does not release him from partnership debts.

Hudgins v. Lane, 2 Hughes, 361, Fed. Cas. No. 6,827; Re Little, 2 Ben. 186, 1 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 341, Fed. Cas. No. 8,390; Corey v. Perry, 67 Me. 140, 24 Am. Rep. 15; Re Jewett, 7 Biss. 473, 16 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 48, Fed. Cas. No. 7,307; Re Webb, 4 Sawy. 326, Fed. Cas. No. 17,317; Re Noonan, 3 Biss. 491, Fed. Cas. No. 10,292; Re Grady, 3 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 227, Fed. Cas. No.

5,654; Re Levy, 2 Am. Bankr. Rep. 21, 95 Fed. 812.

Writing the name "National Wall Paper Company" into Wallblom's list of individual debts, without anywhere in the proceeding naming, or in any way referring to, the firm of Wallblom & Thorsell, or any other copartnership, does not properly name the creditor as a creditor of the firm, or constitute a proper scheduling of a partnership claim.

Tyrrel v. Hammerstein, 33 Misc. 505, 6 Am. Bankr. Rep. 430, 67 N. Y. Supp. 717; Fider v. Mannheim, 78 Minn. 309, 81 N. W. 2; Collins v. McWalters, 35 Misc. 648, 6 Am. Bankr. Rep. 593, 72 N. Y. Supp. 203. The bankruptcy proceedings of Wallblom

In Re Webb (1877) 4 Sawy. 326, Fed. Cas. No. 17,317, it was held that a joint creditor might prove his claim in an individual proceeding in bankruptcy so as to vote for the assignee. Beyond this the decision did not go.

After Lord Loughborough's rule had become recognized and been followed in several instances, the decisions in England went still farther, headed by Ex parte Peake (1814) 2 Rose, 54, holding that "joint creditors are not permitted to prove against the separate estate, where there is a joint property, however trifling in amount." 2 Mews, Eng. Case Law Dig. 726.

So, it appearing that property is outstanding in the partnership name, a joint debt is not provable against the separate estate. Ex parte Harris (1816) 1 Madd. 583.

While there is any other fund, however small, to resort to, joint creditors cannot prove against the separate estate of one of the partners who has become bankrupt. Ex parte Jamson (1818) 3 Madd. 231.

Joint creditors were not admitted to receive dividends out of the separate estate of one of the partners until the separate creditor had been paid, where it appeared that there was a joint estate of £13. Ex parte Kennedy (1852) 2 De G. M. & G. 228.

It is perhaps justifiable, then, to say that the rule, generally speaking, to be drawn from these decisions, is, that partnership debts are provable in an individual proceeding, but not for the purpose of receiving a dividend,—at least until the separate creditors are all paid.

In the subdivisions following are collected decisions showing exceptions to the rule, or situations when the denial of the right to share in the separate estate is not applicable.

c. Exceptions.

1. Absence of joint assets or solvent partners.

(a) In general.

As appears by the class of cases last above shown, the courts went so far as to hold that, when there are any joint assets whatever, however trifling in amount, the equitable rule of distribution must be followed, and the joint claims paid out of the joint assets, the individual claims out of the individual assets; and only in the event of a surplus of the separate L. R. A.

rate estate over the individual debts, could the joint creditors obtain any relief therefrom. We cannot be certain that the courts in this class of cases still admitted the right of the joint creditors to prove their claims in an individual proceeding for certain purposes, in the nature of voting as to the assignee, etc.; but it is probable that they did, for these cases are a following out to its logical conclusion of Lord Loughborough's rule, which admitted that right.

In consistency with this class of cases above referred to, and with due regard to the application of the equitable rule of distribution when both funds existed, the courts have nevertheless been holding, from 1785 down to the present time, with the exception of two cases under our present bankruptcy law of 1898, that when there are no joint assets in existence, and no solvent partner, then the joint creditors may resort to the separate estate with the separate creditors in an individual proceeding, and share pari passu with them. Decisions of this nature, of course, of necessity include and concede the joint creditor's right to prove his claim in an individual proceeding under such circumstances.

The courts do not always make clear, however, the distinction between the provability of a claim in an individual proceeding and the right of a joint creditor to share in a separate estate.

Thus, upon a separate commission of bankruptcy against one partner, the joint creditors petitioned, and were allowed, to prove their debts, and to receive a dividend pari passu with the separate creditors, there being no joint estate in Ex parte Hayden (1785) 1 Bro. Ch. 454.

Proof of a joint debt was admitted in a separate commission when there was no joint property, in Ex parte Pinkerton (1801) 6 Ves. Jr. 814, note.

There being, strictly speaking, no joint estate, joint debts were held provable in a separate commission, in Ex parte Hill (1802) 2 Bos. & P. N. R. 191, note.

Where one of two former partners became bankrupt, and a proof was tendered against his estate in respect of a partnership liability, the court allowed such proof on the official receiver as trustee, admitting that he was satisfied the other partner was utterly insolvent, although he had not been judicially declared bankrupt or insolvent. Ex parte Carpenter, 7 are not made in any way to involve the affairs of the firm of Wallblom & Thorsell.

Re Laughlin, 3 Am. Bankr. Rep. 1, 96 Fed. 689; Re Tinker, 3 Am. Bankr. Rep. 580, 99 Fed. 79; Re Hartman, 3 Am. Bankr. Rep. 65; Re McFaul, 3 Am. Bankr. Rep. 66.

Since, as stated in Wallblom's petition, he did not have enough property to pay his debts in full, partnership creditors were not entitled to share in the individual estate before the bankruptcy court; and, not being so entitled to share in such estate, the partnership claims were not provable against such estate within the provisions of § 17 of the bankruptcy act.

If there is no joint estate, and no surplus of the separate estate after paying the separate debts, the creditors of the partnership can receive no dividend.

Howe v. Lawrence, 9 Cush. 553, 57 Am. Dec. 68; Somerses Potters Works v. Minot, 10 Cush. 592; Murrill v. Neill, 8 How. 414, 12 L. ed. 1135; McCulloh v. Dashiell, 1 Harr. & G. 97, 18 Am. Dec. 271; Story, Partn. p. 376; Woddrop v. Ward, 3 Desauss., Eq. 203; Bell v. Newman, 5 Serg. & R. 78; Black's Appeal, 44 Pa. 503; McCormick's Appeal, 55 Pa. 252; Hawkins v. Mahoney, 71 Minn. 155, 73 N. W. 720; Weyer v. Thornburgh, 15 Ind. 124; Warren v. Able, 91 Ind. 109; Warren v. Farmer, 100 Ind. 595.

Mr. Otto Kueffner, for respondents:

The bankruptcy act of 1898 provides that the discharge shall be a discharge of all

Morrell, 270, 2 Mews, Eng. Case Law Dig. p. 733.

But a joint creditor was not allowed to prove his claim in a separate commission of bankruptcy for the purpose of receiving dividends, when there was a solvent partner, although there was no joint estate. Ex parte Kensington (1808) 14 Ves. Jr. 447.

Proof of joint debts was admitted in a separate commission in Ex parte Sadler (1808) 15 Ves. Jr. 52, there being no joint estate or solvent partner.

So, the proof of a joint debt of two houses was allowed against the separate commission of one of them, there being no joint estate. Ex parte Machell (1813) 2 Ves. & B. 218.

And, in the absence of joint property, proof of a joint claim was allowed against the separate estate of a bankrupt, notwithstanding the claim had been previously partly met by a pledge of joint property. Ex parte Geller, (1817) 2 Madd. 202.

The fact that the estate of a deceased partner is solvent does not affect the joint creditor's right to prove under a separate commission, when there is no joint estate and no other solvent partner. Ex parte Bauerman (1838) 3 Deacon, Bankr. 476.

But an inquiry as to the existence of a joint estate was directed where a joint creditor proved his claim in a separate commission, notwithstanding the previous dissolution of the partnership. Ex parte Birley (1840) 1 Mont. D. & De. G. 387.

A comparatively recent English decision adheres to the doctrine of the earlier cases above set out, holding that when there is no joint estate the joint creditors are entitled to have their claims paid out of the separate estate of the partners pari passu with the separate creditors. Re Budgett [1894] 2 Ch. 557, 63 L. J. Ch. N. S. 847, 71 L. T. N. S. 72.

The decisions of our own country, with the exception of the two decisions under our present act, show the same doctrine as the English cases. The following are under the bankruptcy act of 1867:

Where there is no joint estate, and no solvent living partner, the joint creditors shall prove their claims, and share pari passu with the separate creditors of an individual petitioner in bankruptcy. Re Jewett (1868) 1 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 491, Fed. Cas. No. 7,304; Re Downing (1870) 3 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 748, 69 L. R. A.

Fed. Cas. No. 4,045; Re Knight (1871) 8 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 436, Fed. Cas. No. 7,880; Re McEwen (1875) 6 Biss. 294, 12 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 11, Fed. Cas. No. 8,783; Re Pease (1876) 13 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 168, Fed. Cas. No. 10,881; Re West (1880) 30 Fed. 203.

A joint creditor is bound to prove, at the request of the separate creditors, his whole debt against the joint assets; but only the deficiency against the separate estate of one of the partners. Re May (1878) 17 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 192, Fed. Cas. No. 9,327.

The following decisions are under the bankruptcy law of 1898:

Where there are no partnership assets, and the firm has been dissolved, § 5, cl. f, relating to the marshalling of assets, does not apply; and a partnership creditor is entitled to share with the individual creditors of a member of the firm who became bankrupt, in the absence of a solvent partner. Re Green (1902) 116 Fed. 118.

So, where there are no partnership assets, and no solvent partner, firm creditors share in the separate estate of the bankrupt partner pari passu with the individual creditors. Conrader v. Cohen (1903) 58 C. C. A. 249, 121 Fed. 801.

Of course, in the two decisions above set out, under our law of 1898, the right to share in the separate estate in the absence of joint assets makes the joint debt provable in an individual proceeding under such circumstances; but in the two decisions following, which present the conflicting doctrine that, under no circumstances, except in the event of a surplus, can the joint creditor share in the separate estate, obviously no inference can be drawn as to the court's opinion upon the specific question of the joint creditor's right to prove his claim for other purposes than to receive a dividend, in the absence of any expression in regard thereto. The cases are inserted herein, however, because the class to which they belong would be incomplete without them, and in order that what light they may indirectly throw upon the point in question herein may be at hand.

In the first case, Re Wilcox (1899) 94 Fed. 84, after an exhaustive review of earlier English and American decisions, partnership creditors were held not entitled to receive dividends out of the separate estate of one of the debts, claims, and demands against the bankrupt or his estate, excepting only four classes.

If the creditor had actual notice, no scheduling whatever is required.

Fider v. Mannheim, 78 Minn. 308, 81 N. W. 2; McKittrick v. Cahoon, 89 Minn. 383, 62 L. R. A. 757, 99 Am. St. Rep. 606, 95 N. W. 223.

After the discharge is granted, it is good, and includes all claims.

Curtis v. Woodward, 58 Wis. 499, 46 Am. Rep. 647, 17 N. W. 328; Wilkins v. Davis, 2 Low. Dec. 511, 15 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 60, Fed. Cas. No. 17,664; Re Abbe, 2 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 75, Fed. Cas. No. 4; Re Freund, 1 Am. Bankr. Rep. 31; Jarecki Mfg. Co. v. McElwaine, 107 Fed. 249.

partners, until the individual creditors were paid in full, notwithstanding the fact that there were no partnership assets. This decision is based upon the following grounds: The bankruptcy act of 1898, provides (§ 5, cl. f): "The net proceeds of the partnership property shall be appropriated to the payment of the partnership debts, and the net proceeds of the individual estate of each partner to the payment of his individual debts. Should any surplus remain of the property of any partner after paying his individual debts, such surplus shall be added to the partnership assets, and be applied to the payment of the partnership debts. Should any surplus of the partnership property remain after paying the partnership debts, such surplus shall be added to the assets of the individual partners in the proportion of their respective interests in the partnership." The court says: "Considering the plain language of the bankrupt act, which recognizes no exceptions to the general rule, the history of the exception in the absence of joint estate, the discredit and misconception which that exception has brought upon the general rule both in England and this country, . . . I think that I am justified in holding that the exception is inapplicable under the present bankrupt act."

Upon the same reasoning, it was held in Re Janes (1904) 67 C. C. A. 216, 133 Fed. 912, Reversing 128 Fed. 527, that, where there are no solvent partners and no partnership assets, firm creditors are not entitled to share in the individual assets of one of the partners, as those assets must be distributed wholly among the individual creditors. It was insisted by counsel that, when there are no firm assets and no solvent partner, an "exception" is created, to which the rule of the statute does not apply; but the court referring to Re Wilcox, (1899) 94 Fed. 84, refused to sustain the contention, saying: "We are of the opinion that the rule to be applied is the rule laid down in the sections above quoted from the bankrupt act. It was within the discretion of Congress to leave this subject of the marshaling of assets to the courts, to be disposed of in accordance with equity principles and practice, or to provide that the general rule should be modified in particular cases. It has done neither. . . . The language is plain, explicit, and unambiguous; it names no 'exception'; its phraseology 69 L. R. A.

An assignment under the insolvency laws, even by one partner, is ipso facto a dissolution of the firm.

Wilkins v. Davis, 2 Low. Dec. 511, 15 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 60, Fed. Cas. No. 17,664; Davis v. Megroz, 55 N. J. L. 427, 26 Atl. 1009.

Jaggard, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On November 27, 1893, defendants, partners doing business as Wallblom & Thorsell, executed a deed of assignment under the state insolvency law, both as individuals and as partners, of all their unexempt property, which was filed in the district court of Ramsey county. The National Wall Paper Company filed and proved its claim in conveys no intimation that any 'exception' is contemplated."

(b.) When partnership assets have been assigned to bankrupt.

If it can be shown that the partnership assets have passed into the hands of the bankrupt, the decisions uphold the joint creditors' right to prove their claims against his estate in an individual proceeding brought by or against him.

Joint debts were held provable against the separate estate of a continuing partner who, upon the dissolution of the partnership, had taken an assignment of the partnership property, agreeing to indemnify the withdrawing partner against partnership debts. Es parte Burdekin (1842) 2 Mont. D. & De G. 704, 6 Jur. 977.

A joint creditor proving his claim against the separate estate of one of the partners was held entitled to receive a dividend upon proving that the partnership assets had been assigned to the bankrupt upon his covenant to discharge the partnership debts. Es parte Taylor (1842) 2 Mont. D. & De G. 753.

The decisions of our own country are to the same effect.

Firm creditors may prove their claims against the estate of a partner who, upon the dissolution of the firm, agreed to receive the firm assets and pay the firm debts. Re Long (1874) 9 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 227, Fed. Cas. No. 8,476; Re Collier (1874) 12 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 266, Fed. Cas. No. 3,002.

The joint creditors may prove their debts against the estate of a partner to whom had been sold all of the partnership interests. Re Rice (1874) 9 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 373, Fed. Cas. No. 11,750.

Where one of the partners takes the firm assets, and agrees to pay the joint debts, he becomes individually liable; and the partnership creditors may, at their option, prove against his estate in bankruptcy, and share pari passu with the separate creditors. Re Lloyd (1884) 22 Fed. 88.

2. Fraudulent abstraction of partnership funds by bankrupt.

Another of the situations recognized as an exception to the rule that joint creditors may the assignment matter, but did not file a release, and received no dividend. In March, 1895, it brought an action against Charles Wallblom and John Thorsell, as copartners doing business as Wallblom & Thorsell, in the district court of Ramsey county, alleging in its complaint the sale of goods of the value of $254.77, and default in payment. There was no allegation that the goods were sold to the firm, or purchased for partnership purposes. Default was made, and judgment entered on the 9th day of April, 1895, against "Charles Wallblom and John Thorsell, as copartners doing business as Wallblom & Thorsell, and each of them." On the 4th day of August, 1898, Charles Wallblom filed his individual petition in bankruptcy, and was on August 5th adjudged a bankrupt. The claim of the National Wall Paper Company was listed as follows: "National Wall Paper Co., Chicago, Ill. $254.77. Consideration, goods bought." On December 19, 1898, Charles Wallblom was discharged from all his debts. This appellant, as assignee of said judgment, thereafter brought this action to renew the judgment hereinbefore set forth. Respondent Wallblom answered, setting up his discharge in bankruptcy as a defense. The reply does not deny actual notice of the bankruptcy proceedings on the part of the National Wall Paper Company, but denies that notice was given to the partnership creditors. It does not appear that defendant John Thorsell was served or appeared in the proceeding. Upon the trial it was ad-not prove against the separate estate to receive a dividend is where the bankrupt partner had fraudulently abstracted funds.

Lord Thurlow, in Ex parte Lodge (1790) 1 Ves. Jr. 166, made the first decision to this effect, allowing partnership creditors of a partnership which had failed to prove their claims against the separate estate of one partner, who had taken partnership funds without the privity of the other.

And proof of joint debts may be admitted against the separate estate of a partner who had fraudulently abstracted firm funds. Lacey v. Hill (1876) L. R. 4 Ch. Div. 537.

So, in an Irish case joint creditors were admitted to prove their claims against one of the partners upon the ground of a fraudulent abstraction of partnership funds. Ex parte Smith (1821) 1 Glyn. & J. 74.

3. Right of petitioning joint creditor to prove.

Another exception is that, when the petitioning creditor in the individual proceedings is himself a joint creditor, he may prove his claims with the separate creditors.

Thus, in Ex parte Hall (1804) 9 Ves. Jr. 349, a joint creditor, who was the petitioning creditor in a separate commission, was admitted to prove with the separate creditors. Lord Chancellor Eldon said: "I think that was right; that being the petitioning creditor, he has a right like the separate creditors. The reason of Lord Thurlow's orders was that he could not conceive how one joint creditor could be in a different situation from all the other joint creditors. But the practice is now settled."

So, in Ex parte Ackerman (1808) 14 Ves. Jr. 604, a joint creditor, who was the petitioning creditor, was, on that account, held entitled to prove his claim, and receive a dividend pari passu with the separate creditors.

Again, in Ex parte Detastet (1810) 17 Ves. Jr. 247, Lord Eldon held that a joint creditor, who is the petitioning creditor in a separate commission, may take dividends with the separate creditors, although he is the only joint creditor who can come in with the separate creditors against the separate estate; and although he holds claims merely as the trustee of another joint creditor, who cannot prove them.

The doctrine of these decisions was later embodied in 6 Geo. IV., chap. 16, § 62, providing that a joint creditor shall not receive a dividend out of the separate estate until the separate creditors are paid in full, unless the joint creditor shall be the petitioning creditor in the separate commission.
69 L. R. A.

III. Discharge of partnership liability in individual proceeding.

a. Discharge of liability by reason of provability of claim.

1. In general.

As far as the mere provability of partnership debts in an individual proceeding is concerned, without regard to the question whether they may be proved against the separate estate for the purpose of receiving a dividend, it would seem, from the great majority of the cases above set out in II., that they are, under all circumstances, provable in such a proceeding for the purpose of allowing the joint creditor to vote for an assignee, to assent or dissent to the certificate of discharge, and to be cognizant generally of the administration of the estate, in order that he may know that the proceeds are being properly distributed; for all decisions, even those strictly advocating the equitable rule of distribution, admit that, if a surplus exist in the separate estate over the individual debts, the joint creditors shall receive the benefit of it; and, therefore, the joint creditor is practically interested in the individual proceeding, to the extent, at least, of seeing that the separate estate is prudently administered.

If, then, joint debts are provable in the individual proceeding, even for the purposes above indicated only, there would seem to be good ground for holding, as some decisions have done, that a discharge therein is effectual as to such claims, since the bankruptcy acts, almost without exception, contain provisions to the effect that a discharge in bankruptcy shall release a bankrupt from all of his provable debts. (Supra, I.)

The court, in Re Jewett (1877) 7 Biss. 328, 15 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 126, Fed. Cas. No. 7,306, recognizes the conflict upon the point whether the discharge in bankruptcy of an individual partner discharges him from liability to partmitted that the copartnership of Wallblom & Thorsell ceased to do business in 1893, and that the partnership was dissolved so far as it could be done by the acts of the partners. The debt here sued upon was not paid or discharged. The court found that notice had been given to all creditors whose claims were scheduled, and ordered judgment in favor of Wallblom upon the merits. From an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial, this appeal was duly taken.

Appellant's assignments of error involve the determination of this question, namely: "Did the court err in holding as a proposition of law that the individual discharge in bankruptcy of Wallblom released him from the claim here sued upon?"

1. The answer to that question depends, nership creditors, but declares the weight of authority in favor of the view that such debts can be proved in an individual proceeding, and are therefore necessarily released by the discharge therein.

So, it is declared that a prayer to be discharged from all debts provable under the bankrupt law is virtually a prayer for discharge from partnership debts, since they, as well as individual debts, are provable under the bankrupt law. Re Pierson (1874) 10 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 107, Fed. Cas. No. 11,153.

In the leading case of Wilkins v. Davis (1876) 2 Low. Dec. 511, Fed. Cas. No. 17,664, it was held that, if one member of a firm becomes bankrupt and obtains his discharge, he is released from all his debts, joint and separate. This holding is based upon the ground that a joint creditor may prove his debt under a separate bankruptcy. The court says, with a clear insight into the question: "The fact that joint creditors cannot prove against the separate estate might mislead a careless reader of some of the cases into an impression that they could not prove at all; but the true rule is that they prove, and may vote for assignee, and be heard on the discharge, and examine the debtor, and share any joint assets, or any surplus of the separate assets."

Since firm debts are provable against the individual estate of one of the partners, the individual discharge of the latter in bankruptcy frees him from partnership liabilities also, although the partnership is not brought into bankruptcy. Mattix v. Leach (1896) 16 Ind. App. 112, 43 N. E. 909.

In a suit against a firm, where one partner filed a plea of bankruptcy, stay of proceedings was entered as to him, and judgment rendered against the firm property and the individual property of the other partner. Lomme v. Kintzing (1871) 1 Mont. 290.

A discharge in bankruptcy granted to a person where the proceeding is one as to him individually operates to discharge him from his liability as a member of a firm to creditors of the firm,—since a discharge in bankruptcy discharges the bankrupt from all debts provable against his estate, and joint debts, as well as separate, are provable. Hamilton v. Cutler (1884) 9 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 187.

"Cases often occur where a partner may be bankrupt, while the remaining parties, as individual, and even the firm itself, are entirely in the first place, upon a construction of the bankruptcy act. The certificate of discharge recited that the bankrupt had conformed to all the requirements of law in that behalf. The court thereby decreed that the bankrupt "be forever discharged from all his debts and claims which by said act were made provable against his estate, and which existed on the 4th day of August, 1898, on which day the petition for adjudication was filed by him, excepting such debts, if any, as are by said act excepted from the operation of a discharge in bankruptcy." There is no claim that the discharge was invalid by reason of any of the things mentioned in chapter 3, §§ 14 and 15, of the bankruptcy act of July 1, 1898 (chap. 541, 30 Stat. at L. 550, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 3427, 3428.

solvent. In such case no adjudication against the firm could be made. But the bankrupt partner would, nevertheless, have an unquestionable right to be discharged from all his debts provable under the act." Re Stevens (1870) 1 Sawy. 397, 5 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 112, Fed. Cas. No. 13,393.

In a decision under our bankruptcy law of 1898, Jarecki Mfg. Co. v. McElwaine (1901) 5 Am. Bankr. Rep. 751, 107 Fed. 249, the discharge of one partner was held to release him from partnership indebtedness, on the ground that provisions exist in the statute to the effect that partnership liabilities are provable against an individual estate, such as the one providing that, where one copartner becomes bankrupt, the partners not adjudged bankrupt must wind up the business, and account to the trustee for the bankrupt's share; and, also, the provision that the discharge of a bankrupt shall not alter the liability of his partner.

A plea by a defendant, of a discharge in bankruptcy, without stating specifically that he was decreed a bankrupt as partner, was held sufficient in an action on a partnership claim. Morrison v. Woolson (1851) 23 N. H. 11.

An individual bankrupt, against whose estate copartners did not prove their claims for contribution on account of partnership debts paid by them, was held relieved from such claims by his discharge in bankruptcy; since, "if they might have proved in respect to his share of the indebtedness, they were bound to do so." Butcher v. Forman (1844) 6 Hill, 583.

But these American decisions are in the minority so far as numbers are concerned. Under subsds. III., b, 1, (a), and III., b, 2, (a), infra, will be found other decisions under the acts of 1867 and 1898, not in harmony with these above shown, upholding the necessity of making the firm or copartners parties to a proceeding by one partner, in order to allow the bringing in of the firm assets, and having an adjudication of all matters in the one proceeding.

2. The English doctrine.

Two cases have settled the rule in England in accordance with the principle above indicated (II., a, 1), viz.: That a discharge in an individual proceeding releases the debtor from partnership debts, because such debts are provable in bankruptcy proceedings.

The discharge did not purport to forever release the bankrupt from all his debts and liabilities, but only from all such "debts and claims" as were by said bankruptcy act "made provable against his estate." That the debt was one which might have been proved in bankruptcy proceedings against the estate of the individual partner is evident from the whole tenor of the law, and especially from chapters 1, 3, §§ 1, 4 (30 Stat. at L. 544, 547, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 3418, 3423), chap. 3, §§ 4, 5, of that law (30 Stat. at L. 547, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 3423, 3424). See also § 16 (30 Stat. at L. 550, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3428). Indeed, subdivision "g" of said § 5 expressly provides that the court may "permit the proof of the claim . . . against the individual estates and vice versa, and may marshal the assets of the partnership estate and individual estates so as to prevent preferences and secure the equitable distribution of the property of the several estates." The history and present status of this case differentiate it from any authority to which our attention has been called, or which careful search has enabled us to find. Collier, Bankr. 5th ed. § 5a, p. 74. The partnership ceased to do business, and had been dissolved, so far as the parties could dissolve it, in 1893. Moreover, in that year, by general assignment under the state insolvency law, the partners conveyed all their unexempt individual and firm assets to an assignee. The plaintiff has not made it appear that any such firm assets now exist. This court

The first decision, Ex parte Yale (1721) 3 P. Wms. 25, note a, was as follows: "So, on the other hand, if there be two partners, and one of them becomes a bankrupt, and, on a separate commission being sued out against him, his certificate is allowed, this does not only discharge the bankrupt of what he owed separately, but also of what he owed jointly, and on the partnership account; because by the act of Parliament the bankrupt, upon making a full discovery and obtaining his certificate, is to be discharged of all his debts. Now, the debts he owes jointly with another are equally his debts as what he owes on his separate account; consequently, he is to be discharged of both his joint and separate debts."

The other decision is Ex parte Hammond (1873) L. R. 16 Eq. 614, 29 L. T. N. S. 72, 21 Week. Rep. 865, which holds that a certificate of discharge, granted in an individual proceeding for liquidation brought by one partner, is a complete release of all his debts, both joint and separate. This decision is placed upon the ground that the statute provides that an order of discharge releases the debtor from all debts provable under the bankruptcy, and the joint debts are provable thereunder.

These two decisions are consistent with the practice justifiably inferred from the correlative English decisions (II.) in regard to the provability of joint debts in an individual proceeding; and seem to be regarded as having settled the law in England upon the question at issue.

A few other English decisions have been found which bear out the cases establishing the rule as above shown.

In an action upon a promise against two jointly as partners, one pleaded that he was a bankrupt, and that the cause of action arose before he was a bankrupt; whereupon the plaintiff entered a nolle prosequi as to him. Noke v. Ingham (1745) 1 Wils. Ch. 89.

In an action against partners on a bill of exchange, one of them pleaded bankruptcy and a certificate in bar; whereupon the plaintiff entered a nolle prosequi as to him. Aflalo v. Fourdrinier (1829) 6 Bing. 306.

So, one of several defendants in an action of debt having pleaded bankruptcy, plaintiff entered a nolle prosequi as to him. Booth v. Middlecoat (1830) 6 Bing. 445.

Where a joint debt had been proved under a separate commission in bankruptcy, and a dividend received thereon, the creditor, upon afterwards bringing an action against the solvent partner and the bankrupt jointly, for the same debt, was required to furnish full indemnity to the bankrupt against all costs of the action. Ex parte Stanton (1840) 1 Mont. D. & De G. 273.

In allowing a rule discharging from custody a bankrupt detained on account of a debt, it was held that, when he obtained his certificate of discharge in bankruptcy, he was entitled to personal immunity against any execution which might be issued in reference either to a partnership or a separate liability. Thomson v. Harding (1857) 3 C. B. N. S. 254.

b. Necessity of making firm or copartners parties.

1. Under bankruptcy law of 1867.

(a) In general.

Under III., a. 1, are shown some decisions rendered during the operation of the bankruptcy law of 1867, in harmony with the English rule that, partnership debts being provable in an individual proceeding in bankruptcy, they are necessarily released by the discharge therein.

But there is a serious conflict among the decisions rendered under the law of 1867, and against the line of cases above indicated stands a class holding to the doctrine that the bankrupt cannot be relieved from his firm debts unless he make the firm or copartners parties to his proceeding in some way so as to have the firm adjudicated bankrupt, and give the court, or the assignee appointed, jurisdiction over the joint assets.

As it is said in Re Elliott (1900) 2 N. B. N. Rep. 350: "Under the act of 1867, the authorities were conflicting as to the effect of a discharge of a partner upon his individual petition, without any proceedings on behalf of the partnership, or without making the copartners parties to the proceeding. It was held by some cases that such discharge released the bankrupt from his individual debts, and also his partnership obligations. This was also the rule in England. But it was held by other courts that such discharge did not release the bankrupt from partnership obligations."

The leading case of this latter class of cases will not presume that they do. This case therefore does not involve any question of marshaling assets, nor of the right of the plaintiff against the firm assets or the other partner. Respondent alone appears to have been served with summons in this action. The question here presented to this court affects the judgment against him alone. It is also to be borne in mind that this is not an objection to the entry of a decree of discharge, but only to the right of the appellant to renew or extend this judgment. The entry of the judgment materially affected the nature of the claim on which it was based, so far as these proceedings are concerned. It might be that in certain contingencies this court would examine that judgment for the purpose of ascertaining what the original contract was. Such a proposition is, however, academical in this case. When the judgment was entered it became a lien on any unexempt real estate within the county where the judgment was docketed, which belonged to the defendant and respondent Wallblom, and the creditor became entitled to appropriate new rights and remedies against him in consequence. So far as this case involves that judgment, the original cause of action was merged therein. In McKittrick v. Cahoon, 89 Minn. 383, 62 L. R. A. 757, 99 Am. St. Rep. 606, 95 N. W. 223, this court held that where, by an order in bastardy proceedings, the putative father of a natural child was required to pay a monthly stipend for its support, and upon refusal a final money judgment was was Re Little (1868) 2 Ben. 186, 1 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 341, Fed. Cas. No. 8,390. Here, a member of a firm who had filed an individual petition in bankruptcy in which no allusion was made to the firm, although a large part of the debts specified were copartnership debts, and the statement of assets included copartnership assets, was held entitled to amend so as to join his partner with him in the proceeding, on the ground that, until that was done, he could not be discharged from the firm debts. This decision was based upon the theory that the intent of the statute is that the creditors of a firm shall be required to meet but once, and in one bankruptcy forum, all questions in regard to the bankruptcy of a firm and their debts against it.

Numerous decisions to the same general effect followed, based on various grounds.

Where there are firm debts and firm assets, a member of the firm cannot, upon his individual petition, without joining the remaining members and having the firm declared bankrupt, be discharged from his partnership liabilities. Re Winkens (1869) 2 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 349, Fed. Cas. No. 17,875.

There must be an adjudication of bankruptcy against all the partners composing a firm before any step can be taken to reach in bankruptcy the partnership assets. An assignee appointed in an individual proceeding of one of the partners has no right to interfere therewith. Re Shepard (1869) 3 Ben. 347, 3 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 172, Fed. Cas. No. 12,754.

"It is difficult to see how any member of a firm can be released from his personal liability as such without the court substantially looking into all the transactions of the firm and settling up its affairs. A man cannot be discharged from his liabilities as a member of a firm, unless the debts and assets of the firm are considered and adjudicated upon by the court." Re Noonan (1873) 3 Biss. 491, Fed. Cas. No. 10,202.

The discharge of a bankrupt, granted upon his individual petition to which the members of a firm of which he was a member were in no way parties, does not discharge him from the partnership debts. Hudgins v. Lane (1874) 2 Hughes, 361, Fed. Cas. No. 6,827.

So, the discharge of a partner under a petition in involuntary bankruptcy filed against him individually, and not against the firm property, does not discharge him from firm liabilities, when it appears that there were at the time of the proceeding copartnership assets. Crompton v. Conkling (1877) 9 Ben. 225, Fed. Cas. No. 3,407.

A member of a firm filing a petition in bankruptcy asking only for a discharge as an individual, omitting to set forth the fact of his membership in a firm, or a statement of firm debts and assets, is, by his discharge therein, discharged only from his individual indebtedness. Corey v. Perry (1877) 69 Me. 140, 24 Am. Rep. 15, 17 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 147.

When there were assets of a firm in existence at the time of its dissolution, an individual petition in bankruptcy, subsequently brought by one of the members without making the others parties, does not give the court jurisdiction of the firm assets so that it can discharge the petitioner from the debts he owes as a member of the firm. Re Plumb (1878) 9 Ben. 279, Fed. Cas. No. 11,231.

It seems that in individual bankruptcy proceedings giving no schedule of firm debts or assets, nor praying for a discharge from firm liabilities, the discharge granted relieves the bankrupt only from individual indebtedness, and not from partnership liability; as the assignee, under such a proceeding, acquires no title to firm assets.

An individual discharged in a bankruptcy proceeding begun, carried on, and ended by him solely is not relieved, by force of his discharge, from partnership debts. Trimble v. More (1881) 15 Jones & S. 340.

A member of a late partnership cannot, in case of the existence of partnership assets, be discharged from the liabilities of the firm, unless the firm is declared bankrupt, and the firm assets are brought into the bankruptcy court to be administered according to the provisions of the bankruptcy act. Honegger v. Wettstein (1881) 15 Jones & S. 125.

The discharge in bankruptcy of a firm and its members individually from their debts does not discharge a member from debts he owed as a member of another firm, when no claims against that firm were proved in the proceeding, and the assets thereof were not administered. Perkins v. Fisher (1882) 80 Ky. 11.

The court held, incidentally, in Re Johnston (1883) 17 Fed. 71, that the individual obligations only of a bankrupt partner were discharged in a separate commission in bank-obtained for the total amount due, the rights of the person entitled to recover under the order of filiation were merged in the judgment, and the debt evidenced thereby was not excepted from the operation of the bankruptcy act of 1898 (§ 17), although the claim on which the judgment was based, standing by itself, would not have been discharged.

Such a judgment as the one here sought to be extended, filed in the bankruptcy proceedings, might, under appropriate conditions, have been paid in full or in part by the application thereto of the whole or a proper part of the funds in the hands of the respondent's trustee in separate bankruptcy proceedings. Its full discharge as an individual liability on a firm debt may accordingly be had in bankruptcy proceedings. Jarecki Mfg. Co. v. McElwaine, 5 Am. Bankr. Rep. 751, 107 Fed. 249; Curtis v. Woodward, 58 Wis. 499, 46 Am. Rep. 647, 17 N. W. 328. Collier, in his note to Re Freund, 1 Am. Bankr. Rep. p. 31, says: "Both on principle and by the weight of authority it would seem to be law that a discharge granted to one member of the firm releases him from all his provable debts and liabilities,—both from those incurred individually and from those incurred as a member of the partnership. The few cases which held to the contrary under the former act seem to have been based upon a misconception of the extent of the rights of an assignee in the bankrupt's property, and as to the effect upon the firm of the bankruptcy ruptcy brought by him, it appearing that there were assets of the firm in existence.

A practice, not in harmony with the doctrine of the cases above shown, seems to be advanced in Re Grady (1870) 3 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 227, Fed. Cas. No. 5,654, which holds that, where a bankrupt was a member of two firms, and, without notice to his copartners, filed an individual petition in voluntary bankruptcy, including a statement of the assets and liabilities of the two firms, the assignees in bankruptcy may compel an adjudication of the bankruptcy of the firms so as to have an administration of the firm assets, in order that the bankrupt may be discharged from all his liabilities.

b. In absence of joint assets.

The decisions are practically unanimous, under the bankruptcy law of 1867, that, in the absence of joint assets, a discharge in an individual proceeding in bankruptcy is effectual as against the partnership debts.

Where a member of a late copartnership files his individual petition under the bankrupt act, and inserts in his schedules debts contracted by the copartnership; and there are no partnership assets to be administered,—he will be entitled to be discharged from all his debts, individual as well as copartnership; and it is not necessary to make the other partners parties to the proceeding. Re Abbe (1868) 2 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 75, Fed. Cas. No. 4.

A petition was drawn for the discharge of the petitioner individually; but, he being the surviving partner of a firm all the other members of which had died insolvent, and nearly all of the debts being firm debts, leave to amend so as specifically to include partnership liabilities was applied for. The court, in granting the application, remarked that, without examination of the question, he was of the opinion that a discharge granted in the petition as filed would discharge the petitioner from his copartnership as well as individual liability; but that it would certainly be safer to amend the petition. Re Bidwell (1868) 2 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 229, Fed. Cas. No. 1,392.

The necessity of joining the other members of the firm was declared to exist only as to copartnerships actually existing, or where there are assets belonging to the firm, and not to copartnerships previously terminated by bankruptcy, insolvency, assignment, or otherwise. In Re Winkens (1869) 2 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 349, Fed. Cas. No. 17,875.

Where there are no partnership assets to be collected and paid out, one member of a former partnership may be, upon his individual petition, discharged from all his debts, partnership and private. Re Marks (1877) Fed. Cas. No. 9,094.

It is stated, obiter, in Honegger v. Wettstein (1881) 15 Jones & S. 125, that a member of a late partnership may, upon his individual petition, be discharged from all his debts, partnership as well as individual, provided there are no partnership assets.

A former partner petitioning alone, after dissolution of the partnership, and when there are no assets in existence, is, by the order of discharge, discharged from all debts, both partnership and individual. Keeler v. Snodgrass (1882) 8 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 490.

It is declared in Sarver v. Scarlett (1883) 9 Ohio L. J. 312, citing Keeler v. Snodgrass, 8 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 490, that, where a partner in an individual proceeding in bankruptcy states his joint debts, the discharge obtained is against them as well as his individual debts.

If there are no partnership assets, partnership claims are provable in an individual proceeding by one of the partners; and, therefore, the discharge of a partner therein relieves him from firm liabilities. Curtis v. Woodward (1883) 58 Wis. 499, 46 Am. Rep. 647, 17 N. W. 328.

When, before the individual petition in bankruptcy of one of the members was filed, the firm had been dissolved, and a general assignment made of all its property, the discharge granted operates as a discharge of partnership liabilities as well as of individual indebtedness. West Philadelphia Bank v. Gerry (1887) 108 N. Y. 467, 13 N. E. 453.

In one case, Daugherty v. Strauss (1880) 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (White & W.) p. 509, it does not appear whether partnership assets existed or not. It was held therein that a discharge in bankruptcy of a member of a copartnership releases him, not only from his individual debts, but from the debts of the firm also.

of one member." In Re Meyers, 96 Fed. 408, relied upon by appellant, upon an objection to discharge on the ground of fraud, there were independent and merely individual proceedings by the two partners. The petition asked for discharge of both individual and partnership debts. Brown, J., said (p. 411): "No adjudication of the firm as a bankrupt is asked, nor could such an adjudication be made without a formal application therefor, and the presence of both partners in the same proceedings. Where there are absolutely no firm assets, separate proceedings may be valid, and a discharge of each partner separately may possibly be had, because the firm debts are several as well as joint." Appellant also relies largely upon Re Mercur, 58 C. C. A.

472, 122 Fed. 389. That case involves an obviously different state of facts, and is in its reasoning not of necessity entirely inconsistent with the rule here applied.

In the early history of partnership law, the courts fell into the habit of speaking of a partnership as "a separate entity." The inaccuracy and impropriety of such nomenclature was so clearly and repeatedly demonstrated as to lead to its substantial abandonment. Recent decisions on the marshaling of assets under the present bankruptcy law have led to the undesirable resurrection of the phrase. Its misleading and ambiguous character is well illustrated by the subtleties of appellant's brief and by his use of it as a justification for a fallacious conclusion derived by unwarranted deduc-

2. Under bankruptcy law of 1898.

(a) In general.

There are at least two classes of cases under the bankruptcy law of 1898, in relation to the practice when joint assets exist.

According to one class, it seems that, in order to secure a discharge from firm debts, an adjudication of the firm as bankrupt, or other proceedings in which it is joined, is necessary in order to give the trustee appointed the right to interfere with the firm assets, and, also, in order that the rights and liabilities of all the parties may be arrived at in a single proceeding.

Thus, when there is evidence of the existence of firm assets, or circumstances justifying the presumption of their existence, a discharge from firm debts cannot be had in individual proceedings by the partners; the partnership itself must be brought into bankruptcy, and the firm assets duly administered in a single proceeding. Re Meyers (1899) 96 Fed. 408.

Whenever a person who is a member of an existing partnership, or who was a member of a defunct partnership, desires to go into a court of bankruptcy, he must bring the firm and the other partners into court with him; so long as there is partnership property to be administered or partnership debts to be paid, "everybody, whether creditors or partners, having an interest in the fund or in the liability existing, should be before the court, . . . to the end that, when the proceeding is closed, the rights and liabilities of all parties shall be determined for all time." Re Freund (1899) 1 Am. Bankr. Rep. 25.

A partner cannot obtain a discharge from partnership liabilities, unless there are proceedings had on behalf of the partnership itself, or unless the copartners are made parties to the individual proceedings. Re Elliott (1900) 2 N. B. N. Rep. 350. Some of the reasons given by the court why a partner should not be discharged from firm obligations in the absence of proceedings on behalf of the firm, are: "1. The effect of a discharge in such cases would be to impose upon the other partners who are not parties to the proceedings the entire obligations of the firm. 2. The presence of the other partners may develop the fact to be that the petitioning individual is really indebted to his late firm. 3. The partners who are not parties may, above all other, be the parties who have knowledge of the real financial condition of the petitioning individual."

Individual proceedings against all the members of a firm do not authorize the trustee appointed to interfere with firm assets in the absence of a petition and adjudication against the firm. Re Mercur (1903) 58 C. C. A. 472, 122 Fed. 389.

Since, in order to secure a discharge from firm debts, there must be an adjudication of the firm as bankrupt, and a firm trustee appointed where there are firm assets, a discharge obtained in an individual proceeding discharges from individual liabilities only. Dodge v. Kaufman (1905) 46 Misc. 248, 91 N. Y. Supp. 727.

According to the other class of decisions, both firm and individual assets and liabilities must be scheduled, and prayer be specifically made for a discharge from firm as well as individual debts; and due notice of the proceeding and petition for discharge from firm debts must be given to the remaining partners and all firm creditors.

The proper foundation to be laid when a partner in an individual bankruptcy proceeding desires to be discharged also from partnership debts is very explicitly set out in Re Laughlin (1899) 96 Fed. 589, 3 Am. Bankr. Rep. 1, in the following language: "In the petition originally filed it should be averred that the petitioner is indebted in his individual capacity, if such be the fact, and also as a member of a firm, naming it, and giving the names of the several partners; and the petition should pray for a discharge from the firm as well as his individual debts. To this petition should be attached the proper schedules, setting forth the firm debts, the firm property, if any, and all other matters, the same as is required in the case of a proceeding brought by all the partners. Schedules of the individual property and debts should also be attached to the petition. In the notice to the creditors to attend the first meeting, it should be stated that the firm, as well as the individual, creditors, are notified to attend, as the bankrupt is seeking a discharge from both classes of claims; and also in the petition for a discharge a release from the firm, as well as the individual, debts, should be asked; and, in the notice to creditors of the filing and hearing upon the petition for discharge, the fact that a release from the firm debts is prayed for tions from a fiction of law. His argument commands admiration for its ingenuity and industry, but compels the conviction that its result would be a plain perversion of the letter and purposes of the bankruptcy law. The learned trial court properly held that the discharge in bankruptcy operated as a full defense.

2. The most serious question in this case is this: Was the indebtedness properly scheduled, so as to give notice to the plaintiff's assignor? This question must also be answered in the affirmative. In the schedule, the name of the original debtor, the nature and the amount of the original debt, are correctly stated. The evidence shows that respondent owed the creditor no other debt. Notice was properly given.

Order affirmed.

should be specifically set forth. Notice of the filing of the petition, and of the creditors' meetings, should be sent to the nonjoining partner or partners, in order that, if necessary, they may appear and protect their rights and interests in the proceedings. The attention of the referees in this district is called to this matter, and they are instructed that it is their duty to examine all petitions referred to them; and, if it appears that the bankrupt is seeking a discharge from firm, as well as individual, debts, then, if necessary, the petition and schedules must be amended so as to comply with the foregoing requirements, before the adjudication is entered thereon; and care must be taken, in framing the notices to creditors, that they conform to the views herein expressed." Followed in Re Hartman (1899) 96 Fed. 593.

The adoption of the practice above set out is apparent in a number of subsequent decisions.

Thus, where, in a voluntary petition filed by a member of a firm, the petition for adjudication, the notice to creditors, and the petition for discharge make no reference to firm liability, and do not ask any relief against firm debts, a discharge granted on such a record will not operate to bar firm debts, but will only affect the debts owing by the bankrupt individually, notwithstanding the schedules attached to the petition show that a large part of the indebtedness of the bankrupt consists of firm debts. Re McFaun (1899) 96 Fed. 592.

So, where a partner in an individual proceeding desires a discharge against firm creditors, the petition must show that he was a member of the firm, and must aver that he asks a discharge from the firm, as well as individual, creditors; and this fact must be set forth in the notice given to creditors for the first meeting, and also in the petition for discharge, and in the notice to creditors thereof. Re Russell (1899) 97 Fed. 32.

And where, in an individual petition in bankruptcy, no reference is made to a firm which had gone out of business, but the affairs of which had not been formally settled, although the bulk of the indebtedness set forth in the schedules was for goods purchased by the firm; and where the adjudication was entered against the petitioner only,—he is entitled to ask a discharge only against his individual creditors. Re Carmichael (1899) 2 Am. Bankr. Rep. 815.

Where two copartners, petitioning as individuals, asked for an adjudication against the firm, which had been previously dissolved, but gave no notice of the proceedings to the other partners, who did not join in, an adjudication declaring the petitioning partners bankrupt "as copartners and as individuals" was vacated. Re Altman (1899) 2 Am. Bankr. 69 L. R. A.

Rep. 407, 95 Fed. 263, Affirming 1 Am. Bankr. Rep. 689.

An individual petition in bankruptcy in order to obtain the petitioner's discharge from the firm debts, after an unsuccessful attempt to obtain the discharge of the firm as such, must state the adjudication of the firm and the members composing it, as bankrupts, and must pray for a discharge from both firm and individual debts, and show full notice to creditors of those facts. Re Meyers (1899) 2 N. B. N. Rep. 111, 3 Am. Bankr. Rep. 260, 97 Fed. 757.

There is one decision under the law of 1898, Jarecki Mfg. Co. v. McElwaine (1901) 107 Fed. 249 (III., a, 1), in harmony with the English rule.

b. In absence of joint assets.

With one exception, the decisions under the act of 1898, as under the act of 1867, agree that a discharge in an individual proceeding is effectual as against partnership debts in the absence of joint assets.

It is declared by the court in Re Hirsch (1899) 2 N. B. N. Rep. 137, 3 Am. Bankr. Rep. 344, 97 Fed. 571, that, under the act of 1898, as under the act of 1867, a partner may, at his option, proceed upon his individual petition for his own adjudication and discharge without reference to the other partners, where all are insolvent, and there are no firm assets whatever. "There is nothing in the present act or rules necessarily excluding this course in such a case; it prejudices no one; and it is recommended by its simplicity and convenience in often avoiding the useless burden of proceeding adversely and by publication against an insolvent partner who may be inimical, or whose whereabouts may be unknown, and whose presence in the cause, real or constructive, would not be of the least benefit to creditors."

It is conceded, obiter, in Re Meyers (1899) 1 N. B. N. 575, 2 Am. Bankr. Rep. 707, 96 Fed. 408, that, where there are absolutely no firm assets, a discharge of firm debts in a separate proceeding may be valid, because firm debts are separate as well as joint.

A partner who filed a petition in bankruptcy asking to be adjudged a bankrupt, and included in his schedules partnership indebtedness, and gave notice of the first meeting to both firm and individual creditors, is by his discharge released from both firm and individual debts; since, by the act of 1898, firm debts were provable against his estate, there being no partnership assets. Re Kaufman (1905) 136 Fed. 262.

It not appearing in LOOMIS v. WALLBLOW that any firm assets existed, that decision harmonizes with the cases above shown.

One decision, however, under the law of 1898, is not in line with those above set out. It being held that where, in an individual petition in bankruptcy, no reference was made to partnership assets and liabilities, although partnership debts were included in the schedule, and a discharge was asked from all debts provable against the petitioner's estate, he may not have a discharge from firm debts, although the firm is without assets and no longer exists, and the debts are barred by the statute of limitations. To accomplish that purpose in an individual proceeding, the court declares that the procedure should have been as pointed out in Re Laughlin (1890) 96 Fed. 591, supra, III., b, 2, (a). M. M. M.

Henry E. LADD, Appt.,

v.

Rosa WEISKOPF et al., Respts.

(62 Minn. 29.)

- *1. A decree of distribution by the probate court construed as assigning the entire estate in the property of the deceased to the persons therein named, to wit, a life estate to the widow and a vested remainder to seven others, share and share alike.
2. A decree of a probate court, having jurisdiction, assigning the residue of the estate of the deceased person, is conclusive upon all persons interested in the estate, whether then in being or not. It is in the nature of a judgment in rem, which binds all the world.
3. Where the contract between vendor and vendee calls for "good" title, the vendee is entitled to a title that is "marketable," as well as good in fact. He is not bound to accept a title which is so doubtful as to be unmarketable; and the rule is the same whether the action is one brought by the vendor to compel specific performance, or by the vendee to recover back his earnest money. But a title is not unmarketable, within the meaning of this rule, where no question of fact is involved, but only one of law, arising exclusively upon the construction of a record muniment of title, and all parties in interest are before the court, so that its decision will be a final determination of the matter. Hence, a doubt as to the construction of a decree of distribution by a probate court, which is conclusive upon all parties interested in the estate, will not render a title unmarketable within the meaning of the rule.

(July 10, 1895.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from an order of the District Court for Hennepin County denying a new trial after verdict for defendants in an action brought to rescind a contract for the purchase of real estate because of a defect in defendants' title, and to recover purchase money paid upon the contract. Affirmed.

*Headnotes by MITCHELL, J.

NOTE.—As to what is a marketable title, see Moot v. Business Men's Invest. Assn. 45 L. R. A. 666; Baldwin v. Trimble, 36 L. R. A. 489; Moore v. Williams, 5 L. R. A. 654; Townshend v. Goodfellow, 3 L. R. A. 739; Kullmann v. Cox, 53 L. R. A. 884; and the case succeeding this one, of Talor v. Evans, 60 L. R. A.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Jackson & Atwater, for appellant:

Under the will of Leopold Weiskopf, the ultimate remainder-men are such of the testator's children (and children of any deceased child) as may survive the testator's widow, Rosa. Until her death it will be impossible to determine who these remainder-men are.

Armstrong v. Armstrong, 54 Minn. 248, 55 N. W. 971; Fleming v. Burnham, 100 N. Y. 1, 2 N. E. 905; Radley v. Kuhn, 97 N. Y. 26; Wells v. Wells, 88 N. Y. 333; Monarque v. Monarque, 80 N. Y. 324; Teed v. Morton, 60 N. Y. 506; 20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 838, notes, title Remainders; Harris v. Strodl, 132 N. Y. 392, 30 N. E. 962; Kilpatrick v. Barron, 125 N. Y. 751, 26 N. E. 925.

The title of the testator's children, and the title which would pass by their deed, cannot be a title in fee simple absolute, and is not, therefore, such title as the vendee had a right to require and receive under his contract.

Cogan v. Cook, 22 Minn. 137; Fleming v. Burnham, 100 N. Y. 1, 2 N. E. 905; Kilpatrick v. Barron, 125 N. Y. 751, 26 N. E. 925; Methodist Episcopal Church Home v. Thompson, 108 N. Y. 618, 15 N. E. 193; Armstrong v. Armstrong, 54 Minn. 248, 55 N. W. 971.

The executors in no manner represented these unborn grandchildren devisees; there is no privity between them, and they, the devisees, are not bound by the judgment.

Dale v. Roosevelt, 1 Paige, 35; Osgood v. Manhattan Co. 3 Cow. 622, 15 Am. Dec. 304; Muson v. Peter, 1 Munf. 446; Kent v. St. Michael Church, 136 N. Y. 10, 18 L. R. A. 331, 32 Am. St. Rep. 693, 32 N. E. 704; Monarque v. Monarque, 80 N. Y. 320; Davis v. Hudson, 29 Minn. 36, 11 N. E. 136.

A decree of distribution is not binding on heirs or devisees who were not personally served or present in court, and especially in the case of unborn or afterborn heirs or devisees.

Ruth v. Oberbrunner, 40 Wis. 238; Bressee v. Stiles, 22 Wis. 120; Black, Judgm. §§ 580, 638, 643; Brigham v. Fayerweather, 140 Mass. 411, 5 N. E. 265.

The purchaser is entitled to a marketable title. He should be protected against the risk suggested.

Moore v. Appleby, 108 N. Y. 241, 15 N. E. 377; Methodist Episcopal Church Home v. Thompson, 108 N. Y. 618, 15 N. E. 195;

Harris v. Strodl, 132 N. Y. 392, 30 N. E. 962.

A probate court has no jurisdiction to reform a will.

Sherwood v. Sherwood, 45 Wis. 357, 30 Am. Rep. 757; Christian v. Colbert, 33 Minn. 509, 24 N. W. 301.

The title was doubtful and not "marketable," and, as such, the purchaser ought not to be required to take it.

Moore v. Appleby, 108 N. Y. 241, 15 N. E. 377; Methodist Episcopal Church Home v. Thompson, 108 N. Y. 618, 15 N. E. 195.

The action is brought on in proper form. 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 640; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 849; Champlin v. Laytin, 1 Edw. Ch. 467; Boas v. Farrington, 85 Cal. 535, 24 Pac. 787.

On petition for rehearing.

Under a contract for the sale of real estate, the vendee has the right, not merely to have conveyed to him a good title, but an indubitable title.

Swayne v. Lyon, 67 Pa. 436; Dobbs v. Norcross, 24 N. J. Eq. 327.

The probate court has undoubted power to make such revision of its decree, and to make it even against purchasers, if they are properly served with notice of the application.

McNamara v. Casserly, 61 Minn. 335, 63 N. W. 880.

In what manner such power might be exercised, and how far its exercise would be approved by the various appellate courts through which the litigation might drag, would be a chance which the unfortunate purchaser would have to take.

The giving of notice to a nonresident is jurisdictional; and a failure to give it is fatal to the decree of distribution.

Ruth v. Oberbrunner, 40 Wis. 238.

It is because of the very doubt as to the construction which the court of last resort may place on ambiguous or uncertain language in a will that specific performance has been denied in a large number of adjudged cases.

Messrs. Shaw & Cray, for respondents:

The probate judgment adjudges and declares the legal effect of said will, and assigns the land in question in accordance with the legal effect, and vests in Rosa Weiskopf a life estate, and the remainder in the other devisees named, in undivided interests, share and share alike. This judgment is conclusive, and cannot be attacked collaterally.

Davis v. Hudson, 29 Minn. 27, 11 N. W. 136; State ex rel. Martin v. Ueland, 30 Minn. 277, 15 N. W. 245; Greenwood v. Murray, 26 Minn. 259, 2 N. W. 945; Wood v. Myrick, 16 Minn. 494, Gil. 447; Dayton v. Mintzer, 22 Minn. 393; Huntsman v. 69 L. R. A.

Hooper, 32 Minn. 163, 20 N. W. 127; Re Mousseau, 30 Minn. 202, 14 N. W. 887; Balch v. Hooper, 32 Minn. 158, 20 N. W. 124.

This judgment construes the will of Leopold Weiskopf, determines and declares its effect, and assigns the whole estate in this land specifically.

This judgment, standing unappealed from and unreversed, is conclusive and binding as the law of that case, whether or not the judgment is such as this court would have pronounced, upon a consideration of the original question of the construction of said will.

An estate for life, with remainder to persons named, constitutes and comprises the whole estate.

2 Washb. Real Prop. 3d ed. 497, 498; Kent, Com. 9th ed. p. 227; Miller v. Caragher, 35 Hun, 485.

If the probate judge has, by any inadvertence, named that a conclusion of fact which is in truth a conclusion of law, that inadvertence will not be suffered to destroy or impair the legal effect of the judgment.

Davis v. Hudson, 29 Minn. 36, 11 N. W. 136; Child v. Morgan, 51 Minn. 116, 52 N. W. 1127.

The law has committed all this jurisdiction to the probate court. The conclusive presumption is that it will be honestly exercised.

With respect to the matter and property concerning which it adjudges, and upon which it operates, what it adjudges is binding and conclusive as against all persons then in being or afterwards to come into being; in other words, against the world.

Thompson v. Myrick, 24 Minn. 4; Ames v. Slater, 27 Minn. 70, 6 N. W. 418; Allie v. Davidson, 23 Minn. 442.

When the statute declares in terms that the final decree of the probate court in the assignment of an estate "shall be binding on all persons interested in the estate," it can mean nothing less than that all such persons are parties thereto, and to the proceeding in which such decree was rendered, and are bound by it.

Osgood v. Manhattan Co. 3 Cow. 622, 15 Am. Dec. 304; Mason v. Peter, 1 Munf. 446.

Upon the face of the will as to questions of original construction, those questions must be determined against the plaintiff, and in favor of the defendants.

The freehold can never be placed in abeyance.

Lyle v. Richards, 9 Serg. & R. 322.

The interests in the remainder of this estate, as to the land in question, or that remainder, were vested. If vested, then the title to this land is now, under the true construction of said will, a life estate in the widow, Rosa Weiskopf, and the remainder in the children of the testator named in his will.

Moore v. Lyons, 25 Wend. 119; Livingston v. Greene, 52 N. Y. 118; Heilman v. Heilman, 129 Ind. 59, 28 N. E. 310; 2 Redf. Wills, § 218; Harris v. Carpenter, 109 Ind. 540, 10 N. E. 422.

Mitchell, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The question in this case is whether the title tendered by defendants to plaintiff was good. The facts are these: One Leopold Weiskopf died testate, and seised of certain real estate, including the tracts here involved. The material provisions of his will are as follows: (1) "I give, devise, and bequeath unto my devoted wife, Rosa Weiskopf, for and during the remainder of her natural life, all these certain lands and real estate situate in said county of Hennepin and state of Minnesota, described as follows: [Here follow descriptions of property, which include all the tracts in question except lot 12, block 5, Hancock & Rice's addition to Minneapolis.] And it is my will that, from and after the death of my said wife, Rosa, and I hereby direct, give, devise, and bequeath, upon her decease, all the above-mentioned real and personal property unto our beloved children, Samuel Weiskopf, Henry Weiskopf, David Weiskopf, Bertha Weiskopf, Anna Markens (formerly Weiskopf), Georgiana Weiskopf, and William Weiskopf, or to such of them as shall be living at the time of their said mother, Rosa's, death, to them, their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns forever, to be equally divided between them, share and share alike,—the child or children of any deceased of our said children, should any be deceased at said time, to represent his or her parent, and be entitled to take and receive the same shares therein as their, his, or her respective parent or parents would be entitled to, if then living.

... (6) I give, devise, and bequeath all the rest residue, and remainder of my estate, of whatsoever kind or sort, and where-soever situated not hereinbefore given and disposed of, unto my said children, to wit, Harry, David, Bertha, Samuel, Anna, Georgiana, and William, their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, to and for them, respectively, share and share alike, and to and for their respective use, absolutely and forever."

The will was duly proved. After payment of all claims against the estate, expenses of administration, and all specific and general legacies, the probate court, upon application of the executors, and upon due notice, made a decree of distribution 69 L. R. A.

of the residue of the estate in and by which, after finding that the real estate in question (specifically describing it) remained in the hands of the executors for distribution, further found, determined, and decreed "that by his said last will and testament testator devised the above-described parcels . . . to Rosa Weiskopf for life; and the remainder therein and all said other described real estate he devised to his children, Harry Weiskopf, David Weiskopf, Bertha Weiskopf, Samuel Weiskopf, Anna Markens, Georgiana or Georgiana Weiskopf, and William Weiskopf, share and share alike. As conclusions of law, the court finds that said devises are all valid and operative, and that the said devisees are entitled to said real estate according to the terms of said will. On motion of Messrs. Shaw & Cray, attorneys for said petitioners, it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the above-described real estate be, and the same hereby is, assigned to the said devisees, according to the terms and provisions of the said last will and testament of the deceased." This decree was rendered in 1886, and remains in full force, and has never been appealed from. Rosa, the widow of the testator, and all of his seven children named in the will, are still living; and it is their title, or title derived from them, which was tendered to plaintiff.

Defendants' contentions are (1) that this decree of distribution adjudges that the devisees named, to wit, the widow and seven children, were entitled to the property, and that it assigned the whole estate in the lands to them, and that such decree of distribution is conclusive and binding upon the whole world; (2) but, even if the decree is not conclusive and the question of the construction of the will is still an open one, then upon the face of the will it devises a life estate in the lands to the widow, Rosa, and a vested remainder to the seven children named, share and share alike. On the other hand, plaintiff's contentions are: (1) That the remainder-men under the will are, not the seven children named, but such of them, and the children of any of them that have deceased, as may survive the widow; and that the children, if any, of the deceased children will take by virtue of the will, and not by inheritance from their deceased parents; hence, until the death of the widow, it will be impossible to determine who these remainder-men are. (2) That the decree of the probate court does not purport to assign the whole estate in the land to the devisees named, but merely assigns it to them according to the terms and provisions of the will; so that we are referred back to the will to ascertain how the property is devised. (3) But, even if the decree did assume to assign the entire estate in the land to the devisees named, it would not be binding upon the unborn issue of deceased children, if any, who might be living at the death of the widow, and who would take as remainder-men under the will. (4) That, even if the title was in fact good, it was not marketable.

Under the view we take of the case, it becomes unnecessary to consider what would be the proper construction of the will as an original question, for the reason that we are of opinion that the decree of the probate court must be construed as assigning the entire estate in the lands to the devisees named, and that, whether this was in accordance with the correct construction of the will or not, it is conclusive and binding upon "all parties interested in the estate of the deceased," whether in being at the time or not. The argument of counsel for plaintiff is that the only operative adjudication is the last clause, whereby it is ordered that the real estate be and hereby is assigned "to the said devisees, according to the terms and provisions of said last will and testament of the deceased;" that this does not attempt to define the nature or extent of the estate assigned, but merely refers back to the terms of the will itself. It seems to us that any such view of the meaning and effect of the decree is untenable. Whenever the jurisdiction of a court is properly invoked it is the duty of the court to exercise that jurisdiction, and render an effective judgment upon the subject-matter brought before it. This must be presumed to have been what the court intended to do in this case. But, if plaintiff's contention is correct, then the decree amounted to an adjudication of nothing. Moreover, if plaintiff's construction of the will is correct, there could be no assignment of the property until the death of the widow, for until that event occurred it could not be determined who a single one of the remainder-men would be. When the jurisdiction of the court was invoked in this instance it became his duty to construe the will, determine its legal effect, and assign the property in accordance with the terms of the will as thus construed. It seems to us that this is precisely what the court has done in this instance; and that there is no room for reasonable doubt, either as to how he construed the will, or as to the meaning and effect of the decree of assignment, when all parts of it are taken together. The court first construed the will as devising a life estate to the widow, Rosa, and the remainder to the seven children named, share and share alike. It then determines that these devises are valid, and that said devisees (the widow and seven children) are entitled to said real estate according to the terms of said will, which must mean as thus construed. The court then orders and adjudges that the above-described real estate (not a part of it, or a contingent remainder, or a vested remainder subject to defeasance, but a vested estate in the whole of it) be and the same hereby is, assigned to said devisees,—that is, to the widow and all the seven children and not to such of them as should survive their mother, or to the children of such of them as might be then deceased. It is true he then adds, "according to the terms and provisions of said last will," etc.; but, in view of the adjudications which have preceded, this clearly means according to the terms and provisions of the will as thus construed. The fact that this construction is called a finding of fact, instead of a conclusion of law; or that it is not preceded by the formal words "ordered and decreed,"—is of no importance. It is a clear and explicit adjudication of the main question presented to him, to wit, Who were entitled to the property under the terms of the will? This being determined, all that remained to be done was to assign it accordingly. The statute requires that "in such decree the court shall name the persons and the proportions or parts to which each is entitled." This the court has done, although perhaps not in the most formal manner. Taking the entire decree together, the force and effect of it is to assign a life estate to the widow and the remainder to the seven children named in the will and the seven, share and share alike. See 1 Freeman, Judgm. § 47, and cases cited.

Whether this decree was in accordance with the correct construction of the will or not, it is binding and conclusive upon all persons interested in the estate of the deceased, whether under disability or not, or whether then in being or not. Greenwood v. Murray, 26 Minn. 259, 2 N. W. 945. Counsel admits the general rule, but insists that it is inapplicable to persons who were not born when the decree was rendered, and who would take, if at all, under the will, and not under or in privity with any person in being at the date of the decree,—that such persons cannot be parties to the proceeding, either in person or by representation, and hence are not bound by it. This argument is based upon a false conception of the nature of the proceedings. Proceedings in the probate court are not an action between party and party, but are in the nature of a proceeding in rem, acting directly on the res, which is the estate of the deceased. If the court had jurisdiction of the estate, and the jurisdiction is properly invoked, of which there is no question in this case, a decree of distribution is a judgment in rem, which conclusively determines the right of all parties interested in the estate just as fully as a decree in admiralty or any other judgment in rem. It is on this ground that it has been held that, as respects proceedings for the probate of wills, or on the administration of the estates of deceased persons, it is not necessary to appoint a guardian for minors interested in the estate. Re Mousseau, 30 Minn. 202, 14 N. W. 887; Huntsman v. Hooper, 32 Minn. 163, 20 N. W. 127. There is no difference in principle between the case of persons in being who are under disability and persons yet unborn. The logic of counsel's argument would be equally applicable to any other decree or order of the probate court affecting the estate of the testator, as, for example admitting his will to probate; and the result would be that nothing could ever be conclusively determined as to the estate of a deceased person, for often it could not be positively assured that some person might not afterwards come into being who would be interested in the estate.

One of the tracts of which the testator died seised, and the title to which is here involved, is lot 12, block 5, in Hancock & Rice's addition to Minneapolis. This is not included in the descriptions contained in the second—the first above quoted—paragraph of the will; but there is included a description of lot 8, block 5, in the same addition; and the probate court, in the decree of distribution, finds that this was a mistake in the will, and that what the testator intended to devise was lot 12. The point is made that a probate court has no power to reform a will. This matter is wholly immaterial, for the reason that, if lot 12 did not pass under the specific devise in paragraph 2, it did pass to the same parties under the general residuary devise in paragraph 6 of the will.

There is nothing in the point that the deed of Harry Weiskopf (who was not a party to the contract) to his codevisee Georgiana Weiskopf did not convey to her all his interest or estate in the premises.

The last point made by plaintiff is that, although the title tendered him may be good in fact, yet it was involved in so much legal doubt as to be unmarketable, and therefore he was not bound to accept it. Although the contract only calls for a good title, yet we have no doubt that he was entitled not merely to a title good in fact, but to a marketable title. Neither do we assent to the distinction sought to be made by defendants' counsel between an action in equity to compel specific performance and an action at law to recover purchase money, or to recover back earnest money. A court refuses to compel specific performance on the ground that the title is unmarketable, not because the granting of such relief is a matter in the discretion of the court, but because the vendee has not been tendered what he is entitled to according to the terms of his contract. And, if the title tendered is not what he is entitled to, why should he be compelled to pay for what he is not bound to accept? The rule is the same whether the action is one by the vendor to compel specific performance, or one by him to recover purchase money, or one by the vendee to recover back his earnest money. In each case the question is, Was the title marketable? The distinction between actions at law and actions in equity, made in Romilly v. James, 6 Taunt. 263, if it ever was good law, is not so now under our judicial system, where all distinctions between courts of equity and courts of law have been done away with. Methodist Episcopal Church Home v. Thompson, 108 N. Y. 618, 15 N. E. 193; Moore v. Williams, 115 N. Y. 586, 5 L. R. A. 654, 12 Am. St. Rep. 844, 22 N. E. 233. Therefore the question, in this action by the vendee to recover back earnest money, is, Was the title tendered such that, if an action had been brought by the vendor, the court would have decreed specific performance? We are of opinion that it was. The validity of the title did not depend upon matters of fact not of record. The title rested wholly upon record evidence. Hence the doubt, if any, was one purely of law, as to the construction and effect of these records. If the insufficiency of the title had depended upon the construction of the will, it would have been unquestionably doubtful and unmarketable. But it wholly depended upon the effect of the decree of distribution. The mere fact that laymen, or even some lawyers, may have had some doubt as to the conclusiveness of the decrees of the probate court upon persons not in being who may be interested in the estate of a deceased person, was not such a doubt as to render the title unmarketable in any legal sense, or constitute any ground for a court refusing specific performance. The only possible legal doubt worthy of consideration is as to the sufficiency of the decree of distribution, in form and substance, to constitute an assignment of the whole estate in the property to the devisees named. Generally, where courts have refused to compel specific performance on the ground of doubt on a question of law arising upon the construction or legal effect of record muniments of title, it has been where not only was the doubt a grave one, but where there were interested parties not before the court, and consequently not bound by its decision, who might afterwards subject the vendee to vexatious and expensive litigation. Except under such circumstances, the courts have usually construed the records for themselves, and granted or refused specific performance according as they found the title good or bad. A title cannot be considered doubtful where there is no question of fact involved in a decision as to its validity, but one of law only, upon which the court where the controversy is litigated is competent finally to pass. Chesman v. Cummings, 142 Mass. 65, 7 N.E. 13. We think this is such a case.

Order affirmed.

Rehearing denied.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

Benjamin TAYLOR

v.

Margaret EVANS, Appt.

(177 Pa. 286.)

Payment of the money cannot be enforced under a contract to purchase real estate which stipulates that the property shall be clear of all encumbrances, if the title has not been accepted, and there is an existing right on the part of a municipality to open a platted street over the property, which will destroy the buildings without making compensation for them.

(October 5, 1896.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas, No. 2, for Philadelphia County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a promissory note, in which defendant set up a counterclaim for damages for breach of contract to purchase certain real estate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. Howard Morrison, for appellant:

An encumbrance is a burden upon land depreciative of its value, such as a lien, easement, or servitude, which, though adverse to the interest of the landowner, does not conflict with his conveyance of the land in fee.

10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 361.

The mere existence of Hilles street upon the plan of the city of Philadelphia, it never having been opened, would not bring it within the definition of an encumbrance, for the reason that, upon its opening, whoever is the owner is entitled to be repaid for the damage which he suffers.

2 Greenl. Ev. ¶ 242; Bailey v. Miltenberger, 31 Pa. 37, 41; Ake v. Mason, 101 Pa. 17; Memmert v. McKeen, 112 Pa. 319, 4 Atl. 542; Patterson v. Arthurs, 9 Watts, 152; Dobbins v. Brown, 12 Pa. 75; Wilson v. Cochran, 46 Pa. 229; Peck v. Jones, 70 Pa. 83.

If the existence of the street was either

NOTE.—As to what is a marketable title, see the preceding case of Ladd v. Weiskopf, and note.

69 L. R. A.

an encumbrance upon the physical condition of the property, or merely a circumstance affecting its physical condition, the fact that it was confirmed and upon the city plans is notice.

Bailey v. Miltenberger, 31 Pa. 41; Ake v. Mason, 101 Pa. 21.

Mr. William H. Peace, for appellee:

The case is to be governed according to the principles of law governing actions for specific performance.

Herzberg v. Irwin, 92 Pa. 48; Nicol v. Carr, 35 Pa. 381; Lesley v. Morris, 9 Phila. 110.

If Mrs. Evans was not entitled to specific performance, she could not recover in this action.

The presence of Hilles street running through the whole length of the lot was an encumbrance or a restriction that affected the title.

People's Sav. Bank v. Alexander, 2 Sadler (Pa.) 287, 3 Atl. 821.

Where there is serious doubt as to the meeting of the minds, equity will not decree performance.

Cortelyou's Appeal, 102 Pa. 576; Herman v. Somers, 158 Pa. 424, 38 Am. St. Rep. 851, 27 Atl. 1050.

Notice, to bind in law, must be given by a person interested in the property, and in the course of the treaty for the purchase.

3 Sugden, Vendors, pp. 451, 452; Kerns v. Swope, 2 Watts, 75; Boggs v. Varner, 6 Watts & S. 469; Peebles v. Reading, 8 Serg. & R. 484.

Notice should be actual in the transaction.

Hottenstein v. Leroh, 104 Pa. 454.

Green, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It was agreed upon the trial that Hilles street, between Frankford avenue and Thomas street, was laid out on the city plan as a public street 40 feet wide, and was confirmed, in 1858. It was never opened, and at some time after it was laid out, and before the title of Mrs. Evans accrued, certain buildings were erected on the front of the lot, and upon the part of it which was the bed of Hilles street. This was the situation of the property when Mrs. Evans contracted to sell it to Taylor. Under the act of April 3, 1851 (P. L. 327), no damages could be recovered for the loss of these buildings by the opening of the street, because they were erected after the street was laid out and plotted on the city plan. The contract of sale by Mrs. Evans to Taylor, as expressed in the receipt for $50 of the purchase money, was that the property was to be "clear of all encumbrances;" and the question is whether the right of the city to open the street without paying any damages for the buildings which were on the lot, and within the bed of the street, was an encumbrance, so as to constitute a breach of the condition against encumbrances contained in the receipt. So far as the offers of testimony to show knowledge of the encumbrance on the part of Taylor are concerned, we think they were immaterial, because he protected himself by a positive covenant that there was to be no encumbrance on the title, and he would, therefore, be entitled to the benefit of his contract, whether he had knowledge of an encumbrance or not. It is also to be borne in mind that the contract was executory, and not executed, and the case therefore involves the question whether the contract is to be enforced against the will of the purchaser. That the purchaser, if obliged to take the title, will or may suffer a serious detriment, is very manifest from the consideration that the buildings on the lot naturally constituted a large part of the value of the property. If these may be taken from him without compensation, he has no equivalent for their loss in a reserved right to have damages for the taking. He is therefore by that much a direct loser upon the terms of his contract as it was made, and presumably he would not have made it. But whether he would or would not have made it, if he had had knowledge of the contingency, he saw proper to stipulate for a title free of any encumbrance; and that feature of his contract cannot be rejected without altering the contract itself. This equity will not do, even when the title is clouded only, because specific performance is matter of grace, and not of strict right. But when a positive term of the contract must be disregarded, neither equity nor law will interfere, where the contract is executory. These considerations eliminate much of the discussion, and distinguish the present contention from the authorities relied upon for the appellant. While an existing street upon a lot, or the mere liability to have a street opened upon it, is matter of which a purchaser is bound to take notice, and therefore, on that account, cannot defend against an action for the purchase money after the deed has been accepted, the case is very different when no deed has been accepted, no mortgage or other lien for the purchase money has been given by the purchaser, no possession has been taken, nor any other act done by the purchaser in affirmation of the contract. And when, in addition to all this, a large loss of the actual consideration of the contract may, and probably will, be suffered by the enforcement of the contract against the will of the purchaser, surely an express provision against the possibility of such loss, embodied in the written terms of the contract, will not be violated or disregarded by the courts, when they are asked to enforce it as an executory contract only. This reasoning was followed and enforced in People's Sav. Bank v. Alexander, 2 Sadler (Pa.) 287, 3 Atl. 821, decided in 1886, in which the decree of the court refusing specific performance was affirmed by this court. The facts in that case were very similar to the facts in this, except that here buildings had already been erected on the lot, the loss of which could not be replaced by an assessment of damages when taken. In People's Sav. Bank v. Alexander, the master said: It has been stated in the findings of fact that this street has been laid out thirty feet wide over a portion of the lot. This fact presents a most serious obstacle to the granting of a decree for specific performance of the contract between the parties. It is true, the street is not opened, but is laid out on the city plan. The effect of this is to give notice to whomsoever takes the lot of the possibility, or rather the probability, that the street will be opened at any time; and therefore he cannot claim damages from the city should he erect improvements upon it. See act April 3, 1851 (P. L. 327). He finds himself in the awkward position of not being able to claim damages, as there has been as yet no physical taking, and yet he cannot improve except at his peril. At the best he is subject to uncertainties, and is liable to a lawsuit to test the question of benefits or damages to which he may be entitled, or for which he may be liable. This would seem to present a very similar state of facts to that governed by the decision of the supreme court in Speakman v. Forepaugh, 44 Pa. 374. This is an executory contract, and the rights of the vendee are more jealously guarded than if it were executed; or, perhaps more accurately, the presumptions of law are different from those arising where a contract has been executed. In the last case cited it is said: "In this state, when contracts for the sale of land have been executed, and securities for the purchase money have been taken, if there be a known defect of title, and no covenant chase money after the deed has been accepted, the case is very different when no deed has been accepted, no mortgage or other lien for the purchase money has been given by the purchaser, no possession has been taken, nor any other act done by the purchaser in affirmation of the contract. And when, in addition to all this, a large loss of the actual consideration of the contract may, and probably will, be suffered by the enforcement of the contract against the will of the purchaser, surely an express provision against the possibility of such loss, embodied in the written terms of the contract, will not be violated or disregarded by the courts, when they are asked to enforce it as an executory contract only. This reasoning was followed and enforced in People's Sav. Bank v. Alexander, 2 Sadler (Pa.) 287, 3 Atl. 821, decided in 1886, in which the decree of the court refusing specific performance was affirmed by this court. The facts in that case were very similar to the facts in this, except that here buildings had already been erected on the lot, the loss of which could not be replaced by an assessment of damages when taken. In People's Sav. Bank v. Alexander, the master said: It has been stated in the findings of fact that this street has been laid out thirty feet wide over a portion of the lot. This fact presents a most serious obstacle to the granting of a decree for specific performance of the contract between the parties. It is true, the street is not opened, but is laid out on the city plan. The effect of this is to give notice to whomsoever takes the lot of the possibility, or rather the probability, that the street will be opened at any time; and therefore he cannot claim damages from the city should he erect improvements upon it. See act April 3, 1851 (P. L. 327). He finds himself in the awkward position of not being able to claim damages, as there has been as yet no physical taking, and yet he cannot improve except at his peril. At the best he is subject to uncertainties, and is liable to a lawsuit to test the question of benefits or damages to which he may be entitled, or for which he may be liable. This would seem to present a very similar state of facts to that governed by the decision of the supreme court in Speakman v. Forepaugh, 44 Pa. 374. This is an executory contract, and the rights of the vendee are more jealously guarded than if it were executed; or, perhaps more accurately, the presumptions of law are different from those arising where a contract has been executed. In the last case cited it is said: "In this state, when contracts for the sale of land have been executed, and securities for the purchase money have been taken, if there be a known defect of title, and no covenant against it in the deed, there is a presumption that the purchaser undertook to run the risk of the defect; and, if he did, he cannot detain the purchase money on account of it. This is a rule in regard to executed contracts, but even in regard to those it is not a conclusive presumption. See Rawle, Covenants for Title, 723-727. It is inapplicable to a mere executory contract . . . which is only preparatory." In the foregoing case of People's Sav. Bank v. Alexander, the report of the master was sustained by the court below, and that decree was affirmed by this court in a per curiam opinion. There the proceeding was a bill for specific performance, and here the action is assumpsit to recover the purchase money. The same principles and reasoning are applicable in both. The defendant in this case has not conveyed, and is not able to convey, a title clear of encumbrance, and is therefore not entitled to the purchase money. The assignments of error are not sustained.

Decree affirmed, and appeal dismissed, at the cost of the appellant.

Mary SERVICE

v.

Louis SHONEMAN, Appt.

(196 Pa. 63.)

1. An employer is not liable to an employee for injuries caused by negligence in the handling of a boiler upon the premises by a coemployee, an engineer who is conceded to have been competent.
2. Negligence by an employer in furnishing an unsafe boiler is rebutted, so as to absolve him from liability for injuries to employees by its explosion, where, before its purchase, he made extended inquiries as to which boiler was best, and purchased the one recommended after its superiority was pointed out, paying a larger price than was asked for others; and it had been used in his establishment three years before the accident without complaint, and was exclusively used and favored by the owners.
3. That a boiler furnished by an employer for the use of his employees contains an unsafe device will not render him liable for injuries to them by reason of such defect, if he procured it in the exercise of business prudence, and it was one in ordinary use.
4. An employer without the necessary technical knowledge to enable him to determine whether or not a boiler furnished by him is safe may rely upon the statement of the official city boiler inspector, so far as his duty towards his employees is concerned.

(May 14, 1900.)

NOTE.—As to the discretion of the master in furnishing appliances in general use, see Kehler v. Schwenk, 13 L. R. A. 374.

69 L. R. A.

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas, No. 2, for Philadelphia County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of plaintiff's husband. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the charge of the court below by WILTBANK, J., which was as follows:

"On the 31st of August, 1893, the defendant was carrying on business on Eighth street. He was a dry-goods merchant, and he had in his employ Thomas Service. On that day the engineer who had charge of Shoneman's engine and boiler asked Service to do something for him, which was this: He observed that the front of his boiler at a certain place at the edge of one of the plates that you have heard described to you showed evidences of leaking. There were steam and water coming out, he found, somewhere, about half the size of a lead pencil, as he described it. He called upon Service to hand him a wrench. Service's employment in that establishment was that, apparently, of porter, or general assistant, and it was in the line of his duty to hand the engineer that wrench. He handed it to him, and the engineer took it, adjusted it to the nut which was at the end of the pivot or rod which projected beyond the plate outside of the boiler, and then proceeded to so move that nut as to tighten up the plate. His object was to work on the nut on the thread on which it is usually worked, in a direction which would carry the nut towards the plate, and carry the plate closer to the head of the boiler. You will, of course, know that that thread on the nut, if worked in another way, would carry the nut away from the boiler. But the object of the engineer was to tighten the plate,—to carry the plate nearer the head of the boiler, to prevent the further emission of steam and water. Now, instead of producing that result, the plate opened. It not only did not come nearer the head of the boiler, but moved in its position so that it uncovered to a slight extent the chamber in which the steam and water were confined, and there being thus made a vent, there was, apparently, a heavy emission of steam and water. The engineer himself, standing in the direction of the current, was injured, and Service was thrown into the pit which was in front of the boiler, and so grievously injured that within a short time he died. Now, the plaintiff claims that Mr. Shoneman, who was the owner of the boiler, must answer in damages for the death of Mr. Service, and, in order to determine that question, you have to consider, under the proofs that have been produced to you, certain matters that I will submit,

"You will have no difficulty, I think, in reaching the conclusion that the cause of the accident was the moving of that plate; and the proofs make it equally clear that the object of the workman—the engineer—when he went to work, was not to do what did happen, but to do the other thing; that is to say, to tighten the plate up against the front of the boiler. At all events, as a consequence of what he did do, it moved, and there was thus created this vent, and accordingly there resulted the accident. It is the theory of the plaintiff's case that what the engineer did at that time was properly done; that the action which he concluded was necessary under the circumstances was prudent and proper. That is the theory of the plaintiff's case, and he suggests the question to you to be that that plate slipped because, whilst the engineer took proper steps to tighten it up against the boiler, it was not itself properly made; that it was so smooth on the edge that when it pressed against the head of the boiler, instead of holding there, it slipped aside. And it is contended for the plaintiff that you are to punish Mr. Shoneman in damages because of that condition of the plate, and also by reason of the fact that the plate was triangular, instead of being circular. You will remember that that plate covered an opening in the chest, or 'header,' as it was called, of the boiler, into which the ends of three tubes were introduced, and that that plate, in a proper position, stood directly over the holes of those three tubes. You can understand, therefore, that, as it was triangular in form, and as it is conceded that it covered tubes which would open on the spaces at either end of the three angles of this triangular plate, when that plate was moved it would be reasonable to suppose that part of a tube would be uncovered, and you can also understand the force of the argument that this would not have been the result if the plate had been a round one, because then it would have been immaterial how much it moved in position, unless it had dropped off, as one of the witnesses said. It would be immaterial how much it moved in position, if it still kept its place on the rod, because, being circular, it never would have left uncovered any part of the hole at the head of the tube. You have to consider, therefore, whether there was any negligence in the construction of that boiler due to the triangular form of that plate, and due to the alleged fact that the inner surface and the edges of that plate were too smooth for the purposes of its employment. Now, when you come to consider that fact,—and it is a very narrow question for you,—you will have to consider it by the light of certain suggestions. You must remember that both the plaintiff and the defendant are to be regarded by you as unskilled in boilers, and as depending upon other people for their knowledge with regard to boilers. Mr. Shoneman, being a dealer in dry goods, and having charge of an establishment in which the use of a boiler may be regarded as necessary, could do no more than an ordinarily prudent dealer in dry goods would do, or an ordinarily prudent man unacquainted with matters of machinery would do, when he proceeded to buy a boiler. He could do no more from day to day, when people about the establishment were using that boiler. He cannot be regarded in any sense as a skilful engineer or a practical machinist, for he was neither one nor the other. He was merely a citizen, who, in the course of his business, was brought at no time into actual personal employment in the use of machinery himself as an operator; a citizen who was obliged to depend upon the information of others when he came to select the machinery and the boiler which was necessary to his establishment. You will have to remember, of course, also, that Mr. Service was a person in like position of unskilfulness. He was a carpenter by trade, and he was employed about this establishment as a man who would assist generally in the performance of the duties incident to the running of the place. He also would have to depend upon others for information. You may also, before you pass to consider the main question of the case, reflect, and very properly reflect, that if a given boiler, or one of a given class of boilers, is selected for an establishment of this character, it is necessary to consider the reputation and character of that boiler to aid in a determination whether or not there was negligence in its build and in its use. You will therefore recall the testimony as to the character of this boiler as to its age, as to its reputation, and if you find the character to be one of safety, and the age, and the number of boilers sold to indicate an ordinary general use; if you find that under such circumstances the reputation is good,—that must operate favorably when you come to consider whether or not the defendant used proper care in the selection of it by the advice of those who knew about such things, and in the management of it by his engineer.

"Now, as a matter of fact, both Mr. Shoneman and Mr. Service depended upon the engineer who had charge of that boiler. Mr. Shoneman had to depend upon him as a skilful man, who knew how to manage it; and, of course, Mr. Service had to depend upon him for the same reason, Mr. Shoneman being only brought in contact with the boiler as the owner of it and the head of the establishment, and Mr. Service having his acquaintance with it by reason of the fact that he had to work around about it at times in the performance of his ordinary duty. If you proceed to consider the question by the light of these suggestions, it seems to me that you can resolve the problem of the case without much difficulty. The defendants were not bound to provide the safest or the newest and most approved appliances. If this boiler was of an ordinary character, and such as could, with reasonable care, be used without danger by a competent engineer, that is all that can be required of the defendants. As has been shown here by some of the witnesses, the attempt to tighten up the plate or cap was dangerous,—the taking of a risk, as it was called: but such attempt, according to the plaintiff's proofs, was incident to the employment, and was prudent under the circumstances. Therefore, by the plaintiff's theory, the question is, not whether the deceased was exposed to danger, but whether he was so exposed through neglect of Mr. Shoneman to provide a reasonably safe boiler. There is no contention that Mr. Service was exposed to danger by reason of any act of Mr. Shoneman's in employing Rubner. That you may dismiss from your minds. The theory of the plaintiff is that Rubner was a wholly competent engineer, and therefore it cannot be contended for a moment that any liability arose on the part of Mr. Shoneman by reason of the employment of Rubner, skilful and competent as, it is contended by the plaintiff, he was. The test of reasonable safety is ordinary use. The complaint of this boiler is directed exclusively to the style of plate or cap, and it is claimed that the triangular form of this plate or cap, in connection with the smoothness of its inner edge, induced the injury when Rubner used the wrench upon the nut, the smooth edge permitting the plate or cap to move around with the circular motion of the nut, and, as a consequence, the triangular shape permitting a vent, perhaps three vents, to appear at the head of the three tubes which the plate would have held closed if it had remained in its proper position. These results, the plaintiff contends, could not have arisen had there been asbestos about the inner edge of the plate to present a roughened surface to the head-er upon which it pressed, or had there been flanges or other device there for the same purpose; and they further contend that, even in the absence of such precaution, even had the plate or cap remained smooth, the escape of steam and water would have been avoided had the plate been round, and not triangular. It is for you to answer, Was this plate or cap, subject as it was to this criticism, of the ordinary character of those in use at that time? To answer that question you have the aid of much testimony either way. I charge you that, if it was of the ordinary character, your verdict must be for the defendant. If it was not of the ordinary character, you must consider two other points, to which I shall later advert. The boiler was what is known as a 'water-tubular boiler,' by which description is meant a boiler made up of parallel tubes communicating with each other, with spaces between the tubes to hold water and the spaces between to hold fire, so that the operation of the heat might change the water to steam. Such tubes, it is clear, must be kept closed, just as any boiler must be kept closed when so active and forcible an agency as steam is engendered in it. Was this plate or cap an appliance for the closing of these tubes of the ordinary character, and such as could, with reasonable care, be used without danger to this man? Was it a reasonably safe appliance? If, as I have already said, you find from the evidence that it was such as was in ordinary use upon tubular boilers at that time,—that is, at the time of the accident,—then it is your duty to conclude that the defendants used due care in having it; that they acted according to the usages, habits, and ordinary risks of men using boilers in their establishment,—in an establishment of that character. The testimony on this head was given you by witnesses for the plaintiff and the defendant, quite a considerable number of each. Mr. Simmons, Mr. O'Donnell, Mr. Cree, Mr. Motson, and Mr. Eckman have all testified that the appliance called the triangular plate or cap was not such as at that time, in the state of the art in the manufacture and use of tubular boilers, was in general and ordinary use. On the other hand, Mr. Moore, Mr. Hodges, Mr. Overn, Mr. Fett, and others, whom I need not name, because I propose to dwell on the testimony of three of those gentlemen, specially, testify that there was nothing out of the ordinary in this plate and in its use at that time. Mr. Moore, the manufacturer of the boiler who devised the triangular plate, has so testified. He has stated the number of boilers that he had at that time made and put in use, and the number that have been since made and he has stated positively, independently of his special statement to which I shall call attention, that the triangular plate was such as was not without the ordinary use at that time; that it was a plate which might be considered a proper one for an ordinarily careful and prudent man to have at the head of the boiler. Mr. Hodges and Mr. Overn, who were the official inspectors of the city, and who examined that boiler inside and outside, and who made a written report between them, which you will have out with you,—one being in a certificate signed by both of them, coming from the bureau of inspectors; and the other being a detailed report made by only one of them, who made a personal examination,—testified that the boiler was a proper one, and that the appliances were proper, and such as you may regard as having been in ordinary use at that time. I call your attention to Mr. Moore's testimony, because he has said that which, if you believe it, will make it necessary that you shall find a verdict for the defendant. Mr. Moore has described to you the triangular plate, and its position when in proper position on the head of the boiler. It must have struck you, as you proceeded in your inquiry, before you reached the testimony of Mr. Moore, as a very remarkable thing that any machinist should put at the head of a boiler, and any engineer should use, an appliance so put by any machinist which was capable of turning by the mere twisting of a nut. How can it be conceivably possible that the plate of a boiler, whether of the ordinary old-fashioned use before tubular boilers were introduced, or a boiler made as tubular boilers are, should be placed where their integrity and office depended upon one nut alone, and that a nut which might, by the operation of a wrench for an inappreciable distance upon the face of the boiler, cause an explosion or an emission of steam. I say it must have struck you as evidence of negligence which might be well described as gross that anybody would manufacture a boiler of that character. But when we came to hear the manufacturer himself describe this boiler we found that such was not the case, and that, if we are to believe this gentleman, we may conclude that that plate which was put there at that time if properly put in position, was as firmly placed and as safe as any other plate or any other boiler, providing that the same is in the ordinary condition which a good boiler for proper use should be in. Mr. Moore testified that this triangular plate was provided with what he called a 'seat.' You will have to find what was meant by a seat, but it would appear from the testimony that a seat is perhaps a depression in the header, into which the plate would, to a certain extent, sit or move when it was properly screwed up against the head of the boiler; and, if such is the case, then you would find that a plate thus properly screwed up would be in a depression in the head of that boiler. It would be in a seat, as Mr. Moore has said, from which it would be impossible to move it by adding pressure to the head of the boiler, because any such pressure would only make it more firm in its seat; and while you are going through the operation of adding that pressure, you certainly would not enable it to move away from the seat, or socket, or depression into which it was originally set. Mr. Moore, therefore, if you believe that part of his testimony, has indicated that which would make it impossible for you to conclude that there was any negligence in the use of this plate, assuming it to have been in its proper position. But he has also told you more than that. He has told you that this boiler head comprises several of these plates (I think he said a dozen in this boiler), and that the plate which did move (and there is no doubt about that,—that one of these plates did move) could not have been in position, because, if in position, not only would it have been in this seat, but it would have been in such position relatively to the plates on either side of it in that bottom row of plates that there would not have been sufficient space between the edge of this plate and the edge of the other two plates to enable it to move sufficiently far to create the vent through which the steam that produced the accident came. You will understand that, I think, without my saying more about it. These plates, if they were imbedded in their several seats in the proper way, according to the design of the patentee, could not have been moved by the effort to tighten them up, because that effort would have made them go further into their seat; and, assuming that Mr. Moore was mistaken in that, they could not have moved sufficiently to create this vent, because that would have required a movement to the extent of three quarters of an inch. I think he said, and the only shifting allowed by reason of the proximity to the other plates would have been about a quarter of an inch. Therefore, if you believe what Mr. Moore has said, you are bound to find a verdict for the defendant, because there was thus in use a boiler as to which there could not be any reasonable complaint made of this one plate growing out of the fact that it was triangular in form. If, however, you consider that it is your duty to proceed further, I instruct you that, should you find that the plate was not such as was in ordinary use by the light of my instructions, you are then to determine the two points to which I have already adverted: First, whether or not the engineer, by his manner of working on that nut with the wrench, negligently caused that plate to turn; and, if you find that he did, and that this accident would have been avoided had he used reasonable care at that time, then your verdict must be for the defendant.

69 L. R. A.

"Now, it has been suggested on the part of the defendant that it must be that this man, Mr. Rubner, made a mistake. He meant to do his duty. He meant to do an entirely proper thing, but it has been suggested to you with some force, in view of the proofs, that he must have made a mistake, and that, instead of working the wrench in a direction to give a motion of that nut towards the boiler, he worked it the other way, and really loosened the plate himself. Without admitting it at all, the plaintiff says that, even if that is so, it would be the result of confusion on his part, due to the crisis,—to the sudden fear that something was going wrong,—and that the law would not visit him with the consequences of that. I instruct you that if this gentleman did, by the use of that wrench, cause the loosening of this plate, it was while entirely innocently done on his part, such negligence in law as would preclude a recovery here; that there was not such a condition or crisis of danger as would justify your overlooking that which you found otherwise to have been negligence. If, therefore, this accident was due to that, you must find a verdict for the defendant. You must also consider the fact that this leak, as it originally appeared may have been due—although it will be for you to say upon the proofs whether it was or not—to the imperfect resetting of that boiler after the inspection of August 28th. It was inspected on August 28th, and the accident happened on August 31st. The engineer who was then in charge has testified that it was taken apart, and these plates taken off on the 28th, and that he himself put it together again afterwards. He said he oiled up the nuts, and cleaned up the plates of the boiler, and saw it in clean condition after the inspection, as he put it up. If it is a fact that he put it up negligently, so that, with regard to this plate in question, he did not put that into its seat, assuming that you find it had a seat (and that will be for you to say, depending upon your weighing the evidence and the credence you may give Mr. Moore), if there was such a seat there, or whether there was one there or not; if he did not adjust that plate correctly when he set that boiler in the manner he testified to doing it,—setting it in order after the inspection,—then the defendants could not be charged with the consequences of this accident: and you would have to find a verdict in their favor.

“Lastly, I have to charge you upon the effect of the official inspection of this boiler, so far as it would operate to relieve Mr. Shoneman, if it would operate at all, from responsibility in the premises. As I have already told you, Mr. Shoneman was bound, in the purchase of this boiler, and in permitting its continued use on his premises, to use such a degree of care as you would find to be the duty of an ordinarily careful man under the circumstances. Now, you may conclude from the proofs, though it will be for you to conclude one way or the other, that this boiler was regularly inspected from the time of its purchase down to the time of the accident, in each year. It was purchased in 1888. The proofs would justify your concluding that it was inspected at least once a year in the interval between the purchase and the accident. You may conclude otherwise. But you cannot help finding, because it is undisputed, that it was inspected by officials of the city on the 28th of August, 1893, just three days before the accident. As I have already said to you, the measure of care required of Mr. Shoneman being that which you would require of an ordinarily prudent citizen in the conduct of his business,—such a business as this, needing the use of a boiler and engine,—what are you to conclude in this case? The system of boiler inspection is one which is created for the safety of the public, both individuals and the general public; and, if you find such a system in existence in this city (and you are bound so to find, because the legislative creation of the system is before you, and it is not disputed), then you are to consider that there has been established by general consent (that is to say, by the citizens of this state) a certain measure of care. Citizens say by their legislation, ‘You must have your boilers examined, and you must have skilled men appointed to examine them; and if those skilled men are of the opinion that your boilers are all right, people may go on and use them, and if they are of the opinion that they are defective, in any particular, people may not go on and use them.’ Now, what more could Mr. Shoneman do, if he was proceeding to buy a boiler, or proceeding to use one that he had bought some time before and if he desired most earnestly to know that the boiler was one which could be used with ordinary safety in his establishment, than have it inspected by skilled inspectors, and have it passed upon? And if you find that in this case he did so do, and that there was a proper official inspection of that boiler, and that the report thereon was that it was such a boiler as might, not only as a whole, but with regard to its several appliances (among others, with regard to these triangular plates,—this one plate in question), be used by an ordinarily prudent man, you are bound to find a verdict for the defendant. On the other hand, if you find that the engineer was not guilty of negligence leading to the accident, then, if you also find that the plate was not such as was in ordinary use, and that the inspection was not adequate and by official city authority, you may find a verdict for the plaintiff. Should you find a verdict for the plaintiff, the measure of damages would be the pecuniary value of the life of this unfortunate man. In order to determine what was the pecuniary value of his life, you are to consider his age at the time of his death, which was somewhat less than thirty-three years. You are to consider the probable duration of his life, in view of the proofs of the condition of his health at that time, and the probabilities of his remaining in good health. You are to consider the vicissitudes of illness and accident which might terminate his life earlier than in the ordinary course of nature it would terminate; and you are to consider his earning power, assuming him to live for the period of time which, under the proofs and my instructions, you believe he would have lived, and what that would represent in money that he would have earned in that time; from which, however, it is necessary that you should deduct a proper allowance which must be made for his own support had he continued to live, because, obviously, that would not be for the benefit of his family. You will not make any attempt to capitalize any money which you believe he would have made had he continued in life. The fact that he left a family is a fact which is before you; but that has no bearing upon your estimate of the damages which you should allow. It appears that, unfortunately, he has left two children and a widow; but, had he left a dozen children, it would have had no other bearing on this point. It cannot affect your determination of the value of his life. Of course, in reaching your conclusion you will endeavor, without sentiment, and with a conscientious recognition of your duty, to settle these various problems that I have put before you, running down into the one problem as to the propriety of that triangular plate, dispassionately, and according to the proofs."

Messrs. Joseph H. Taulane and Richard P. White, for appellant:

Defendant was only bound to exercise ordinary care and diligence to furnish a reasonably safe and proper boiler; and he was under no absolute duty to furnish a safe boiler.

Peoria, D. & E. R. Co. v. Hardwick, 48 Ill. App. 582; Doyle v. White, 14 Misc. 417. 35 N. Y. Supp. 760; Probst v. Delamater, 100 N. Y. 266, 3 N. E. 184; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Allen, 78 Ala. 494.

The test of ordinary care and diligence is whether the boiler was in ordinary use.

Titus v. Bradford, B. & K. R. Co. 136 Pa. 69 L. R. A.

618, 20 Am. St. Rep. 944, 20 Atl. 517; Reese v. Hershey, 163 Pa. 253, 43 Am. St. Rep. 795, 29 Atl. 907.

If the boiler was in ordinary use, that is conclusive of its safety.

Kehler v. Schwenk, 144 Pa. 348, 13 L. R. A. 374, 27 Am. St. Rep. 633, 22 Atl. 910; Keenan v. Waters, 181 Pa. 247, 37 Atl. 342; Fick v. Jackson, 3 Pa. Super. Ct. 378.

The burden of proof was on the plaintiff to show that the Moore boiler was not in ordinary use.

Titus v. Bradford, B. & K. R. Co. 136 Pa. 618, 20 Am. St. Rep. 944, 20 Atl. 517.

If the Moore boiler was in ordinary use, it is wholly immaterial that other boilers were safer, or better constructed and less dangerous, because an employer is not bound to adopt the newest or latest improvements.

Payne v. Reese, 100 Pa. 301; Delaware River Iron-Ship Bldg. & Engine Works v. Nuttall, 119 Pa. 149, 13 Atl. 65; Northern C. R. Co. v. Husson, 101 Pa. 1, 47 Am. Rep. 690; Allison Mfg. Co. v. McCormick, 118 Pa. 519, 4 Am. St. Rep. 613, 12 Atl. 273; Lehigh & W. B. Coal Co. v. Hayes, 128 Pa. 294, 5 L. R. A. 441, 15 Am. St. Rep. 680, 18 Atl. 387; Pittsburgh & C. R. Co. v. Sentmeyer, 92 Pa. 276, 37 Am. Rep. 684; Faber v. Carlisle Mfg. Co. 126 Pa. 387, 17 Atl. 621; Keenan v. Waters, 181 Pa. 247, 37 Atl. 342.

The employer has the right to select any one of several machines or appliances in ordinary use that he considers best suited to his purpose; and he cannot be held liable for the exercise of his judgment, even though it may turn out to be erroneous.

Dooner v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 171 Pa. 581, 33 Atl. 415; Kehler v. Schwenk, 144 Pa. 348, 13 L. R. A. 374, 27 Am. St. Rep. 633, 22 Atl. 910; Harley v. Buffalo Car Mfg. Co. 142 N. Y. 31, 36 N. E. 813; Richards v. Rough, 53 Mich. 212, 18 N. W. 785; Georgia P. R. Co. v. Propst, 83 Ala. 518, 3 So. 764; Washington Asphalt Block & Tile Co. v. Mackey, 15 App. D. C. 410; Reese v. Hershey, 163 Pa. 253, 43 Am. St. Rep. 795, 29 Atl. 907.

A master who purchases a machine or appliance from a reputable manufacturer has fulfilled his full duty to furnish safe and proper machinery to his employees.

Ardesco Oil Co. v. Gilson, 63 Pa. 146; Munsfield Coal & Coke Co. v. McEnery, 91 Pa. 185, 36 Am. Rep. 662; Carlson v. Phœnix Bridge Co. 132 N. Y. 273, 30 N. E. 750; Sheu v. Wellington, 163 Mass. 364, 40 N. E. 173.

The law presumes that public officers perform their duty; and, in fact, it presumes that everyone performs his duty until the contrary is shown.

Mansfield Coal & Coke Co. v. McEnery, 91 Pa. 185, 36 Am. Rep. 662; Oglesby v. Missouri P. R. Co. 150 Mo. 137, 51 S. W. 758.

The burden of proof was on the plaintiff to show that the inspections were inadequate.

Racine v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 70 Hun, 453, 24 N. Y. Supp. 388; McGregor v. Reid, M. & Co. 76 Ill. App. 610; Patton v. Texas & P. R. Co. 37 C. C. A. 56, 95 Fed. 244; Bucher v. Prygibil, 19 App. Div. 126, 45 N. Y. Supp. 972; Alaska Treadwell Gold Min. Co. v. Whelan, 168 U. S. 86, 42 L. ed. 390, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 40; Mansfield Coal & Coke Co. v. McEnery, 91 Pa. 185, 36 Am. Rep. 662.

Messrs. Charles Goldsmith, Maxwell Stevenson, and Thad. L. Vanderlice, for appellee:

The duty is on the employer to furnish his employees reasonably safe appliances with which to do the work assigned to them. It is also his duty to know what appliances are suitable and in common and ordinary use for the purpose.

Bannon v. Lutz, 158 Pa. 174, 27 Atl. 890.

We find in the possession of the defendant a defective and unsafe boiler, made so by reason of the use of a plate not used anywhere else, and used, according to the testimony, upon only one or two boilers, such as the defendant had. Having shown that this contrivance was not in ordinary use, and having shown, also, that there were other appliances or contrivances which, if applied to this cap or plate, would have rendered it perfectly safe, the burden then shifted to the defendant to show what he attempted to show in his defense, and that was: (1) That the engineer did a careless thing in attempting to screw up the plate under pressure; (2) that the plate and boiler were in ordinary use; (3) that he had done all that a prudent man could do to determine whether this was a safe boiler or not; (4) the inspection by the city officials relieved him.

Where there is conflicting testimony as to the reasonable safeness of the appliances, etc., the question is for the jury.

Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Keenan, 103 Pa. 124.

Where there is any evidence of negligence on the part of the defendant it must be submitted to the jury.

Murphy v. Crossan, 98 Pa. 495; Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Keenan, 103 Pa. 124; Spear v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. 119 Pa. 61, 12 Atl. 824; Kohler v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 135 Pa. 357, 1 Atl. 1049; Glossen v. Gehman, 147 Pa. 619, 23 Atl. 843; Cougle v. McKee, 151 Pa. 602, 25 Atl. 115; Walbert v. Trexler, 156 Pa. 112, 27 Atl. 69 L. R. A.

65; Bannon v. Lutz, 158 Pa. 166, 27 Atl. 890; Folk v. Schaeffer, 186 Pa. 255, 40 Atl. 401.

The inspection of the officials, unless adequate and proper, rose no higher than any other inspection by servants of the employer, and at any rate was properly submitted to the jury upon the question of whether the employer had exercised due care.

Flike v. Boston & A. R. Co. 53 N. Y. 549, 13 Am. Rep. 545; Booth v. Boston & A. R. Co. 73 N. Y. 38, 29 Am. Rep. 97; Mehan v. Syracuse, B. & N. Y. R. Corp. 73 N. Y. 585; Fuiter v. Jewett, 80 N. Y. 46, 36 Am. Rep. 575; New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Bell, 112 Pa. 400, 4 Atl. 50; Lewis v. Seifert, 116 Pa. 628, 2 Am. St. Rep. 631, 11 Atl. 514; Smith v. Hillside Coal & I. Co. 186 Pa. 28, 40 Atl. 287.

Dean, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant is a merchant in the city of Philadelphia, using steam power in conducting his business. On the 31st of August, 1893, plaintiff's husband, Thomas Service, was killed, not exactly by a boiler explosion, but by the sudden and unusual escape of steam in great force and large volume from the end of the boiler. At the time of the accident the boiler and engine were in charge of one Rubner, a competent engineer. Service, the deceased, was a sort of porter or "all around man" in the establishment. At the exact time of his death he was helping the engineer in the boiler room. From the testimony of the engineer, who is the only living witness as to how the accident occurred, the boiler and all its attachments were in proper order in the morning when the fire was kindled. About 11 o'clock in the forenoon he heard a hissing noise, as if of escaping steam, in the end of the boiler, where was a three-cornered plate covering three of the boiler tubes, and secured by bolt and nut. He discovered a small jet of steam, about the diameter of a lead pencil, escaping from one side of the plate, which to him indicated the plate was loose. At his request, Service handed him a wrench, wherewith, by screwing down the nut on the bolt, the plate would be made tight. As he turned the wrench, the three-cornered plate, instead of tightening, turned around with the wrench, greatly enlarging the aperture, whereby the steam escaped with great force in large quantity, severely, though not fatally, scalding the engineer, but Service so badly that he died in twenty minutes. The plaintiff, alleging that defendant had furnished a dangerously constructed boiler, and one not in ordinary use, brought this suit for damages. The learned judge of the court below, in a charge admirable for its lucidness, as well as exhaustiveness, in that it presented impartially every question which could be raised on the evidence, submitted the case to the jury to find whether the construction of the boiler, as to this plate and the method of attachment, was such as was in ordinary use, and had been inspected while in use with ordinary care; saying to them, if they found against defendant in these particulars, they might find a verdict for plaintiff. There was a verdict for plaintiff in sum of $5,000, and from the judgment entered on it we have this appeal by defendant, with five assignments of error. No one of them is of sufficient merit to warrant discussion, except the fifth, which asks the court, under all the evidence, to direct a verdict for defendant. The case is a close one. We have most carefully considered the evidence in all its bearings, and the law that applies to it, and have concluded that to permit the judgment, under the undisputed or established facts, to stand, would fix a precedent practically imposing on the employer the responsibility of an insurer of his employees against accident. However varying may be the rule in some other states, in this it is settled. Take the rule as stated by our Brother Mitchell in Titus v. Bradford, B. & K. R. Co. 136 Pa. 618, 20 Am. St. Rep. 944, 20 Atl. 517. He says: "Absolute safety is unattainable, and employers are not insurers. They are liable for the consequences, not of danger, but of negligence; and the unbending test of negligence in methods, machinery, and appliances is the ordinary usage of the business. No man is held by law to a higher degree of skill than the fair average of his profession or trade; and the standard of due care is the conduct of the average prudent man." For this rule he cites not less than six of our own cases which preceded it, and certainly not less than ten have followed; the latest being Keenan v. Waters, 181 Pa. 247, 37 Atl. 342. Of course, a steam boiler is dangerous, even if of the very best construction. All that can be hoped for is that the danger shall be minimized by care in construction and use. Take the undisputed facts as to the care exercised by the owner in the selection of this boiler. When he bought it, three years before the accident, he inquired of a large number of business men who had knowledge on the subject as to the best boiler, and came to the conclusion to see Edward J. Moore, who was said to sell a nonexplosive boiler which he had invented. He sent for Moore, who came. He determined to take this one, after Moore had pointed out its excellencies and superiority. He paid a higher price for it than many others were offered for. Moore gave him the names of a large number of persons who had bought and were then using the boiler. He then employed Rubner, a competent engineer. This is conceded by plaintiff. He ran the boiler and engine for about three years, or up to the date of the accident, without complaint as to its safety. It was operated for nearly four years afterwards, when it was sold, only because a larger one was needed. Moore, from whom the boiler had been purchased, had a large experience in the use of boilers, and then invented this pattern. He testifies that he recommended this boiler to Shoneman as the only nonexplosive boiler then in use; that it was used all over the United States, and to some extent in Europe; that at the date of the purchase there were twelve, and at the date of the accident eighty-three, of the same type in use in Philadelphia and vicinity; that the boiler was perfectly safe, and that he had never known of an accident by reason of their use. He gives the names and places of business of those using the boiler at the date of the purchase by Shoneman, and of many of those who used it afterwards. Other witnesses—engineers—were called, who had charge of the same kind of boilers, and testified that they believed it entirely safe. Their opinion was that the accident arose from attempting to screw down the plate while the pressure from the steam was on; that Rubner should first have either drawn his fires, or directed the escape of steam through the safety valve, before attempting to manipulate the screw. This, however, is immaterial, for the competency of the engineer is conceded by plaintiff; hence, if the accident came from his neglect, the defendant is not answerable to a co-employee for it; and so the court instructed the jury. The question is whether Shoneman negligently furnished to Service and other employees dangerous machinery or appliances wherewith to carry on the operations of his business. And, as is said in Titus v. Bradford B. & K. R. Co. 136 Pa. 618, 20 Am. St. Rep. 944, 20 Atl. 517, the unbending test of negligence is the ordinary usage of the business. The care exhibited by defendant in the selection of this boiler then in use, and which to him seemed safer than other boilers; the long use of it without complaint by the engineer; that it was extensively used and favored by many other owners and manufacturers,—absolutely rebut the charge of negligence. Assume that there was some conflict in the evidence as to whether the plate over the tubes could have been made safer by some other device or arrangement, nevertheless, defendant was not bound to adopt the safest attachment. Over and over we have said no such burden is imposed upon an employer. Assuredly, there were in use thousands of different patterns of other boilers which had no such attachment; but there was no evidence that this had ever been rejected because unsafe, or that it had not such extended use as defendant claimed, and adduced evidence to establish. He was neither a boiler maker, nor an engineer. He could only select one at the suggestion of those who used boilers, or on the recommendation of those who were experts. If, in the exercise of business prudence, he got an unsafe boiler, yet one which was in ordinary use, he is not answerable for the consequences.

Another point was made at the trial which calls for notice. It was alleged on the part of plaintiff that there was no proper inspection of the boiler; that age and use had impaired its strength, and that the consequent weakness may have aggravated the disaster, if it did not cause it. We cannot see how other than one view can be taken of the evidence; either the accident was caused by the unsafe design of the plate over the tubes, or by the negligence of the engineer in manipulating the nut with the wrench; but, assume that neither was the cause, and that it had its source in the weakness of an impaired boiler, then was there sufficient evidence of neglectful inspection to render defendant answerable? The boiler was several times inspected by the official boiler inspector of the city, who declared it to be in safe condition; the last time just three days before the accident, when the inspector, after examination, delivered to defendant his official certificate of inspection, setting out that the boiler would stand a working pressure of 90 pounds to the square inch,—just twice that which was on it when the accident occurred. This official must be presumed to have done his duty. Nor is there anything in the evidence to rebut that presumption. But, even if he failed, how can defendant be held responsible? He had not the knowledge which fitted him to inspect. What else, in the exercise of care, could he do, than rely upon the official certificate of a competent and sworn officer? We think there was no evidence from which the jury could find absence of care on part of defendant in this particular. To hold otherwise would place employers in a situation of as great risk as that of accident insurance companies.

The judgment is reversed, and judgment is entered for defendant.

69 L. R. A.

Alexander B. COHN, Appt.,

v.

Simon MAY.

(210 Pa. 615.)

The occupant of the lower floors of a building, who blocks the stairway leading from the upper floor to the ground so that a tenant of such floor, in seeking to escape a fire, is compelled to drop a considerable distance to reach the ground, is liable for the injury resulting to him therefrom.

(February 20, 1905.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas, No. 1, for Philadelphia County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

From the testimony at the trial it appeared that the plaintiff and his brother occupied the fifth story of a building of which defendant occupied the lower floors. A fire occurred in the building, and plaintiff, in attempting to escape by a flight of stairs, found the exit cut off by obstructions placed by defendant. He then attempted to use a rope fire escape which did not reach below the second story, and was compelled to drop from the end of it to the ground to his injury.

Further facts appear in the opinion.

Mr. Samuel Englander, for appellant:

The statement filed in this action is sufficient whichever way it is looked at, whether the clause impliedly charging the defendant as lessor is treated as an inducement, and is immaterial, and can be treated as surplusage, or whether treated as a material allegation, and thus charging a double cause of action, to wit, charging him as landlord and as cotenant.

Inducement states under what circumstances the contract was made, and is explanatory.

5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 355; Erie City Iron Works v. Barber, 118 Pa. 6, 12 Atl. 411; Martens v. O'Connor, 101 Wis. 20, 76 N. W. 774; Repsher v. Shane, 3 Yeates, 575; Spencer v. Dawson, 1 Moody

NOTE.—As to effect of intervening cause on liability for negligence, see also cases in notes to Smith v. County Court, 8 L. R. A. 82, and Smithwick v. Hall & U. Co. 12 L. R. A. 279; also the later cases, in this series, of Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Hammill, 24 L. R. A. 531; Goodlander Mill Co. v. Standard Oil Co. 27 L. R. A. 583; Stone v. Boston & A. R. Co. 41 L. R. A. 794; Southern R. Co. v. Webb, 59 L. R. A. 109; Cole v. German Sav. & L. Soc. 63 L. R. A. 416; Hebert v. Lake Charles Ice, Light, & Waterworks Co. 64 L. R. A. 101; Nelson v. Naragansett Electric Lighting Co. 67 L. R. A. 116.

& R. 552; Geddis v. Irvine, 5 Pa. 508; Miltenberger v. Schlegel, 7 Pa. 241; Smith v. Teacle, 8 Pa. Co. Ct. 150; Kline v. Guthart, 2 Penr. & W. 490; Com. use of Haffey v. Haffey, 6 Pa. 348; Filson v. Dunbar, 26 Pa. 475; Frankum v. Falmouth, 2 Ad. & El. 452; 22 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 604; Walsh v. Hastings, 20 Colo. 243, 38 Pac. 324; McAdams v. Sutton, 24 Ohio St. 333.

If a number of grounds or causes of action are alleged, and only one proved, the plaintiff can succeed.

Thomas v. Central R. Co. 194 Pa. 511, 45 Atl. 344; Valentine v. A. Colburn Co. 10 Pa. Super. Ct. 453; Coates v. Chapman, 195 Pa. 109, 45 Atl. 676; Snyder v. Witmer, 12 W. N. C. 301; McIntire v. Westmoreland Coal Co. 118 Pa. 108, 11 Atl. 808; Sidcell v. Frans, 1 Penr. & W. 383, 21 Am. Dec. 387; 22 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 567; Platz v. McKean Twp. 178 Pa. 601, 36 Atl. 136; Ben Franklin F. Ins. Co. v. Flynn, 98 Pa. 627; Pennsylvania F. Ins. Co. v. Dougherty, 102 Pa. 568; Magill v. Swearingen, 10 Pa. 497; McEachin v. Stewart, 106 N. C. 336, 11 S. E. 274.

Plaintiff's injuries were the proximate result of defendant's negligence, exclusive of statutory regulation.

21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 487, 488; Hey v. Philadelphia, 81 Pa. 44, 22 Am. Rep. 733; Oil City Gas Co. v. Robinson, 99 Pa. 1; Bunting v. Hogsett, 139 Pa. 363, 12 L. R. A. 268, 23 Am. St. Rep. 192, 21 Atl. 31, 33, 34; Quigley v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 142 Pa. 388, 24 Am. St. Rep. 504, 21 Atl. 827; Drake v. Kiely, 93 Pa. 492; Vallo v. United States Exp. Co. 147 Pa. 404, 14 L. R. A. 743, 30 Am. St. Rep. 741, 23 Atl. 594; Sturgis v. Kountz, 165 Pa. 358, 27 L. R. A. 390, 30 Atl. 976; Webster v. Monongahela River Consol. Coal & Coke Co. 201 Pa. 278, 50 Atl. 964; Pittsburgh v. Grier, 22 Pa. 54, 60 Am. Dec. 65; Scott v. Hunter, 46 Pa. 192, 84 Am. Dec. 542; Morrison v. Davis, 20 Pa. 171, 57 Am. Dec. 695; Brown v. Lynn, 31 Pa. 510, 72 Am. Dec. 768; McGrew v. Stone, 53 Pa. 436; Chambers v. Carroll, 199 Pa. 371, 49 Atl. 128; Sevell v. Moore, 166 Pa. 570, 31 Atl. 370.

Plaintiff's injuries were the proximate result of defendant's negligent act, by act of assembly of June 8, 1893.

21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 478; Lederman v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 165 Pa. 118, 44 Am. St. Rep. 644, 30 Atl. 725; Connor v. Electric Traction Co. 173 Pa. 602, 34 Atl. 238.

The fact that the statute or ordinance in question does not in terms impose a civil liability for its violation does not affect evidence of its violation as going to show negligence.

60 L. R. A.

21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 483; Pauley v. Steam Gauge & Lantern Co. 131 N. Y. 90, 15 L. R. A. 194, 29 N. E. 999; Parker v. Barnard, 135 Mass. 116, 46 Am. Rep. 450; Correll v. Burlington, C. R. & M. River R. Co. 38 Iowa, 120, 18 Am. Rep. 22; Reynolds v. Hindman, 32 Iowa, 146; Dodge v. Burlington, C. R. & M. River R. Co. 34 Iowa, 276; Bott v. Pratt, 33 Minn. 323, 53 Am. Rep. 47, 23 N. W. 237; Garibaldi v. O'Connor, 112 Ill. App. 53; King v. Russell, 6 East, 429; Com. v. Passmore, 1 Serg. & R. 217; People v. Cunningham, 1 Denio, 524, 43 Am. Dec. 709; Murphy v. Leggett, 29 App. Div. 309, 51 N. Y. Supp. 472, Affirmed in 164 N. Y. 121, 58 N. E. 42; Linehen v. Western Electric Co. 29 App. Div. 463, 51 N. Y. Supp. 1080.

Mr. George P. Rich, for appellee:

The probable consequence is one that is more likely to follow the supposed cause than it is to fail to follow it.

Hoag v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 85 Pa. 293, 27 Am. Rep. 653; South Side Pass. R. Co. v. Trich, 117 Pa. 390, 2 Am. St. Rep. 672, 11 Atl. 627; Wood v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 177 Pa. 306, 35 L. R. A. 199, 55 Am. St. Rep. 728, 35 Atl. 699; Swanson v. Crandall, 2 Pa. Super. Ct. 89; Elliot v. Allegheny County Light Co. 204 Pa. 568, 54 Atl. 278.

Although the defendant's violation of a statute, and the plaintiff's injuries consequent thereupon, be shown, the former will not be liable merely because his act constituted a violation of the law, but only if it proximately caused the injuries complained of.

Christner v. Cumberland & E. L. Coal Co. 146 Pa. 67, 23 Atl. 221; Sevell v. Moore, 166 Pa. 570, 31 Atl. 370; 21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 480.

Plaintiff sought to amend by introducing a new cause of action, to wit, an action of tort, for obstructing a stairway, after the statute of limitations, to wit, two years, had become a bar. This cannot be permitted.

Royse v. May, 93 Pa. 454; Philadelphia v. Hestonville, M. & F. R. Co. 203 Pa. 38, 52 Atl. 184; Grier v. Northern Assur. Co. 183 Pa. 334, 39 Atl. 10; Murphy v. Crawford, 114 Pa. 496, 7 Atl. 142; Trego v. Lewis, 58 Pa. 463; Smith's Appeal, 108 Pa. 508; Duffey v. Houtz, 105 Pa. 96; Tyrrill v. Lamb, 96 Pa. 464.

Potter, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In the statement of claim filed by the plaintiff in this case it was averred that the plaintiff's firm "rented the fifth floor of the said building of the defendant, who was then and there lessee of the entire premises," and that it was the duty of defendant to accord to the plaintiff ready and convenient ingress and egress from the building by the back stairway; and it was charged that the defendant had negligently violated such duty by blocking up the stairway by placing boxes upon it. Upon the trial it appeared that plaintiff's firm did not rent from defendant, but that both leased from a third party, agent for the owner of the building. Plaintiff moved to amend the statement to accord with the facts, but the court refused to allow the amendment, holding that it would introduce a new cause of action. No exception was taken to the refusal to allow plaintiff to amend. At the close of the plaintiff's testimony a compulsory nonsuit was entered, which the court subsequently refused to take off. This refusal is the only question properly raised upon this appeal. It seems that, while the trial judge was of opinion that there was a material variance between the allegations and the proof, yet the refusal to take off the nonsuit was based upon the ground that the negligence of the defendant was not the proximate cause of the accident. An examination of the statement shows that the substantial cause of action which it sets forth is that upon which the plaintiff relied at the trial. The statement as to the respective tenancies of the parties was merely explanatory, and might have been omitted. It is clearly set out that the plaintiff's firm were occupants of the fifth floor of the building, and the defendant "then and there occupied certain floors of said building below plaintiff;" that defendant, his servants, and agents permitted and caused to be placed upon a certain stairway, leading to and from the fifth floor, divers boxes, so that the stairway became choked and blocked with said boxes, and ingress to and egress from the fifth floor by way of said stairway was cut off, and, as a result thereof, the plaintiff was injured. This was a direct averment of negligence on the part of the defendant, which the evidence produced at the trial tended to prove. We think it was sufficient. See Coates v. Chapman, 195 Pa. 109, 45 Atl. 676. In his opinion refusing to take off the nonsuit the trial judge says that, under the evidence, the jury would have been warranted in finding that the boxes placed by defendant's workmen upon the back stairway constituted the obstruction which prevented the plaintiff from making use of that means of exit. But he does not think this act of negligence can be considered as the proximate cause of the injuries which resulted to plaintiff. In this conclusion we cannot agree. A case much like the present one in some of its facts was Seucll v. Moore, 106

Pa. 570, 31 Atl. 370. There the plaintiff was prevented from reaching the fire escape by the fact that the door leading to it was locked, and she then jumped from a window, and was injured. The court said, at page 576 of 166 Pa., page 373 of 31 Atl.: "The difficulty was in the locking of the door that led to . . . [the fire escape] on the third floor. The plaintiff got to this in time, and, had it been open, as it should have been, she could have escaped . . . injury. . . . The only proximate and effective cause of the injury was the locking of the door." A cause is not too remote merely because it produces the damages by means of an intermediate agency. Where the injury was the immediate consequence of some peril to which the injured party was obliged to expose himself in order to avoid the peril arising from the defendant's negligence, it is proximate enough. Pittsburgh v. Grier, 22 Pa. 54, 60 Am. Dec. 65; Vallo v. United States Exp. Co. 147 Pa. 404, 14 L. R. A. 743, 30 Am. St. Rep. 741, 23 Atl. 594. The cases upon this subject are reviewed in Gudfelder v. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. Co. 207 Pa. 629, 57 Atl. 70; and the test of proximate cause is again cited as being whether the facts between the negligent act and the final result to the plaintiff constitute a continuous succession of events, so linked together that they become a natural whole.

In the present case, danger from fire was reasonably to be apprehended and guarded against at all times. The stairways, both front and back, formed the natural means of passage to and from the upper stories, and common prudence required that they be kept free from obstructions. When the servants of the defendant blocked up the passageway, they may not have anticipated that a fire would occur so soon; but they were responsible for any resulting damage which might be caused by their careless act. The result might have been a fall upon the stairway by someone seeking to pass. It might have resulted in damage in more than one unforeseen direction. But as it was, it so happened that, under the imperative necessity of escaping from the fire, the plaintiff sought to descend the stairway. Had it been unobstructed, he could readily have escaped in that way. But he says in his testimony that the boxes which had been placed in the way by the defendant's servants cut him off. Being in extreme peril, and acting upon what seemed to him the best judgment, he says that the only way of escape he then found open was through a window and down a rope, and then by a drop to the ground. In following this method he received the injuries for which he here seeks to recover. If the jury believe the testimony of the plaintiff, it presents a succession of events which may properly be considered as unbroken. Certainly, if the sequence of events as they actually did occur had been suggested beforehand to the mind of a reasonably prudent man, he would have thought it quite possible for them to follow.

Our conclusion in this case is that, if the stairs were so obstructed that the plaintiff could not reasonably make use of them, such obstruction may have fairly been held to be the proximate and effective cause of the injury suffered by the plaintiff. The assignment alleging error in the refusal to take off the nonsuit is sustained.

The judgment is reversed, and a procedendo is awarded.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, THIRD CIRCUIT.

SUPREME COUNCIL AMERICAN LE-GION OF HONOR, Plff. in Err.,

v.

Henry B. LIPPINCOTT to Use of George
L. Lippincott.

(67 C. C. A. 650, 134 Fed. 824.)

1. An election to treat the original contract as still in force, upon notification of reduction in the amounts of certificates in a mutual benefit society, adhered to for two years and five months, is not subject to change, so as to permit a certificate holder to treat the contract as rescinded, and sue for assessments paid.

2. Breach of the contract of a mutual benefit society by arbitrary reduction of the amounts of outstanding certificates is not a continuing one, so as to entitle a certificate holder to elect to treat the contract as rescinded at any time before the time set for performance.

(February 13, 1905.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover assessments alleged to have been wrongfully exacted upon a mutual benefit certificate. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Argued before Acheson, Dallas, and Gray, Circuit Judges.

Messrs. Murdoch Kendrick and Frank P. Pritchard, for plaintiff in error:

Plaintiff was not entitled to change his election.

Johnstone v. Milling, L. R. 16 Q. B. Div. 460; Morgan v. McKee, 77 Pa. 228; Dingley v. Oler, 117 U. S. 490-503, 29 L. ed. 984-988, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 850.

Mr. J. H. Brinton, for defendant in error:

Even though the payments were voluntary, the contracting parties were not upon equal terms, and for that reason the doctrine of anticipatory breach, as laid down in Johnstone v. Milling, L. R. 16 Q. B. Div. 460; Hochster v. De La Tour, 2 El. & Bl. 678, 22 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 455; and Frost v. Knight, L. R. 7 Exch. 114,—does not apply, because the doctrine there laid down is limited to contracts not even partially performed by either party.

Jessop v. Ivory, 158 Pa. 71, 27 Atl. 840.

The notice of an intention not to perform the contract, if not accepted by the other party as a present breach, remains only a matter of intention, and may be withdrawn at any time before the performance is in fact due.

Zuck v. McClure, 98 Pa. 541; Ripley v. M'Clure, 4 Exch. 345; Leake, Contr. 873.

Although, as a general rule, a payment exacted as a condition to the performance of a contract cannot be considered compulsory if the nonperformance of the contract would jeopardize the plaintiff's rights, he having partially performed, the payment under protest is compulsory.

Niedermeyer v. University of Missouri, 81 Mo. App. 654; Westlake v. St. Louis, 77 Mo. 47, 46 Am. Rep. 4; Horner v. State, 42 App. Div. 430, 59 N. Y. Supp. 96; Buford v. Lonergan, 6 Utah, 301, 22 Pac. 164; Orkle v. Maxwell, 3 Blatchf. 413, Fed. Cas. No. 3,231.

Acheson, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

It was decided by this court in Supreme Council A. L. H. v. Black, 59 C. C. A. 414, 123 Fed. 650, that, by reason of the adoption by the corporation of the by-law reducing the insurance certificate from $5,000 to $2,000, and putting the by-law into effect by making assessments on the reduced basis, and notifying the certificate holders, a certificate holder who had performed his part of the contract, and had not consented to the reduction, might elect to treat the contract as rescinded, and sue immediately to recover back all the assessments he had paid NOTE.—As to right to rescind or abandon contract because of other party's default, see Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Richards, 30 L. R. A. 33, and note.

69 L. R. A.

under his certificate. We applied to the case the principle enunciated in Hochster v. De La Tour, 2 El. & Bl. 678; Johnstone v. Milling, L. R. 16 Q. B. Div. 460, and Roehm v. Horst, 178 U. S. 1, 13, 44 L. ed. 953, 958, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 780, that, when one party to a contract to be performed at a future time announces his intention not to perform it, the other party, if he chooses, may elect to act upon such announcement as a wrongful renunciation of the contract, and may thereupon treat the same as a breach of the contract, and bring suit at once for such breach. Black had given immediate notice that he regarded the by-law as a breach of the contract, and he promptly brought his action. In the subsequent case of Supreme Council A. L. H. v. Daix, 64 C. C. A. 435, 130 Fed. 101, we held that the certificate holder there suing had not lost his right to treat the contract as rescinded, and recover back the assessments he had paid, simply because of a delay of two years and three months in giving notice of his election to do so; he having done nothing in affirmance of the by-law or indicating a waiver of his right to treat the contract as rescinded, and having done no act tending to mislead the corporation; and it not appearing that the corporation had suffered any injury from the delay of the plaintiff in signifying his election to rescind. The present case differs from the two former ones (the Cases of Black and Daix) in this: That, immediately upon the adoption and putting into effect of the by-law, the plaintiff (Lippincott) made his election not to treat the contract under his $5,000 certificate as at an end, or broken, but to keep the contract in full force, and to maintain unimpaired all his rights thereunder; and to that position he steadfastly adhered for a period of two years and five months. The court below, in its opinion, says: "The unquestioned facts show plainly that the plaintiff, by his words and conduct, declared his intention not to assent to the reduction of his certificate, but to hold on to the original agreement." To this latter end he protested against the attempted reduction, offered to pay assessments upon the full face of his certificate, and thereafter paid assessments based upon the reduced amount, but always under protest, until February 28, 1903, when he wrote to the local council: "I shall discontinue to pay the dues and assessments on the $5,000 certificate issued to me, and will ask you to return me the amount paid by me on the same up to October 1, 1900, at which time, by the adoption of the resolution, you abrogated your contract with me." Now, undoubtedly the plaintiff had kept his contract alive, so that, if he had died between October 1, 1900, and February 28, 1903, his benefiary (Mrs. Lippincott) could have recovered the amount of his insurance certificate, $5,000. The protests which accompanied the plaintiff's payments of assessments were intended merely to preserve his contract rights under his $5,000 certificate, and had no other effect.

This action was brought on March 18, 1903, for the recovery of the dues and assessments paid by the plaintiff under his certificate prior to October 1, 1900, the date when the reducing by-law of August, 1900, went into effect. Anticipatory breach of the contract is the ground of recovery relied on. Can the plaintiff recover, in view of his election, made in October, 1900, not to accept the defendant's action as an anticipatory breach, but to treat the contract as continuing in full force, his subsequent retention of membership in the order, and his payments of assessments down to February 28, 1903? This question can best be answered by referring to what was said in Hochster v. De La Tour, 2 El. & Bl. 678, Johnstone v. Milling, L. R. 16 Q. B. Div. 460, and Roehm v. Horst, 178 U. S. 1, 13, 44 L. ed. 953, 958, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 780, the leading cases on the subject of anticipatory breaches of contracts. We extract from these cases the following principles: Where one party to a contract to be performed in the future, before the time for performance arrives, refuses to perform, or declares his intention not to perform, he thereby, so far as he is concerned, declares his intention then and there to rescind the contract. Such renunciation, however, in and of itself does not work a rescission, for one party to a contract cannot, by himself, rescind it. But by making the wrongful renunciation he entitles the other party, if he pleases, to agree to the contract being put an end to, subject to the retention by him of his right to bring an action in respect to such wrongful rescission. L. R. 16 Q. B. Div. 467. A declaration by the promisor, before the time for performance has arrived, of his intention not to perform, is not in itself, and unless acted on by the promisee, a breach of the contract. Such declaration only becomes a wrongful act if the promisee elects to treat it as such. If he does so elect, it becomes a breach of contract, and he can recover upon it as much. Id. 473. In Johnstone v. Milling, L. R. 16 Q. B. Div. 460, 467, Lord Esher, Master of the Rolls, said: "The other party may adopt such renunciation of the contract by so acting upon it as, in effect, to declare that he, too, treats the contract as at an end, except for the purpose of bringing an action upon it for the damages sustained by him in consequence of such renunciation. He cannot, however, himself proceed with the contract on the footing that it still exists for other purposes, and also treat such renunciation as an immediate breach. If he adopts the renunciation, the contract is at an end, except for the purposes of the action for such wrongful renunciation. If he does not wish to do so, he must wait for the arrival of the time when, in the ordinary course, a cause of action on the contract would arise. He must elect which course he will pursue."

Now, the plaintiff was not bound by the action of the corporation in adopting the by-law of 1900 and putting it into effect. His contract remained unaffected. But he acquired the right of electing either to treat the attempted reduction of his certificate as a breach of the contract and ground for making an end of it with an immediate right of action for the recovery of damages, or else to hold fast to his contract. The plaintiff chose the latter course. He elected to keep the contract alive, and did so. The court below did not doubt that the plaintiff had elected to keep the contract alive. In its opinion the court states the question here to be "the right of a member of the defendant order to rescind his contract after having once elected not to rescind." And the court held that the plaintiff was not precluded, even after the lapse of two years and five months, from making a second election to rescind the contract. To this view we cannot assent. In the circumstances we think it was not open to the plaintiff to make a second election, reversing his former one. Clough v. London & N. W. R. Co. L. R. 7 Exch. 26, 34. Speaking of the right of election to avoid a sale of personalty, the court there said: "And we further agree that the contract continues valid till the party defrauded has determined his election by avoiding it. And, as is stated in Com. Dig. Election, c. 2, if a man once determines his election it shall be determined forever; and, as is also stated in Com. Dig. Election, c. 1, the determination of a man's election shall be made by express words or by act. And consequently we agree with what seems to be the opinion of all the judges below, that, if it can be shown that the London Pianoforte Company have at any time after knowledge of the fraud, either by express words or by unequivocal acts, affirmed the contract, their election has been determined forever."

The principle of the finality of an election once made is applicable, we think, to the present case.

We see no ground upon which the plaintiff can avoid the election he made in October, 1900. We cannot agree that it was "a hasty and ill-advised decision." It seems to us to have been intelligently and deliberately made upon full knowledge of all the facts. Moreover, the plaintiff rested content with his election for two years and five months. His election to keep the contract alive is not now open to reconsideration. Nor can we give our assent to the proposition urged by the defendant in error that the breach of contract was a continuing one, and therefore that the plaintiff could rescind the contract at any time up to the time set for performance. All the grounds warranting rescission existed and were complete at the time the plaintiff made his original election. The right of the plaintiff to abrogate the contract was gone forever when he elected not to rescind. His exercise of the right of election fixed the contractual relations of the parties. Those relations were not thereafter subject to change at the mere pleasure of the plaintiff.

The views we have above expressed require us to render the judgment following: The judgment of the Circuit Court is reversed, and the cause is remanded to that court, with direction to enter judgment in favor of the defendant non obstante veredicto.

OHIO SUPREME COURT.

B. A. TAYLOR, Auditor of Madison County, et al., Pliffs. in Err.,

v.

Eugenia J. CRAWFORD et al.

(.....Ohio.....)

*Section 3 of an act entitled "An Act to

*Headnote by the COURT.

NOTE.—Maintenance of drainage ditches.

The general question as to the liability for the expense of drainage is considered in a note to Heffner v. Case & Morgan Counties, 58 L. R. A. 353. But after the drainage system has been installed there are necessarily some expenses attending its maintenance in a working condition, and some attention and care are also necessary to preserve its efficiency. The question then arises, Upon whom are these burdens cast? Primarily these matters are controlled Provide for the Cleaning Out and Keeping in Repair of Public Ditches, Drains, and Water Courses, et cet." (95 Ohio Laws, p. 155), passed April 15, 1902, is not invalid, as being in conflict with § 19 of article 1, or § 16 of article 1, or with any other provision of the Constitution of the state of Ohio.

(June 27, 1905.)

been installed there are necessarily some expenses attending its maintenance in a working condition, and some attention and care are also necessary to preserve its efficiency. The question then arises, Upon whom are these burdens cast? Primarily these matters are controlled ERROR to the Circuit Court for Madison County to review a judgment reversing a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas in favor of defendants in a suit to enjoin proceedings for the cleansing of a draining ditch. Reversed.

Statement by Price, J.:

The plaintiffs below filed their petition praying for an injunction against the plaintiffs in error, who were proceeding to make an assessment on the lands of the plaintiffs and others to pay for the cleaning out of a certain ditch which had been established in 1886. The surveyor and auditor were acting under the provisions of § 3 of an act of the general assembly entitled "An Act to Provide for the Cleaning Out and Keeping in Repair of Public Ditches, Drains, and Water Courses, et cetera." (95 Ohio Laws, p.

by the provisions of statutes. It is not desirable to set these provisions out, because not only are they easy of access in the statute books, but consultation of the latest edition of the statute book will insure the securing of the provisions in force, which could not be assured in any other way. The construction which the courts have given to the statutes may, however, be helpful, not only in determining what the present law is, but also in understanding the meaning of terms in future statutes; and therefore a short review of the decisions will be attempted. The adoption of plans for the improvement of lands by concerted action under legislative authority for its drainage is of comparatively recent origin, so that the body of case law is somewhat limited, and many of the problems have not yet been solved.

Right of landowner to compel repair.

After a landowner has been assessed, sometimes for a large amount, for the construction of a drainage system on the theory that his property will be benefited by the improvement he is usually deeply interested in having the system maintained in a working condition; and the question arises, What right has he to compel the officials charged with the care of the improvement to perform their duty? The statutes usually contain an express provision upon this subject; but it has been held that a landowner who has been assessed for the construction and repair of a drainage ditch cannot compel the commissioners, by mandamus, to levy an assessment to repair a lateral which has become obstructed so that his land is not drained, where they have no funds on hand to devote to that purpose, and the statute authorizes them, under such circumstances, to petition the court for the making of an assessment; since, the matter being within their discretion, it cannot be controlled by mandamus, unless it shall be made to appear that their refusal is arbitrary and amounts to a fraud, or their motive is to accomplish their own personal or selfish ends. Bromwell v. Flowers (Ill.) 75 N. E. 467. The court, however, in that case, because of failure to state the contrary in the petition, assumed that the lateral ditches were in that district kept in repair by the landowners individually benefited thereby, and, assuming that to be true, 68 L. R. A.

155), passed April 15, 1902. Among other claims which are noticed in the opinion, it is alleged that said section conflicts with § 19 of article 1 of our state Constitution. The averments of the petition were met by an answer, and the case was heard in the court of common pleas on the evidence, and that court found for the defendants, the auditor and surveyor. On appeal the case was again heard in the circuit court, where a perpetual injunction was granted on the ground that said § 3 is unconstitutional. Error is prosecuted in this court to obtain a reversal of the judgment of the circuit court.

Messrs. C. R. Hornbeck and T. J. Duncan, for plaintiffs in error:

The assessing of property for the purpose of public improvement, such as the

it would be unjust to compel others to contribute towards the repair of the lateral through the petitioner's land.

A mandamus will not lie to compel a township trustee to remove obstructions from a drain, where the provisions of the statute making it his duty to repair and remove obstructions from ditches or drains theretofore obstructed are unconstitutional and void. Tyler v. State, 83 Ind. 563.

A landowner, having the right by law to enter upon the lands of another to remove obstructions inadvertently or negligently placed in a legally established ditch by such owner for temporary purposes which are easily removed, cannot stand by and await the ruin of his crops, and hold the other liable therefor, in the absence of evidence that the obstructions were wilfully placed therein for the purpose of creating obstructions. Chambers v. Kyle, 87 Ind. 83.

Action by officials.

The duty of looking after the repair should be, and usually is, imposed by statute upon the officials to whose care the improvement has been committed, either upon their own initiative or upon petition by interested property owners. The repair is usually regarded as a matter of routine duty, and does not require the complicated processes necessary for the original establishment of the ditch.

The law contemplates, in providing the easement of a drain, that it will require that it be kept in repair in order to preserve its usefulness, and does not, in requiring notice to adjoining owners when the ditch is originally opened, demand that notice of its repair or reopening shall be given in the same manner in order to validate assessment for such repair. Yeomans v. Riddle, 84 Iowa, 147, 50 N. W. 886.

The propriety of having an existing drain cleaned out does not necessarily need to be determined by commissioners or jurors, unless involving more than cleansing. Where a drain has once been legally made there is a presumption that, if necessary at all, it should be kept in reasonable order. Barker v. Vernon Twp. 63 Mich. 516. 30 N. W. 175.

A provision in a drainage law authorizing township trustees to repair and remove obstructions from public ditches is not unconstitutional constructing or cleaning of ditches, or removing obstructions therefrom, is not repugnant to any provision of the Constitution.

Hill v. Higdon, 5 Ohio St. 243, 67 Am. Dec. 289; Scovill v. Cleveland, 1 Ohio St. 126; Reeves v. Wood County, 8 Ohio St. 333; Thompson v. Wood County, 11 Ohio St. 678; Chamberlain v. Cleveland, 34 Ohio St. 551; Lima v. Lima Cemetery Asso. 42 Ohio St. 128, 51 Am. Rep. 809.

It is not the province of a court to declare laws unconstitutional because they are unwise.

Cincinnati, W. & Z. R. Co. v. Clinton County, 1 Ohio St. 78; Black, Constr. & Interpretation of Laws, p. 93; Curryer v. Merrill, 25 Minn. 1, 33 Am. Rep. 450.

Nonresident owners cannot be counted either for or against the improvement.

because it vests in those officials a discretionary authority to determine when repairs are necessary without requiring notice to be given of the intention to order the repairs. Weaver v. Templin, 113 Ind. 298, 14 N. E. 600.

A provision in a drainage law authorizing township trustees to repair and remove obstructions from public ditches, and apportion and assess the cost thereof upon the lands which will be benefited according as, in their judgment, such benefits accrue, and requiring notice to be given of the assessment, and permitting any person aggrieved thereby to appeal, is constitutional and valid, although it limits the question to be tried on appeal to the cost of such repairs or removals and what amount thereof should be assessed on each tract of land affected. Trimble v. McGee, 112 Ind. 307, 14 N. E. 83; Wisman v. McGee, 112 Ind. 600, 14 N. E. 375.

In repairing, reopening, and deepening county drainage ditches the board of supervisors need not take the proceedings required by statute for the original construction of the ditch, where the statute provides a scheme for such repairs without taking such steps. Yeomans v. Riddle, 84 Iowa, 147, 50 N. W. 886.

The courts have no power to enjoin a county surveyor from repairing a public ditch by cleaning it out to its full dimensions, where he was served by a landowner interested with the statutory notice to make such repairs, and exercised the discretion committed to him by the law by determining that it was his duty to make such repairs, in the absence of a showing that he proposed to exceed his authority by doing something beyond the mere restoration of the ditch to its original dimensions. Amoss v. Lassell, 122 Ind. 36, 23 N. E. 525.

The land of a single owner, through which is constructed a ditch proposed to be cleaned and widened, is "adjacent" thereto within the meaning of a statute requiring, as a condition precedent to the exercising of the power to clean and widen, the filing of a petition by "one or more" persons owning lands adjacent to the ditch to be cleaned. Kent v. Perkins, 36 Ohio St. 639.

What is repair?

In order to come within the provisions of the 69 L. R. A.

Burgett v. Norris, 25 Ohio St. 368; Hays v. Jones, 27 Ohio St. 218; Makemson v. Kauffman, 35 Ohio St. 444; Corry v. Gaynor, 22 Ohio St. 584; Cincinnati, M. & L. Traction Co. v. Felix, 25 Ohio C. C. 393; Snell v. Cincinnati Street R. Co. 60 Ohio St. 256, 54 N. E. 270.

Messrs. Murray & Emery, for defendants in error:

A statute which attempts to give those resident landowners along the line of the ditch the right attempted to be given by § 3, and precludes nonresidents from exercising the same rights; and which also permits a resident landowner to impose the burden, as in this case, of a tax or assessment, amounting to a large sum upon him, —is an unjust and unfair discrimination between persons of the same class.

State v. Gardner, 58 Ohio St. 599, 41 statute authorizing and controlling the repair of ditches, the proceeding must be limited to a maintenance of the ditch in the condition in which the construction proceedings had left it. Repair proceedings cannot be used to complete work which had been left incomplete, nor to enlarge work which was inadequate as originally constructed.

The statutory power given county surveyors to keep ditches "in repair to the full dimension as to width and depth as required in the original specifications" must be confined strictly to keeping ditches in repair to those dimensions, and does not authorize the enlargement thereof beyond the original dimensions. Fries v. Brier, 111 Ind. 65, 11 N. E. 958.

A county surveyor has no power, under a statute authorizing him to repair public ditches to the full dimensions as required in the original specifications, to deepen or to construct a ditch wider and deeper than the original ditch was constructed, or to complete an incomplete one, or to correct what he deems to be faults in the original construction; nor can he justify his acts, in an action to set aside the assessment levied therefor, on the ground that part of the original proceeding was void, or collaterally attack that proceeding by proof that those who constructed the original ditch did not dig it as deep as the specifications required. Homack v. Hobbs (Ind.) 32 N. E. 307.

The statutory authority of township trustees to repair and remove obstructions from public ditches is limited to a restoration of the ditch as nearly as practicable to its original condition, and does not authorize the construction of a new ditch or the enlargement and improvement of an existing one, except in so far as such repairs or removals necessarily enlarge and improve it; and an assessment levied on land for the cost of such unauthorized work is invalid and unenforceable. Weaver v. Templin, 113 Ind. 298, 14 N. E. 600.

Deepening a drainage ditch by dredging for a distance of nearly 20 miles at an expense of nearly $25,000 is not a repair of the ditch; and it is immaterial that a portion of the deepening is rendered necessary by the fact that the bottom of the open ditch has become filled with mud so as to be above the level of the laterals

L. R. A. 689, 65 Am. St. Rep. 785, 51 N. E. 136; Palmer v. Tingle, 55 Ohio St. 423, 45 N. E. 313; Harmon v. State, 66 Ohio St. 249, 58 L. R. A. 618, 64 N. E. 117; State v. Gravett, 65 Ohio St. 289, 55 L. R. A. 791, 87 Am. St. Rep. 605, 62 N. E. 325; State ex rel. Schwartz v. Ferris, 53 Ohio St. 314, 30 L. R. A. 218, 41 N. E. 579; Hocking Valley Coal Co. v. Rosser, 53 Ohio St. 12, 29 L. R. A. 386, 53 Am. St. Rep. 622, 41 N. E. 263; Williams v. Donough, 65 Ohio St. 499, 56 L. R. A. 766, 63 N. E. 84; State ex rel. McKell v. Robins, 71 Ohio St. 273, 73 N. E. 470.

No tax or assessment can be levied, except for a public purpose.

2 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 587; Blue v. Wentz, 54 Ohio St. 247, 43 N. E. 493; Reeves v. Wood County, 8 Ohio St. 333.

The act contemplates that the person who which drain into it. People ex rel. Munsterman v. McDougal, 205 Ill. 636, 69 N. E. 95.

Under a petition to clean out a ditch, trustees have no power to make an order for a new ditch, or deepen or widen one already constructed. Deuyer v. Shonert, 1 Ohio C. C. 73.

An assessment on land for the cost of repairs to a public ditch cannot be sustained for excavating and repairing a ditch on a different line from that designated in the original specifications, where the surveyor had no authority to expend money for other purposes, or for constructing and excavating a ditch in another place from the line upon which it was originally located. Taylor v. Brown, 127 Ind. 293, 26 N. E. 822.

There can be no enlargement so as to take additional land without making additional compensation for the property so taken. Owensboro v. Brocking, 27 Ky. L. Rep. 1086, 87 S. W. 1036.

But a landowner cannot maintain a collateral suit to be relieved from an assessment for the repair of a public ditch on the ground that the township trustee performing the work exceeded his statutory authority by proceeding, under the guise of repairing, to widen and deepen the ditch beyond its original dimensions, although such a defense might have defeated the assessment,—at least to the extent of the excess of cost created by such unauthorized work,—by appealing from the assessment. Dunkle v. Heron, 115 Ind. 470, 18 N. E. 12.

But the fact that the ditch was never fully completed will not prevent a repair of the part that was finished.

The county surveyor, whose duty it is to repair public ditches, has jurisdiction to repair that part of a public ditch completed, although the entire ditch is not yet finished, where the ditch was established under a law not requiring the appointment of an officer to supervise the construction and report its completion, and who retains control thereof until completed. Artman v. Wynkoop, 132 Ind. 17, 31 N. E. 468.

A county surveyor who is not authorized to repair a public ditch until "after the construction of such work" will not be enjoined from repairing such a ditch on the ground that the same has never been constructed according makes the affidavit shall be the only person who makes the finding of the necessity; and the affidavit itself is such a finding. It takes from the proper administrative officers the power to act in local improvements, and confers this power upon a private individual, without appeal or redress to the persons interested.

Harmon v. State, 66 Ohio St. 249, 58 L. R. A. 618, 64 N. E. 117; State ex rel. Broerman v. Hamilton County, 54 Ohio St. 333, 43 N. E. 587.

The legislature has not the power to confer upon the auditor the duties imposed by this act.

Page v. Allen, 58 Pa. 338, 98 Am. Dec. 272; Hulse v. State, 35 Ohio St. 421; State ex rel. Broerman v. Hamilton County, 54 Ohio St. 333, 43 N. E. 587.

to the original plans and specifications, in the absence of an averment that the ditch has never been accepted, where seven years have elapsed since its construction, after which lapse of time it will be presumed that the work was duly accepted as required by law, and that, in making the repairs, the surveyor is acting within his authority. Bunnell v. Peet, 123 Ind. 436, 24 N. E. 146.

An assessment on land for the repair of a public ditch by a county surveyor under a statute making it his duty to repair such ditches is not void because the ditch was never completed according to the original specifications, since the propriety of making such repairs is committed by the statute to the discretion of that official, and his decision is final. Kirkpatrick v. Taylor, 118 Ind. 329, 21 N. E. 20.

So the fact that the ditch was incidentally enlarged in the process of repair will not render the proceeding void in toto so that no assessment can be made for the work; but the assessment will be upheld so far as necessary to meet the cost of legitimate repairs.

An assessment for the repair of a public ditch is not void in toto because the county surveyor exceeded his statutory authority by making the ditch larger than the original specifications required, but is void only to the extent of the cost of the unauthorized work. Romack v. Hobbs, 13 Ind. App. 138, 41 N. E. 391.

An assessment for cleaning out and widening a drain is not invalid because the contractor employed to do the work in accordance with a diagram of the existing drain widened it beyond its original width. Angell v. Cortright, 111 Mich. 223, 69 N. W. 486.

The fact that a county surveyor exceeded his authority to repair a public ditch by enlarging it beyond its original dimensions will not relieve landowners from liability to pay for benefits received by the doing of that part of the work within his jurisdiction. Scott v. Stringley, 132 Ind. 378, 31 N. E. 953.

And, under proper proceedings, the ditch may be enlarged.

A citation in a proceeding to widen a ditch need not be in the exact language of the statute, where it contains the substance of its requirement, and the party upon whom it is served is

Price, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The evidence heard in the circuit court has not been brought into the record by bill of exceptions, and that court made no finding of facts. Consequently we have nothing to review in reference to the evidence admitted on the issues joined by the pleadings. According to the judgment entry, the lower court granted a perpetual injunction against the county auditor and county surveyor on the sole ground that § 3 of an act of the general assembly passed on the 15th day of April, 1902, found in 95 Ohio Laws, p. 155, under which the officers were proceeding, is unconstitutional, and that is the only question for determination here. In this state of the record, we have nothing to do with many averments of the petition and their denial by the answer, for they present issues of fact which are not before us. Among these are questions as to the fairness of the apportionment of the costs and expenses of cleaning out the ditch, and whether it was for a public purpose, or merely for the private benefit of certain named persons who asked for the improvement.

In taking up the question of constitutional law, a preliminary observation will assist in understanding our subject. The general provisions of our statutes for the location and construction of ditches, drains, and water courses, with some changes and variations, have been in operation for many years. It is declared by the pleadings that the ditch about to be cleaned out by virtue of the proceedings enjoined was established in the year 1886, and that it was constructed during that year. It now deserves the not misled. Wolpert v. Newcomb, 106 Mich. 357, 64 N. W. 326.

One properly served with a citation in a proceeding to widen a ditch cannot raise the objection of a defective service upon others who have released the right of way, and thereby waived all irregularities. Ibid.

A township drain constructed as one continuous drain by the joint action of the township commissioners of the two townships constitutes one drain, and but a single proceeding is necessary for widening and deepening it. Tinsman v. Monroe County Probate Judge, 82 Mich. 562, 46 N. W. 780.

A landowner who is injured by the widening, deepening, and straightening of a ditch existing upon his property is not entitled to question the validity of the proceedings by writ of certiorari. Wolpert v. Newcomb, 106 Mich. 357, 64 N. W. 326.

Who to bear cost of repair.

The legislature may direct payment of the cost of maintaining the ditch out of the public funds, may require each landowner to keep a section of the ditch in repair, or may meet the cost by assessment upon property benefited.

The statutory duty imposed upon township trustees to keep drains and ditches in repair and free from obstructions, and pay for the same out of the general township funds, is not unconstitutional, but is a valid and effectual provision, notwithstanding a further provision in the statute, that, in order to reimburse that fund, he is authorized to apportion and assess the cost thereof upon the lands benefited, has been declared unconstitutional and void because no provision is made for a hearing by the landowners affected. Ingerman v. Noblesville Twp. 90 Ind. 393.

That part of an act making it the duty of county surveyors to keep public ditches in repair at public expense, which requires the issuing of warrants upon the county treasurer for the amount of such repairs, is a sufficient appropriation made by law within the meaning of the constitutional provision prohibiting the paying out of money from the county treasury except in pursuance of an appropriation made by law. State ex rel. French v. Johnson, 105 Ind. 463, 5 N. E. 553.
69 L. R. A.

The drains constructed in pursuance of a drainage law are included within a statute making it the duty of certain public officers to see that "all drains that may have been, or may hereafter be, constructed under and by virtue of any law in this state" are kept in repair by landowners to whom portions thereof have been allotted for that purpose, and to repair the same at their expense upon their failure so to do. Cochran v. White, 151 Ind. 435, 51 N. E. 723.

A township trustee, whose duty it is to see that public ditches are kept in repair so as to answer their purpose, may require a landowner to take up a tile drain on that portion thereof allotted to him to keep in repair, and relay the tiles so as to be level with the grade line established by the original specifications to correct that fault in the original construction, where the ditch failed to answer its purpose to drain all the land assessed therefor by reason of such fault, although the ditch was accepted as complete according to the specifications. Ibid.

Under an award of commissioners under an enclosure act requiring the owners of land over which a drain passed to cleanse and keep it of sufficient width and depth to carry off the water, such owners are not required to keep the drain of sufficient capacity to carry off water afterwards drained into it by the opening of a sewer or other drain. Sharpe v. Hancock, 7 Mann. & G. 354, 8 Scott, N. R. 46.

An allotment for the repair of a drainage ditch, made without giving the notice and providing an opportunity for remonstrances as required by statute, is void. Hille v. Neale, 32 Ind. App. 341, 69 N. E. 713.

Failure to give personal notice to some landowners of allotments of portions of a public ditch to be kept in repair by them, as required by law, does not invalidate the allotment as to others properly served. Hendricks County v. Trotter, 10 Ind. App. 626, 49 N. E. 976.

A failure to give personal notice to landowners of ditch allotments as required by statute, renders the allotments void; and a mere voluntary acquiescence therein for the time being cannot bind the landowners for the future. Ibid.; Hille v. Neale, 32 Ind. App. 341, 69 N. E. 713.

But the allotment of a portion of a ditch to name of an old ditch, and, by reason of its location and construction under the laws then and now in operation, it is a public water course. It is expressly so declared by § 4500, Rev. Stat. 1892. In order to procure its original location and construction, it was incumbent upon the petitioners therefor, among other things, to state in their petition, and show at the hearing before the commissioners, that the proposed ditch would be conducive to the public health, convenience, or welfare, and it was necessary for the commissioners to find and record that important fact in order to give them jurisdiction to establish the ditch. Such a finding was essential because the improvement petitioned for contemplated the appropriation of private property, which could only be done for a public use. We assume the proceedings which resulted in the location and construction of the original ditch were conducted as the law required, and that it was found and recorded by the county commissioners that the ditch, when constructed, would promote the public health, convenience, and welfare. For that public purpose lands could be, and no doubt were, appropriated, for which, under our Constitution, the owners were entitled to compensation and damages; and, if the award of the commissioners was not satisfactory, there was a right of appeal to the probate court, where the landowner could be heard before a constitutional jury as to such compensation and damages and other questions. The statutory provisions fur-a landowner, to be by him kept in repair, is valid, although no personal notice is given him of the time and place to hear objections thereto, as required by statute, when he voluntarily appears and presents his objections. Hendricks County v. Trotter, 19 Ind. App. 626, 49 N. E. 976.

Where an attempted allotment for ditch repairs is void for failure to give the necessary notice, the proper officers may proceed to make a valid one, and need not proceed under the provisions of the statute governing the making of allotments when the first one is found to be inequitable. Hille v. Neale, 32 Ind. App. 341, 69 N. E. 713.

The duties imposed by law on county surveyors to reallocate county ditches to the various landowners for repair, and to inspect and accept completed allotments, although requiring the exercise of judgment and discretion, do not impose upon that officer a judicial function within the meaning of the constitutional prohibition against the imposing of judicial functions upon ministerial officers. Ellis v. Steuben County, 133 Ind. 91, 54 N. E. 382.

The duty of repairing a ditch is not cast upon the landowner by a provision that he shall keep it open through his land, which means no more than that he shall not fill it up, or allow it to be filled up. Lille v. Gibson, 91 Mo. App. 480.

An assessment on land for the cost of repairing the owner's allotment of a public ditch is invalid and unenforceable where no notice by copy of the making of the allotment was served upon the owner as required by law, rendering the allotment without jurisdiction and subject to collateral attack. Beatty v. Pruden, 13 Ind. App. 507, 41 N. E. 961.

A landowner failing to repair his share of a public ditch within the time specified in a statutory notice is liable for a tax imposed on account of the repairs being made by the trustee of the ditch, although the trustee agreed that the landowner might complete the repairs after the time limited by the notice had expired. Davison v. Campbell, 28 Ind. App. 688, 63 N. E. 779.

The drainage laws of Illinois authorize the drainage commissioners to raise money by assessment upon the lands within drainage districts for use, under the direction of the court, in repairing or maintaining ditches outside as well as inside the district, where such outside drains are necessary for the protection of the lands, and the ample drainage of the same, within such districts. Briggs v. Union Drainage Dist. No. 1, 140 Ill. 53, 29 N. E. 721.

The assessment.

The court cannot make and levy an assessment for annual benefits upon lands in a drainage district, for keeping the improvements therein in repair, where the statute under which the district was organized requires such assessments to be made by a jury, and nowhere authorizes the court to do so without a jury,—especially where such assessment is made without notice to the landowners, and no opportunity is given to them to be heard in the matter. Robeson v. People, 161 Ill. 176, 43 N. E. 619.

A township trustee is not estopped from making an assessment on lands benefited by repairs to a public ditch because eighteen months elapsed from the completion of the work to the making of the assessment, in the absence of any statutory provision as to time, where the cost of such repairs has been paid out of the public treasury, and it does not appear that the work was not necessary, or that the trustee acted in bad faith, and the rights of parties have not been changed or those of third parties affected by the delay. Gelger v. Bradley, 117 Ind. 120, 19 N. E. 760.

Drainage commissioners of drainage districts organized under the Illinois farm drainage act have the right to use funds on hand to repair work already done, or more fully to protect the lands of the district; but if there are no funds on hand, they must first make a new tax levy before contracting additional indebtedness. They cannot make an assessment to meet a prior indebtedness. First Nat. Bank v. Union Dist. No. 1, 82 Ill. App. 626.

The authority of the county clerk to extend the drainage tax is the certificate of the commissioners, and, unless, a valid certificate is on file, he is powerless to extend the tax. And to render the tax valid the certificate of the commissioners requiring its levy must conform to the provisions of the statute, stating for what purposes the tax is to be levied. People ex rel. Trobaugh v. Glenn, 207 Ill. 50, 69 N. E. 568. The court says that, under the statute, the taxpayer has the right to be informed for what purposes his property is to be taxed, and that the statute provides that the amount raised for the payment of interest on indebtedness nished the owner of lands taken for the ditch a ready and convenient remedy for the enforcement of the constitutional guaranties for the protection of his rights. No doubt the landowners who desired to do so availed themselves of all these provisions made in their behalf.

Another observation is likewise pertinent. Our ditch laws are the exercise of police power committed to the general assembly. This was held in Sessions v. Crunkilton, 20 Ohio St. 349. The proposition there stated is that the construction of drains by townships in cases where the public health, convenience, and welfare demand it, is within the meaning of "police powers" mentioned in § 7 of article 10 of our state Constitution. The means of promoting and con-shall be kept separate from the balance of the amount raised.

Rights of landowner.

A statutory provision that notice of the time and place of letting contracts for the work of widening or extending a drain be served upon every person whose lands are affected by such assessment does not require such notice to be given in a proceeding to clean out a drain. Lanning v. Palmer, 117 Mich. 529, 76 N. W. 2.

Although notice of some kind is required preparatory to a final assessment of benefits on lands for the repair of a public ditch, it rests with the legislature to determine what it shall be, provided landowners are not thereby subjected to unreasonable inconvenience and embarrassment. Weaver v. Templin, 113 Ind. 298, 14 N. E. 600.

A provision in a drainage law authorizing county surveyors to repair public ditches and assess the cost thereof upon the lands adjudged by the court to have been benefited by the original construction in proportion to that assessment is not unconstitutional as the taking of property without due process of law because no notice is required to be given landowners of the intention to make repairs or assessments, where notice of assessment after it is made is provided for, and opportunity is given to appeal therefrom to a court having jurisdiction to determine whether the amount expended was in fact for repairs, and whether the repairs were made in good faith and according to law. Johnson v. Lewis, 115 Ind. 400, 18 N. E. 7.

A provision in the drainage law making it the duty of county surveyors to keep ditches in repair, and giving the power to assess the cost upon the lands adjudged benefited in the original proceedings establishing such ditches, is not unconstitutional as depriving such property owners of their property without due process of law, where provision is made for notice to them of the assessment, and for an appeal by any person aggrieved. Fries v. Brier, 111 Ind. 65, 11 N. E. 958.

A section in the statute authorizing township trustees to keep the drains in their townships in repair and free from obstructions to determine the necessity for such repairs and removals and the cost thereof, and to apportion and assess such cost upon the lands which, in their judgment, will be benefited thereby 69 L. R. A.

serving the public health and welfare provided by legislation are so provided in the exercise of the police powers existing in the general assembly. And § 3, now involved, prescribes one of the methods of promoting the public health, convenience, and welfare. It reads: "Provided, however, that when a ditch needs to be cleaned out, any resident owner of any tract of land which was assessed for the construction may make a sworn statement to the county auditor, in writing, setting forth such necessity. And when said written sworn statement is made within three years from the original construction, or for material improvement by deepening and widening said ditch, and as often thereafter as may be necessary to keep said ditch in good rein the proportion of such benefits, which assessments are a lien upon such land, by ex parte proceedings, without giving the owners of the lands affected an opportunity to be heard, and making no provision for appeal,—is unconstitutional and void as repugnant to the provision of the Bill of Rights that every person shall have remedy by due process of law for injury to his person, property, or reputation; also as violating the provision of the Federal Constitution prohibiting the depriving a person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. Campbell v. Dwiggins, 83 Ind. 473.

Estoppel.

Landowners are not estopped to contest the validity of an assessment on their lands for the repair of a noncompleted public ditch by standing silently by with full knowledge, and allowing the work to be done without objection, where the assessment is absolutely void because the officer making the repairs had no jurisdiction of the ditch before its completion and acceptance. Morrow v. Geeting (Ind. App.) 37 N. E. 739.

One assessed for the deepening and widening of a ditch which the trustees had no authority to order, under a petition merely for the cleaning out of a ditch, is not estopped to object after the work is done. Deuyer v. Shonert, 1 Ohio, C. C. 73.

Irregularities.

One who petitioned for the cleaning out of a drain and acquiesced in the work, cannot avoid payment of the expense on the ground of mere irregularities in the proceedings. Lanning v. Palmer, 117 Mich. 529, 76 N. W. 2.

How far court may review and control proceedings.

The limitation of the questions to be tried upon appeal by a landowner from an assessment for the repair of a public ditch by a county surveyor, to a determination of the cost of the repair and what amount thereof should be assessed against the owner's land, does not, in view of the fact that it is only through the medium of such an appeal that aggrieved landowners may make objections to the proceedings prevent the examination, as preliminary and incidental to the trial on its merits, of questions pair, said county auditor shall forthwith notify the county surveyor to examine the said ditch, who shall go without unnecessary delay, upon the line thereof, and make an estimate of the amount of money required therefor and fix the portion thereof that the owner of said tract of land and each corporation, county, or township assessed for the construction of the ditch, shall be assessed for such cleaning out; and such assessment shall be made according to the benefits; unless the necessity for the cleaning out arose from the act or neglect of some landowner or corporation, in which case such act or neglect shall be considered. Said county surveyor shall return his estimate and assessment to said auditor in writing, who shall appoint a day for hearing the same, and direct said county surveyor to give notice thereof to each owner of land and corporation affected thereby when said auditor may make such changes therein as he may deem right and proper; he shall enter upon a journal to be kept for that purpose the assessment as approved by him, and he shall place such assessment upon the duplicate against the land, upon which they are assessed, to be collected as other taxes; the work of cleaning out the ditch shall be advertised, sold, and let, and the contracts therefor performed, as provided in this chapter; the contractor shall be paid, by warrant of the county auditor upon the county treasurer, out of the assessments so made, and paid upon the certificates of said county surveyor, that he has performed his contract; but if at the presentation of any certificate all the assessments have not been paid, payments shall be made thereon pro rata." This section was amended April 22, 1904, by changing the latter part to read as follows: "The contractor shall be paid by warrant of the county auditor upon the county treasurer, out of any funds in the treasury applicable to such purpose. When the whole contract is completed the entire price may be paid in the manner aforesaid." 97 Ohio Laws, p. 262.

Section 3 is one of many comprising an act entitled "An Act to Provide for the Cleaning Out and Keeping in Repair of Public Ditches, Drains, and Water Courses, and to Repeal an Act passed April 13, 1900," and certain other sections. 94 Ohio Laws, p. 142. The purpose of the entire act, as its title indicates, is to regulate cleaning out and keeping in repair the ditches which have been established by county commissioners or township trustees, embracing the removal of obstructions and restoration and repair of flood gates. Surely it is within the police power of the general assembly to relating to the competency of the surveyor to make the assessment, and kindred questions. Markley v. Rudy, 115 Ind. 533, 18 N. E. 50.

Upon appeal by a landowner from an assessment for the repair of a public ditch by the county surveyor, under a statute limiting the questions to be tried on appeal to a determination of the cost of the repairs and what amount thereof should be assessed against the owner's land, it is proper to determine whether his land is subject to any assessment for such repairs; and, hence, the validity of such an assessment cannot be collaterally attacked on the ground that the land was not subject, under the statute, to any assessment. Kirkpatrick v. Taylor, 118 Ind. 329, 21 N. E. 20.

The question whether a county surveyor, acting within the scope of his authority in repairing a public ditch, adopted the best or cheapest plan for its performance, is not open to inquiry on appeal from an assessment made by him for the cost thereof; and, in the absence of statutory provision requiring him to advertise for bids, he may hire the work done by the day, if no fraud or collusion intervenes. Scott v. Stringley, 132 Ind. 378, 31 N. E. 953.

That provision in an act requiring county supervisors to keep public ditches in repair at public expense, and for an assessment on the lands affected in proportion to the original assessment thereon for the construction of the ditch, to reimburse the county treasury, which limits the questions to be tried upon appeal by an aggrieved landowner to a determination of the cost of the repairs and what amount of such cost should be assessed against such owners' land, is not in derogation of the constitutional rights of such owner to have his day in court. 69 L. R. A.

State ex rel. French v. Johnson, 105 Ind. 463, 5 N. E. 553.

The statement of the commissioners, in the certificate of levy, that a tax is for the purpose of repairing the drainage ditches, is not conclusive; but the courts may determine the question from the facts. People ex rel. Munsterman v. McDougal, 205 Ill. 636, 69 N. E. 95.

Equity will relieve a landowner from the payment of an assessment for the repair of a public ditch on the ground that the officer whose duty it was to make such repairs had exceeded his authority by enlarging the ditch beyond its original dimensions, and that the proceedings establishing a connecting ditch, which furnished an outlet for the repaired ditch, had been declared void, rendering the repaired ditch valueless and the repairs of no benefit, where such landowner had no knowledge, and was not charged by law with knowledge, of the worthlessness until after the expiration of the time to appeal from the assessment. Millikan v. Wall, 133 Ind. 51, 32 N. E. 828.

The court will not restrain the collection of an assessment on land for the repair of a ditch upon a ground for which adequate remedy is provided by appeal from the assessment. Goff v. McGee, 128 Ind. 394, 27 N. E. 754.

An injunction will not lie to restrain the collection of an assessment against a railroad right of way for the cost of repairing a public ditch by a county surveyor, who is invested with the statutory power to repair public ditches and to assess the cost thereof against the lands originally assessed for its construction, and from whose assessment the right of appeal is given, unless it is affirmatively shown that the acts of the surveyor are not merely erronedesignate certain officers of a county or township who may, in a prescribed mode, upon application and due notice to parties interested, restore our public drains and water courses to their original condition. Judicial authority is not essential, for all parties in interest were duly heard before the tribunal appointed by law when the original construction was ordered.

The petition charges that the section quoted violates § 19 of article 1 of the state Constitution, which, in part, reads: "Private property shall ever be held inviolate, but subservient to the public welfare, . . . and in all other cases where private property shall be taken for public use a compensation therefor shall first be made in money, or first secured by a deposit of money; and such compensation shall be assessed by a jury without deduction for benefits to any property of the owner." We are unable to see how the statute assailed conflicts with this fundamental law. The property occupied by the ditch was taken by its original construction when the parties along its line whose lands were taken had ample opportunity to obtain compensation; and if they applied for the same we must assume their applications were considered, and proper awards made. But the proceeding to clean out the original channel under § 3 does not seek or attempt to appropriate any lands of the defendants in error. Its sole purpose is to restore the water course to its former condition of usefulness. There is nothing for which the landowners are entitled to any compensation, for they part with nothing. The petition also alleges that the section is unconstitutional, "for the reason that no discretion is given to any officer, board, or tribunal to determine or decide whether the improvement . . . is for the public health, convenience, and welfare, but makes the duties to be performed under said act mandatory upon said auditor and surveyor." Again we think the section is misconstrued. When the ditch was established originally, it was alleged by the petition and determined by the commissioners that the ditch was necessary and its construction would be conducive to the public health, convenience, and welfare. We say this because the law required the petition to so allege and the commissioners to so find before the ditch could be legally established. The questions settled by the original proceedings imply that to subserve the public good the ditch should remain open and free from obstruction. Hence, the questions concerning the public health, convenience, and welfare have been once settled, and need not be reasserted in the new proceeding.

ous, but absolutely void and without any authority. Terre Haute & L. R. Co. v. Solce, 128 Ind. 105, 27 N. E. 429.

A railroad company cannot enjoin the collection of an assessment upon its right of way for the cost of repairing a public ditch upon the ground that the ditch, as originally established and constructed, was not rightfully located upon its right of way, and that no right existed to go upon such land for the purpose of making repairs: as that question cannot be brought up in a collateral attack,—especially where the company acquiesced in the location and construction of the ditch on its right of way. Davis v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 114 Ind. 364, 16 N. E. 639.

Liability for nonrepair.

The owner of land across which a drain passes onto adjoining land is liable if, by reason of the poor repair of the portion of the drain which crosses his premises, any of the sewage escapes and flows onto the adjoining land, even though he did not know of the existence of the drain; it being his duty to keep the sewage which he was himself bound to receive from passing from his own premises to the adjoining premises otherwise than through the drain. Humphries v. Cousins, L. R. 2 C. P. Div. 239.

The occupier, and not the owner, of premises is prima facie liable for injuries to adjoining lands arising from a failure to cleanse and repair drains and sewers located on the premises. Russell v. Shenton, 3 Q. B. 449.

A covenantor for the use of a public drainage canal cannot escape from his obligations thereunder, because of the omission of the other parties to repair the lower portion thereof; since his covenant points out the remedy for such misuser of their franchise. Norfleet v. Cromwell, 70 N. C. 634, 16 Am. Rep. 787.

One who contracts to construct part of a box drain which, after crossing the lands of his neighbor, enters his premises, is liable for damages arising from his failure to open an outlet below the drain to carry off the water, whereby work upon the drain is prevented. Britten v. Dunning, 55 Mich. 158, 20 N. W. 883.

Certification of cost.

The power conferred on county surveyors by a statute making it their duty to keep public ditches in repair, to certify the cost of such repairs as well as the amount of their own per diem to the county auditor, is not judicial, but merely a discretionary power, and such as the legislature has the power to confer upon administrative and ministerial officers. State ex rel. French v. Johnson, 105 Ind. 463, 5 N. E. 553.

Repeal of law.

A right to enforce the collection of the costs of repairs of a public ditch against lands, under the law existing at the time a contract therefor was entered into and part of the work done, is not lost by a repeal of that law, by virtue of a general law providing that repealed laws shall remain in force for the purpose of sustaining actions to enforce liabilities incurred thereunder, and also by the constitutional provision forbidding the passage of any law impairing the obligation of contracts. Crawford v. Hedrick, 9 Ind. App. 356, 36 N. E. 771.

H. P. F.

The petition also complains that, if the assessments made by the auditor become liens on the lands, and are enforced, the landowners will be deprived of their property without due process of law. While it is not cited by counsel or by the circuit court, we presume that § 16 of article 1 of our Bill of Rights was in contemplation when the proposition was made. It provides that "all courts shall be open, and every person, for an injury done him in his land, goods, person, or reputation, shall have remedy by due course of law; and justice administered without denial or delay." Section 3 of the act involved provides that when the sworn statement of the resident landowner is filed with the auditor he shall notify the county surveyor to examine the ditch, and for that purpose to go upon its line, and make an estimate of the amount of money required for the cleaning out, and fix the portion that each landowner who was assessed for the original construction of the ditch should be assessed for the improvement, which new assessment must be made according to the benefits. The surveyor must return the result of his examination and his estimate to the auditor, who shall appoint a day for the hearing of the report, of which due notice shall be given. The auditor is authorized on the hearing to make such changes in the assessment as he deems just, and, when corrected and confirmed, the assessment is placed on the duplicate. The work shall be advertised and publicly let. Notwithstanding the assertion of the defendants in error, we think the surveyor, if he finds upon his examination that the ditch does not need cleaning out, is authorized and would be expected to so report to the auditor, and that his judgment is not so fettered as counsel imagine that he must report in favor of an assessment. If on the hearing before the auditor the latter should find that cleaning out is not necessary, he may so declare, and act accordingly by refusing to place any assessment upon the property along the ditch. The statute is not so one-sided as counsel contend when it is fairly construed with relation to the subject-matter. The petition for the injunction alleges that on the day of hearing "said auditor heard all proof offered by the parties affected by the proposed cleaning out of said ditch, and found that the same [the assessments] were in all respects fair and just according to the benefits." We are of opinion that the legislature can constitutionally confer upon the surveyor and auditor the powers prescribed in § 3, and, according to many authorities, the exercise of such powers in accordance with the act is due process of law. However, the hearing and findings by 69 L. R. A.

the auditor are not conclusive upon the interested parties. It is true there is no provision in the section for appeal or prosecuting error, and, if the rights of the parties are concluded by the findings of the auditor, the property of defendants in error might be taken without due course or due process of law. But they are not so concluded. For cases arising under the general ditch laws we have § 4491, Rev. Stat. 1892, but it may not cover the special proceedings before us. But § 5848, Rev. Stat. 1892, which is a part of our Code of Civil Procedure, does apply, and furnishes an ample remedy to vindicate any right the landowner may have to urge against the assessment. This section provides: "Courts of common pleas and superior courts shall have jurisdiction to enjoin the illegal levy of taxes and assessments, or the collection of either, and of actions to recover back such taxes or assessments as have been collected, without regard to the amount thereof." This section furnishes due course or due process of law. Under its provisions the courts of the state are open for the redress of any wrongs that may be done by taxation or assessments. The defendants in error have availed themselves of this remedy in the very case before us.

In Alder v. Whitbeck, 44 Ohio St. 571, 9 N. E. 680, Minshall, J., after discussing authorities and the section of the Constitution we are considering, and also the 14th Amendment of the Federal Constitution, says: "By these decisions such laws may be in harmony with that amendment [the 14th], though they do not provide for giving a party an opportunity to be present when the tax is assessed against him, and to be there heard, if they give him the right to be heard afterward in a suit to enjoin the collection, in which both the validity of the tax and the amount of it may be contested; and it is immaterial to this question that the party to the suit is required, as in other injunction cases, to give security when instituting the suit." The learned judge cites McMillen v. Andreison, 95 U. S. 37, 24 L. ed. 335; Hagar v. Reclamation Dist. No. 108, 111 U. S. 701, 28 L. ed. 569, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 663; Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97, 24 L. ed. 616. To these we add Kilbourn v. Thompson, 103 U. S. 182, 26 L. ed. 384; Kelly v. Pittsburgh, 104 U. S. 79, 26 L. ed. 659. We cite State ex rel. Poe v. Jones, 51 Ohio St. 492-513, 37 N. E. 945. The latter case discusses and decides that § 5848 provides due course of law in cases of taxation and assessment.

In Hagar v. Reclamation Dist. No. 108, 111 U. S. 701, 28 L. ed. 569, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 663, it appears that the legislature of California passed an act establishing a general system for reclaiming swamps and overflowed, salt marsh, and tide lands in the state. The facts are fully stated in the opinion of the above case, and we do not repeat them here. Hagar, whose lands were about to be sold to pay his assessment for the drainage, contended that his property was being taken without due process of law, inasmuch as the assessment was made without opportunity to him to be heard respecting it: that it was made without notice to him; and that the reclaiming statute contained no provision for such notice or hearing, and it was therefore invalid. He claimed that notice and opportunity to be heard were essential to render any proceeding "due process of law," which may lead to the deprivation of life, liberty, or property. The opinion by Justice Field contains an able discussion of what constitutes "due process of law." On page 710, 111 U. S., page 572, 28 L. ed., page 668, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep., referring to the provision of the California statute for fixing the value of the lands by assessors appointed, in order to ascertain a just basis for assessment, the learned justice says: "The officers, in estimating the value, act judicially; and in most states provision is made for the correction of errors committed by them through boards of revision or equalization, sitting at designated periods provided by law to hear complaints respecting the justice of the assessments. The law in prescribing the time when such complaints will be heard gives all the notice required; and the proceeding by which the valuation is determined, though it may be followed, if the tax be not paid, by a sale of the delinquent's property is due process of law. In some states, instead of a board of revision or equalization, the assessment may be revised by proceedings in the courts, and be there corrected if erroneous, or set aside if invalid; or objections to the validity or amount of the assessment may be taken when the attempt is made to enforce it. In such cases all the opportunity is given to the taxpayer to be heard respecting the assessment which can be deemed essential to render the proceedings due process of law. In Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97, 24 L. ed. 616, this court decided this precise point." The entire opinion of Justice Field is valuable, and decisive of the question before us. Therefore we safely conclude that § 3 does not jeopardize the property rights of the landowners, and deprive them of due process of law. The section is intended as a summary method of restoring water courses, and the agents to accomplish it are certain county officers, whose functions are administrative in character, as is the case in very many other provisions for the assessment of property.

The judgment entry of the circuit court shows that § 3 was held to be unconstitutional, but it fails to point out the part of that instrument with which it is in conflict. Counsel for defendants in error attach to their brief a copy of the opinion rendered in the case which they say is reported in Ohio Law Bulletin of May 15, 1905 (Crawford v. Taylor, 27 Ohio C. C. 245). That court holds that § 3 is "unconstitutional because it unjustly discriminates between different applicants for such improvement with respect to costs." And near the close of the opinion it is said, in comparing § 3 with § 2 of the act, "This would appear to be unequal legislation, an unjust discrimination against the fair-minded citizen, and violative of the Bill of Rights." This attack on the law is very general, and therefore very indefinite. But a word about the comparison of the two sections is proper in this connection. Section 2 (p. 154) allows anyone who was assessed for the original construction of the ditch to apply to the commissioners for its cleaning out, and he is required to give bond for the payment of costs if the application is not granted. Section 3 authorizes any resident owner of land which was assessed for the construction of the ditch to make the sworn statement to the auditor of the necessity of the cleaning out, and he is not required to give bond. In comparison, why not say § 2 is invalid because it requires a bond while § 3 requires none? We presume that it is competent for the legislature to require such bonds in all cases, or not require them in any case. It may provide for bonds in certain proceedings and not require them in others. We know of no constitutional regulation or prohibition on the subject. It is altogether a matter of legislative discretion, and not a matter of constitutional law. To proceed under § 3 is a simple and less expensive method. Sections 1 and 19 of the same act provide for like summary action. Section 1 provides for the removal of obstructions, and § 19 (p. 161), for the repair and restoration of flood gates. In a proceeding to remove obstructions under § 1, no bond is required, while a proceeding under § 19 requires the giving of a bond. Both proceedings are of a summary nature, and the law is not invalid because a bond is required in one and not in the other.
69 L. R. A.

It is also urged against the law that it discriminates as between resident and non-resident landowners. Under § 3 the resident landowner only is authorized to make the sworn statement, while under § 2 and other sections of the general ditch law landowners, without regard to residence, may petition for the improvement. This distinction is considered by the circuit court as another unconstitutional discrimination.

If this view is sound, it unsettles many old statutes of this state, many of which have been in operation for more than half a century, and which have at one time or another been before the courts for construction and judgment. For more than half a century county roads have been established on petition of freeholders resident of the vicinity of the proposed road. County line roads have been established on the petition of the inhabitants along the line. Roads have been vacated on the petition of twelve freeholders residing in that part of the county. The law requires the petitions to be so signed. Petitions for free turnpikes and roads under the one-mile assessment act must be signed by resident freeholders, and remonstrances against the latter must be signed by the same class. It is useless to cite other statutes for public improvements that contain like discrimination in favor of residents of the state. It is not invidious in the eyes of the Constitution to classify owners of property into residents and non-residents. The policy of the legislature that first cares for our own citizens is not vicious, and, if it accords to residents of Ohio rights and privileges not conferred upon residents of another state, the general assembly is simply performing a duty peculiarly within its authority. We therefore have divorce laws requiring the applicant for divorce to be a bona fide resident of Ohio one year next before filing his or her petition. If a suitor is a nonresident, he may be required to give security for costs; and if one who has been a resident removes from the county or state while his action is pending he may be required to give security for costs. So with regard to our exemption laws. They are for the benefit of a certain class of our own citizens, and for the purpose of exemptions our own citizens are classified. The list of illustrations might be extended if necessary. One more will be sufficient. It is found in our attachment laws. Nonresidence of the state is made a ground for attachment, and that, too, without bond, while bond is required if the writ is asked on other grounds. The discrimination against nonresidents by such legislation was the subject of judicial determination in Central Loan & T. Co. v. Campbell Commission Co. 173 U. S. 84, 43 L. ed. 623, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 346. The fifth section of the syllabus reads: "That the territorial statute [Oklahoma] authorizing the issue of a writ of attachment against the property of a nonresident defendant is not repugnant to the 14th Amendment to the Constitution."

The language of Justice White, rendering the opinion, so well meets every contention made in this branch of our case, 69 L. R. A.

that we freely quote from it as follows: "The only remaining contention to be considered is the claim that the territorial statute authorizing the issue of an attachment against the property of a nonresident defendant in the case of an alleged fraudulent disposition of property is repugnant to the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and in conflict with the civil rights act. The law of the territory, it is said, in case of an attachment, for the cause stated, against a resident of the territory, requires the giving of a bond by the plaintiff in attachment as a condition for the issue of the writ, whilst it has been construed to make no such requirement in the case of an attachment against a nonresident. This, it is argued, is a discrimination against a nonresident, does not afford due process of law, and denies the equal protection of the laws. The elementary doctrine is not denied that, for the purposes of the remedy by attachment, the legislative authority of a state or territory may classify residents in one class and non-residents in another; but it is insisted that, where nonresidents' are not capable of separate identification from residents by any facts or circumstances other than that they are nonresidents,—that is, when the fact of nonresidence is their only distinguishing feature,—the laws of a state or territory cannot treat them to their prejudice upon that fact as a basis of classification.' When the exception thus stated is put in juxtaposition with the concession that there is such a difference between the residents of a state or territory and nonresidents as to justify their being placed into distinct classes for the purpose of the process of attachment, it becomes at once clear that the exception to the rule which the argument attempts to make is but a denial, by indirection, of the legislative power to classify which it is avowed the exception does not question. The argument, in substance, is that, where a bond is required as a prerequisite to the issue of an attachment against a resident, an unlawful discrimination is produced by permitting process of attachment against a nonresident without giving a like bond. But the difference between exacting a bond in the one case and not in the other is nothing like as great as that which arises from allowing processes of attachment against a nonresident and not permitting such process against a resident in any case. That the distinction between a resident and a nonresident is so broad as to authorize a classification in accordance with the suggestion just made is conceded, and, if it were not, is obvious. The reasoning, then, is that, although the difference between the two classes is adequate to support the allowance of the remedy in one case and its absolute denial in the other, yet, that the distinction between the two is not wide enough to justify allowing the remedy in both cases, but accompanying it in one instance by a more onerous prerequisite than is exacted in the other. The power, however, to grant in the one and deny in the other of necessity embraces the right, if it be allowed in both, to impose upon the one a condition not required in the other, for the lesser is necessarily contained in the greater power. The misconception consists in conceding, on the one hand, the power to classify residents and nonresidents for the purpose of the writ of attachment, and then from this concession to argue that the power does not exist, unless there be something in the cause of action for which the attachment is allowed to be issued which justifies the classification. As, however, the classification depends upon residence and nonresidence, and not upon the cause of action, the attempted distinction is without merit." It seems that the court was unanimous in the above opinion, and it deserves both our respect and confidence. The statute in question may be unwise and ill-designed, but its amendment or repeal is for the lawmaking power, and not for the courts.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is reversed, injunction dissolved, and the petition, with its amendments, is dismissed.

Davis, Ch. J., and Crew and Summers, JJ., concur.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

COMMONWEALTH of Massachusetts
v.

BOSTON ADVERTISING COMPANY.

(188 Mass. 348.)

Forbidding the use of land near a park or park way for advertising purposes amounts to a taking of it for public use, for which compensation must be made.

(June 20, 1905.)

REPORT by the Superior Court for Suffolk County for the opinion of the Supreme Judicial Court after verdict in plaintiff's favor in a proceeding against defendant for violation of the rules and regulations of the park commission against the maintenance of advertising signs. Judgment for defendant.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Joseph H. Soliday, for defendant:

Depriving an owner of property of any profitable use of that property is a "taking" or "appropriation," and clearly within the constitutional prohibition.

Old Colony & F. River R. Co. v. Plymouth County, 14 Gray, 155; Edwards v. Bruorton, 184 Mass. 529, 69 N. E. 328;

NOTE.—For a case in this series holding that the restriction of the height of buildings adjacent to a park, when made for the benefit of the public by promoting the beauty and attractiveness of the park, justifies the expenditure of public money to pay compensation for property rights thereby injured, see Knowlton v. Williams, 47 L. R. A. 314.

As to validity of regulation of use of bill-
69 L. R. A.

Forster v. Scott, 136 N. Y. 583, 18 L. R. A. 543, 32 N. E. 976; Atty. Gen. v. Williams (Knowlton v. Williams) 174 Mass. 476, 47 L. R. A. 314, 55 N. E. 77; People v. Green, 85 App. Div. 400, 83 N. Y. Supp. 460; Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 50 Am. Rep. 636; People ex rel. Manhattan Sav. Inst. v. Otis, 90 N. Y. 48; Sawyer v. Davis, 136 Mass. 239, 49 Am. Rep. 27; Train v. Boston Disinfecting Co. 144 Mass. 523, 59 Am. Rep. 113, 11 N. E. 929.

Mr. M. J. Sughrue, for the Commonwealth:

Penal statutes, though to be construed strictly as a general rule, yet are to receive such a construction as will conform to the intention of the legislature.

Com. v. Loring, 8 Pick. 370.

The plain intent of the act in question is to prevent or control the intrusion of obnoxious signs upon the sight of the public engaged in the enjoyment of the natural beauties of a park. It is a question of law for the court whether any given sign is "near" within the meaning of the statute.

Fall River Iron Works Co. v. Old Colony & F. River R. Co. 5 Allen, 221; Boston & P. R. Corp. v. Midland R. Co. 1 Gray, 340.

Under the power to regulate, the require-boards for advertising purposes, see, in this series, Crawford v. Topeka, 20 L. R. A. 692, and Chicago v. Gunning System, 70 L. R. A. —

As to forbidding circulation of advertising matter in streets, see People v. Armstrong, 2 L. R. A. 721.

As to prohibiting casting of circulars, hand bills, etc., into vestibules of dwellings, see Philadelphia v. Brabender, 58 L. R. A. 220.

ment to obtain a permit or license is free from legal objections.

Com. v. Plaisted, 148 Mass. 375, 2 L. R. A. 142, 12 Am. St. Rep. 566, 19 N. E. 224; Com. v. Ellis, 158 Mass. 555, 33 N. E. 651; Re Vandine, 6 Pick. 187, 17 Am. Dec. 351; Re Nightingale, 11 Pick. 168.

The rule regulates the use of the property, which is a proper exercise of police power.

Com. v. Roberts, 155 Mass. 231, 16 L. R. A. 400, 26 N. E. 522; Rideout v. Knox, 148 Mass. 368, 2 L. R. A. 81, 12 Am. St. Rep. 560, 19 N. E. 390.

Public parks are created and maintained at great public expense to contribute to the health and pleasure of the community; and any rule reasonably tending to promote public health, or to beautify public grounds, is a reasonable exercise of the power delegated to a board of park commissioners.

Rochester v. West, 164 N. Y. 510, 53 L. R. A. 548, 79 Am. St. Rep. 659, 58 N. E. 673; Com. v. McCafferty, 145 Mass. 384, 14 N. E. 451; Re Wilshire, 103 Fed. 620; Gunning System v. Buffalo, 75 App. Div. 31, 77 N. Y. Supp. 987.

Any use of private property which materially interferes with the public comfort, except in those cases where the reasonable requirements of the owner afford him justification or excuse, is a nuisance.

Davis v. Sawyer, 133 Mass. 289, 43 Am. Rep. 519; Com. v. Harris, 101 Mass. 29; Com. v. Perry, 139 Mass. 198, 29 N. E. 656.

An advertisement upon private land anywhere may be a public nuisance.

The legislature may very appropriately recognize and deal with the effect upon people in general of unrestrained scenic advertising, and take measures for its proper repression.

Train v. Boston Disinfecting Co. 144 Mass. 523, 59 Am. Rep. 113, 11 N. E. 929; Langmaid v. Reed, 159 Mass. 400, 34 N. E. 593; Newton v. Joyce, 166 Mass. 83, 55 Am. St. Rep. 385, 44 N. E. 116.

Persons whose property is affected by such restrictions have no right to compensation, because one of the incidents to property is a condition that it shall not be so used as unreasonably to impair the interest of the community.

Com. v. Gilbert, 160 Mass. 157, 22 L. R. A. 439, 35 N. E. 454; Ex parte Casinello, 62 Cal. 538; Re Flaherty, 105 Cal. 558, 27 L. R. A. 529, 38 Pac. 981; Moses v. United States, 16 App. D. C. 428, 50 L. R. A. 532; Com. v. Parks, 155 Mass. 531, 30 N. E. 174; Com. v. Colton, 8 Gray, 488.

There is no vested right in individuals to be exempt from police regulations.

Re Wilshire, 103 Fed. 620; Rochester v. West, 164 N. Y. 510, 53 L. R. A. 548, 79 69 L. R. A.

Am. St. Rep. 659, 58 N. E. 673; Gunning System v. Buffalo, 75 App. Div. 31, 77 N. Y. Supp. 987; Atty. Gen. v. Williams (Knowlton v. Williams) 174 Mass. 476, 47 L. R. A. 314, 55 N. E. 77.

The legislature may delegate to board power to make rules, and provide that they may be enforced by suitable penalties.

Broadbent v. Revere, 182 Mass. 598, 66 N. E. 607; Opinion of Justices, 138 Mass. 601.

A person who has a contract for advertising, which this enactment makes illegal, has no more sacred right to be immune from such regulations than the one who owns the property upon which the contract was to be performed.

Salem v. Maynes, 123 Mass. 372; Hughes v. Wamsutta Mills, 11 Allen, 201; Com. v. Overby, 80 Ky. 208, 44 Am. Rep. 471; Baily v. De Crespigny, L. R. 4 Q. B. 180.

Barker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The complaint upon which the defendant was found guilty was for a violation of the rules and regulations made by the metropolitan park commission under Stat. 1903, chap. 158, p. 121. The act charged was maintaining a business sign on land near enough to the Revere Beach Park Way to render the words of the sign plainly visible to the naked eye of persons in the park way. It appears that the sign was an advertisement of a household utensil. The signboard was 40 feet in width and 7½ feet high with black letters on an orange ground. The capital letters were 3 feet 3½ inches high and 2 feet 10 inches wide. It is not contended that the sign was indecent or immoral, or of a nature to frighten man or beast, or in any way to cause bodily injury by falling or being blown against persons or vehicles using the way. The defendant is in the advertising business. It had purchased from the owner of the land the right to maintain the sign until October 1, 1905, and had been paid to keep up the advertisement until December 30, 1904. Its contract with the owner of the land began on October 29, 1903, and its contract to maintain the sign was made in September, 1903. The park way was established in 1899. The rule or regulation charged to have been broken by maintaining the sign was established on August 20, 1903. The same sign had been in the same location before the establishment of the park way, and ever since. The rule or regulation forbids the erection, maintaining, or display upon any land or the outside of any building of any commercial or business sign, poster, or advertisement within such distance of any public park or park way in care of the commission as shall render the words, figures, or devices of the sign, poster, or advertisement plainly visible to the naked eye within the park or park way, without the written permission of the commission; save that the rule is not to be construed to prevent the owner or occupant of land, building, or tenement from displaying or maintaining thereon one sign or advertisement for business or commercial purposes, in size not larger than 15 inches by 20 feet, and relating exclusively to the property on which it may be placed, or to the business thereon conducted, or to the person conducting the same. The statute provides that the commission, and also the officers having charge of public parks and park ways, "may make such reasonable rules and regulations respecting the display of signs, posters, or advertisements in or near to and visible from public parks and park ways intrusted to their care, as they may deem necessary for preserving the objects for which such parks and park ways are established and maintained." Stat. 1903, chap. 158, § 1, p. 121. The counsel for the prosecution asserts that public parks and park ways are created and maintained to contribute to the health and pleasure of the community. It has been said that they "are established for the use and enjoyment of the people while seeking pleasure and recreation as well as at other times." No doubt the principal and controlling object for which public parks and park ways are established is that of pleasure. They are distinctively and chiefly pleasure grounds. So far as they incidentally serve to promote health by affording the means of being in the open air and the sunlight, or of taking healthful exercise, the presence or absence of signs upon the neighboring lands is immaterial. We think, therefore, that the well-being of the ordinary person who uses a public park or park way can never be so far affected by the visibility of signs, posters, or advertisements placed on other ground as to injure his health. No doubt their presence there may hide from him fine views, or may turn into a disagreeable ensemble what otherwise would be a pleasing outlook, or the sign or poster or advertisement may be itself ugly, or, if not so, may be displeasing because of incongruity. At most, the presence of signs, posters, and advertisements upon lands or buildings near a public park or park way is an offense against good taste, and in that way alone detracts from the pleasure only of the frequenters of such places. We agree that the promotion of the pleasure of the people is a public purpose, for which public money may be used and taxes laid, even if the pleasure is secured merely by delighting one of the senses. Higginson v. Nahant, 11 60 L. R. A.

Allen, 530; Hubbard v. Taunton, 140 Mass. 467, 5 N. E. 157; Atty. Gen. v. Williams (Knourlton v. Williams) 174 Mass. 470, 479, 480, 47 L. R. A. 314, 55 N. E. 77. The question here is not of the power of the state to expend money, or to lay taxes to promote esthetic ends, or to regulate the use of property with a view to promote such ends. It is of the right of the state by such regulations to deprive the owner of property of a natural use of that property without giving compensation for the resulting loss to the owner. Probably no one would care at present to deny that without compensation "the possession and enjoyment of all rights are subject to such reasonable conditions as may be deemed by the governing authority of the country essential to the safety, health, peace, good order, and morals of the community." Field, J., in Crowley v. Christensen, 137 U. S. 86, 89, 34 L. ed. 620, 622, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 13. Beyond the purposes named, there are many others of a public nature, the promotion of which may involve the taking or damaging of the property of individuals, and as to which there well may be differences of opinion as to whether the state must afford compensation if such loss or damage is inflicted. One of them is the education of youth. Probably all will agree that, judged by any fair standard, the promotion of education stands upon a higher plane than the promotion of esthetic culture or enjoyment, and would the better justify the imposition of a burden without compensation. But no one would contend that the state could authorize the taking of land for a schoolhouse without providing compensation for the owner. In a very recent case this court, in dealing with a statute requiring street railway companies to transport school children at reduced rates of fare, has held that, if it appeared that the enforcement of the act would cause expense which the carrier must bear or put upon other patrons, we should be obliged to hold that there was a taking of property without due process of law. Com. v. Interstate Consol. Street R. Co. 187 Mass. 436, 73 N. E. 530. If the police power, technically so called, will not justify a taking of property without compensation to promote the education of youth, it cannot justify such a taking for the promotion of merely esthetic purposes. Therefore, if the rules of the commission amount to a taking of property, as no compensation is provided, they cannot be held valid. The plain and intended purpose of the rule is to prohibit the use of land near public parks and park ways for advertising. This has come to be an ordinary and remunerative use of lands near largely traveled streets, park ways, public parks, railroads, and other places frequented in numbers by the public. It is as natural a use of such lands as is the use of store fronts and show windows for the display of goods kept for sale, or for other modes of advertising. It resembles the placing of advertising pages on each side of the literary portion of a periodical, or the placing in street cars or railway stations of advertisements disconnected with the business of transportation. All these at present are usual, common, and profitable uses of property of which everyone sees daily numerous instances. In the opinion of a majority of the court the rules or regulations established by the commission so interfere with the use of property as to amount to a taking of property for public use, and, as no compensation is provided for, the rules are void, because obnoxious to the provisions of our Constitution. Declaration of Rights, art. 10. They are not reasonable within the meaning of Stat. 1903, chap. 158, § 1, p. 121. We do not hold that no valid rules as to signs, posters, or advertisements on land near to public parks or park ways can be made under Stat. 1903, chap. 158, p. 121. Rules intended to prohibit advertisements of indecent or immoral tendencies, or signs dangerous to the physical safety of the public, no doubt would be reasonable within the meaning of the statute, and valid. We think the case of Rochester v. West, 164 N. Y. 510, 53 L. R. A. 548, 79 Am. St. Rep. 659, 58 N. E. 673, was decided, and can rest only on this ground. See Gunning System v. Buffalo, 75 App. Div. 31, 77 N. Y. Supp. 987; People v. Green, 85 App. Div. 400, 83 N. Y. Supp. 460.

Verdict set aside. Judgment to be entered for the defendant.

Hannah A. WADE, Appt.,

v.

Katherine MILLER.

(188 Mass. 6.)

The characteristic noises and odors

NOTE.—For a case in this series holding that the noise made by hogs kept for the purpose of slaughter is not such a nuisance as to justify the destruction of a slaughter-house business, see Baillentine v. Webb, 13 L. R. A. 321.

As to right to damages or injunction because of discomfort caused by noises generally, see Gainesville, H. & W. R. Co. v. Hall, 9 L. R. A. 298; Wylie v. Elwood, 9 L. R. A. 726; Powell v. Bentley & G. Furniture Co. 12 L. R. A. 53, and note; Jones v. Erie & W. Valley R. Co. 17 L. R. A. 758; Austin v. Augusta Terminal R. Co. 47 L. R. A. 755; Chicago G. W. R. Co. v. First M. E. Church, 50 L. R. A. 488; Hill v. 60 L. R. A.

issuing from a chicken house and yard which are maintained in a cleanly manner and cared for so as not injuriously to affect the health of any normal person in the neighborhood are not a nuisance, although they may make neighboring property uncomfortable as a residence for invalids.

(April 4, 1905.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Plymouth County in favor of the defendant in an action brought to enjoin the maintenance of an alleged nuisance. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Daniel T. Devoll for appellant.

Mr. C. A. McLellan for appellee.

Braley, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a bill in equity to enjoin the defendant from maintaining an alleged nuisance, that, by reason of its nature and proximity, impaired the rental value of the plaintiff's property. The case was referred to a master, to whose report no exceptions were taken, and upon whose findings of fact a decree was entered in the superior court confirming the report and dismissing the bill, from which the plaintiff appealed to this court.

From the report it appears that the parties own and occupy contiguous estates situated in the principal village of the town of Bridgewater. There were two dwelling houses on the plaintiff's land, one of which she occupied, and rented the other, that was nearest to the homestead of the defendant, who maintained two henhouses, and yard connected therewith, in which a number of hens and not more than two roosters were kept. The plaintiff's claim is that the odor from the houses and yard occasionally became so pungent that, combined with the cackling of hens and crowing of roosters, the house occupied by her tenant was rendered uncomfortable as a place of residence. It is found that the tenant and members of his family—especially his wife, who was a nervous invalid—complained that they were disturbed and annoyed by the odor and noise thus caused, though the plaintiff herself, living in a house within a distance of 45 feet therefrom, was not disagreeably affected to an appreciable extent.

McBurney Oil & Fertilizer Co. 52 L. R. A. 398; Louisville & N. Terminal Co. v. Jacobs, 61 L. R. A. 188; Froelicher v. Oswald Iron Works, 64 L. R. A. 228; and Redd v. Edna Cotton Mills, 67 L. R. A. 983.

For odors or gases as nuisance generally, see Bohan v. Port Jervis Gaslight Co. 9 L. R. A. 711, and note; Susquehanna Fertilizer Co. v. Malone, 9 L. R. A. 737; Robb v. Carnegie Bros. & Co. 14 L. R. A. 329; Fogarty v. Junction City Pressed Brick Co. 18 L. R. A. 756; Boston Ferule Co. v. Hills, 20 L. R. A. 844; Frost v. Berkeley Phosphate Co. 26 L. R. A. 693; and Swift v. Broyles, 58 L. R. A. 390.

Where the question of a private nuisance is raised, the result produced by it upon persons of ordinary health and sensitiveness, rather than upon those afflicted with disease or abnormal physical conditions, is to be taken as the criterion.

In the lawful use of property, how far an annoyance may be caused to other persons, without becoming a nuisance, becomes a question of degree. For what may amount to a serious injury to health or the enjoyment of property in one locality, by reason of density of population, or the residential character of the neighborhood affected, or the nature of the specific act, may in another place, and under different surroundings, be deemed proper and unobjectionable. But in any case, if it is sought to prevent by injunction the further continuance of any legitimate business or employment which it is claimed constitutes a nuisance, a real, and not a fanciful, injury to person or property must be shown. Davis v. Sawyer, 133 Mass. 289, 290, 291, 43 Am. Rep. 519; Com. v. Perry, 139 Mass. 198, 29 N. E. 656; Com. v. Packard, 185 Mass. 64, 66, 69 N. E. 1067.

The defendant had a right to the lawful use and enjoyment of her premises, and this would include the keeping of hens in houses, and a yard used for that purpose, which are shown by the report to have been maintained in a cleanly condition, and cared for in such a manner as not to injuriously affect the health of any normal person living in that neighborhood. Although, the odor arising from the henhouses and yard, which at times was accompanied by the characteristic cry made by their occupants, may have been unpleasant, it does not appear by the report to have been physically uncomfortable or unbearable. Indeed, the findings of fact fail to show that the conditions existing on the premises of the defendant were abnormal, or differed substantially from those usually found in the country, where the ordinary incidents arising from keeping barnyard fowls are not considered extraordinary or peculiarly irritating, even to sensitive persons. Rogers v. Elliott, 146 Mass. 349, 353, 4 Am. St. Rep. 316, 15 N. E. 768; Downing v. Elliott, 182 Mass. 28, 29, 64 N. E. 201.

Decree affirmed.
69 L. R. A.

BUSELL TRIMMER COMPANY

v.

Charles F. COBURN.

(188 Mass. 254.)

1. A covenant by a purchaser of the business and effects of a corporation, the sale of which is intended to terminate its existence, to indemnify it from and against the contracts and engagements to which the said vendor appears to be now liable, and also all claims and demands on account of the same contracts and engagements, does not cover a claim by the president-manager of the corporation to salary for the time subsequently accruing, where it was founded merely on the fact that he had been elected president, and there was no contract that the services and salary should continue for any specified time.
2. Electing one president of a corporation, and appointing him manager, do not entitle him to a salary for any specified time.
3. To entitle an employee to damages against his employer for breach of the contract by disposing of all his property so that no more services could be rendered, he must show that he has not been able to earn an equal amount elsewhere.
4. A judgment against a debtor is not binding on one who has contracted to save him harmless from the debt, unless he has been notified to come in and defend.

(May 19, 1905.)

EXCEPTIONS by plaintiff to rulings of the Superior Court for Suffolk County, made during the trial of an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due under an indemnity contract. Overruled.

The stockholders of the plaintiff company desired to close up its business and liquidate the company, and authorized a majority of the directors to do so. The majority directors arranged for a transfer of all the assets of the company to defendant, and he executed a contract the material parts of which appear in the opinion.

Mr. Richard D. Ware, for plaintiff:

Payment of a judgment by default or consent is sufficient to warrant a recovery under an indemnity contract.

Oremer v. Stephenson, 15 Md. 211; Given v. Driggs, 1 Caines, 450; Train v. Gold, 5 Pick. 380.

The judgment was presumptive evidence of the company's liability, and should have been admitted.

NOTE.—As to liability of consolidated corporation for debts of predecessor, see, in this series, Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Boney, 3 L. R. A. 435, and note; Chicago & I. Coal B. Co. v. Hall, 23 L. R. A. 231, and note.

Smith v. Burton, 94 Va. 158, 26 S. E. 412.

The use of the word "claims" gives the contract the broadest scope; and an indemnity contract against "claims" embraces any claims, whether valid or otherwise, which may subject the party indemnified to costs, delay, or expense.

Home Ins. Co. v. Watson, 59 N. Y. 390; Niagara Falls Paper Co. v. Lee, 20 App. Div. 217, 47 N. Y. Supp. 1; Wood v. Lindley, 12 Ind. App. 258, 40 N. E. 283.

Mr. W. C. Cogswell, for defendant:

No evidence has been introduced sufficient to establish a contract between Knight and plaintiff for a year's service.

Tatterson v. Suffolk Mfg. Co. 106 Mass. 156; Sears v. Kings County Elev. R. Co. 152 Mass. 151, 9 L. R. A. 117, 25 N. E. 98; Davis v. Ames Mfg. Co. 177 Mass. 54, 58 N. E. 280.

The testimony offered and excluded was strictly res inter alios, and was not admissible against this defendant on the measure of damages.

Haskins v. Warren, 115 Mass. 514; Fowle v. Child, 104 Mass. 210, 49 Am. St. Rep. 451, 41 N. E. 291; Fitchburg R. Co. v. Freeman, 12 Gray, 401, 74 Am. Dec. 600; Parker v. Kenyon, 112 Mass. 264; Cutter v. Gillette, 163 Mass. 95, 39 N. E. 1010; Olds v. Mapes-Reeve Constr. Co. 177 Mass. 41, 58 N. E. 478.

The sale to Coburn did not affect the corporate existence of plaintiff, the tenure of office or duties of its officers, or the powers and right of the company to continue in business. Assuming that the election of Knight as president and manager would warrant a finding of a contract for a year, such contract was personal in its nature, involving powers and duties not capable of assignment or controllable by an assignee.

Boston Ice Co. v. Potter, 123 Mass. 28, 25 Am. Rep. 9; Arkansas Valley Smelting Co. v. Beldin Min. Co. 127 U. S. 379, 32 L. ed. 246, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1308; Robson v. Drummond, 2 Barn. & Ad. 303; British Waggon Co. v. Lea, L. R. 5 Q. B. Div. 149.

Lathrop, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The contract in question is dated August 4, 1900. In it the plaintiff is called the "vendor," and the defendant the "purchaser." By the terms of the contract the vendor assigned to the purchaser "all of the machinery, stock in trade, fixtures, and effects pertaining to its business, and also all the books and other debts now due and owing to the said vendor, and also all contracts, benefits, and advantages which have been entered into by the said vendor, or to which it is or can be entitled." The purchaser covenanted with the vendor "that he will at all times hereafter save harmless, and keep indemnified, the said vendor from and against all losses, costs, expenses, and damages which may be incurred by reason of any action which shall or may be brought or instituted against the said purchaser, . . . for, or in respect of, the said machinery, stock in trade, effects, and premises, or for or in respect of the recovery of the several sums of money which by its books appear to be due and owing from the said vendor in respect of the said trade or business; and also from and against the contracts and engagements to which the said vendor appears to be now liable; and also all interest, costs, expenses, losses, claims, and demands on account of the same debts, contracts, and engagements respectively or otherwise in relation to the premises."

It appeared in evidence that at the time of the signing of the contract Knight was president of the company, and had been connected with it about fifteen years as manager and president. On June 4, 1900, the directors of the plaintiff company elected its officers for the ensuing year, and among them Knight, as president and manager. There was evidence also that Knight sold the manufactures of the company, handled the money, paid the men, looked after the factory, and attended to the entire business; and, further, that at the time of the transfer Knight was receiving a salary of $2,000 a year. The plaintiff offered to show that upon November 20, 1900, Knight brought an action against the plaintiff for salary alleged to have accrued to him after the transfer, for the months of August, September, October, and part of November, at the rate of $110.67 per month. The company did not defend the action, and Knight recovered judgment, which judgment was paid by the company. The plaintiff further offered to show that in March, 1901, a further sum was paid by the company to Knight in satisfaction of a claim he made against the company for the balance of the year for which he contended that his contract continued. The judge excluded this evidence of payments, and the plaintiff excepted.

We are of opinion that the ruling was right. The contract before us transferred to the defendant the machinery, stock in trade, fixtures, and book debts. It does not appear that Knight rendered any service to the defendant, or that he was expected to do so. Nothing was due to him from the plaintiff when the transfer was made. The contention of the plaintiff is that the liability of the defendant arises under the last clause of the contract, "and also all interest, costs, expenses, losses, claims, and demands on account of the same debts, contracts, and engagements." The president of a corporation, as an officer, is not ipso facto entitled to a salary or to a compensation, and, so far as any inference is to be drawn in regard to it, the inference is that the salary was paid to him as manager, and not as president. The plaintiff disposed of all of its property at the date of the contract, and after that, so far as appears, had nothing to manage. There is nothing to show that the plaintiff was not at liberty to sell its property and wind up its business at any time. Electing a man to an office is not ordinarily to make a contract with him for a stated time. There is nothing to show that the corporation agreed with Knight to continue to carry on business through a year, or to retain him under a salary as manager after it ceased to have anything to manage. The evidence did not go far enough.

There is also another ground which is conclusive against the plaintiff. Even if the plaintiff made a contract with Knight, which it broke by the sale of its property, so that it would be liable to him for such breach, the measure of damages would not be the salary promised, but would be the difference between the salary and what he could have earned in some other occupation. See 1 Sedgw. Damages, 8th ed. §§ 206-208; Mayne, Damages, 7th ed. 244, 245. The plaintiff put in no evidence on this point, and there is nothing to show that Knight did not earn more in some other occupation.

The judgment in the action brought by Knight against the plaintiff was not binding on the defendant, in the absence of a notice to come in and defend. No such notice having been given, it stood merely as a payment; and to make it material the plaintiff had to prove that it was rightly made. Until the plaintiff proved that Knight tried to get other employment and entirely failed, there was no proof that either payment made to Knight of his full salary was rightfully made, and payment of such salary without such proof was immaterial as against the defendant, and was rightly excluded.

Exceptions overruled.

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

S. G. DREYFUS et al., Appts.,

v.

S. J. ROBERTS.

(.....Ark.....)

The payment of less than is due will discharge the debt when an agreement to that effect is fully executed, and the discharge is evidenced by a written receipt for the lesser sum in full satisfaction of the greater one.

(Battle and McCulloch, JJ., dissent.)

(May 13, 1905.)

APPPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Lafayette County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to quash an execution. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Scott & Head and Searcy & Parks, for appellants:

Where the debt is certain and due, payment of a less sum, is not satisfaction.

Bunge v. Koop, 48 N. Y. 224, 8 Am. Rep. 546; Bliss v. Shwarts, 65 N. Y. 444; Ness v. Minnesota & C. Co. 87 Minn. 413, 92 N. W. 333; Goodwin v. Follett, 25 Vt. 386; Harriman v. Harriman, 12 Gray, 341; Curtiss v. Martin, 20 Ill. 557; Jones v. Ricketts, 7 Md. 108; Murphy v. Kastner, 50 N. J.

Eq. 214, 24 Atl. 564; Eve v. Mosely, 2 Strobb. L. 203; Ryan v. Ward, 48 N. Y. 204, 8 Am. Rep. 539; Deland v. Hiett, 27 Cal. 611, 87 Am. Dec. 102; Weber v. Couch, 134 Mass. 26, 45 Am. Rep. 274.

The giving of a receipt in full does not in any way affect the rule.

St. Louis, Ft. S. & W. R. Co. v. Davis, 35 Kan. 464, 11 Pac. 421; Walan v. Kerby, 99 Mass. 1; Brooks v. White, 2 Met. 283, 37 Am. Dec. 95; Riley v. Kershaw, 52 Mo. 224; Murphy v. Kastner, 50 N. J. Eq. 214, 24 Atl. 564; Fuller v. Kemp, 138 N. Y. 231, 20 L. R. A. 785, 33 N. E. 1034; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Clark, 35 C. C. A. 120, 92 Fed. 988; Reynolds v. Reynolds, 55 Ark. 374, 18 S. W. 377; Hunter v. Moul, 98 Pa. 13, 42 Am. Rep. 610; Darnall v. Morehouse, 36 How. Pr. 511; Bunge v. Koop, 48 N. Y. 225, 8 Am. Rep. 546.

Mr. Robert L. Rogers, Attorney General, for appellee.

Hill, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In 1896 Dreyfus & Company obtained a judgment against Roberts for $1,021 and interest. In 1900 Dreyfus turned the debt evidenced by this judgment to a collection agency for collection, with authority to compromise. The collection agency proposed to Roberts to accept $200 in cash, if at once remitted, in full discharge of the whole debt. Roberts was living in Lafayette county, Arkansas. He was unable to raise the money, and applied to his mother to assist him. She did not have the money, but had credit, and borrowed $200 from a gentleman in Texarkana, who drew a check on a bank in Texarkana, Texas. This check, after proper indorsements, was accepted by the collection agency in Chicago as a full acquittance of the debt, and it executed a receipt in full, and promised to have the judgment record satisfied; but, instead of this being done, Dreyfus caused execution to issue on the judgment. This action started in chancery, and was transferred to the circuit court as a proceeding to quash the execution on the ground that the judgment had been paid.

NOTE.—For other cases in this series as to accord and satisfaction by part payment of debt, see McKenzie v. Harrison, 8 L. R. A. 257; Jaffray v. Davis, 11 L. R. A. 710, and cases in note thereto; Fuller v. Kemp, 20 L. R. A. 785, 69 L. R. A.

and note; Tanner v. Merrill, 31 L. R. A. 171; Clayton v. Clark, 37 L. R. A. 771; Chicora Fertilizer Co. v. Dunan, 50 L. R. A. 401; Harrison v. Henderson, 62 L. R. A. 760; Engbretson v. Selberling, 64 L. R. A. 75.

The receipt in this case was as follows:

Dear Sir:—

We have your communication with enclosure as stated [which was the $200 check] and you may consider this a receipt and satisfaction in full of the account of S. G. Dreyfus & Co. vs. yourself for $1,621.00. We will immediately have judgment satisfied as per your request.

Very truly yours,

Sprague's Collecting Agency, per Frank M. Utt,
General Attorney.

In 1602 Lord Coke, speaking for the court of common pleas, said: "Pinnel brought an action of debt on a bond against Cole, of £16 for the payment of £8 10s. the 11th day of November, 1600. The defendant pleaded, that he, at the instance of the plaintiff, before the said day, scil., 1 Octob. Anno 44, Apud W. solvit querenti £5 2s. 2d., quas quidem £5 2s. 2d., the plaintiff accepted in full satisfaction of the £8 10s. And it was resolved by the whole court, that the payment of a lesser sum on the day in satisfaction of a greater cannot be any satisfaction for the whole, because it appears to the judges that by no possibility, a lesser sum can be a satisfaction to the plaintiff for a greater sum. But the gift of a horse, hawk, or robe, etc., in satisfaction is good; for it shall be intended that a horse, hawk, or robe, etc., might be more beneficial to the plaintiff than the money, in respect of some circumstance, or otherwise the plaintiff would not have accepted of it in satisfaction. But when the whole sum is due, by no intentment the acceptance of parcel can be satisfaction to the plaintiff. But in the case at bar it was resolved that the payment and acceptance of parcel before the day in satisfaction of the whole, would be a good satisfaction in regard of circumstance of time; for peradventure parcel of it before the day would be more beneficial to him than the whole at the day, and the value of the satisfaction is not material." Pinnel's Case, 5 Coke, 117a. It will be noted that the doctrine that the acceptance of a lesser sum for the whole on or after due is not valid satisfaction of the whole, was obiter dictum in this case; but this dictum of this great lawyer and jurist established the doctrine at common law that there must be some other consideration, however trivial, than cash, to make a payment of a lesser sum binding as a satisfaction of the whole, notwithstanding the solemn agreement of the parties to that effect. Sir Frederick Pollock thus states the case: "It is enough to say that English common law stands committed to the absurd paradox that a debt of £100 may be perfectly well discharged by the creditor's acceptance of a peppercorn at the same time and place at which the £100 are payable, or of 10 shillings at an earlier day or at another place; but that nothing less than a release under seal will make his acceptance of £99 in money at the same time and place a good discharge, although modern decisions have confined this absurdity within the narrowest possible limits." Pollock's Principles of Contract, 1st Am. from 2d Eng. ed. 165. In 1884 the Lord Chancellor, the Earl of Selborne, delivering the opinion of the judges in the House of Lords, said: "It might be, and, indeed, I think it would be, an improvement in our law, if a release or acquittance of the whole debt, on payment of any sum which the creditor might be content to receive by way of accord and satisfaction (though less than the whole), were held to be, generally, binding, though not under seal." Foakes v. Beer, L. R. 9 App. Cas. 605. Thus it is seen that after three hundred years' experience in England, the highest court of the realm says the law would be improved by not following Lord Coke's dictum in the Pinnel Case. The Pinnel Case came to the Colonies, and then the Union, as part and parcel of the common law, and has generally been adhered to, though with growing reluctance and generally with criticism. In view of the expressions of the courts on the subject, it may be safely conjectured that, if presented as an original proposition to the American judiciary, it would find little, if any, support. The editors of a current encyclopædia of the law say of the rule in question: "This doctrine has been freely criticized in most of the courts which have had occasion to consider it." 1 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 321. Notwithstanding these criticisms, except when changed by statutes the courts most generally adhere to it. Id. p. 319, and cases in notes; 1 Am. & Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 413, and notes. While adhering to the rule, the courts will not extend it "beyond its precise import," and will not inquire into the adequacy of the supporting consideration. Hastings v. Lovejoy, 140 Mass. 261, 54 Am. Rep. 462, 2 N. E. 776. The court of appeals of New York, in following the rule, said: "This rule has been criticized as unsound and unjust in cases where the lesser sum is accepted in full satisfaction of the greater. [Citing cases.]" McKenzie v. Harrison, 120 N. Y. 260, 8 L. R. A. 257, 17 Am. St. Rep. 638, 24 N. E. 458. That same distinguished court said later: "The steadfast adhesion to this doctrine by the courts, in spite of the current of condemnation by the individual judges of the court, and in the face of the demands and conveniences of a much greater business, and more extensive mercantile dealings and operations, demonstrates the force of the doctrine of stare decisis. But the doctrine of stare decisis is further illustrated by the course of judicial decisions upon this subject, for while the courts still hold to the doctrine of the Pinnel Case, 5 Coke, 117a, and Cumber v. Wane, 1 Strange, 426, they have seemed to seize with avidity upon any consideration to support the agreement to accept the lesser sum in satisfaction of the larger, or, in other words, to extract, if possible, from the circumstances of each case a consideration for the new agreement, and to substitute the new agreement in place of the old, and thus to form a defense to the action brought upon the old agreement." Jaffray v. Davis, 124 N. Y. 164, 11 L. R. A. 710, 26 N. E. 351. The court in the above case reviews many decisions where the accord was supported on various grounds, and some are interesting and amusing. The payment at York of a lesser sum than was due at Westminster is good. The payment in a check for a less sum is good. The giving of a negotiable note for the lesser sum, of either the debtor or some other party, is good. If the note or evidence of the debt be surrendered, it is good. If any security, however trivial, is taken, it is good. In short, "if there be any benefit, or even any legal possibility of benefit, to the creditor, thrown in, that additional weight will turn the scale, and render the consideration sufficient to support the agreement." Ibid. Numerous other instances may be found where accepting chattels, goods, lands, or anything else of less value than the debt, if it be other than what the article represents,—money,—will be good. See notes 1

Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 414–419. In brief, the law is, following those decisions to their end, that an executed settlement of great or small amounts for lesser sums is good when lagnappe is given, not on account of the payment of the money and the agreement of the parties, but because of the lagnappe being given.

It was universally held at common law that a release under seal, either with or without partial payment, was a good accord and satisfaction, and took the case out of the rule. Jaffray v. Davis, 124 N. Y. 164, 11 L. R. A. 710, 26 N. E. 351, 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 415; 1 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 323. The seal had magic to import a consideration. Hence a release to which a piece of sealing wax was attached was good, while the same release without the piece of wax was worthless. The distinction between sealed and unsealed instruments is almost universally abolished, and yet the conservatism of the courts has seemingly restrained them from giving now the same effect to a written release of the whole debt, which such release would have had, as a sealed instrument. Connecticut and Vermont have given that effect to a receipt. "The general principle laid down with regard to receipts in full has long been the settled law of this state, whatever it may be elsewhere. The receipt in this case, unless impeached for fraud or mistake, was valid, and discharged the whole debt, though given for a payment that was in itself but a part of the entire debt." Aborn v. Rathbone, 54 Conn. 444, 8 Atl. 677. The rule in Vermont seems to be that a receipt for a lesser sum purporting to discharge the whole sum is prima facie a discharge of it, and is subject to attack only for fraud, mistake, and the like grounds. Holbrook v. Blodget, 5 Vt. 520; Stephens v. Thompson, 28 Vt. 77; Ashley v. Hendec, 56 Vt. 209; Guyette v. Bolton, 46 Vt. 228. In Mississippi the court has gone much farther than this, and has completely cut away from the rule in Pinnel's Case; and of it, in Clayton v. Clark, 74 Miss. 499, 37 L. R. A. 771, 60 Am. St. Rep. 521, 21 So. 565, 22 So. 189, Chief Justice Woods, speaking for the court, said: "The absurdity and unreasonableness of the rule seem to be generally conceded, but there also seems to remain a wavering, shadowy belief in the fact, falsely so called, that the agreement to accept, and the actual acceptance of, a lesser sum in the full satisfaction of a larger sum is without any consideration to support it; that is, that the new agreement confers no benefit upon the creditor. However it may have seemed three hundred years ago in England, when trade and commerce had not yet burst their swaddling bands, at this day and in this country, where almost every man is in some way or other engaged in trade or commerce, it is as ridiculous as it is untrue to say that the payment of a lesser part of an originally greater debt, cash in hand, without vexation, cost, and delay, or the hazards of litigation in an effort to collect all, is not often, nay, generally, greatly to the benefit of the creditor. Why shall not money, the thing sought to be secured by new notes of third parties,—notes whose payment in money is designed to be secured by mortgage, and even negotiable notes of the debtor himself—why shall not the actual payment of money, cash in hand, be held to be as good consideration for a new agreement—as beneficial to the creditor—as any mere promises to pay the same amount, by whomsoever made and howsoever secured? And why may not men make and substitute a new contract and agreement for an old one, even if the old contract calls for a money payment? And why may one accept a horse worth $100 in full satisfaction of a promissory note for $1000, and be bound thereby, and yet not be legally bound by his agreement to accept $999, and his actual acceptance of it, in full satisfaction of the $1000 note? No reason can be assigned, except that just adverted to, and this rests upon a mistake in fact. And a rule of law which declares that under no circumstances, however favorable and beneficial to the creditor, or however hard and full of sacrifice to the debtor, can the payment of a less sum of money at the time and place stipulated in the original obligation, or afterwards, for a greater sum, though accepted by the creditor in full satisfaction of the whole debt, ever amount in law to satisfaction of the original debt, is absurd, irrational, unsupported by reason, and not founded in authority, as has been declared by courts of the highest respectability and of last resort, even when yielding reluctant assent to it. We decline to adopt or to follow it."

The first appearance of the rule in Pinnel's Case in Arkansas was in Pope v. Tunstall, 2 Ark. 209. The court adhered to the doctrine, but pointed out numerous exceptions to it,—if the accord was at a different place; the payment in a chattel; payment of less sum by a third person; mutual promises entering into the agreement, etc. The court quoted this criticism: "That there was more nicety than good sense in some of the cases on this subject; that accords are favored in law, and therefore ought not to be too rigorously expounded." In Caraness v. Ross, 33 Ark. 572, the rule originating in Pinnel's Case was quoted from text writers, followed, and applied. 49 L. R. A.

In Reynolds v. Reynolds, 55 Ark. 369, 18 S. W. 377, a statement of the rule by Lord Ellenborough in Fitch v. Sutton, 5 East, 230, is quoted and followed. In Gordon v. Moore, 44 Ark. 349, 51 Am. Rep. 606, there was, while recognizing the old rule, a practical breaking away from it. Moore executed a release in consideration of $450 of a judgment for $2,993.20, and authorized the clerk to enter satisfaction. The release recited, "Witness my hand and seal," but bore no seal, and was executed in 1882, after the distinction between sealed and unsealed instruments was abolished. Const. 1874, § 1. Judge Eakin said: "It would be hard and unreasonable if a creditor pressed for money might not say to an embarrassed or reluctant debtor, 'Pay me a part, and I will release the balance.' He is cut off from doing that in many cases by the rule as it now stands, but the rule is a hard one, based upon purely technical reasoning. It is hedged in with numerous exceptions." The result reached was thus stated: "We conclude, therefore, that an agreement by a creditor to accept a smaller sum in satisfaction of a debt, carried into execution by receipt of the money, and the execution of a formal and positive instrument of release, with all other acts essential to an absolute relinquishment of his right, is a valid and irrevocable act." Thus it is seen Gordon v. Moore recognized and sustained a written release not under seal, and practically placed this court in line with Connecticut and Vermont, which accord such effect to a receipt in full. In Heaslet v. Spratlin, 54 Ark. 185, 15 S. W. 461, a parol release sustained alone by the evidence of the party claiming it was held not to be an accord and satisfaction; the court merely referring to Gordon v. Moore. The question then becomes important to determine what constitutes a release. Mr. Beach says: "The proper words of a release are remise, release, quitclaim, and acquit. Any expressions, however, which denote the intention of the one party to discharge the other are sufficient." 1 Beach, Modern Law of Contracts, § 460. The receipt in full of a given sum in full satisfaction of a larger one certainly conveys the intention to discharge the party of the debt thus expressly stated to be discharged, as "remise, release, quitclaim, and acquit." The release in Gordon v. Moore did not use these technical terms, but "release said Childress from any and all liability," on the judgment, and authorized its satisfaction. Mr. Daniels says: "A release is technically an instrument under seal, the seal importing a consideration. But the release of a party to a bill or note by any agreement, upon a valuable consideration, is as effectual as if made under seal."

2 Dan. Neg. Inst. §1290. The consideration fictitiously imported to the release by the wax affixed to the name no longer exists, but this court enforced a release without it, thereby recognizing that a written release was valid without the seal. When a receipt and a release in this respect amount to exactly the same thing, evidencing a discharge of one party of the other, it is useless to preserve a distinction without a difference. Business and commercial affairs adjust themselves along practical, and not technical, lines. The court might well place its decision under the facts in this case on some of the numerous exceptions to the doctrine of the Pinnel Case, but it prefers to call a halt in refusing away a rule "which has been more honored in the breach than the observance." It is therefore held that when an agreement is fully executed to discharge a debt by the payment of a smaller sum, and such discharge is evidenced as it usually is, in practical business affairs, by a written receipt for the lesser sum in full satisfaction of the greater sum, it is "a valid and irrevocable act."

This case does not present the question whether a parol release fully proved by clear and satisfactory evidence, carried into execution by receiving the payment, would be valid, and a discussion of it would be merely multiplying obiter dictum.

The judgment is affirmed.

Battle and McCulloch, JJ., dissent.

W. R. CANNON, Appt.,

v.

G. R. MATHEWS.

(....Ark....)

Replevin lies for growing strawberry plants, although they are attached to the soil, since they are fruits of industry, and must be treated as chattels.

(May 6, 1905.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Crawford County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover possession of certain strawberry plants. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Samuel R. Chew, Henry L. Fitzhugh, and J. Wyth Walker, for appellant:

Growing crops are regarded as personalty

NOTE.—As to classification of growing fruit as real or personal property, see also, in this series, Sparrow v. Pond, 16 L. R. A. 103, and note.

For crops as personal property for the purpose of levy and sale, see Polley v. Johnson, 73 L. R. A. 258, and note.
69 L. R. A.

for the purpose of seizure and sale upon attachment or execution, and may be encumbered by chattel mortgage. The crops may be orally sold separate and apart from the land, and the purchaser of said crops may maintain replevin therefor.

8 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 303, note 5; Cobbey, Replevin, § 73; Matlock v. Fry, 15 Ind. 483; Frank v. Harrington, 36 Barb. 415; Miller v. Baker, 1 Met. 27; Hendrickson v. Ivins, 1 N. J. Eq. 562; Baker v. Jordan, 3 Ohio St. 438; Backenstoss v. Stahler, 33 Pa. 251, 75 Am. Dec. 592; 3 Parsons, Contr. 9th ed. p. 31; Dunne v. Ferguson, Hayes. Exch. 540; 1 Warvelle, Vendors, §§ 163-165; Hensley v. Brodie, 16 Ark. 511.

McCulloch, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The question involved in this appeal is whether growing strawberry plants, attached to the soil, can be the subject of replevin. Appellant, who was plaintiff below, sued in replevin for the strawberry plants growing on the land of appellee; claiming the plants under an alleged parol contract for the purchase of same. Defendant answered, denying that he had agreed to sell the plants in controversy to appellant. At the trial below there was testimony tending to show that appellee had verbally agreed to sell to appellant all the strawberry plants on a certain tract of land, and that after appellant had removed a part of them a controversy arose between them as to the number of plants appellee had agreed to sell, and this suit was brought in consequence of the disagreement. The court held that the suit could not be maintained, and directed the jury to return a verdict in favor of the defendant, which was done.

Replevin is strictly a possessory action for the recovery of personal property, and, in order to recover, the plaintiff must be the legal owner and entitled to the possession at the time of the commencement of the action. Cobbey, Replevin, §§ 27, 73. So the right of recovery in this case must turn upon the question whether the strawberry plants sued for are to be treated as chattels, or part of the land upon which they were growing. Many distinctions abound in the books as to the rules in determining the character of property in fruits of the soil, attached thereto,—whether they are to be considered chattel interests or as a part of the realty,—the distinction most frequently referred to being that between such as are natural products of the soil, fructus naturales, and fructus industriales, though this distinction is rejected by many courts, and others adopted. The pioneer English decision on the subject seems to have been one by Chief Justice Treby, at nisi prius, reported by Lord Raymond in Littlewood v. Smith, 1 Ld. Raym. 182, in which it was said that timber growing upon land might be sold by parol, "because it is but a bare chattel;" the court rejecting all distinction between natural and industrial products. This statement is by Mr. Baron Ilullock, in Scorell v. Bozall, 1 Younge & J. 396, pronounced to be mere dictum; but the doctrine is later fully approved by English judges. In the case of Marshall v. Green, L. R. 1 C. P. Div. 35, the distinction between fructus naturales and fructus industriales, as a test of the application of the statute of frauds, was rejected, and the rule announced by Treby, Ch. J., fully approved. In Browne on Statute of Frauds, § 254*b*, the author, in discussing the above-cited case and the tests therein referred to, says: "Those tests had, it is true, the sanction of previous decisions, but neither of them had proved satisfactory or been uniformly followed. The doctrine which laid down one rule for the sale of fructus naturales, and another for the sale of fructus industriales, is objectionable, because founded narrowly upon consideration of the ownership of the crop, not at all upon consideration of the condition of the sale." The same learned author says (§ 257*a*): "Where such an agreement [for sale of growing products of the soil] makes part of the transaction, it seems clear that an interest in land is contracted for and agreed to be given. But where, as in Marshall v. Green, there is no agreement that the goods shall remain on the vendor's land,—the vendee's right to come in and take away what he has bought not depending upon any contract or agreement, but being a mere incident of his purchase, arising by implication of law, and not subject to revocation by the owner of the land,—the contract is for the sale, not of land, but of goods, and this independently of the nature of the growth sold." Prof. Greenleaf says: "Though all that grows on the soil, whether spontaneously or by culture, ordinarily passes with the land, yet trees, grass, crops, and other things fixed to the soil, and so part of the realty, may be the subject of a separate sale, in the prospect of severance, and in that case will be regarded as personal chattels, if so treated by the parties. The cases on this much-vexed subject are extremely contradictory, but the principle now most generally recognized seems to be this: That, in contracts for the sale of things annexed to and growing upon the freehold, if the vendee is to have a right to the soil for a time for the purpose of farther growth and profit of that which is the subject of sale, it is an interest in land, within the meaning of the 4th 60 L. R. A.

section of the statute of frauds, and must be proved by writing; but where the thing is sold in prospect of separation from the soil immediately, or within reasonable and convenient time, without any stipulation for the beneficial use of the soil, but with a mere license to enter and take it away, it is to be regarded as substantially a sale of goods, only, and so not within that section of the statute. . . . The question thus turning upon the intention of the parties and the nature of the contract, it would seem to be of no importance whether the thing sold is to be severed from the soil by the vendor or the vendee, whether it is to be paid for by particular admeasurement or in the gross, or whether the subject of sale consists of trees and other spontaneous products, or of fructus industriales." 1 Greenleaf's Cruise, Real Prop. p. 55, note 1. The doctrine announced has been declared by many of the courts of this country. Cutler v. Pope, 13 Me. 377; Cain v. McGuire, 13 B. Mon. 340; Smith v. Bryan, 5 Md. 151. 59 Am. Dec. 104; Bostwick v. Leach, 3 Day. 476; McClintock's Appeal, 71 Pa. 365; Sterling v. Baldwin, 42 Vt. 306. Courts of other states adhere to the distinction between natural products and fruits of industry, and hold that an oral sale of the latter is held sufficient, but of the former insufficient, to pass title before severance. Fullicovich v. Skinner, 77 Cal. 239, 19 Pac. 424; Armstrong v. Lawson, 73 Ind. 498; Smock v. Smock, 37 Mo. App. 56; Hirth v. Graham, 50 Ohio St. 57, 19 L. R. A. 721, 40 Am. St. Rep. 641, 33 N. E. 90; Slocum v. Seymour, 36 N. J. L. 138, 13 Am. Rep. 432; Carson v. Brouder, 2 Lea, 701; Hove v. Batchelder, 49 N. H. 204; 2 Schouler, Pers. Prop. § 452; 1 Warvelle, Vendors, § 163. This court held, in Kendall v. J. I. Porter Lumber Co. 69 Ark. 442, 64 S. W. 220, that a deed conveying growing trees, and authorizing the grantee to remove them from the soil within a definite time, was a conveyance of an interest in the soil, within the purview of the registration laws.

Without undertaking to discriminate between the line of authorities herein cited, we hold that the property sued for in this case falls clearly within the classification of fruits of industry, and not natural products. According to either of the lines of authorities cited, it must be treated as personal property, and the subject of replevin. Cobbe v. Replevin, § 73; Shinn, Replevin, §§ 226, 227; Wells, Replevin, §§ 74, 75; Matlock v. Fry, 15 Ind. 483; Garth v. Caldwell, 72 Mo. 622.

The court erred in directing a verdict for defendant.

Reversed and remanded for a new trial

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

I. A. RICHARDSON et al., Trustees of La Crosse County Insane Asylum, Respts.,

v.

Frank STUESSER, Appt.

(.....Wis.....)

*1. The incorporation of §§ 1500 to 1505, both inclusive, Rev. Stat. 1898, into § 604c thereof, so as to be applicable to the insane, affects all such, the support of whom is not properly a public charge, and provides procedure to be followed in compelling those privately liable for such support to do so.

2. In harmony with § 1502, Rev. Stat. 1898, as to the poor, the trustees of a county asylum for the insane should proceed by petition to the county judge to establish the liability of anyone for the support of an insane person at such asylum, who refuses to perform his duty in that regard, and the amount which he should pay, and the time of payment determined, in harmony with § 1504; and they may cause the order of the county judge in that regard to be enforced by contempt proceedings, or by action.

3. An action to enforce such an order must be commenced in the name of the county in some court having jurisdiction of such civil actions. The county court does not possess such jurisdiction in the absence of special authorization.

4. The common-law liability of a husband to support his wife does not extend to supporting her outside the matrimonial home, reasonably chosen by him, unless he refuses to do so there, or she resides away therefrom by his consent.

5. Such common-law liability cannot be extended by implication from the written law as to the support of other persons. It can only be extended by a statute plainly so intended.

6. Where a wife, as a charity to her and protection to others, is by due process of law taken from the matrimonial home and confined in an asylum for the insane, and the husband submits, or even takes the initiatory proceedings to secure for her the benefit of the public charity, there is no element of refusal by him to support her at the matrimonial home, or consent by him to her absence therefrom, within the common-law rule rendering him liable for her support outside of such home.

7. There being no express statute in this state extending the common-law liability of the husband to support his

*Headnotes by MARSHALL, J.

NOTE.—As to validity of statute authorizing suit against certain relatives of insane person for support by county, see, in this series, Baldwin v. Douglas, 20 L. R. A. 850.

As to statute charging estate of insane persons who have no heirs with expenses incurred by county for their support and treatment, see Bon Homme County v. Berndt, 50 L. R. A. 351.

69 L. R. A.

wife in a case where she has been removed from his home by due process of law, and maintained at an asylum for the insane, he is not liable in such circumstances.

(May 2, 1905.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for La Crosse County in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to require defendant to pay for the care of his wife in the La Crosse County Insane Asylum. Reversed.

Statement by Marshall, J.:

Appellant's wife in due form of law was committed to the La Crosse County Asylum for the Chronic Insane. Upon the ground that he was of sufficient ability to maintain her at such asylum, but refused to do so, the trustees thereof petitioned the county court of such county for an order requiring him to pay $3 per week therefor from and after September 1, 1903, so long as she remained therein. Such proceedings were duly had as to such petition that appellant was required to plead thereto, which he did by demurring to the jurisdiction of the county court over the subject-matter and to the sufficiency of facts stated to show liability, and by putting in issue the facts alleged as to his ability to comply with the demand of the petitioners. The demurrer was overruled, and the prayer of the petitioners granted. Appellant appealed to the circuit court for La Crosse county. A trial was had in such court, resulting in findings that defendant's wife had been, since December 10, 1901, an inmate of the asylum as stated in the petition, she having been in due form of law committed thereto; that he had complied with the demands of the trustees of the asylum as to furnishing clothing for her, but refused to contribute anything for her board and care; that she was not a pauper nor a public charge; that he was possessed of property, and was otherwise of sufficient ability to pay reasonably for her maintenance at such asylum, and was legally bound to do so; and that the sum of $2 per week was reasonable therefor. Judgment was thereupon rendered requiring defendant to pay the trustees of such asylum $2 per week from December 22, 1903, so long as his wife should remain an inmate thereof, and awarding to them costs to the amount of $32.84. This appeal was taken therefrom.

As to liability of estate to reimburse county for support of person as pauper, see McNairy County v. McColn, 41 L. R. A. 862.

As to liability to pay for support of relative generally, see Albany v. McNamara, 6 L. R. A. 212; Rowell v. Vershire, 8 L. R. A. 708; McCook County v. Kammos, 31 L. R. A. 461; People use of Peoria County v. Hill, 38 L. R. A. 634.

Messrs. Paul W. Mahoney and Morris & Hartwell, for appellant:

Section 1502 of the Revised Statutes specifically mentions who are liable for the care of the poor, and in the order in which they are liable; but, among the different persons mentioned, we do not find the name of the husband or wife. Expressio unius est exclusio alterius.

Broom, Legal Maxims, 607; Pearson v. Lord, 6 Mass. 84; Lesure v. Norris, 11 Cush. 328; Com. v. Berkshire L. Ins. Co. 98 Mass. 29; Erie v. Erie Canal Co. 59 Pa. 178; Pullan v. Cincinnati & C. Air-Line R. Co. 4 Biss. 35, Fed. Cas. No. 11,461.

A husband is not a relative of his wife as contemplated here.

Brookfield v. Allen, 6 Allen, 585.

The law of this state, § 604d, provides that the state of Wisconsin will pay to every county taking care of its own chronic insane $1.50 per week for each patient so confined. The evidence shows that the county of La Crosse received every year from the state of Wisconsin $1.50 per week for the care of Mrs. Stuesser. For ten years prior to the commencement of this proceeding, the La Crosse County Insane Asylum made a net profit to the county of La Crosse.

The county of La Crosse, as a political organization, has not paid one cent towards the support of Mrs. Stuesser. The evidence shows that she was and is a source of profit, rather than a burden.

Under the common law, a husband is liable for the support of his wife while a member of his family, or when she is absent from him through his fault. But in no case is a husband liable for the support of his wife when she is absent from him without his consent or without his fault.

Sturtevant v. Starin, 19 Wis. 268; Brown v. Worden, 39 Wis. 432.

A husband is not liable for the support of his wife while confined in an insane asylum, because she is placed there for the protection of the public.

Baldwin v. Douglas County, 37 Neb. 283, 20 L. R. A. 850, 55 N. W. 875; Richardson County v. Frederick, 24 Neb. 596, 39 N. W. 621; Richardson County v. Smith, 25 Neb. 767, 41 N. W. 774; Farmington v. Jones, 36 N. H. 271.

Mr. Otto Bosshard, for respondents:

The statutes of Wisconsin confer upon asylum trustees and county authorities the power and right to compel relief and support of persons confined in the insane hospitals and county asylums of this state, 69 L. R. A.

and prescribe the procedure to be followed.

Wis. Stat. 1898, § § 600, 604c, 604g; Laws 1901, chap. 63.

The husband of an insane wife confined in a county asylum is legally liable for her support and maintenance to the county while so confined, and the remedies and procedure provided for in §§ 1500-1505, inclusive, will lie against him.

Sturbridge v. Franklin, 160 Mass. 149, 35 N. E. 669; Hanover v. Turner, 14 Mass. 227, 7 Am. Dec. 203; New Bedford v. Chace, 5 Gray, 28; Charlestown v. Groveland, 15 Gray, 15; Goodale v. Lawrence, 88 N. Y. 513, 42 Am. Rep. 259; Brookfield v. Allen, 6 Allen, 585; Bangor v. Wiscasset, 71 Me. 535; Davis v. St. Vincent's Inst. for Insane, 9 C. C. A. 501, 15 U. S. App. 432, 61 Fed. 277; Oneida County v. Bartholomew, 82 Hun, 80, 31 N. Y. Supp. 106; Woodward v. Worcester, 15 Gray, 19, note.

Financial ability, and not the payment of taxes, should be the test of the husband's liability.

Orono v. Peavey, 66 Me. 60; Bangor v. Wiscasset, 71 Me. 539.

Marshall, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Several provisions of the statutes seem to have been called to the attention of the trial court to sustain the proceeding, which are relied on now to support the judgment. Each of them will be briefly referred to.

Considerable significance is claimed for § 604g, Rev. Stat. 1898. That makes the property of an insane person, who is kept in any state or county hospital, or by any county otherwise, at its expense, liable for his support, and provides a remedy for the enforcement of such liability. It throws no light on the right of the controversy here, since such controversy does not involve any claim of liability for the support of appellant's wife out of her property.

Section 600, Rev. Stat. 1898, is referred to as having some significance. It authorizes a district attorney, under the direction of his county board, in the name of his county, to "sue for and collect from the property of any patient maintained at" a state hospital for the insane at the cost of the county, or from any person legally bound to support such patient, the amount charged by the state to such county therefor. Plainly this matter is not within that field. No liability of the county is claimed to have been created by reason of the support of appellant's wife at such hospital: neither was this proceeding brought by the district attorney, nor was it an action within the meaning of the statute, nor was its commencement directed by the county board. The county judge, in the absence of special authorization, has no jurisdiction of an action under such section, or the circuit court capacity to take jurisdiction by appeal from the county judge's order, except to dismiss the proceeding. Klaise v. State, 27 Wis. 462; Butler v. Wagner, 35 Wis. 54; Miller v. Crawford County, 106 Wis. 210, 82 N. W. 175; Stoltman v. Lake (Wis.) 102 N. W. 920; Birdsall v. Kewaunee County (Wis.) 103 N. W. 1.

Next we are referred to § 604e, Rev. Stat. 1898, negating any liability of the state to any county by reason of the support by such county of any person at its county asylum for the insane, who is not a public charge, and making the "provisions of §§ 1500 and 1505, both inclusive," applicable to the support of insane persons. Turning to such sections, we find they refer to the relief and support of the poor. They declare that the father, mother, and children, being of sufficient ability to care for any poor person "who is unable to support himself, shall be liable for such support," and provide the method of procedure to enforce such liability; the moving parties being the town supervisors, the jurisdiction invocable that of the county court, and the manner thereof being by petition as in this case. It is argued that the effect of incorporating such section into the one relating to the insane is to provide a remedy only for enforcing liabilities for the support by relatives of insane poor persons at county asylums and those of the particular class mentioned. It seems that would be too narrow a construction of the incorporating language. The express prohibition in § 604e of any credit from the state in favor of a county for the support of an insane person at a county asylum, the support of whom is not properly a public charge, coupled with writing into it, so to speak, §§ 1500 to 1505, suggests pretty plainly, if not conclusively, that as to a person duly committed to a county asylum, of the class mentioned, the proceedings to enforce the private liability must be under such sections, so far as they are applicable thereto. That would include the jurisdiction to be invoked, the manner of invoking it, as by petition, and the procedure outlined in respect to the matter.

We are referred to chapter 245, p. 407, Laws 1899, as authorizing the commencement of proceedings in the name of the trustees. That makes the trustees of a county asylum for the chronic insane ex officio trustees of the county poor with power "to commence and prosecute in the name of the county any proper action or actions to enforce and collect any account, claim, or demand that may arise or accrue to the county in their administration of the business affairs of such asylum," they to account to 60 L. R. A.

the county board of supervisors for all moneys so received or collected. The maintenance, under the direction of the trustees of a county asylum for the insane, of a person thereat, who shall have been properly committed thereto, whose support is not properly a public charge, would create a basis for a liability "in their administration of the business of" operating the asylum against the person or property liable for such support, but not a fixed liability constituting an "account, claim, or demand," within the meaning of the statute. That term suggests the existence of a liability fixed in amount and payable.

Section 1502, Rev. Stat. 1898, as to poor persons, provides for a proceeding in the name of the town supervisors of the nature of the one resorted to here for the purpose of determining whether the person proceeded against is liable to the municipality, and, if so, the amount of such liability, and when payment should be made. That having been made a part of § 604e, as to the insane, it would seem that the proceedings to fix the amount of the liability of any person for the support of an insane person at a county asylum should be commenced, as it was here, in the name of the trustees. The term "proper action," as used in the law of 1899, evidently refers to an ordinary action under the Code, which, without some special authorization therefor, cannot be commenced before a county judge. Such term does not refer to a special proceeding of the sort resorted to here. Moreover, it does not authorize any proceedings other than in the name of the county.

Section 1504, as to the poor, provides for the enforcement of the county judge's order by contempt proceedings, and the following section provides for such enforcement by an action in the name of the town. In the absence of any other guide, the fair inference would be that the same method of enforcement would be proper as to an order requiring a person to contribute to the county for the support of an insane person, the action to be brought in the name of the county; but the law of 1899 furnishes a definite guide, in that it provides that the action shall be so brought.

So the conclusion is reached that, if appellant's wife, while she was at the county asylum for the insane under a proper commitment thereto, was not a proper public charge, because he was by law liable for her support, the proceedings resorted to for the purpose of having such liability, the amount thereof, and the time for its satisfaction adjudicated, were proper. So the county court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the proceedings, and on that point there is no infirmity in the judgment.

We are not aware of any statute varying the common-law liability of a husband to support his wife. Counsel for respondent does not suggest any which expressly does so, but argues that our statutory policy is that only such insane persons shall be cared for at public expense in state or county hospitals as have no property that can be devoted thereto, and no relatives legally bound therefor. This is true, but does not settle the question here at issue. No extension of the husband's common-law liability for the support of his wife can be predicated on mere legislative policy shown by the liability created by statute, or expressly recognized thereby as to other persons. New rights in derogation of the common law must rest upon unmistakable statutory provisions. The common law is not subject to change by mere implication. A statute to accomplish such a change "must be clear, unambiguous, and peremptory." Sedgw. Stat. & Const. Law, p. 318; Meek v. Pierce, 19 Wis. 300; Orton v. Noonan, 29 Wis. 541; Pelican v. Rock Falls, 81 Wis. 428-438, 51 N. W. 871, 52 N. W. 1049. So we are led to inquire whether, by the common law, a husband is liable to support his wife under the circumstances of this case. If not, then § 604e has no application to the matter in hand.

The liability of a husband for the support of his wife by common-law rules only requires him to do so in the matrimonial home, selected by him,—acting reasonably,—unless she is compelled to seek or accept support elsewhere because of his wilful neglect or refusal to perform his duty or her living apart from him by his consent. Generally speaking, the duty of the husband for the maintenance of his wife does not extend to the support of her while she is away from his home. Sturtevant v. Starin, 19 Wis. 268; Warner v. Heiden, 28 Wis. 517, 9 Am. Rep. 515; Bach v. Parmely, 35 Wis. 238; Brown v. Worden, 39 Wis. 432; Morgenroth v. Spencer, (1905; Wis.) 102 N. W. 1086.

It would seem that when a wife, by due process of law, as a charity to her and protection to others, is taken from the society of her husband without fault of his, and confined in an asylum for treatment or safety, or both, there is no refusal by him to support her in his home, even if he is an actor as regards setting the legal machinery in motion for the purpose of affording her the benefit of the public charity and guardianship; nor is there in such a case any consent by the husband to the wife's absence from his home within the meaning of the common-law rule, clothing her with his credit for the purpose of her support. There 69 L. R. A.

is no very great amount of authority on this question. The following are, in our judgment, the most important of the adjudicated cases throwing light on the subject. It will be seen by a careful examination of them that they are substantially all one way, though not entirely in harmony. Delaware County v. McDonald, 46 Iowa, 170; Noble County v. Schmoke, 51 Ind. 416; Switzerland County v. Hildebrand, 1 Ind. 555; Marshall County v. Burkey, 1 Ind. App. 565, 27 N. E. 1108; Davis v. St. Vincent's Inst. for Insane, 9 C. C. A. 501, 15 U. S. App. 432, 61 Fed. 277; Watt v. Smith, 89 Cal. 602, 26 Pac. 1071; Wray v. Wray, 33 Ala. 187; Monroe County v. Budlong, 51 Barb. 493; Goodale v. Lawrence, 88 N. Y. 513, 42 Am. Rep. 259, Overruling Goodale v. Brockner, 25 Hun, 621; Bangor v. Wiscasset, 71 Me. 535; Senft v. Carpenter, 18 R. I. 545, 28 Atl. 963; Howard v. Whetstone Twp. 10 Ohio, 365; Springfield Twp. v. Demott, 13 Ohio, 104; Baldwin v. Douglas County, 37 Neb. 283, 20 L. R. A. 850, 55 N. W. 875.

The Iowa, Nebraska, and Indiana cases are to the effect that there is no common-law liability of the husband in cases of this kind. In the New York, Rhode Island, Alabama, and Federal cases liability was adjudged; but in each instance there was an abandonment of the insane wife, and the decision was placed on that ground. The California decision was based on a statutory liability. We venture to say that no court which has considered and decided the question upon its being the turning one, as in the case in hand, or its being sufficiently involved to challenge careful attention to the matter, has held that there is any common-law liability of the husband in circumstances similar to those in this case. The basic idea of the common-law rule is that, in the special instances where the wife is permitted to use the credit of her husband for her relief and support, she is his agent ex necessitate legis or ex necessitate rei, failure of duty on his part being the cause of the need. There is no room whatever for that idea where the charity of the law intervenes without fault on the part of the husband for the care and protection of the unfortunate wife, and public safety supersedes him as regards authority and capacity to care for her in his home. Our conclusion is that, till the legislature makes some express provision to the contrary, no recovery can be had of the husband in a case of this sort. Therefore, the judgment appealed from must be reversed.

The judgment appealed from is reversed, and the cause remanded with directions to render judgment in favor of the appellant.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

Nellie MAGINNIS, Appt.,
v.
KNICKERBOCKER ICE COMPANY et al.,
Respts.

(112 Wis. 885.)

*1. If a person conveys land to another, stipulating that the title shall revert to him upon a failure of such other to fulfil certain conditions specified, a breach of the condition occurs, and such person makes re-entry of the property or does something equivalent thereto for the purpose of reclaiming the same pursuant to the terms of the grant, in the absence of any equity preventing the legal effect of such facts the title to such property will thereby become vested in such person as absolutely as it was before such conveyance was made.

2. In the circumstances stated, the grantor, having reclaimed the property, may invoke judicial remedies in respect thereto, pleading his title in general terms the same as if no disturbance thereof had occurred by reason of the grant upon condition.

3. If a person conveys property to another, coupled with a condition the breach of which will, if taken advantage of, cause the title to revert to him, the condition being to secure the payment of money, or the performance of an obligation the breach of which can be fairly measured in money by some established rule, the particular thing to be done, or the particular time of the doing thereof, not being made essential and of the very essence of the contract, under some circumstances a court of

*Headnotes by MARSHALL, J.

NOTE—Equitable relief against forfeiture of estate.

- I. General rules, 833.
- II. Conditions precedent, 836.
- III. Forfeiture will be relieved when compensation can be made.
 - a. In general, 839.
 - b. Forfeiture to secure payment of money.
 1. General rule, 839.
 2. Grant or devise on condition of support, 841.
 3. Grant or devise on condition of payment of money, 842.
 4. Nonpayment of rent, 844.
 5. Nonrenewal of lease, 846.
 6. Nonpayment of taxes, 848.
 7. Failure to remove encumbrance, 849.
- IV. Fraud, accident, mistake, 849.
- V. Effect of conduct of obligee, 851.
- VI. Collateral covenants.
 - a. In general, 853.
 - b. Failure to improve or repair, 854.
 - c. Failure to insure, 856.
 - d. Other covenants, 856.
 - e. Copyholds, 858.
 - f. Mining leases, 858.
- VII. Conditions against marriage, 858.
- VIII. After forfeiture declared, 865.
- IX. Statutory forfeiture, 866.
- X. Statutory jurisdiction, 866.

I. General rules.

MAGINNIS v. KNICKERBOCKER ICE Co. and GORDON v. RICHARDSON both constitute valuable contributions to the law upon this difficult and unsettled subject, in pointing out the fact that no relief can be granted from a forfeiture of an estate for failure to perform a condition unless there is some rule by which the damages for the failure can be accurately measured in money; and the former in emphasizing the additional principle that the default must not be wilful or inexcusable.

The courts have struggled with the question for a long series of years, and have apparently laid down some general principles to be administered in awarding or withholding relief; but, upon close inspection, it may be doubtful if many principles are applicable to conditions other than those to which they were applied. It has been stated that the matter depends largely upon the discretion of the chancellor, and that seems to be the rule which has the most general application.

Although refusal to permit the enforcement of a forfeiture occurs sometimes upon equitable principles in actions at law, and the principles which induce courts of equity to afford their assistance to prevent the forfeiture of an estate are frequently applied in actions for the specific performance of a contract to relieve plaintiff from the consequences of his failure to comply fully with all its conditions, the discussions in those cases lead outside the scope of this note, and they will be omitted herefrom, except in a few instances where the discussion is especially valuable. Moreover, the rule which permits relief in case the condition is to secure prompt payment of money is applied frequently to control mortgage foreclosures. But since, in such cases, the rule is applied as well to vest an estate as to prevent its forfeiture, and the matter of mortgage foreclosures is a matter by itself, the rules of which are fairly well known, the cases dealing with that matter are not included here.

When the attempt is made to lay down rules which shall be of general application, great difficulty is encountered. Many judges have tried it only to learn that a slight change of circumstances rendered the supposed general rule wholly inapplicable. All courts of equity agree that equity abhors a forfeiture, and will never give its aid to enforce one, but will, on the contrary, give relief therefrom whenever such relief is in harmony with equitable principles. This almost of necessity makes of universal application a statement found in a case decided under a Canadian statute, that the question of granting relief is one within the judicial discretion of the court. Coventry v. McLean, 22 Ont. Rep. 1.

Equity has jurisdiction to relieve against forfeitures, but not to enforce them. South Carolina & G. R. Co. v. Augusta Southern R. Co. 107 Ga. 164, 33 S. E. 36.

In Pittsburg & C. R. Co. v. Mt. Pleasant & B. F. R. Co. 76 Pa. 481. in which the forfeiture equity, by an arbitrary rule of construction peculiar to that jurisdiction, may say the parties did not intend the full effect of their language, but purposed to have the condition stand as security for the performance of the obligation or the payment of an equivalent in money.

4. By the arbitrary rule referred to, contracts may be judicially made to read contrary to the literal or reasonable meaning of the language thereof, measured by ordinary rules for judicial construction, and then enforced according to the intention of the parties as judicially declared.
5. The rule of construction above indicated applies to prevent a forfeiture where the circumstances are such as to fall within the jurisdiction of equity, and the person seeking the benefit thereof is not guilty of having wilfully or inexcusably violated his obligation.

6. The beneficiary of a condition in the conveyance of property, for the breach of which the title thereto may revert to him, may lose the benefit thereof by conduct rendering it inequitable for him to insist upon the forfeiture as stipulated.

7. Mere silence is not sufficient to waive a forfeiture; but silence on one side and conduct in good faith relying thereon on the other, whereby such other is placed in such a situation that he will be greatly damaged if the apparent attitude of his conditional grantor be changed effectively, will bind such grantor as a waiver of the benefit of the condition.

8. Mere silence will not operate as a waiver of the benefit of a condition in case of an intentional breach thereof, though the conditional grantee incur expense which would operate to his prejudice if the

of a railroad lease for nonpayment of rent, and for failure to keep the track in repair and maintain an adequate amount of rolling stock, was involved, the court, without passing upon the question of relief from the forfeiture in the particular instance, because the question was not properly presented, said to relieve against forfeiture is one of the oldest and best established functions of a court of equity.

It is stated in Sanders v. Pope, 12 Ves. Jr. 282, that the jurisdiction of equity to relieve against the exercise of a legal right rests only upon this principle,—that one party is taking advantage of a forfeiture; and, as his exercise of the legal right would produce a hardship, and great loss and injury, on the one hand, arising from going to the full extent of the right, while, on the other, the party may have the full benefit of the contract as originally framed, the court will interfere where a clear mode of compensation can be discovered.

In Dunklee v. Adams, 20 Vt. 415, 50 Am. Dec. 44, it is stated that equity will relieve where compensation for the breach can be made. It is impracticable to lay down any definite rule or principle by which it is to be determined whether compensation can be made in any given case. It necessarily depends, when the breach is not for the nonpayment of money, upon the discretion of the chancellor, whose power in that respect cannot well be otherwise than arbitrary. The soundness of the early doctrine granting relief against forfeiture incurred by nonperformance of collateral acts has been more recently denied in England, and it now appears to be the established doctrine that relief will be granted only where the breach of the condition is for the nonpayment of money; and it is granted in such cases on the principle that the allowance of interest for the delay forms a certain rule of compensation, and is equivalent to payment at the day.

As will appear, however, it is not enough to show that compensation can be made; the plaintiff must, in addition, show that he is equitably entitled to relief.

Thus, in Broadbuss v. Ward, 8 Mo. 217, which was an action to compel specific performance of an agreement to convey a lot of land on which complainant had agreed to erect a dwelling house, which he had failed to do, the court said the case is one in which relief from the consequences of the breach of covenant was sought in equity; and stated that, if ever there was a case in which equity would refuse to relieve against a forfeiture, this ought to be one, because complainant had left the state, and had never attempted in any way to comply with his agreement until the property had greatly increased in value because of the efforts of other parties.

The suggested limitation as to collateral acts has not been fully adopted.

Where the condition of a grant of state land forfeited for nonpayment of taxes, requiring payment for improvements upon the property, was not complied with, the court said equity will never lend its aid to destroy an estate for breach of a condition subsequent, but will relieve against the consequences whenever the case admits of a certain compensation in damages, as where the condition is to pay money. It regards conditions as mere remedies to enforce the fulfillment of obligations, and will not allow them to be perverted from their purposes by one side or the other. Worthen v. Ratcliffe, 42 Ark. 330.

In Rose v. Rose, 1 Amb. 332, the court, in considering the question of relieving against the enforcement of the full amount of a debt which the creditor had agreed should be reduced a certain amount, in case the rents of certain property should be applied to its payment, after the collection and appropriation to his own use of rents by the owner of the estate, said, equity will relieve against almost all penalties whatsoever. Against forfeitures or copyholds. But they are all such cases where the court can do it with safety to the other party; for, if it cannot put him into as good condition as if the agreement had been performed, the court will not relieve.

In Wells v. Smith, 2 Edw. Ch. 78, which was a suit for specific performance of a contract to convey real estate in which the purchase price was not tendered at the specified time, the court discusses the question of the right of the court to relieve the complainant of the consequence of his breach of contract. The court holds that it has no power to relieve for the nonperformance of a condition precedent; but says that the principle whereon the court is to act in relation to conditions subsequent is widely different. In cases of this sort, if a breach or nonperformance appears, the effect of which is to work a forfeiture or devert an esgrantor were thereafter permitted to insist upon the forfeiture.

9. The establishment of a railroad as a purely private enterprise cannot be legitimately aided by the power of eminent domain.

10. The doctrine that, if a railroad company takes possession of land for a public way, the owner thereof not objecting, the latter will be presumed to have consented thereto, and impliedly agreed to accept a just compensation therefor, and consented to rely upon the statutory method of obtaining the same, has no application to a case where the rights of the parties are defined by a written instrument.

11. If a railway corporation takes possession of land for a private purpose, its right to do so resting in a grant by the owner thereof, and it subsequently loses that right by forfeiture to such owner, it cannot thereafter defy such owner, and continue to enjoy his property, because it might successfully proceed in good faith to acquire it for a public purpose.

(Cassoday, Ch. J., dissents.)

(December 17, 1901.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Racine County in favor of defendants in a suit to restrain a continuous nuisance. Reversed.

Statement by Marshall, J.:

Action to restrain a continuous nuisance.

The complaint states, in substance, that plaintiff was the owner in fee simple and that, the court, acting upon the principle of compensation to the party for the injury sustained by the breach, will interpose and prevent the forfeiture. The court will only give relief where compensation can be made in damages. There may even be cases of condition subsequent unperformed, in which the court will not relieve from forfeiture on account of the difficulty of ascertaining with any degree of certainty the amount or adequacy of compensation to be allowed.

The statement that the court will not interfere in case the breach is of condition precedent has met with favor, but, as will be seen hereafter, it is not of universal application.

In Noyes v. Anderson, 124 N. Y. 175, 21 Am. St. Rep. 657, 26 N. E. 316, which involved the question of relief from a forfeiture of a contract right of a mortgagor, the court makes the following statement with respect to the power of equity to relieve from forfeiture of estates: The doctrine was applied to relieve a mortgagor from the forfeiture to which he was subjected. It is also not only available to cases of leases where forfeiture of the term and entry are provided for as the consequences of nonpayment of rent on the day it becomes due, but is extended to other cases, and more especially to those (although not necessarily confined to them) where the default resulting in forfeiture is in payment of money, as in such case adequate compensation can be made. This relief will not be afforded in cases where the default and forfeiture have been occasioned by the wilful neglect of the party seeking it. Nor will it ordinarily be given where the breach is of a condition precedent, although the rule may not be without exception.

In Oil Creek R. Co. v. Atlantic & G. W. R. Co. 57 Pa. 65, which was a suit for specific performance of a contract, the court says that a court of equity will not in general relieve against a forfeiture, unless it be in case of nonpayment of rent where an exact and just compensation can be made by decreeing the landlord the arrears of his rent with interest and costs.

That rule, however, as has already been seen, is too broadly stated.

The rule that equity will not interfere in there is a remedy at law is applicable in this class of cases as in others. Therefore, if an attempt to forfeit a lease is a nullity, the lessee has a complete remedy at law, and equity will not entertain a bill on his behalf for relief. Graham v. Carondelet, 33 Mo. 262.

But the statutory right of a tenant to set up an equitable defense which he may have to an action to dispossess him for breach of covenants does not deprive equity of jurisdiction of a suit for equitable relief from a forfeiture, unless the right to set up the defense in an action at law is absolute, and not dependent upon the discretion of the court. Giles v. Austin, 62 N. Y. 486, 46 How. Pr. 269.

And to secure the aid of a court of equity, an equitable right must be relied on. Therefore, to give equity jurisdiction to relieve from a forfeiture for nonpayment of rent, there must have been a forfeiture, and its jurisdiction is therefore defeated if forfeiture is denied and proof is offered to show that no forfeiture has occurred. Warne v. Wagenor (N. J. Eq.) 15 Atl. 307.

Moreover, equity will never relieve a covenantor from a forfeiture except under the strong expectation that the covenant will be faithfully performed thereafter. And the insolvency of the party, furnishing a presumption of his inability to perform his covenant, is a proper ground for refusing relief. Dunklee v. Adams, 20 Vt. 415, 50 Am. Dec. 44.

Furthermore, the intention of the parties may be expressed in the contract in such a manner as to be conclusive either in favor of or against relief.

Thus, even though the contract contains a provision for forfeiture in case of a failure to perform strictly in point of time, nevertheless a court of equity will examine the whole contract in the light of surrounding circumstances, and ascertain whether it was the real intention of the parties that the party in default should lose the right secured to him by the contract. Steele v. Branch, 40 Cal. 3.

So the principles upon which equity will relieve a lessee from the consequences of non-performance of covenants in a lease have no application where the mode of determining the rights of the lessee is expressly provided for by the contract, and the right which he is seeking to enforce to an extension of the lease, or payment for buildings placed on the leased property, is expressly dependent upon the performance of conditions precedent, such as the payment of all assessments against the property, which have not been performed. There is in possession of certain lands described, situated in Racine county, Wisconsin; that defendants constructed a spur railroad track thereon, leading from the main track of the Chicago, Milwaukee, & St. Paul Railway Company southeasterly of said land, in a northwesterly direction to the boundary line thereof, and intends to enter upon and permanently occupy said premises for said spur track, and to operate railway freight trains over the same without permission of plaintiff or having first acquired the right to do so. The defendant Knickerbocker Ice Company answered, denying the allegations of the complaint as to the title and possession of the premises in dispute, and alleging title and right of possession in itself, and that such possession was exclusive except that the defendant railway company possessed a license to maintain a railway track over the same for the purpose of reaching ice industries operated by said ice company; that the railway track had been maintained and operated continuously for more than three years before the commencement of the action, by said railway company, as a part of its public railway system. The railway company answered substantially the same as the ice company.

On the trial plaintiff admitted that the railway track had been maintained and operated for more than three years before the commencement of the action, but claimed that it was so maintained and operated solely for use of the defendant ice company. The following facts were established by the no ground upon which a court of equity should intervene to relieve the lessee from the consequences of a failure or neglect to perform. People's Bank v. Mitchell, 73 N. Y. 406.

So if, upon the face of the contract and from the surrounding circumstances, it clearly appears to have been the distinct understanding and agreement of the parties that, if the stipulated act was not performed within the specified time, all rights under the contract should be forfeited; and, if default is made in the performance within the time,—a court of equity will give no relief unless a strict performance is either waived, or is excused upon some general ground of equitable cognizance. Steele v. Branch, 40 Cal. 3.

But a stipulation to the effect that, in case of a default, a party shall lose his rights under the contract, is often inserted by way of penalty, merely with a view to induce a more prompt performance, and not with the intention that a failure strictly to perform, in point of time, shall work an absolute forfeiture. When such appears to have been the intention of the parties, if the party in default afterwards tenders a performance promptly and with reasonable diligence; and if the other party has suffered no damage by the delay; and particularly if the property has not materially enhanced in value during the time of the delay,—a court of equity will not enforce the forfeiture, but will decree a specific performance, notwithstanding the default, provided it appears that the party in default has acted in good faith, and gives some reasonable excuse for the delay. Ibid.

And in Brink v. Steadman, 70 Ill. 241, which was an action to compel specific performance of a contract to convey real estate, the court says, if parties under no disability choose to contract for a forfeiture, however hard it may seem. In the absence of any fraud or improper practices on the part of the vendor, the law can afford the vendee no relief.

II. Conditions precedent.

Many expressions will be found in the cases to the effect that no relief can be granted in case the breach is of a condition precedent; and, upon first glance, this result would seem to follow from necessity, for, if the condition is precedent, and has not been complied with, no estate has vested which is the subject of forfeiture within the relief of equity. But a closer view will disclose that in many instances, although the estate has not in fact vested, yet a right has been acquired under a contract which has been looked upon by the parties as the equivalent of an estate; and the court will seize upon such interest and establish it, although the result is to relieve from a forfeiture for breach of a condition precedent. This is common practice in actions for specific performance of contracts, and has been applied in cases of conditional grants and devises.

In City Bank v. Smith, 3 Gill & J. 265, it is said that, although equity will in many cases interpose to prevent the devastating of an estate, it will not relieve against the non-performance of a condition precedent to the vesting of an estate by giving an estate that never vested; it will not vest any estate that, by reason of the nonperformance of a condition precedent, would not vest at law.

So, in order to have the principle of equitable relief apply, the effect of the breach of condition must be to divest the estate, and not to destroy the right to acquire an estate. In the latter case equity has no power to interpose and aid the defaulting party. Robinson v. Cropsey, 2 Edw. Ch. 138.

So, if title under a grant of public land is not to vest until certain acts have been performed by the grantee, equity will not interfere to protect him in possession, if he fails to comply with the terms of the contract. People ex rel. Love v. Center, 66 Cal. 551, 5 Pac. 263, 6 Pac. 481. The court says it is true a court of equity does not favor forfeiture. It will not aid in divesting an estate. It may interfere to prevent the divesting of an estate. But here there is no question of forfeiture. By the terms of the agreement the whole of the work required was a condition precedent, and a court of equity will not, by its decree, give an estate which has never vested.

There is a wide distinction between a condition precedent, where no title has vested and none is to vest until the condition is performed, and a condition subsequent, operating by way of defeasance. In the former case equity can give no relief. The failure to perform is an inevitable bar. No right can ever vest. The result is very different where the condition is subsequent. There equity will interpose and relieve against the forfeiture upon the principle of compensation, where that evidence: December 15, 1893, Frederick Uhen, under whom both plaintiff and defendants claim title, conveyed to Thomas Boyle the 33-foot strip of land across a portion of section 34, town 3, range 19, described in the complaint, out of a tract of land owned by him, for a right of way for a railway track leading from the main track of the Chicago, Milwaukee, & St. Paul Railway to certain ice houses owned by the grantee and his associates. The conveyance was made upon conditions expressed therein as follows: "Provided that said second party inclose said premises herein conveyed with a good, legal, and sufficient fence, and forever maintain the same, and provide a suitable crossing in said strip at a point to be designated by the first parties, and to maintain gates in the fences at such crossing, and to build and maintain suitable culverts at the points where ditches now cross said premises, then this deed shall remain of full force and effect; but if at any time said grantee shall suffer the above conditions to be broken, then said described premises shall revert back to said first parties, their heirs or assigns." Thereafter Boyle leased to the defendant railway company the center 17 feet of said strip of land, and contracted with such company to construct a spur track thereon for the exclusive use of himself and his associates in the operation of their ice industry. A track was constructed accordingly, Boyle and his associates preparing the roadbed and the railway company furnishing the ties and rails principle can be applied, giving damages, if damages should be given, and the proper amount can be ascertained. Davis v. Gray, 16 Wall. 203, 21 L. ed. 447.

Where a person cannot be compensated in damages it is against conscience to relieve. Precedent conditions must be literally performed, and equity will never vest an estate when, by means of a condition precedent, it will not vest at law; but, since conditions subsequent are to divest an estate there, it is otherwise where there can be compensation in damages. Clark v. Lucy, 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 213, pl. 4.

In Popham v. Bampfelfeld, 1 Vern. 83, the lord chancellor, by way of argument, says conditions precedent must be literally performed. Equity will never vest an estate where, by reason of conditions precedent, it would not vest at law. But of conditions subsequent, which are to divest an estate, there it is otherwise; yet of conditions subsequent there is this difference to be observed,—when the court can in any case compensate a party in damages for nonprecise performance of the contract, there it is just and equitable to relieve, but where the party cannot be compensated in damages, it will be against conscience to relieve.

And the same doctrine is announced on rehearing in 1 Vern. 167.

Upon examination of the concrete cases, however, it will be observed that the relief was refused, not so much because the condition was precedent, as because it would be inequitable to grant the relief.

Thus, in Powell v. Pellett, 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 209, pl. 3, a father undertook to pay plaintiff a certain amount within two years on condition that the plaintiff marry his daughter and settle a certain amount upon her. The marriage took place, and the daughter died within the two years, and plaintiff brought suit to enforce the payment. The settlement not having been made, the court held that it was in plaintiff's power to have entitled himself to the payment when he pleased by settling the jointure, and, not having done so, he was not entitled to the aid of equity upon the ground that the act which he undertook to perform was prevented by an act of God.

And a similar ruling was made, with only slight changes in the facts, in Feversham v. Watson, 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 210, Freem. Ch. 35. 69 L. R. A.

So where an agreement for a daughter's portion on her marriage was made on condition that the husband should, within two years, settle upon her a certain jointure, and she died within the two years without the jointure having been settled, it was held that the husband could not be relieved from breach of the condition. Vermuden v. Read, 1 Vern. 69.

So in Wood v. Ingram, 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 211, pl. 3, a woman having lands of inheritance married and agreed to settle these lands upon increase of her jointure from £250 to £450. Her husband died before the agreement was carried out, and she remarried, and, upon bill to compel performance of the agreement to increase the jointure, the lord keeper held that, not having complied with the condition, she could not be relieved in equity.

So where an estate was granted to a lady in case, within three years after the death of testator, she should marry a certain person named, and upon her failure to do so then over, Lord Holt held that equity would not relieve a breach of the condition, since it was a condition precedent, the nature of which is such that no relief can be had upon failure to perform it. He says: Shall equity give her the estate although married to another person? This is not within the words or equity of the will, but in express contradiction to both of them. If the estate indeed be upon a condition subsequent, equity may interpose where the substance is performed, though not in every matter literally performed; but, where it is in no point performed, it can never help. Bertie v. Faulkland, 3 Ch. Cas. 129, 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 110, pl. 10, Freem. Ch. 220.

In the report in Holt, 230, he is reported as saying that, in cases of conditions subsequent that are to defeat an estate, these are not favored at law. And, if the condition becomes impossible by the act of God, the estate should not be defeated or forfeited; and a court of equity may relieve and prevent the divesting of the estate, but cannot relieve to give an estate that never vested.

In the report in 12 Mod. 182, Lord Holt is reported as saying that the nature of a condition precedent is this,—that it must be performed before ever the estate can vest, and, if the performance of the condition become impossible by the act of God, yet the estate shall not accrue; so if it become impossible by any other inevitable accident. The relief in and putting the same in place. While such work was in progress, Uhen made complaint to Boyle and others engaged therein, because no provision was being made for putting in culverts. No attention was paid to his complaints other than to suggest to him that culverts were not necessary. Ditches were made on either side of the strip, and the cross drainage ditches, agreed to be preserved by culverts under the track, were connected with such side ditches so that the water would flow through them off from plaintiff's land. There was delay in putting in the farm crossing, but it was finally put in and accepted. Soon after the construction of the spur track the rights of Boyle in the land, by mesne conveyances, became vested in the defendant ice company. The condition in respect to fencing the land was never performed. Uhen made complaint as to that on several occasions, at one time giving notice that the title conveyed by him could be reclaimed because of neglect to build the fence. During the summer of 1899, upon Uhen complaining about the failure to build the fence, he was promised that the premises should be inclosed after harvest time of that year. He acquiesced in that. In November, thereafter, plaintiff became the owner of the land, by conveyance from Uhen, out of which he conveyed the premises in controversy. Thereafter, with knowledge of and without protest from Uhen, the defendants fenced that part of such premises leased to the railway company. Thereafter, on January 4, 1900, Uhen went upon the strip equity has always been in case of breach of subsequent conditions which determine the estate. And the lord chancellor suggests that, if the remainder-man had done any unfair act to hinder the marriage, he being to have advantage by it, equity might have relieved.

In the report in 2 Vern. 333, Lord Chief Justice Treby says that the case was not one of forfeiture, but the case of a gift to two persons in case they should do a certain thing which they were at liberty to do or not at their pleasure, and that the fact that the lady was willing did not entitle her to the estate. Neither was there any latitude left for her to choose another man. It is not a case in compensation.

In 1 Salk. 231, it is stated that this decree was reversed on appeal by the House of Lords.

Equity will not relieve a railroad company which has obtained permission to use tide lands for a depot on condition that it fill them up from the result of the breach of the condition, merely on the ground that it had not the means of complying with the condition. New York & N. E. R. Co. v. Providence, 16 R. I. 746, 19 Atl. 759. And the court further held that the right of the railroad company to continue to occupy the land cannot be decreed by the court upon making compensation to the city for the cost of the filling after many years' default, saying: We fail to see how, after a default of thirty years, we can reinstate a right to occupy land upon a money payment when the right originally depended upon something different, and thus oust the city and its tenants of possession and improvements.

Where, by resolutions of public commissioners, lands for the manufacture of salt are set apart to applicant, and it is provided that the occupant shall have four years in which to complete the works; but that the location shall be void unless the works shall have been commenced and one tenth of the capital expended within a year,—the designation of the time is a condition precedent, upon noncompliance with which all estate of the occupant ceases; and equity will not relieve him from the forfeiture. Parmelee v. Oswego & S. R. Co. 7 Barb. 618, Affirmed in 6 N. Y. 74.

And in application of the idea that no relief can be had for breach of a condition precedent the Texas court of civil appeals held that, where vendees of real estate are let into possession under a contract by which the title is to be conveyed to them when one half the purchase money is paid, the payment of the purchase money is a condition precedent to the vesting of any equity; and equity will not interfere to relieve them from a forfeiture for failure to comply with the condition. Pell v. Chandos (Tex. Civ. App.) 27 S. W. 48.

Of course, if the vendees made no offer to comply, they had no rights under the contract; but, if the default was merely failure to make the payments within a specified time, there is no doubt that equity might relieve if compensation could be made to the vendor.

In Gates v. Parmly, 93 Wis. 294, 66 N. W. 253, 67 N. W. 739, which was in the nature of an action to compel specific performance of a contract to purchase real estate, and to be relieved from the forfeiture for breach of a condition precedent, the court says equity will relieve against a forfeiture, even where it is in the form of a condition precedent, where it is obtained merely as a security for the payment of money or the performance of any act where failure to perform it may be compensated in money.

But in Donnelly v. Eastes, 94 Wis. 390, 69 N. W. 157, the court asserted that it had no power to relieve from a forfeiture for breach of a condition precedent, performance of which was necessary to vest the estate. The court says that, if one agrees that full performance of all obligations on his part shall be requisite to the enjoyment by him of any benefit under the contract, he is presumed to know the legal effect of assuming such an obligation, to have done it for a consideration, and must abide the consequences of it, and not expect, by the aid of a court of equity, to shift the burden on to others which he has voluntarily agreed to bear himself.

Where a compensation can be made in case of breach of a condition precedent, equity will relieve. For where it is the clear intent of a person that the estate shall go to another, and it is limited in case he performs a condition, if the performance is prevented by act of God, or other accident, it is highly equitable. If an adequate recompense can be made to him for whose benefit the condition was designed, that relief shall be given whereby the whole intent of the party may take effect. But where that matter lies not in compensation, relief has never been given. Harvey v. Aston, 2 Comyns, Rep. 726, Reversing Cas. t. Talb. 212.

of land for the purpose of reclaiming title thereto for nonperformance of the conditions of the deed. He then declared in the presence of several persons the purpose of his entry, and constructed fences across the ends of the strip so as to exclude all comers therefrom. He then conveyed the land to plaintiff, who thereafter removed the side fences of the 17-foot strip, making the entire 33-foot strip a part of her inclosure. The railroad company did not construct, operate, or intend the spur track for public use, but established it for the exclusive use of the owners of the ice industry served by it.

At the close of the trial the plaintiff's attorneys requested the court to find facts in accordance with the foregoing, presenting written findings to that effect, which request was refused. A decision was rendered for defendants, the findings of fact being to the effect that the spur track was constructed and operated for public purposes; that the defendant ice company was the owner and entitled to the possession of the premises in dispute; that the railway track was owned and operated by the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Company, and was on the premises by license of the ice company; that plaintiff was not entitled to any compensation from the defendants for the land, or for the use thereof, and had not suffered and would not suffer any injury by reason of any acts of the defendants or either of them.

So where a man directed that claims which he had against the husband of his niece should be released on condition that, within two months from testator's decease, the husband should release all claims in or to the property which his wife should receive under testator's will, it was claimed that the execution of the release was a condition precedent, failure to comply with which would destroy his rights under the will. But the court says, where the property is given over on failure to comply with a condition precedent, equity will not relieve. The rule is otherwise where there is no bequest over, and the parties can be placed in the same situation as if the condition had been strictly complied with. Hollinrake v. Lister, 1 Russ. Ch. 500.

In Taylor v. Popham, 1 Bro. Ch. 168, an annuity was granted to testator's son on condition that he should, within three months, release all demands against testator's estate. He refused to sign a release tendered, and brought suit for an account, and the court said that this raised the question whether he had forfeited the annuity, and that this led to the common-law rule as to conditions precedent. If the court can put the parties in the same situation as if the condition had been performed, it will never suffer a forfeiture to attach. And, since the release could yet be signed, the forfeiture was saved.

One cannot secure relief from the failure to perform conditions precedent, unless it is evident that the stipulation as to forfeiture is in the nature of security. Nelson v. Stephens, 107 Ws. 129, 82 N. W. 163.

See also cases in subd. III. b, 2, 3, infra.

III. Forfeiture will be relieved when compensation can be made.

a. In general.

The first matter which is usually considered when an application is made for relief from a forfeiture is the possibility of making compensation in case relief is granted. In case compensation is possible, the court will favor the suit, while, if it is not, no favor will be shown. The mere fact that compensation can be made is not always sufficient to secure relief, because the plaintiff may not show himself to be worthy of equitable relief, or there may be matters of estoppel or other counter equities to be considered.

69 L. R. A.

Where there was a breach of a provision in the deed that the grantee should pay to the grantor a certain amount on a specified day in each year, the court held that, where compensation could be made in money, courts of equity would relieve against forfeitures, and compel the party to accept a reasonable compensation in money. Gallagher v. Herbert, 117 Ill. 160, 7 N. E. 511.

So where a mother devised lands to her executors to pay a certain amount to her son, provided that, if his father did not release the goods in a certain house, then the devise should be void and go to the executors; and the father refused to make the release, whereupon the son came into equity for relief,—the father then offered to give the release, but the executors claimed a forfeiture. The lord chancellor gave the relief, saying that it was a standing rule of the court that a forfeiture should not bind where a thing may be done afterwards, and compensation be made for it. Cage v. Russel, 2 Vent. 352.

On the other hand, if compensation cannot be made, that is an end of the case.

So in Clark v. Barnard, 108 U. S. 436, 27 L. ed. 780, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 878, which involved relief against a forfeiture or penalty under a bond, and not the forfeiture of an estate, the court said that courts of equity will not interfere in cases of forfeiture for the breach of covenants and conditions where there cannot be any just compensation decreed for the breach.

And in Hukill v. Guffey, 37 W. Va. 425, 16 S. E. 544, the court, although holding that the question was not before it because the question of forfeiture was res judicata, said that equity will not relieve against forfeiture for breach of covenants in a lease where compensation cannot be made. This applies to covenants for repairing, insuring, and doing other specific acts.

b. Forfeiture to secure payment of money.

1. General rule.

If a forfeiture of an estate is provided for merely to enforce the prompt payment of money, equity will regard it as in some sense simply a provision in terrorem, and, if interest will compensate for the want of prompt payment, it will permit the payment to be made when

Messrs. Louis H. Rohr and John B. Simmons, for appellant:

The conditions in the deed to Boyle regarding the building and maintenance of fences, a farm crossing, and culverts for the farm ditches were true "conditions subsequent."

1 Jones, Real Prop. § 638; Gallagher v. Herbert, 117 Ill. 160, 7 N. E. 511; Hoyt v. Ketcham, 54 Conn. 60, 5 Atl. 606; Blanchard v. Detroit, L. & L. M. R. Co. 31 Mich. 43, 18 Am. Rep. 142.

The addition of a clause of re-entry makes it unmistakable that a condition was intended.

1 Jones, Real Prop. § 638; Cornelius v. Den, 26 N. J. L. 376; Ellis v. Kyger, 90 Mo. 600, 3 S. W. 23; Pepin County v. Prindle, relief is asked, and the forfeiture thereby saved.

Equity may relieve against a forfeiture for nonpayment of money within a time fixed, if the amount is tendered together with interest. Beecher v. Beecher, 43 Conn. 556.

Equity will relieve against forfeiture of a leasehold where it has been incurred by neglecting to pay a certain sum of money the interest on which can be calculated with certainty, and the landlord thereby compensated for the inconvenience he may sustain by the tenant's withholding payment. Bacon v. Western Furniture Co. Wilson Super. Ct. (Ind.) 567.

In Ritchie v. Kansas, N. & D. R. Co. 55 Kan. 36, 39 Pac. 718, which was an action to recover land conveyed to a railroad company for failure to maintain a depot on it, the court adopts the following statement of the law: Wherever a forfeiture is inserted merely to secure the payment of money or the performance of some act or the enjoyment of some right or benefit, equity regards such payment, performance, or enjoyment as the real or principal intent of the instrument, and the forfeiture merely as an accessory, and will therefore relieve the obligor from the forfeiture whenever the actual damages sustained by the other party can be adequately compensated.

So an agreement between purchasers of real estate that, upon the failure of one to pay his share of the purchase price, his interest in the land shall vest in the other, is a provision for a forfeiture against which equity will relieve. Asher v. Pendleton, 6 Gratt. 628.

So, where a contract for sale of land provides that default in making deferred payments at the day specified shall work a forfeiture of the estate, giving the vendor the right to repossess himself of the estate, the provision will be regarded as in the nature of a penalty, from which equity will relieve. Re Dagenham (Thames) Dock Co. L. R. 8 Ch. 1022.

Where a mortgage is held to leave a conditional title in the mortgagor until breach of condition, courts of equity look upon provisions for forfeiture for nonpayment of the amounts due as in the nature of a penalty, and give relief accordingly. This is done by allowing the mortgagor to redeem the land on equitable terms at any time before the right to do so is barred by foreclosure. These courts, looking at the substance of the transaction rather than its form, and with a view to giving effect

61 Wis. 309, 21 N. W. 254; Horner v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 38 Wis. 165.

By the terms of the deed it is to remain in force provided the grantee does the thing stipulated for; but, if not, the land is to revert. The absence of an express covenant to perform has been held to furnish proof that a condition subsequent is intended.

1 Jones, Real Prop. § 639; Brown v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (Iowa) 82 N. W. 1003; Richter v. Richter, 111 Ind. 456, 12 N. E. 698; Blanchard v. Detroit, L. & L. M. R. Co. 31 Mich. 43, 18 Am. Rep. 142; Gilchrist v. Foxen, 95 Wis. 438, 70 N. W. 585.

Acceptance of a deed and possession of land thereunder bind the grantee to the conditions contained therein.

Bishop v. Douglass, 25 Wis. 696; Leach to the real intentions of the parties, hold that the mortgage was a mere security for the payment of the debt; that the mortgagor was the real beneficial owner of the land, subject to the encumbrance of the mortgage; that the interest of the mortgagee was simply a lien and encumbrance on the land, rather than an estate in it. Equity courts, in allowing a redemption after a forfeiture of the main estate, uniformly require the mortgagee to reconvey to the mortgagor. Barrett v. Hinckley, 124 Ill. 32, 7 Am. St. Rep. 331, 14 N. E. 863.

In Sanborn v. Woodman, 5 Cush. 36, which involved the power of a court of law to stay proceedings upon a writ of entry to recover possession of property because of breach of condition to indemnify the grantor against liability upon a mortgage, the court says that, where the forfeiture is designed to secure the payment of a sum of money, a court of equity will grant relief on payment of the money secured, with interest.

In Atkins v. Chilson, 11 Met. 112, the court, in considering the question whether or not a court of law had power to stay a writ of entry for alleged forfeiture of a lease, said: That a court of equity would grant relief in a case like this is not questioned, and cannot be denied. The true foundation of equitable relief in cases of forfeiture is limited to such cases as admit of compensation according to the original intent of the parties. In all cases where the forfeiture is designed to secure the payment of a certain sum of money, a court of equity will grant relief on payment of the money secured, with interest.

But in Hancock v. Carlton, 6 Gray, 39, it is stated that how far and under what circumstances courts of equity will give relief in cases of forfeiture by reason of nonperformance of conditions subsequent seems to be a vexed question in the English courts. Certainly the broad ground of giving relief in all cases where a forfeiture has been occasioned by a nonpayment of money at the stipulated time, upon an offer to pay the same and the accruing interest, has not been fully sanctioned. And the statement of Story on Equity, § 1323, is cited to the effect that the present English doctrine is that in all cases of forfeiture for the breach of any covenant other than a covenant to pay rent no relief will be granted in equity, unless upon the ground of

v. Rains, 149 Ind. 152, 48 N. E. 858; 6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 505, subs. 4.

Mere breach of the condition does not determine the estate, notwithstanding the deed expressly provides for reverter to the grantor, but it will continue until defeated by re-entry or some equivalent act.

1 Jones. Real Prop. §§ 708, 712; 1 Sharswood & B. Real Prop. 143; Little Falls Water-Power Co. v. Mahan, 69 Minn. 253, 72 N. W. 69; Cross v. Carson, 8 Blackf. 138, 44 Am. Dec. 754; Ellis v. Kyger, 90 Mo. 600, 3 S. W. 23.

The usual way of taking advantage of a condition subsequent is by an entry made for that purpose.

2 Washb. Real Prop. 14; 1 Jones, Real Prop. §§ 712, 715, 716; 1 Sharswood & B.

accident, mistake, fraud, or surprise, where the breach is capable of compensation.

As appears from the discussion in subd. IV., infra, this question as to what part fraud, accident, or mistake plays in the granting or withholding of relief is a vexed one; but, from the cases collected in this main division, it clearly appears that, so far at least as the American courts are concerned, where the forfeiture is provided merely to secure the payment of money, relief will be granted although neither of those special grounds of equity intervention is shown.

2. Grant or devise on condition of support.

Within the rule that equity will relieve if compensation can be made, are the cases in which property is granted or devised on condition that support be furnished to the grantor or some other person during life. In most such cases the condition is inserted merely to secure the prompt payment of money, and, except in cases of peculiar hardship, equity will not permit a forfeiture merely for failure to make the payments promptly.

Where a deed in escrow is to be delivered to the grantee upon his performance of a condition as to support of the grantor, equity will relieve from a breach of the condition, although it is a condition precedent, if it is equitable, under the circumstances, that relief shall be granted. Chipman v. Thompson, Walk. Ch. (Mich.) 405.

Where land was conveyed on condition of the payment of quarterly instalments to the grantor, the court held that failure to pay did not work an absolute forfeiture, but that the failure must be taken advantage of by the grantor; but added that the circumstances are such that a court of equity would have relieved against the forfeiture, even if the condition had been absolute. Berryman v. Schumaker, 67 Tex. 314, 3 S. W. 46.

A deed upon condition to maintain the grantor, involving a forfeiture upon failure to perform, was held, in Spaulling v. Hallenbeck, 39 Barb. 79, to be intended as a security in the nature of a penalty for the performance. The court said it was a condition subsequent, and, upon failure to fulfil its requirements, the grantor had a right to re-enter upon the premises. If the grantee refused to comply with these conditions he forfeited his estate. It was 60 L. R. A.

Real Prop. 143; Cross v. Carson, 8 Blackf. 138, 44 Am. Dec. 742; Bowen v. Bowen, 18 Conn. 535; Hubbard v. Hubbard, 97 Mass. 188, 93 Am. Dec. 75; Frost v. Butler, 7 Me. 225, 22 Am. Dec. 199; Gilchrist v. Foxen, 95 Wis. 428, 70 N. W. 585; Horney v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 38 Wis. 165.

The present action was brought to protect plaintiff's possession after re-entry by her grantor, and after conveyance and delivery of possession by him to her. She did not and never intended to bring an action in equity to declare or enforce a forfeiture.

Not only is it well settled that a forfeiture cannot be enforced in that form of action (Lave v. Hyde, 39 Wis. 345; Mills v. Evansville Seminary, 47 Wis. 362, 2 N. W. 550; Clark v. Drake, 3 Pinney [Wis.]

the penalty which he consented to accept as a condition of the grant. In all such cases equity will relieve.

In Shade v. Oldroyd, 39 Kan. 313, 18 Pac. 198, a conveyance had been made in consideration of the yearly payment of a certain sum to the grantor during life, upon condition that a failure to pay at the time and in the manner specified would forfeit all right and interest in the premises. Payments were not made when due, and forfeiture was declared, and ejectment was brought to recover possession of the property. There was judgment for defendants, and the court, without discussing the question how the defense could be made in that form of action, affirms the judgment, stating that this was a case in which a strict forfeiture could not be insisted upon, the condition being one for the payment of money only, and all preceding payments having been made without much regard to the precise time of their maturity. The court, in the headnote, says that equity will not enforce such a forfeiture on slight grounds; but, since the action was at law for possession of the property, and not in equity for a forfeiture, it is difficult to see on what theory the court acted.

In Bethlehem v. Annls, 40 N. H. 34, 77 Am. Dec. 700, it is intimated that relief may be afforded by equity for breach of a condition to furnish life support, upon the ordinary principles by which parties are relieved from other penalties.

In Donnelly v. Eastes, 94 Wis. 390, 69 N. W. 157, a conveyance of a farm in consideration of support of the grantor during life was held to create a condition subsequent; and the court held that, even if the title had reverted, under the terms of the deed, upon breach of the condition, the court was not powerless to relieve from the consequences thereof.

In Messersmith v. Messersmith, 22 Mo. 369, the court held that, where a son to whom his mother had deeded land on condition that he support her for life died before she did, but there was property enough to comply with the condition, equity would relieve from the forfeiture. The court says the ground of equitable interference is that we ought to presume the object of entering into the contract was its fulfilment, and not an infliction of injury on one side, nor the acquisition of a collateral advantage on the other; that, when this object is frustrated, the intention of the parties will 228; 1 Jones, Real Prop. § 731; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1319), but it is equally well settled that only the grantor can take advantage of a condition subsequent, and that until re-entry he has no interest in the land which he can convey; so that Mrs. Maginnis's right depends entirely upon the title having reverted by act of her grantor before the conveyance to her.

2 Devlin, Deeds, § 969; Martindale, Conv. § 124; 1 Jones, Real Prop. §§ 708, 723, 725; Hoyt v. Ketcham, 54 Conn. 60, 5 Atl. 603; Upton v. Corrigan, 151 N. Y. 143, 37 L. R. A. 794, 45 N. E. 359; Ruch v. Rock Island, 97 U. S. 693, 24 L. ed. 1101; Boone v. Clark, 129 Ill. 406, 5 L. R. A. 276, 21 N. E. 850; Dcn ex dem. Southard v. Central R. Co. 26 N. J. L. 21.

There being no time specified in the deed be best carried out by substituting an equivalent in its stead, and not by enforcing a recovery which is excessive in value and different in nature; and relief, we believe, is never denied where the breach is accidental and without fault, and admits of compensation.

In Austin v. Raymond, 9 Vt. 420, a father granted his farm to his son, taking back a mortgage to secure support. The son gave a second mortgage upon the property, became insolvent, and left the country. The father thereupon attempted to enforce a forfeiture of the farm for breach of the condition of the mortgage, but the court held that, in favor of the second mortgagee, it would allow him to make compensation for the support, and retain his interest in the property.

But in Dunklee v. Adams, 20 Vt. 415, 50 Am. Dec. 44, the court held that relief will not be granted in equity against forfeiture for breach of a condition requiring the grantee to furnish personal care and attention to the grantor. In such case the time of the performance is of the very essence of the contract. It is impossible to put the covenantee in the precise situation he would have been in if the condition had been performed. The court distinguishes Austin v. Raymond, 9 Vt. 420, on the ground that that was not a bill for relief against a forfeiture.

In Henry v. Tupper, 29 Vt. 358, the court considered that the question had not been settled by either the Austin or Dunklee case, and proceeded to examine it de novo. The question in that case arose upon a deed with a defeasance clause by which it was to become void in case the grantor, inter alia, furnished support to the grantee. The court said that in such cases relief should be afforded with more reserve and circumspection than in ordinary cases of collateral duties. And, although we are not prepared to say that it must appear that in all cases the failure arises from surprise, or accident, or mistake, we certainly should not grant relief when the omission was wilful and wanton, or attended with suffering or serious inconvenience to the obligee, or there is any good ground to apprehend a recurrence of the failure to perform. The court says there are cases where the default is of so gross a nature that not to afford relief will be to make the court almost partaker in the for performance of the conditions, the rule prevails that they must be performed within a reasonable time.

1 Jones, Real Prop. § 682; 6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 505; Ellis v. Kyger, 90 Mo. 600, 3 S. W. 23.

Demand of performance is unnecessary, except where the act to be performed depends upon some previous or contemporaneous act to be done by the grantor.

1 Smith, Lead. Cas. 8th ed. 132; 1 Sharswood & B. Real Prop. § 144; Langley v. Chapin, 134 Mass. 82; Plumb v. Tubbs, 41 N. Y. 442; Liebrand v. Otto, 56 Cal. 242; Whitton v. Whitton, 38 N. H. 127, 75 Am. Dec. 163; Ellis v. Elkhart Car Works Co. 97 Ind. 247; Royal v. Aultman & T. Co. 116 Ind. 424, 2 L. R. A. 526, 19 N. E. 202.

A condition subsequent is not waived by offense. But, on the other hand, there are cases where, through mere inadvertence, a technical breach may have occurred, by reason of which an estate of great value is likely to be forfeited, where the collateral service was not of a great value and its absence is not attended with serious inconvenience to the obligee. Not to afford relief in such case would be a discredit to the enlightened jurisprudence of the English nation, and those American states which have attempted to follow the same model.

So equity will not relieve against breach of a condition in a deed to support the grantor and his wife during life, where the breach consists of profane abuse and heartless neglect. Howell v. Jewett, 69 Me. 293.

3. Grant or devise on condition of payment of money.

Such conditions are usually treated as mere securities, and the forfeiture is saved if compensation is made.

Where land was devised on condition that the devisee should pay a certain sum to the heir at law in yearly payments, the heir entered for nonpayment of one of the instalments, and claimed that equity ought not to relieve, since to do so would be in dishonor of the heir. But it was held that the entry was only to enforce payment, and that equity could give interest for the sum from the time payment was due, and would relieve. Grimston v. Bruce, 1 Salk. 156, 2 Vern. 594.

Where land was conveyed in trust upon condition that, if the grantor's son raised a portion for his younger children within six months after the death of the grantor, the property was to be conveyed to him; and the son neglected to raise the portion, and died.—In a controversy between his grantees and parties claiming a forfeiture, the court held that it looked upon the condition precedent as in the nature of a penalty, and would regard the intent of the trust so that, upon compliance with the condition, relief would be given to the grantees of the son. Wallis v. Crimes, 1 Ch. Cas. 89.

Where land was devised to testator's son, charged with an annual rent to testator's widow during life, and with the payment of a valuation to be put on it after the widow's death mere indulgence or silent acquiescence in grantee's failure to perform, unless there is shown some element of estoppel.

1 Jones, Real Prop. § 705; 2 Devlin, Deeds, § 959; 6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 508; Royal v. Aultman & T. Co. 116 Ind. 424, 2 L. R. A. 526; 19 N. E. 202; Pepin County v. Prindle, 61 Wis. 301, 21 N. W. 254; Rowell v. Jewett, 71 Me. 408; Upington v. Corrigan, 151 N. Y. 143, 37 L. R. A. 794, 45 N. E. 359.

When made re-entry upon these premises in due legal form. Such act of re-entry invested him with the full legal title to the premises.

Jones, Real Prop. § 716; Brickett v. Spofford, 14 Gray, 514; Hancock v. Carlton, 6 Gray, 60; Bowen v. Bowen, 18 Conn. 535; O'Brien v. Doe, 6 Ala. 787; Dugan v.

Thomas, 79 Me. 221, 9 Atl. 354; Barker v. Cobb, 36 N. H. 344; Gilchrist v. Fozen, 95 Wis. 428, 70 N. W. 585.

And, having such title, he could convey the premises to another.

Horner v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 38 Wis. 165; Langley v. Chapin, 134 Mass. 82.

It is not in general necessary that damage should ensue to a grantor in order that he may avail himself of the breach of a condition subsequent.

Gray v. Blanchard, 8 Pick. 289; Pepin County v. Prindle, 61 Wis. 309, 21 N. W. 254; 2 Washb. Real Prop. § 17, p. 19; Clapp v. Wilder, 176 Mass. 332, 50 L. R. A. 123, 57 N. E. 602.

Conditions subsequent are as binding upon railroad corporations as upon natural persons.

and paid by the devisee for the benefit of the residuary estate, and the devisee died without having paid the valuation, whereupon the residuary devisees sought to obtain possession of the land, the court said if the provision was a condition equity would relieve the devisee from a forfeiture by his performance of the condition by paying the money, with interest, from the date of the valuation. Hart v. Ho-miller, 20 Pa. 248.

Where an estate was devised on condition that a certain sum should be paid to each of the daughters of the grantor, and the devisee refused to pay the money for three years, and then came in and tendered payment, the chancellor held that, although, in strictness of law, the estate was forfeited on nonpayment of the money, yet, this was but a security for money, which having been tendered, there was no damage, and so the forfeiture was saved. Wheeler v. Whithall. Freem. Ch. 9, 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 360.

In Hayard v. Angell, 1 Vern. 223, where the question was whether the death of one of the daughters before signing the release defeated a provision of a portion for testator's three daughters if they should release certain lands to his heir, the lord keeper said that, in all cases where the matter lies in compensation by the condition precedent or subsequent, he thought there ought to be relief.

Upon devise of testator's real estate to his kinsmen upon payment of a certain sum to each of testator's daughters within a specified time, the money was not paid, and the heirs at law entered; but equity relieved the devisee notwithstanding the devise was in disherison of the heir. Barnardiston v. Fane, 2 Vern. 366.

Where land was devised in trust for the use of testator's daughter for life with remainder to her children, provided she pay a certain sum to testator's executors within a specified time; and there was a failure to pay,—the court granted relief to the remainder-men on the ground that it was clearly a devise on condition subsequent, in which compensation could be made. Carpenter v. Westcott. 4 K. I. 225.

Where real estate is devised on condition that money be paid by the devisee to another within a specified time, equity will relieve a forfeiture for failure to comply with the condition within the time, since compensation can be made. Walker v. Wheeler, 2 Conn. 299.

And that case was followed in Bowen v. Bowen, 20 Conn. 127.

So where a deed was given upon condition that it should be void upon failure of the grantee to pay a bond within a certain time, which was permitted to elapse without making the payment, it was held that equity had jurisdiction of a suit to redeem. Rogan v. Walker, 1 Wis. 527. The court applied the rule that equity will relieve against a condition subsequent whenever compensation can be made.

So, where an estate devised on condition of the payment of certain debts of the testator in relief of the surety is sold for the payment of such debts, the surplus will be decreed to the devisees, and not to testator's heirs, for the reason that equity will relieve against the forfeiture, full compensation having been made. Thompson v. Whipple, 5 R. I. 144.

Where land was devised upon condition that testator's debts and legacies should be paid by the devisee within two months after the death of testator's wife; and the heir entered for breach of the condition in the failure to pay certain legacies within the time; whereupon the assignee of the devisee sought relief in equity,—the reporter states that the court, upon view of precedents in cases of like nature, was clear of opinion to give relief to the plaintiffs notwithstanding the forfeiture. Underwood v. Swain, 1 Rep. in Ch. 161.

In Bland v. Middleton, 2 Ch. Cas. 1, testator devised his land to his daughter, but provided that in case his son should pay her a certain amount by a day named he should have the land. The money was not paid, and the daughter sold the land. There is nothing in the report of the case to show the nature of the action, but it is stated that it was decreed against the vendee, he paying the money. That would seem to imply that the action was against him for specific performance, and that the condition was held to be no defense. However, the report continues: "He took it but in the nature of a security;" although it was objected that "this is a contingent devise to the son on payment," which would indicate that the controversy was between the son and the grantee. The reporter appends a query as to the correct-

Horner v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 38 Wis. 165; Schlesinger v. Kansas City & S. R. Co. 152 U. S. 444, 38 L. ed. 507, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 647; Indianapolis, P. & C. R. Co. v. Hood, 66 Ind. 580; Taylor v. Cedar Rapids & St. P. R. Co. 25 Iowa, 371; Owensboro & N. R. Co. v. Griffith, 92 Ky. 137, 17 S. W. 277; Howell v. Long Island R. Co. 37 Hun, 381.

Breach followed by re-entry not only defeats the title of the original grantee, but avoids all intermediate rights acquired by third parties.

Gilchrist v. Foxen, 95 Wis. 428, 70 N. W. 585; Schlesinger v. Kansas City & S. R. Co. 152 U. S. 444, 38 L. ed. 507, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 647; Barker v. Cobb, 36 N. H. 344.

Land could not be taken under the right of eminent domain for such a track as this.

ness of the decision, and the report of the case is such as to make it of little value.

Where a man devised his land to his oldest daughter upon condition that within six months she should pay certain sums to her sisters, on default of which the second should have the same privilege, and so on, and the oldest did not make the payment within six months, the court held that it would enlarge the time of payment beyond the six months, even in case of a condition precedent. Woodman v. Blake, 2 Vern. 222. The reporter, in a note, states that this case appears to have been reversed by the House of Lords January 14, 1691.

And in an earlier case it had been held that, where a testator devised his land to his oldest daughter "if she shall pay a certain amount to her sisters in six months, and, if she shall not, then the others in turn to have the same privilege," time is of the essence of the condition, and equity will not enlarge it. Maston v. Willoughby, 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 211, 5 Vin. Abr. 93, pl. 12.

And where a father made a voluntary settlement on his eldest son, with a provision that, if he did not pay a certain sum to the second son at the age of twenty-one, the estate, both in law and in equity, should cease; and the eldest son did not comply with the condition, whereupon the father made a new settlement,—the court refused to relieve, because, the settlement being merely voluntary, the father might make such conditions as he thought fit Longdale v. Longdale, 1 Vern. 456.

4. Nonpayment of rent.

Perhaps the most familiar instance of equitable relief is its prevention of a landlord's attempted termination of the lease for nonpayment of rent.

Relief may be granted for breach of covenant to pay rent, although the rent is a rack-rent equal to the value of the land. Taylor v. Knight, 4 Vin. Abr. chap. Y, pl. 31, p. 406. The decision was made against the contention that the rule of relief extends only to beneficial leases, where fines have been paid or great sums laid out in improvements, so that the tenant is a sort of purchaser of part of the interest in the term. The court held that in this and the like cases the clause of re-entry is in the nature of a penalty, and therefore relievable 69 L. R. A.

Hays v. Risher, 32 Pa. 169; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Wiltse, 116 Ill. 449, 6 N. E. 49; Sholl v. German Coal Co. 118 Ill. 427, 59 Am. Rep. 379, 10 N. E. 199; Gustafson v. Hamm, 56 Minn. 334, 22 L. R. A. 565, 57 N. W. 1054; Glaessner v. Anheuser-Busch Brewing Assn. 100 Mo. 508, 13 S. W. 707; Pittsburg, W. & K. R. Co. v. Benwood Iron Works, 31 W. Va. 710, 2 L. R. A. 680, 8 S. E. 453; Re Split Rock Cable Road Co. 128 N. Y. 408, 28 N. E. 506.

Numerous cases will be found in the reports where chancery has sustained an action, after condition broken and re-entry, to remove a cloud on the title by canceling the conveyance containing such condition.

Gilchrist v. Foxen, 95 Wis. 428, 70 N. W.

in a court of equity upon making satisfaction to the injured party.

In Doe ex dem. Jersey v. Smith, 7 Price, 326. Wood, B., in observing upon the statute regulating the relation of landlord and tenant says that before its passage, even if the landlord had succeeded in making out a case for ejectment, it was the uniform practice of courts of equity to relieve the tenant against the forfeiture upon payment of the rent and costs.

Equity will relieve a lessee from forfeiture for nonpayment of rent where there is a proviso in the lease that in that case the lease shall be void, as well as where there is a mere power of re-entry. Bowser v. Colby, 1 Hare, 109.

In Garner v. Hannah, 6 Duer, 262, which was an action involving a forfeiture of a leasehold for nonpayment of rent, the court says: I take the rule to be well settled that equity will readily, where the breach is not wilful, relieve from a forfeiture, as where the stipulation is obtained as a mere security for the payment of money, and precise compensation can be made. And the tenant cannot be prejudiced as to this relief by the mere fact that judgment is obtained in favor of the landlord.

Equity will relieve against a forfeiture for nonpayment of rent, unless the defaulting party, by his inequitable conduct, has debarred himself from such relief, or the special circumstances show that the relief should not be given. Sunday Lake Min. Co. v. Wakefield. 72 Wis. 204, 39 N. W. 136.

In Kemble v. Graft, 6 Phila. 402, the court granted relief against a forfeiture for nonpayment of rent where the rent was tendered after only a few days' delay, and no injury had been done to the lessor.

Equity will relieve from the forfeiture of a lease if the tenant acts in good faith and promptly pays the rent when demanded, or before the landlord suffers loss or inconvenience from the default. Wilson v. Jones, 1 Bush, 173.

The true ground of relief from forfeiture of a leasehold for nonpayment of rent is from the original intent of the case where the forfeiture is designed only to secure money, and the court can, by way of recompense, give all that was expected or desired. The right to redeem and continue the lease, even after forfeiture and re-entry, exists whenever the lessee will pay what 585; Liebrand v. Otto, 56 Cal. 242; Birmingham v. Lesan, 76 Me. 485; Mott v. Danville Seminary, 129 Ill. 403, 21 N. E. 927; Harper v. Tidholm, 155 Ill. 370, 40 N. E. 575; McClellan v. Coffin, 93 Ind. 456; Indianapolis, P. & C. R. Co. v. Hood, 66 Ind. 580; Richter v. Richter, 111 Ind. 456, 12 N. E. 608; Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Neighbors, 51 Miss. 412; Vicksburg & M. R. Co. v. Ragsdale, 54 Miss. 200.

Part performance will not prevent forfeiture for failure to complete the performance.

Rowell v. Jewett, 71 Me. 408.

Messrs. Thomas M. Kearney and James Cavanagh, for respondents:

A court of equity will not entertain an action to aid or enforce a forfeiture.

Clark v. Drake, 3 Pinney (Wis.) 228;

Lawe v. Hyde, 39 Wis. 345; Pom. Eq. Jur. § 459; Donnelly v. Eastes, 94 Wis. 390, 69 N. W. 157; Stringer v. Keokuk, Mt. P. & N. R. Co. 59 Iowa, 277, 13 N. W. 308.

The appellant induced her grantor, not for any apparent benefit to himself, but to enable her to carry on a controversy of doubtful propriety with the railway company, to go with her legal and other representatives to the vicinity of this strip and the railway track thereon, and to join with her in tearing down and destroying fences which her grantor had recently requested defendants to construct, and in building barriers across the railway track, then in use. The manner of this entry is forbidden by the statutes of this state.

Wis. Rev. Stat. § 3360.

is due, and, if the lessor declines to receive it when tendered, the amount will be ordered paid into court, and he will be enjoined from ousting the tenant. Laurence v. Savannah, 71 Ga. 392.

A condition for forfeiture for nonpayment of rent is relieved against in equity on payment of the rent due and damages which the lessor may have sustained. Abrams v. Watson, 59 Ala. 524. And the court says further that a judgment in favor of the lessor in an action of unlawful detainer or of ejectment does not bar relief in equity, because in such action the right of possession alone is involved. The only inquiry the court can make is whether the lease has been forfeited and the lessor has the right of entry. There can be no set-off or recoupment allowed the lessee because of the lessor's breach of covenants.

Courts of equity are governed by the same rules, in the exercise of their jurisdiction to stay a judgment in ejectment for forfeiture of a leasehold estate for nonpayment of rent, as are courts of law. All arrears of rent, interest, and costs must be paid or tendered. If there be no special reason to the contrary, an injunction thereupon goes to restrain further steps to enforce the forfeiture. The grounds upon which a court of equity proceeds are, that the rent is the object of the parties, and the forfeiture only an incident intended to secure its payment; that the measure of damages is fixed and certain; and that when the principal and interest are paid the compensation is complete. Sheets v. Seiden, 7 Wall. 416, 19 L. ed. 166.

There are circumstances, however, which would make it plainly inequitable to grant relief to the lessee. The courts have used various terms in attempting to describe these circumstances.

In Little Rock Granite Co. v. Shall, 59 Ark. 405, 27 S. W. 562, the court says equity will relieve from a forfeiture for breach of condition to pay rent at a specified time upon the notion that such condition and forfeiture are intended merely as a security for the payment of money the amount of which can be ascertained, unless the violation of the contract is the result of gross negligence, or is wilful and persistent.

But the fact that the failure is wilful is not in all cases sufficient to defeat the relief.

In Mactier v. Osborn, 146 Mass. 399, 4 Am. 69 L. R. A.

St. Rep. 323, 15 N. E. 641, the court says, where there has been a breach of a covenant to pay rent equity will relieve against a forfeiture although the breach is wilful on the part of the lessee; and where there has been a breach of a covenant to perform some collateral duty, such as to repair or insure, which has been caused by accident or mistake, equity will relieve if the lessor can, by compensation or otherwise, be placed in the same condition as if the breach had not occurred.

On the other hand, it has been held that the breach of a condition giving a right of re-entry for failure to pay rent need not be wilful to prevent the interposition of equity. The court says if, through accident or mistake, or the misleading conduct of the lessor, the lessee has failed to comply with the covenants of the lease, and adequate compensation can be made for the breach, relief will be afforded, there being no wilful and culpable neglect on the part of the lessee. But it does not follow that, because equity will afford relief in a proper case where the breach of the covenant has not been wilful, it will do so in all cases where it has not been wilful. It will deny it in all cases where it has been wilful, and grant it, where it has not been wilful, in such cases as come within the domain of equitable relief. Randolph v. Mitchell (Tex. Civ. App.) 51 S. W. 297.

Noncompliance with the condition after demand is a wilful neglect from which a court of equity will not relieve. Chesterman v. Mann, 9 Hare, 206.

In Case 129, Freem. Ch. 115, it is said that where a lease is forfeited for nonpayment or rent it is a usual equity for the court to decree, upon payment of the arrears, that the lessor shall make a new lease with like covenants, but in some cases it will not; so, if there be any unreasonable covenants, and the party has once legally discharged himself of them, the court will not compel him to make the same covenants again.

It would seem that the most that can be said is that the relief will depend upon the equities of the case being refused whenever it would seem to be inequitable to grant it.

In Davis v. Thomas, 1 Russ. & M. 506, it is stated that where a tenant is given the privilege of purchasing within a certain time on condition that the rent is promptly paid, failure to comply with the condition will ter-

The conduct of Uhen in treating obligations imposed upon the grantee in the deed of the strip of land referred to as continuing obligations, after default, and in insisting upon and accepting performance up to what was practically the time of the alleged re-entry, constitutes a waiver of his right to declare the title forfeited, if such right ever existed.

2 Washb. Real Prop. 5th ed. pp. 20, 21; Fry, Spec. Perf. pp. 536, 537; Parsons, Contr. 539; Yancey v. Savannah & W. R. Co. 101 Ala. 234, 13 So. 311; Ludlow v. New York & H. R. Co. 12 Barb. 440.

Considering the conditions as conditions subsequent, instead of mere covenants, they must be construed strictly against the grantor, and forfeiture must not be enforced unless that right clearly appears from such construction.

Mills v. Evansville Seminary, 58 Wis. 135, 15 N. W. 133; 2 Devlin, Deeds, 2d ed. § 970; Hartung v. Wittie, 59 Wis. 285, 18 N. W. 175.

Marshall, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The statement of facts shows that, though there was no controversy but that Uhen conveyed the land to Boyle upon conditions subsequent which were breached, and reclaimed the property by a distinct assertion of his rights—so far as a claimer thereof was possible under the circumstances—before the conveyance to appellants, it was held that his first grantee was the owner minute his rights, and equity will not relieve him.

But where a landlord who has recovered a judgment for possession of the property for nonpayment of rent brings a suit in equity to enjoin the removal of buildings placed upon the leased property contrary to the terms of the lease, equity will, in granting him relief, impose the condition that he give the tenant an opportunity within a reasonable time to pay the rent in arrear, and re-entitle him to possession of the fixtures. Rooney v. Crary, 8 Ill. App. 329.

5. Nonrenewal of lease.

Many leases, especially in England and Ireland, are granted upon long terms in case they are renewed by the payment of a fine or stipulated sum as a premium to the landlord upon the happening of certain conditions. It appears that in many cases the tenants have failed to renew, and have continued to hold over sometimes for many years, and then, when a forfeiture was sought for breach of condition, they have applied to equity for relief. It seems to have been the practice to afford such relief in the earlier cases; but, the question having finally come before the English courts, they held that equity could not relieve, which occasioned such surprise and hardship that Parliament immediately interposed and restored the equity. It is very difficult to glean from the cases the rule which equity will apply in such cases. In Eaton v. Lyon, 3 Ves. Jr. 692, the chancellor attempted to limit the relief to cases of unavoidable accident, fraud, surprise, and ignorance, but in Maxwell v. Ward, 11 Price, 16, the lord chief baron stated that the doctrine had been too strongly stated in that case.

In Lennon v. Napper, 2 Sch. & Lef. 684, Appx., the court, in discussing the correctness of the decisions which had been made on the Irish leases, says the courts in all cases of contracts for estates in land have been in the habit of relieving when the party, from his own neglect, had suffered a lapse of time, and from that or other circumstances could not maintain an action to recover damages at law. In these leases time is not essential, for the mere object of fixing a time is to preserve the tenure, and, if the rent and fine are preserved, the substance of the contract is performed. 69 L. R. A.

So in Boyle v. Lysaght, 1 Ridgw. P. C. 384, Vern. & S. 135, it is said that where application for renewal and payment of fines had been delayed for a long period courts of equity adopted the rule of decreeing a renewal upon making compensation, which was held to be a payment of a fine for every seven years, upon the principle that the period of a life was, in law, seven years. And, upon making such payment, the tenant was entitled to relief, except in case of fraud or dereliction. And the lord chancellor, although an Englishman, enforced the rule as one of local equity.

A renewal of the lease was decreed in Freeman v. Boyle, 2 Ridgw. P. C. 69.

In O'Neill v. Jones, 1 Ridgw. P. C. 176, the renewal of a lease for lives was decreed, although there had been a failure to comply with the covenants to nominate new lives and pay a fine as fast as the lives fell in, twenty years having elapsed since the falling of the first life.

So where a long-time lease is renewable upon payment of a year's rent extraordinary at the expiration of the rental term, and, through a mistake as to the time when the payment is due, the time for making such extraordinary payment is allowed to pass, equity will relieve from the forfeiture. Selden v. Camp, 95 Va. 527, 28 S. E. 877. The court holds that, even treating the payment as a condition precedent, there is no lack of power in a court of equity to grant relief against the failure to perform punctually conditions precedent when time is not of the essence of the contract and compensation can be made. In determining the right of the lessee to renew in this class of cases, the question to be considered is, Has the party asking relief been guilty of gross negligence, or is the default relied on the result of mere negligence?

In Lennon v. Napper, 2 Sch. & Lef. 684, Appx., Ross v. Worsop, 1 Bro. P. C. 281, is stated to have granted relief as against mere neglect on the part of the tenant to apply for renewals.

Equity may relieve against forfeiture of interests under a leasehold by failure to give notice of a desire for renewal within the time specified in the lease. New York L. Ins. & T. Co. v. St. George's Church, 12 Abb. N. C. 50.

In Sweet v. Anderson, 2 Bro. P. C. 256, 5 Vin. Abr. 93, pl. 15, a tenant who had not tendered a fine for renewal of the lease according to the conditions of the mortgage, by of the property, and entitled to recover costs of the appellant. That conclusion was reached upon several grounds which we will consider.

The principal reason suggested, why it was supposed appellant was not entitled to recover, is that a court of equity will not exercise its jurisdiction to declare or aid a forfeiture, but leave the parties to their remedy at law. We are unable to perceive how that principle applies to this case. Appellant did not seek by her suit to reclaim the property in controversy. Her complaint and the evidence in support of it, at every point, repel any such idea. The pleading distinctly declared that plaintiff was the absolute owner of the property in dispute and in possession thereof. To establish the truth thereof, proof was made that her grantor, under whom all parties to the suit claimed title, sold the property upon conditions subsequent to the grantor of the ice company; that such conditions were breached, and that such grantor made re-entry for the purpose of enforcing a forfeiture of the property to him, and then made a conveyance thereof to appellant. There can be no question but that such circumstances caused the title conveyed to Boyle to revert to Uhen if his entry was rightful. Gilchrist v. Foxen, 95 Wis. 428, 70 N. W. 585. The learned circuit judge seems to have supposed, and counsel for respondents now maintain, that the evidentiary facts showing title in appellant, notwithstanding the paper title in the ice company, should reason of which he had suffered a forfeiture, was relieved by the court, but the reasons for granting the relief are not stated. But in 1 Ridgw. P. C. 185, it is said that it was not known whether the cestui que vie had been dead or not.

In Lawless v. Grogan, 1 Dru. & Walsh, 53, which was a bill to compel a renewal of an Irish lease, the court held that, when a notice by the landlord is relied on for the purpose of working a forfeiture, the service of such notice must be clearly proved so that there shall be no doubt of the intention of the landlord to insist on the forfeiture, and information of the facts which were peculiarly within the knowledge of the landlord must have been fully brought home to the tenant; and, this not appearing, the tenant was granted relief.

Where the lessor covenanted to renew the lease from term to term for a period of ninety-nine years upon prompt payment of rent, and the lessee defaulted causing the lessor to re-enter, whereupon the lessee brought a bill for a renewal, the master of the rolls said the case was to be distinguished from breach of condition to pay a fine. And, the lessee having added greatly to the value of the property and the ejectment having been brought without notice to him, the court said that, in order to refuse relief, there must be neglect on the part of the lessee, or a prejudice on the part of the lessor. No time was limited in the lease for the payment of rent. The relief was granted on condition of payment of the accruing rent together with interest and costs. Rawstorne v. Bentley, 4 Bro. Ch. 415.

But, the question having been brought before the English courts upon Irish leases, Lord Mansfield, in Kane v. Hamilton, 1 Ridgw. P. C. 180, held that no such relief could be granted where there had been great laches in complying with the covenant. He states that it is necessary, on the falling of a life, that another should be inserted in due time, and before the day of renewal has elapsed. There is no foundation for relief, for it is not like the case of a penalty. Neglect in not naming a new life deprives the landlord of the chance of a fine. And a court of equity cannot give compensation for the damages which may be sustained, it being merely eventual and uncertain.

In a note to Rawstorne v. Bentley, 4 Bro. Ch. 415, the editor cites Allen v. Hinton, 1 Fonbl. Eq. 432, note, as holding that where there has been default in making application for renewal equity will not decree relief unless the delay has been explained.

In Bateman v. Murray, 1 Ridgw. P. C. 187, Lord Thurlow, in determining the rights of a lessee who had failed to nominate new lives and pay the fines, as the lives upon which the lease depended fell in, asks: How can equity interfere? Can conscience compel a man to do what he has not agreed to do?

Upon the question of the effect of failure of the lessee to pay the stipulated fine for renewal according to the conditions of the lease, Lord Thurlow said, in Bateman v. Murray, as cited in 4 Bro. Ch. 417, courts of equity will relieve the lessee if he has lost his right by fraud of the lessor, or accident on his own part; but they will never assist him where he has lost his right by his own gross laches or neglect. Where the lessee has lost his legal right he must prove some fraud on the part of the lessor by which he was debarred from the exercise of his right; or some accident or misfortune on his own part which he could not prevent, by means whereof he was disabled from applying for a renewal at the stated times according to the terms of the lease.

In Lennon v. Napper, 2 Sch. & Lef. 684 Appx., Bateman v. Murray is explained as having involved fraud on the part of the tenant.

In Baynham v. Guy's Hospital, 3 Ves. Jr. 205, a lease depending upon lives, renewable upon payment of a fine whenever a life should cease, was held to be forfeited upon failure to comply with the condition beyond the aid of equity.

In Bayley v. Leominster, 3 Bro. Ch. 529, it appeared that a lease had been granted for three lives, renewable upon payment of the fine upon the falling in of any one life. The tenant made valuable improvements upon the property, and permitted two lives to fall in when he tendered the fine for both lives and an additional one, on the presumption that the substituted life at the termination of the first one might also have fallen in had the renewal taken place at that time. He insisted that no forfeiture is to be incurred when compensation can be made. But the lord chancellor held that plaintiff was not bound to renew upon the falling in of one life. He had his election whether to renew or not, and, having made that election by failing to renew at the specified have been pleaded. Manifestly, that is a mistake. If one sells and conveys real estate upon condition subsequent, and the title thereto thereafter reverts to him, he may then invoke judicial remedies in respect thereto, pleading his title in general terms the same as if that title were dependent upon any other circumstances. It follows that the judgment appealed from cannot be sustained upon the theory that the action was brought for the purpose of forfeiting the title to the property for nonperformance of the conditions subsequent. It was instituted upon the theory that the title had been already reclaimed and was vested in appellant, and the respondents must stand or fall on the facts in that regard.

The court further grounded the judgment time, he had lost his equity. He, however, expressly placed this ruling upon the Irish law.

Under the act of 19 & 20 Geo. III., what should be considered a reasonable time after demand in which to pay renewal fines depends upon the circumstances of each case. Jackson v. Saunders, 1 Sch. & Lef. 443.

But, after the refusal of the English House of Lords to recognize the custom of renewal, the equity was revived by the act of 19 & 20 Geo. III., chap. 30, which provided that mere negligence, in the absence of fraud, should not deprive equity of the power to grant relief. See Boyle v. Lysaght, 1 Rldgw. P. C. 384.

The tenantry act lays down the rule as to what shall be considered mere neglect. Lennon v. Napper, 2 Sch. & Lef. 684, Appx.

The equities of the case will be given weight in this class of cases.

Thus, where the delay in paying the fines and applying for renewal of the lease results from errors of the landlord in computing the amount due, equity will relieve. Freeman v. Waterford, 1 Sch. & Lef. 451, note.

But where the lessee wilfully conceals the death of one of the cestuis que vie, and acts under such concealment to his own advantage, equity will not relieve from the forfeiture. Pendred v. Griffith, 1 Bro. P. C. 314.

So in Magrath v. Muskerry, 1 Rldgw. P. C. 469, Vern. & S. 166, relief was refused where the landlord, after long neglect on the part of the tenant until all the lives upon which the lease depended had fallen in, had enforced the forfeiture and obtained possession, which he had retained for two years before an application was made for relief, which was only after the passage of the statute looking to the relief of tenants. And it was held that gross, wilful, obstinate, and contentious neglect took the case even out of the provisions of the statute.

And equity will not grant relief from forfeiture of a right to perpetual renewal of a lease by noncompliance with its conditions, where, by reason of laches and alteration of the property, it cannot be enjoyed according to the intent of the parties. London v. Mitford, 14 Ves. Jr. 58.

6. Nonpayment of taxes.

Although a breach of conditions as to payment of taxes is literally within the rule that equity will relieve where the condition is to secure payment of money, the incidents aton the doctrine that equity will in some cases, intervene where there has been a failure to perform a condition subsequent, and prevent a forfeiture. Here there was failure again to perceive, as it seems, that the rule mentioned is one invoked to prevent, not to defeat, a forfeiture after it has occurred. Unless one keeps in mind the peculiar doctrine of equity in respect to this matter he may be misled by the expressions of courts and text writers as well. In Donnelly v. Eastes, 94 Wis. 390, 396, 69 N. W. 157, 159, this language was used: "If there were a rightful entry for condition broken, so that the estate reverted under the terms of the deed, or even if the title reverted under the terms of the deed without a re-entry, the court is yet not powerless to retending the payment of taxes, and the penalties for their nonpayment, are such that the equities in case of their nonpayment very soon desert the obligor and range themselves on the side of the obligee. Nevertheless the rule is that equity will relieve as long as the obligee can be fully compensated.

A breach of covenant to pay taxes, being merely for payment of money, is emphatically one from which equity will relieve. Buckley v. Beigle, 8 Ont. Rep. 85.

A breach of covenant to pay taxes and assessments may be relieved against in equity. Muller v. Earle, 3 Jones & S. 473.

Provisions for forfeiture for failure of a tenant to pay taxes are relieved against in equity whenever compensation can be made, the clause for re-entry being treated as a mere security. Therefore, if the payment be made before the forfeiture is taken advantage of by re-entry by the landlord for this purpose in accordance with the provisions contained in the lease, the forfeiture is saved. Planter's Ins. Co. v. Diggs, 8 Baxt. 563.

Where land is devised to one for life upon condition that he pay the taxes, equity will relieve him from a forfeiture for failure to comply with the condition upon his paying the taxes, interest, and costs, where it appears that the refusal to pay was due to ignorance of the defaulting party, and not mainly wilful. Tibbetts v. Cate, 66 N. H. 550, 22 Atl. 559.

Equity will relieve against a forfeiture by a tenant for failure to pay taxes and assessments where it was not wilful or the result of gross negligence, where refusal of relief would entail great loss upon the tenant, and the lessor made no effort to secure compliance with the contract. Eichenlaub v. Neil, 10 Ohio C. C. 427.

But equity will not relieve against the forfeiture of a leasehold for breach of condition to pay taxes where the breach has been culpable, so long persisted in that the time for redemption from the tax sale has almost expired, and detrimental to the lessor to the extent that his title to the property has been nearly sacrificed by the acts of the lessee. Bacon v. Park, 19 Utah, 246, 57 Pac. 28.

Covenants by a tenant to pay taxes and assessments are in the nature of covenants to pay money, and forfeiture incurred by their breach may be relieved against in equity. By the payment of the amount due at any time before sale or the expiration of the right to lieve the defendant from the consequences thereof." That was said having in mind that, regardless of the express intent of the parties, or the intention inferable from the language used by them, applying strict legal principles thereto, which would effect a reversion of the title, a court of equity may, in some circumstances, hold the real contractual intent not to be according to the literal meaning of such language or within the reasonable scope thereof according to the ordinary rules for the construction of contracts, but that the condition was created as a mere security for the performance of an obligation resting upon the grantee; and give effect thereto in opposition to the expressed intent of the parties. By such arbitrary rule of construction the title which would be in the grantor at law is held to be still in the conditional grantee, and so subject to control in equity that the conditional grantor may be compelled to accept compensation in money for the damages suffered by non-performance of the condition in lieu of an enforcement of his legal rights, the theory being all the way through that there has been no real violation of the contractual intent of the parties. The rule followed in such a case is the one which is supposed to justify courts in saying that parties, in stipulating for the payment of a specific sum as damages for breach of a contract, did not mean what they said, but intended the sum named to stand as security against loss from such breach, and the recoverable damages therefor to be limited to enough redeem, the landlord is placed in precisely the same position as if no default had occurred; and, where there is no bad faith on the part of the tenant, mere delay in making the stipulated payments should not bar him of relief. Giles v. Austin, 62 N. Y. 486, 48 How. Pr. 269, Affirming 6 Jones & S. 215, where the court said, in the case of a person of slender capacity, as the plaintiff is shown to be, who, through ignorance of the consequences of his default in promptly meeting his obligations, the binding force of which he does not wilfully dispute, although he negligently postpones; and, who blindly relies upon the mistaken advice of others, in whom he is justified in confiding; and when an adequate compensation for the default can be ascertained and made in money, the severe consequences of the default being the forfeiture of a considerable property upon which he is greatly dependent,—the benign principles of equity should interfere to shield him from the strictly legal consequences.

Upon a former hearing the court had held that the lessee was entitled to no relief, because, although he had covenanted to pay taxes, he had permitted them to become in arrears for more than seven years, and, after the action was brought to terminate his rights, had delayed answer for three months, and then falsely denied that any taxes were due. Giles v. Austin, 2 Jones & S. 171.

7. Failure to remove encumbrance.

Equity will enjoin proceedings to enforce a forfeiture for failure to comply with a condition in a grant to remove certain encumbrances from the property upon compliance of the grantee with the condition. Stone v. Ellis, 9 Cush. 95.

IV. Fraud, accident, mistake.

The granting of relief from the consequences of fraud, accident, and mistake is a well-recognized head of equity jurisdiction. Therefore, equity will, in a proper case, interfere to prevent a forfeiture which is sought to be secured through such means.

A breach of condition in a lease of the basement of a building used as a theater, that alterations should be made without noise, so as not to disturb performances in the theater, which consisted of the driving of a chisel through a soft wall for the purpose of ascertaining its thickness, which takes only about a minute, by one who, having been sent to ascertain the thickness of the wall, forgot that a performance was in progress, will be relieved against on the ground of mistake. Lundin v. Schoeffel, 167 Mass. 465, 45 N. E. 933.

In discussing the validity of a provision in the mortgage making the entire amount due on default in interest payments, the court, in Houston v. Curran, 101 Ill. App. 203, says a court of equity may grant relief against forfeitures occasioned by fraud, accident, or mistake, but, where the agreement creates a mere pecuniary obligation, it will not do so where the default arises from gross negligence, or is wilful and persistent.

Where a trust was established to raise a portion for testator's daughter upon her marriage with consent, and the making of a settlement by her husband upon her, and the marriage was with consent, but the settlement was not made through the neglect of the trustee, equity granted relief. This ruling was put upon the ground of the mistake of the trustee. O'Callaghan v. Cooper, 5 Ves. Jr. 117.

Where a mortgagor has forfeited his estate by failure, through accident, to forward the money for its redemption within the time set by the court, equity will relieve. Kopper v. Dyer, 59 Vt. 477, 59 Am. Rep. 742, 9 Atl. 4.

Equity will not permit a mortgagee to exercise his statutory right of sale in such a manner as to enlarge his demand, and compel the mortgagor either to pay more than he owes or forfeit his estate; and, if such a thing is attempted, either by mistake or through fraud, a court of equity, if applied to in season and in a proper manner, will prevent the forfeiture by allowing the party to pay the true sum in redemption of the estate. Sandford v. Flint, 24 Mich. 26.

The attempt to convert into an absolute conveyance that which was intended to be in the nature of a mortgage, or to set up as absolute and conclusive a deed which is collateral and redeemable, is a fraud upon the law which a court of equity will rebuke and defeat. Rogan v. Walker, 1 Wis. 527.

In Foley v. Grand Hotel Co. 57 C. C. A. 629, 121 Fed. 509, it is said that courts of equity will grant relief against a forfeiture which has been incurred through accident or mistake, or by reason of any fraudulent, oppressive, or unto adequately measure such loss. 2 Story, Eq. Jur. 13th ed. §§ 1314, 1315. The process by which courts thus turn a contract which parties say they made into what the law says on the subject was treated at considerable length in Seeman v. Biemann, 108 Wis. 365, 84 N. W. 490. An eminent text writer is there quoted, in effect, thus: "Parties may contract for stipulated damages at their pleasure, but such damages only as the law says are liquidated, according to the artificial rules which have been adopted to justify courts in saying what the parties intended, are in fact to be regarded as such damages." So, as regards a condition subsequent in a deed, regardless of the intention of the parties as indicated by the fair meaning of their language, in certain cases, to prevent the great hardship which would flow from giving effect to the strict legal contractual intent, the court will, by construction dependent upon no reason which can be easily assigned, other than a long line of precedents grounded wholly upon the arbitrary power of the court, say that they intended something else, and by that means, in theory, not take title from the grantor upon condition after it has reverted to him by breach of condition and assertion of his right, but hold that the title still remains in the conditional grantee in harmony with the judicial intention, we may call it, and in that way save his adversary from the consequences of his fault, preserving the title to the property in him notwithstanding such fault, giving the grantor a fair conduct on the part of one who is asserting a right of forfeiture.

But in Gregory v. Wilson, 10 Eng. L. & Eq. 138, which was a suit to compel specific performance of an agreement to execute a lease after the tenant had been in possession and committed a breach of covenants, it is said that, although in some cases a distinction has been made between wilful and obstinate refusal to comply with the covenants of a lease and cases of mere neglect and accident, yet there is no rule that the court will in all cases of accident even relieve against breach.

It being established that equity will afford relief in cases of fraud, accident, or mistake, the question arises whether or not jurisdiction is limited to such cases. From the cases which have already been cited, it would seem that the relieving from forfeitures whenever such relief was equitable was a distinct branch of equity jurisdiction, entirely independent of the other branch now under examination. But soon after the English House of Lords had refused to recognize the right to renew the Irish leases, as stated supra, III., b, 5, the master of the rolls took upon himself the duty of attempting to lay down a general rule upon the subject.

In Eaton v. Lyon, 3 Ves. Jr. 692, which was a suit to compel the execution of a renewal lease notwithstanding default on the part of the tenant, the court said, in equity a covenant must be really and substantially performed according to the true intent and meaning of the parties so far as circumstances will admit; but, if by unavoidable accident, and by fraud, by surprise, or ignorance not wilful, parties have been prevented from executing it literally, equity will interfere; and, upon compensation being made, the party having done everything in his power, and being prevented by the means alluded to, will give relief. It is true that has been carried to a length that has become to some degree alarming, having got into the habit of construing terms and conditions, of covenants as being only in terrorem. But undoubtedly in modern times that has been much restricted. The relief was denied, and the master of the rolls said: "I hope now it will be known . . . that equity will interpose and go beyond the stipulations of the covenant at law only where a literal performance has been prevented by the means mentioned, and no injury is done the lessor."

That doctrine did not pass long unchallenged, but it has had the effect of throwing confusion into the law. In Sanders v. Pope, 12 Ves. Jr. 282, Lord Erskine, in granting relief for failure to repair, says of Eaton v. Lyon, 3 Ves. Jr. 692, that some of its expressions go against all that has been laid down in a series of preceding cases, and which, if they were taken in their full extent, would create considerable uncertainty. He also says that, if the covenant is broken with a consciousness that it is broken,—that is, if it is wilful, not by surprise, accident, or ignorance,—still, if it is a case where full compensation can be made, equity may grant relief.

And in Maxwell v. Ward, 11 Price, 16, which involved the question of relief from the consequences of not giving proper notice of intention to apply for a renewal of a lease, the lord chief baron said that Eaton v. Lyon, 3 Ves. Jr. 692, stated the doctrine more strongly than the cases warrant. That it was not necessary in all cases of this sort that there should be fraud, surprise, or ignorance, not wilful, shown to entitle a party to relief. These are common grounds of relief in all cases of any description. This sort of relief is given constantly without any such causes existing.

Lord Erskine's rule is undoubtedly the one which has prevailed, but the result of the false note is found in several subsequent cases. Where a forfeiture of a mining lease had been declared because of failure to pay the taxes, the court said that equity will relieve against penalties and forfeitures wherever the penalty involved is designed merely as security for the payment of money, and the failure to make such payment is capable of compensation to the party injured. But there is a recognized distinction in equity between penalties and forfeitures. In the latter, although compensation can be made, the forfeiture will not always be relieved. The true doctrine on this subject now seems to be that, in all cases of forfeiture for the breach of any covenant other than a covenant to pay rent, no relief will be granted in equity unless upon the ground of fraud, accident, surprise, or mistake, and this although the breach of covenant is capable of just compensation. Townsend v. Stetler, 5 Kulp, 11.

In Livingston v. Tompkins, 4 Johns. Ch. 415, 8 Am. Dec. 598, the court said, by way of argument, that the cases are full of discussions as to how far equity can relieve against sub-

In Livingston v. Tompkins, 4 Johns. Ch. 415, 8 Am. Dec. 598, the court said, by way of argument, that the cases are full of discussions as to how far equity can relieve against sub-money consideration for his damages. While, viewing the situation from the legal rights of the parties, relief is granted after forfeiture if at all, as said in Donnelly v. Eastes, 94 Wis. 390, 69 N. W. 157, the absurdity is avoided by the arbitrary holding that no such forfeiture has occurred because the parties intended otherwise, regardless of what they said on the subject. The origin of such arbitrary dealing with contracts in violation of the general rule that courts cannot make contracts for parties—can only interpret them so far as to determine what the parties intended, and enforce such intent, not going for their purpose outside the reasonable scope of the language they saw fit to use to express it—is involved in much obscurity, but it is one of the oldest doctrines of equity jurisprudence, and, although the reason for it is difficult to discover in the light of what judicial remedies are ordinarily supposed to stand for, it has many vigorous defenders. Judge Story, in his work on Equity Jurisprudence (vol. 2, § 1316), says: "Law, as a science, would be unworthy of the name if it did not, to some extent, provide the means of preventing the mischiefs of improvidence, rashness, blind confidence, and credulity on one side, and of skill, avarice, cunning, and a gross violation of the principles of morals and conscience on the other. There are many cases in which courts of equity interfere upon mixed grounds of this sort. There is no more intrinsic sanctity in stipulations by consequent conditions; the general rule formerly was that, if the court could make compensation to the party in damages for nonperformance of the condition, it would then relieve. That relief seems now to be confined to cases where the forfeiture has been the effect of accident, and the injury is capable of compensation.

In Baxter v. Lansing, 7 Paige, 350, the court intimates that a court of equity can relieve against a forfeiture for a breach of condition in a lease only in cases where the act or omission by which the forfeiture was incurred was the result of an accident or mistake for which compensation can be made to the other party, or where the penalty or forfeiture is of the nature of a mere security for the payment of money; the court stating that the decisions in the more recent English cases limited the active interference of the court to such cases.

Even as late as 1891 the English court of Queen's bench recognized the rule that equity would relieve only in cases of fraud, accident, or mistake. In the case of Barrow v. Isaacs [1891] 1 Q. B. 417. The case was, however, one in which the forfeiture was claimed for breach of a covenant not to underlet. Such a breach as appears in subd. VI., d, infra, is one which is not capable of compensation, and is therefore not within the class of which equity has jurisdiction under its power to relieve from forfeiture, but must acquire the jurisdiction under some other head of equity jurisprudence. Under such circumstances the statements of the court were correct as applicable to the case before it, but, in view of the general doctrine which has prevailed upon the question, they cannot be regarded as having universal application.

The doctrine that no relief ought to be granted in equity unless upon the ground of accident, mistake, fraud, or surprise, although the breach was capable of a just compensation, was questioned in Spaulding v. Hallenbeck, 39 Barb. 79.

It is stated in Henry v. Tupper, 29 Vt. 358, that it is putting the matter on reasonable grounds when it is stated that relief is confined to cases where the forfeiture has been the result of accident and the injury is capable of compensation. But, the court adds, if the matter is really capable of compensation it is more doubtful, perhaps, whether the cases will warrant any denial of relief upon the ground that the forfeiture was not the result of of accident. It is certain no such thing is required to be shown in the naked case of a pecuniary duty. The nonpayment may be wilful, and the party still entitled to relief as matter of right. But relief for nonperformance of collateral duties is a matter of discretion to be judged of according to the particular circumstances of each particular case. In cases where the condition is for the payment of money, or for the performance of a certain value of services, it has been the general practice of the court to grant relief as a matter of right without reference to the inquiry whether the default was accidental or wilful. But in all cases where the thing to be done was something collateral there the issue quantum dam-nificatus must be sent either to a jury or masters. Before the court would grant relief, they have pretty generally required to be satisfied that the omission to perform was not wilful, but accidental and by surprise; and it has been held always in such cases to depend very much upon the circumstances of the particular case.

V. Effect of conduct of obligee.

The one having the right to insist on the forfeiture may not have been guilty of fraud, and yet his conduct may have been such as to make it inequitable to insist on his legal rights; and, under such circumstances, equity will not permit him to do so. Thus, he may have waived strict performance.

Equity will relieve if the forfeiture has been waived. Gourlay v. Somerset, 1 Ves. & B. 68; Whitehead v. Bennett, 9 Week. Rep. 626; Bridges v. Longman, 24 Beav. 27; Lan-gridge v. Payne, 2 Johns. & H. 423; Little Rock Granite Co. v. Shall, 59 Ark. 405, 27 S. W. 562.

In Orr v. Zimmerman, 63 Mo. 72, it is stated that, although equity will not interfere where the exaction of a forfeiture is made for the protection of the vendor, and under circumstances where a strictly legal right is fairly claimed with full notice to the vendee, yet, where the right has been repeatedly waived, and valuable improvements have been made, and the vendee is thus led by frequent waivers to assume that he will at all events be apprised of any change of policy on the part of the seller, the sudden exaction of a forfeiture will not be favorably viewed by the court.

So equity will not permit a landlord who tract than in other solemn acts of parties which are constantly interfered with by courts of equity upon the broad ground of public policy or the pure principles of natural justice." That was said by the learned author with reference to situations not involving any fraud either in fact or in law.

The rule of equity discussed is not one of universal application. It does not extend beyond situations where there is some room for saying the conditions were inserted to stand as security, either for the payment of money, or the performance of some promise, damages for a breach of which are susceptible of ascertainment by some definite rule, and the doing of the particular thing, or the doing thereof at a particular time, was not the principal object secured by the condition. 2 Story, Eq. Jur. 13th ed. § 1321; 2 Washb. Real Prop. 5th ed. 24: Gates v. Parmly, 93 Wis. 294, 66 N. W. 253, 67 N. W. 739; Nelson v. Stephens, 107 Wis. 136, 82 N. W. 163; Donnelly v. Eastes, 9: Wis. 390, 69 N. W. 157. Courts and text writers acknowledge the limitation mentioned to be distinctly marked. This language is used in 2 Story, Eq. Jur. 13th ed. § 1321: "It is admitted, indeed, that, where the condition or forfeiture is merely a security for the nonpayment of money, . . . there it is to be treated as a mere security and in the nature of a penalty, and is accordingly relievable. But, if the forfeiture arises from the breach of other covenants of a collateral nature, as, for example, of a covenant to repair, there, although compenhas leased the premises giving the right to purchase at the expiration of the lease, after valuable improvements have been placed upon the property, and rent has been received for a long period after the time when by the terms of the lease it was due, suddenly to enter for nonpayment without notice, and thereby confiscate the improvements. Carpenter v. Willson (Md.), 59 Atl. 186.

So where a landlord, by acquiescence in the tenant's dilatoriness in payment of rent, has induced the tenant to believe that strict observance of his covenant to pay rent at a specified time will not be required of him, equity will not permit the landlord to enforce a forfeiture which would be inequitable where full compensation can be made to the landlord. Thropp v. Field, 26 N. J. Eq. 82.

So where, for a period of forty years, money has been received as rent, instead of a foreign-made article, for which the lease stipulates, which has ceased to be imported, equity will enjoin a re-entry for nontender of such article at a rent day, unless adequate notice of an intention to insist on the terms of the lease has been given to the lessee. Miley v. Fifty Associates, 101 Mass. 432.

If, after the forfeiture has been incurred for nonpayment of rent, the landlord proceeds to make a distress for rent previously due, he waives the forfeiture, and equity will relieve the tenant therefrom. Chase v. Knickerbocker Phosphate Co. 32 App. Div. 400, 53 N. Y. Supp. 220.

Equity will not permit the forfeiture of an estate for breach of condition prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors, where the breach has been permitted for many years without objection. Lehigh Coal & Nav. Co. v. Early, 162 Pa. 338, 29 Atl. 736.

And the same principle was applied in Fidelity Ins. Trust & S. D. Co. v. Fridenberg, 175 Pa. 500, 52 Am. St. Rep. 851, 34 Atl. 848.

In Bonniwell v. Madison, 107 Iowa, 85, 77 N. W. 530, which was a suit in equity to quiet plaintiff's title to certain real estate, it appeared that plaintiff had covenanted to maintain a fence as a condition to a conveyance of land; that he had failed to do so; and that defendant entered, and was insisting on the forfeiture when the action to quiet title was brought. The court granted the relief upon the grounds of waiver and absence of demand for performance, saying that when maintenance or use is a part of the condition there must be such a neglect to maintain as to indicate an intention not to comply, to constitute a breach of condition.

The obligee may have prevented compliance with the contract.

Where a state makes a grant of land to a railroad company on condition that it complete its road within a specified time, and then prevents a compliance with the condition by plunging into war, equity will regard the conditions as if no particular time for performance were specified, and will prevent a forfeiture if performance occurs within a reasonable time. Davis v. Gray, 16 Wall. 203, 21 L. ed. 447.

The obligee may have misled the obligor to such an extent that he will be precluded from insisting on a forfeiture.

Equity will not permit a forfeiture for acts occurring during a period when the landlord, by his conduct, leads the tenant to believe that a forfeiture will not be insisted on. Flattery v. Anderson, 12 Ir. Eq. Rep. 218.

Equity will relieve against a forfeiture for breach of covenant to repair where the landlord has led the tenant into supposing that the covenant will not be insisted on. Hughes v. Metropolitan R. Co. L. R. 1 C. P. Div. 120. Affirmed in L. R. 2 App. Cas. 439.

If the landlord has led the tenant to suppose that the provisions of the lease will not be strictly insisted on, he will not be permitted to enforce a forfeiture for nonpayment until he has given notice that such is his intention. Cogley v. Browne, 15 Phila. 162, 11 W. N. C. 224; Wanamaker v. McCaully, 31 W. N. C. 450.

In North Staffordshire Steel & I. Co. v. Camoys, 11 Jur. N. S. 555, it is intimated that, where a landlord is aware that a lease has been forfeited, and permits the lessee to go on spending money on the property, he will not be permitted to rely on the forfeiture.

If the lessor in an oil lease has, by his conduct, led the lessee to believe that prompt payment of rentals will not be insisted on, equity will not permit him suddenly to take advantage of a lapse in payment and enforce a forfeiture without notice to the lessee that he intends to do so. Hukill v. Myers, 36 W. Va. 630, 15 S. E. 151.

Equity will not permit the landlord to entrap the tenant by establishing a certain course of dealing, and then, without notice, suddenly enter up a judgment and evict him.

sation might be ascertained, . . . yet it has been held that courts of equity ought not to relieve, but should leave the parties to their remedy at law." The subject was discussed at some length in Klein v. New York L. Ins. Co. 104 U. S. 88, 26 L. ed. 662, where it was held that the doctrine, that the consequences of nonperformance of a condition precedent are relievable in equity upon the basis of a money compensation for damages suffered, has no application to a case where the condition was inserted in the contract to secure something other than the payment of money, or something having a distinct money value, which was made a principal and essential thing. The case before the court involved the question of whether equity can relieve from the consequences of failure to make payment of a renewal premium upon an insurance policy, the contract stipulating the effect thereof to be to render the policy void. It was contended on the one side that the damage to the company by reason of being out of the money a short time was easily ascertainable, and that, as compensation could be made therefor, equity had jurisdiction to say that the insurance company should take that compensation instead of what was its right under the terms of the insurance contract. The decision was adverse thereto, because the condition was not inserted merely to secure payment of money, but to secure prompt payment in accordance with a general policy of the company, and because the injurious consequences of a violation

But if the tenant, by his conduct, has shown that he no longer depends upon the course of dealing, but relies upon the exact performance of the terms of the lease, equity will not interfere to relieve him from failure of compliance therewith. Times Co. v. Siebrecht, 15 Phila. 235, 11 W. N. C. 288.

VI. Collateral covenants.

a. In general.

When the covenant for breach of which a forfeiture is sought is not one requiring merely the payment of money, but is of the class to which the generic name "collateral covenants" has been applied, that is, where it requires the performance of some act, or the pursuance of some course of conduct,—the matter of compensation is not as easily settled as in the other class of cases, and the courts will interpose with greater hesitation. The presence of fraud, accident, or mistake may induce the court to interpose even if the rule of compensation is not clear. And if there is a plain rule of compensation, and the case is one for equitable relief, the court will interpose merely to save the forfeiture. But in the latter case, before the court will entertain the suit, the equities of the case must be made strongly to appear.

Relief may be granted in equity, even where the condition is for the performance of collateral acts. Henry v. Tupper, 29 Vt. 358.

In Davis v. West, 12 Ves. Jr. 476, the court says the authorities establish that where covenants other than for payment of rent are broken, and there is no fraud, and the party is capable of giving complete compensation, it is the province of equity to interfere and give relief against the forfeiture.

In Lovat v. Ranelagh, 3 Ves. & B. 24, it is intimated that relief would be granted against a breach of covenant as to the manner of cultivation of the land if little damage had resulted from it.

In Dowell v. Dew, 1 Younge & C. Ch. Cas. 345, the court, in considering the question of relief from breaches of covenants in a farm lease, says if, according to a literal interpretation of strict covenants, a tenant was to be ejected for a foul turnip field, an unbinged gate, a broken shutter, or some matters of that description which frequently occur on the best-managed farms, there would scarcely be a lease in existence throughout the Kingdom. It is 69 L. R. A.

necessary in these cases to make a reasonable allowance, and not put too strong and precise interpretation on such covenants.

In Paschall v. Passmore, 15 Pa. 295, the court, in discussing the effect of a provision of a grant, "under this condition, nevertheless, that the grantee should maintain a bridge, said that considerations such as the fact that no attention had been paid for a long period of time to the nonmaintenance of the bridge, and that the enforcement of the condition would result in the forfeiture of a valuable estate, at one time induced the English courts of equity to favor the doctrine that, where no injury had in fact been inflicted by the non-performance of a condition, or only such as might have been compensated in pecuniary damages, equity would not permit a forfeiture of the estate. And, though Lord Eldon and succeeding chancellors have since confined the rule to conditions of re-entry for nonpayment of rent, it may at least admit of question whether, in cases like the present, the courts of this country would not lean in favor of a liberal extension of the rule, in prevention of injustice.

In Descarlett v. Dennett, 9 Mod. 22, the court refused to relieve against a breach of covenant not to permit the use of a way over the premises upon the ground that it was wilful, and that the loss could not be estimated in damages, since it tended to the prejudice of the inheritance inasmuch as it might amount to evidence for a prescription.

And if there is a breach of several covenants in a lease, and there is any one of them with respect to which there exists no equitable ground for relief, although there may be as to all the others the most unquestionable right to relieve, equity will not interfere to prevent the lessor from recovering possession because of the breach. Nokes v. Gibbon, 8 Drew, 681, 26 L. J. Ch. N. S. 433.

So relief from a breach of covenant to cultivate the portion of the demised premises not built upon cannot be granted because of an alteration of the contract as to the portion upon which buildings have been placed. Hills v. Rowland, 4 De G. M. & G. 430.

And the Supreme Court of the United States has stated that, in respect to covenants pertaining to leasehold estates other than for the payment of rent, or where the elements of fraud, accident, or mistake are wanting, and the power of compensation is uncertain, equity thereof could not be measured by any definite rule.

It is not strictly accurate to say, expressly or by inference, that relief from a breach of condition subsequent can be granted merely because a stipulation for a forfeiture was inserted in the contract as a security. Nelson v. Stephens, 107 Wis. 145, 82 N. W. 165. It must stand as security for the payment of money or for the performance of something the breach of which can be definitely measured in money, the doing of the particular thing, or the doing of it at a particular time, not being by the contract expressly made material, or, in other words, of the essence thereof. There is no better illustration of this than the ordinary agreement to pay a certain sum of money at a particular time upon a land contract, coupled with a condition of forfeiture in case of the nonpayment according to the agreement. Ordinarily it is held that the payment of the money is the principal thing. Therefore, equity will give compensation for the breach as to time by the usual rules for measuring loss caused by a breach of an agreement as to time in the payment of money. But, if the contract expressly and unequivocally makes time of payment the principal thing the condition was inserted to secure, equity will not relieve from a breach thereof though no real pecuniary loss be suffered thereby by the person entitled to the benefit of the condition. In Gates v. Parnly, 93 Wis. 294, 66 N. W. 253, 67 N. W. 739, this language was used: "It would will not interfere. It allows the forfeiture to be enforced if such is the remedy provided by the contract. This rule is applied to the covenant to repair, to insure, and not to assign. Sheets v. Selden, 7 Wall. 416, 19 L. ed. 166.

So in a California case it is stated that there are numerous cases arising under leases and in contracts where time is not of the essence of the contract, in which courts of equity will relieve against a forfeiture. The general doctrine is that equity will relieve where the thing may be done afterwards, or compensation can be made for it; but that, unless a full compensation can be given so as to put the party in precisely the same situation, a court of equity will not interfere. The only cases where equity interposes as to such conditions are where the failure of performance has been the effect of accident, and the injury is capable of compensation in damages which the court has the means of measuring, and where the grantor can be made perfectly secure and indemnified, and can be placed in the same situation as if the occurrence had not happened. This applies to cases where the condition is for the payment of money at a particular time, and compensation for the delay can be measured by the interest during that time. But where the condition is for the performance of a collateral act, the rule is different, as the court has no standard by which to measure damages. Parsons v. Smilie, 97 Cal. 653, 32 Pac. 702.

b. Failure to improve or repair.

Equity will relieve against a forfeiture incurred by breach of covenant in a lease of real estate to prosecute the work of fitting up the premises for certain purposes without delay, in the absence of bad faith on the part of the lessee, and where no actual damage has been sustained by the lessor. Lundin v. Schoefel, 167 Mass. 465, 45 N. E. 933.

But where one who had taken a lease of ground upon condition that he would erect houses on it failed to comply with the condition after he had commenced operations, whereupon the landowner proceeded to enforce the forfeiture, and the tenant applied to equity for relief, the court said that the tenant's failure to perform had not arisen from any default of the landowner, and that the landowner had a perfect right to insist on the 69 L. R. A.

forfeiture, and the bill was dismissed. Croft v. Goldsmid, 24 Beav. 312.

So breach of condition in a lease to make a roadway in front of the property is not excused by the fact that it would be cut up by building operations on adjoining lots. Nokes v. Gibbon, 3 Drew. 681, 26 L. J. Ch. N. S. 433.

So breach of covenant to construct a drain is not excused by the fact that the tenant had employed a person to do the work, but he had done it improperly and deceived the tenant as to its efficacy. Ibid.

It will be noticed that in the cases in which relief was denied the covenant had not been complied with, and no offer of compliance is shown, but an excuse is offered for noncompliance. That is not sufficient to bring the case within any rule justifying relief.

With respect to the right to relief in case of nonrepair, the cases are conflicting.

In Sanders v. Pope, 12 Ves. Jr. 282, the chancellor (Erskine) relieved against breach of a covenant to lay out a certain sum within a given time in repairs.

But in Bracebridge v. Buckley, 2 Price, 200, it was held that there can be no relief against breach of covenant to lay out a certain amount in making repairs on the leasehold, because there can be no effectual means of ascertaining or of making compensation. But Wood, B. dissented on the ground that such a decision would overrule Sanders v. Pope, 12 Ves. Jr. 282, which he thought to be rightly decided.

The cases may be distinguished on the ground that in the first the failure was to lay out the sum within a given time, with nothing to show that it would not be equally efficacious if made subsequently. In the other, it does not appear that there was an offer to lay out the sum subsequently.

And in Bamford v. Creasy, 3 Giff. 675, where a judgment had been taken for breach of covenants to pay rent and repair and to insure, the cases holding that no relief would be granted a tenant who had failed to repair and insure were noticed, and the court stated that they were cases in which the plaintiff came into equity seeking injunction to restrain proceedings at law, confessing breach of covenant and asking relief. In these cases equity always refused to interfere, treating the question of forfeiture or not as one with which equity would not deal where the landlord has a legal right seem that where the condition is security for the payment of money or the performance of any particular act, . . . relief may be granted." The broad statement was unnecessary to the decision of the case in which it was used, and may be misleading. Manifestly, courts have not yet gone so far as to hold that equity can relieve from the consequences of the breach of a condition wherever it stands as security for the performance of some act. It cannot if the act itself is of the essence of the contract, the principal thing, and it cannot if the damages caused by the breach are not susceptible of accurate determination by calculation, substantially the same as if the act were the mere payment of money. It is said by Judge Story that the English courts hold that in all cases of forfeiture for the breach of any covenant other than the covenant to pay rent, no relief ought to be granted in equity unless upon the ground of accident, mistake, fraud, or surprise, although the breach is capable of a just compensation. 2 Story, Eq. Jur. 13th ed. § 1323. A somewhat broader doctrine than that has prevailed in the courts of this country, care being exercised, as indicated in Klein v. New York L. Ins. Co. 104 U. S. 88, 26 L. ed. 662, not to substitute a contract of their own for the one the parties made so as to prevent them from having the thing made by them the very essence of their agreement. Probably as valuable a discussion of the scope of the rule, as recognized generally in this country, as upon the covenant. But it had never been said that equity would not, under any circumstances, grant relief for breach of such covenants. Special circumstances might entitle a tenant to relief in such cases, such as accident and surprise. And relief was granted where a judgment in ejectment had been taken by default, without anything to show that there had been a breach of covenant.

But in Hill v. Barclay, 16 Ves. Jr. 402, where a similar covenant was involved, Eldon, chancellor, says that considerable arguments might be urged against the relief granted in the Sanders Case. He says that the difficulty with its doctrine is that there is no mutuality in it. The tenant cannot be compelled to repair; and is the tenant to have the option, against the will of the landlord, of keeping the lease upon these terms, from time to time breaking the covenant which he cannot be compelled to perform, and saying that he will not fulfil the obligation? The relief was refused in that case, although the court does not hold that equity would be precluded in all cases from affording any relief.

In Gregory v. Wilson, 9 Hare, 683, in speaking of breach of covenant to repair, the vice-chancellor said, where a man who knows that he is charged with a legal obligation neglects to perform it, his neglect to do so must be deemed to be wilful, and, if he persists in it, to be obstinate.

In Job v. Banister, 2 Kay & J. 374, where there was a breach of covenants to repair and insure, the court says it cannot interfere between the parties to the legal contract. One had agreed to insure and keep the premises in repair, for a breach of which the other had a right to re-enter. It is as much a part of the contract that the lessor should have the right to re-enter on breach of the covenants to insure or repair as that he should have the rent. The case could be dealt with in no other way than by leaving the parties to their rights at law.

In Ex-parte Vaughan, Turn. & R. 434, the court, in the exercise of its supervisory power over a lunatic's estate, relieved his tenant from a forfeiture for nonrepair, where the repairs were properly made by the direction of the court, and the tenant was in other respects a desirable one.

So where a landlord is attempting to enforce a forfeiture for nonrepair, which will work great hardship on the lessee, and full compensation can be made in money, equity will relieve. Hagar v. Buck, 44 Vt. 285, 8 Am. Rep. 368.

So where there was a breach of covenant to repair in permitting the roof of the barn to get out of repair, the lord chancellor said he could not apprehend what damage the landlord could sustain if the lessee suffered the buildings to be out of repair, so as he kept the main timber from being rotten, and left all in good repair before the end of the term; and he granted the relief. Hack v. Leonard, 9 Mod. 91.

The same special equities may govern in this class of cases as have been apparent in other classes already noticed.

Thus, where repairs had been undertaken and proceeded with mostly to completion, but delayed by the weather, while the landlord appeared to be satisfied with what was being done, relief was granted. Bargent v. Thomson, 4 Giff. 473.

So where the time allowed for making repairs is consumed by a negotiation upon an offer by the lessee to sell his interest in the property, equity will relieve from a forfeiture which the lessor attempts to enforce. Hughes v. Metropolitan R. Co. L. R. 2 App. Cas. 439. Lord O'Hagan places his concurrence upon the ground that, while equity has no right to relieve the tenant because the forfeiture pressed hardly upon him, yet, that he was entitled to relief because he failed to act through a mistake induced by the conduct of the landlord.

And in Hannam v. South London Waterworks Co. 2 Meriv. 61, the chancellor granted an injunction to restrain proceedings to enforce a forfeiture for breach of a covenant to repair, upon the ground that a treaty with a third person was pending, upon the successful outcome of which the repaired buildings would immediately be pulled down.

But there is no ground for relieving a tenant whose conduct has been gross and ruinous that the landlord may be placed in the same situation by afterwards putting the premises in sufficient repair. The chancellor asks, How can it be ascertained that the subsequent repairs do put the landlord in the same state? Hill v. Barclay, 16 Ves. Jr. 402.

Upon a rehearing of the case, the court adhered to its former decision upon the ground that, after demand by the lessor, the tenant can be found, is in the opinion of Redfield, Ch. J., in Henry v. Tupper, 29 Vt. 358. In Grigg v. Landis, 21 N. J. Eq. 494, it was held that a court cannot relieve from the consequences of the breach of a condition subsequent that certain improvements shall be put upon granted premises within a specified time, it appearing that time was made by the contract a principal thing; that the condition of forfeiture in such a case is not made merely to secure the making of the improvements, but the making of them within a particular time agreed upon. In discussing the subject the court said: "It is not therefore to be supposed that a court of equity will lightly dispense with contracts made between competent parties, and substitute other agreements more in accordance with variable rules of right and conscience. Every presumption will be made in favor of such contracts and they will be enforced according to the intention of the parties expressed and implied, unless it can be shown that thereby some hardship or wrong, not within the presumed contemplation of the parties at the time, will result from such enforcement."

From what has been said it seems clear that the doctrine, that a court of equity may relieve a party from the consequences to him of his breach of a condition subsequent, does not apply to the facts of this case. The condition was not inserted in the deed to secure the payment of money, nor the performance of any act that could be substantially performed by the payment of took not one step in compliance therewith; and the chancellor asks, Am I, then, to speculate under such circumstances, and determine that it is so clear that the repairs, if done in the future, will be equally or more beneficial, that all the contract between the parties shall be undone? My opinion is that this is more than is established by the decisions. 18 Ves. Jr. 56.

c. Failure to insure.

A failure to insure at once jeopardizes the rights of the obligee, and there can be no adequate compensation therefor; and, therefore, the general rule is that no relief can be granted from a forfeiture sought for such failure. White v. Warner, 2 Meriv. 459; Elchenlaub v. Nell, 10 Ohio C. C. 427; Green v. Bridges, 4 Sim. 96.

There will be no relief for breach of covenant to insure. Such a breach of covenant is out of the measure of damages. And the effect of giving relief would be that any tenant may break this special covenant with impunity, and every landlord must be content to take his tenant for his insurer. Rolfe v. Harris, 2 Price, 206, note.

In Thompson v. Guyon, 5 Sim. 65, it is assumed that there can be no relief in case of breach of covenant to insure.

In Reynolds v. Pitt, 19 Ves. Jr. 134, the court said, with reference to a forfeiture for breach of covenant to insure: If the tenant has wilfully and obstinately prevented the insurance, and it has so subsisted for years, upon what principle is a court of equity to say that a tenant who has neglected to fulfil his contract shall insist that the landlord shall keep all the terms with him?

In Rolfe v. Harris, 2 Price, 206, note, which was an application for relief from forfeiture of a leasehold for failure to insure, the vice chancellor said that the court will relieve only where the forfeiture is the effect of inevitable accident, and the injury or inconvenience arising from it must be capable of compensation; but that, where the transgression is wilful, or the compensation impracticable, the court will not interfere. Sanders v. Pope, 12 Ves. Jr. 282, is said to go further than the authorities warranted. The jurisdiction, if exercised at all, should be confined to cases of a pecuniary nature, such as nonpayment of rent, and money not paid by a day certain, and where such breaches stand alone.

But where, by reason of accident, insurance policies secured by the tenant in compliance with the terms of the lease were not acceptable to the lessor, it was held that equity would relieve; the court saying that it may fairly be argued that, if a lessee, in good faith, procures insurance; intending to observe the requirements of the covenant, but fails to do so, the lessor cannot, without notice, enforce a forfeiture. But, assuming that there has been a breach, it is a case in which equity ought to furnish relief. Mactier v. Osborn, 148 Mass. 399, 4 Am. St. Rep. 323, 15 N. E. 641.

And where a property owner procured his creditors to take an assignment of leases of it, and cancel the debt, the property being comparatively worthless, but having been given a fictitious value by the owner's dealings with it, he was enjoined from enforcing a forfeiture for neglect to comply with the conditions as to insurance. Meek v. Carter, 4 Jur. N. S. 992.

d. Other covenants.

In Worcester v. Copyholder, Freem. Ch. 137, the court refused to relieve a forfeiture for voluntary waste in cutting timber.

But in Bowen v. Whitmore, Freem. Ch. 192, where a forfeiture had been declared for waste in cutting down great trees, and it was insisted that it was impossible to set them up again, and to put the lessor in the same plight he was in before, the court did not act upon the suggestion, but granted the relief granting an inquiry to ascertain the amount of the injury.

In Thomas v. Porter, 1 Ch. Cas. 95, which was a bill for relief from a forfeiture for commission of waste, the lord keeper stated that relief would be granted if the waste was not wilful, but not if it was wilful.

Equity will not relieve from forfeiture for alienation of the leasehold without license. Wafer v. Mocato, 9 Mod. 112. The reason given was because it was unknown what should be the measure of damages. For equity never relieves but in such cases where it can give some compensation in damages, and where there is some rule to be the measure of such damages to avoid being arbitrary.

In Northcote v. Duke, 1 Amb. 513, 2 Eden, 322, where there had been a breach of condimoney damages. The condition was not only to inclose the granted premises by a good and sufficient legal fence, but it was to maintain the same forever. The grantee agreed to put in culverts where the cross drainage ditches were intercepted by the railway roadbed, and put in a suitable crossing where desired by the grantor, with substantial gates in the side fences, and, by inference, to maintain such connecting culverts, crossing, and gates perpetually. There is no rule by which damages for failure to do those things can be accurately measured in money. Moreover, it is manifest that the performance of the acts mentioned was made a principal thing, a matter of the very essence of the contract. The learned court said that no pecuniary loss accrued to the grantor by reason of the default of the grantee, and therefore he would hold that equity would shield the respondents from the effects of the default. The fact that no damages accrued to Uhen, which the court could recognize and measure in money, notwithstanding evidence showing a clear breach of the conditions of the deed, should have prevented, rather than called for, an application of the rule mentioned. In Wafer v. Mocato, 9 Mod. 112, it was said that, if a man makes a lease for life upon condition that the lease shall be forfeited if the lessee assigns or aliens it without license, and afterwards the lessee doth assign it without license, that is a forfeiture; and such a forfeiture against which the court cannot relieve, because it is not known what shall be the tion by a tenant for life not to alienate for more than seven years, the chancellor said it was so that equity would not relieve when the act was voluntary. But the landlord must not have been injured at all, or in a manner for which interest can compensate him. I take the rule to be that in all cases where a person has broken a condition and forfeited a penalty equity will relieve if there can be a compensation. I think the court may relieve where a tenant cuts down timber.

In Davies v. Moreton, 2 Ch. Cas. 127, the court refused to relieve from a forfeiture for assigning a lease contrary to its conditions, unless the amount received for the assignment was paid to the lessor, although he had taken a bond for the amount from the lessee.

In Whetstone v. Sainsbury, Prec. in Ch. 501, where a life tenant incurred a forfeiture by mortgaging the property, the court refused relief upon the ground that it was a contingency to destroy the settlement and disinherit the remainder-man, and in cases of this nature there would be no relief.

But the master of the rolls reversed this decision upon the ground that, under the settlement, the legal estate was in trustees, and the interest which was held to be forfeited was but a trust, and that a trust for life was not forfeited by a fine; and therefore there was no forfeiture which required the aid of equity. 2 P. Wms. 146.

Where there had been a breach of covenant not to underlet without the consent of the landlord, through the mistake of the solicitor in failing to look at the original lease in drawing the under lease; and the under tenant was a man of character, so that there could have been no reasonable objection to him; and the landowner could not have been injured by the breach of covenant,—the court held that equity could grant no relief. Barrow v. Isaacs [1891] 1 Q. B. 417. The court adopts the doctrine that equity will relieve only in case of fraud, accident, or mistake, and then only where complete compensation can be made, or there is no injury which requires compensation. It was further held that mere forgetfulness is not mistake. Kay, L. J., says, at first there seems to have been some hesitation whether the relief extended in case of nonpayment of rent ought to be extended to other cases of forfeiture for breach of covenant, such as to repair, insure, and the like, where compensation could be made; but it was soon recognized that there would be great difficulty in estimating the proper amount of compensation, and since Hill v. Barclay, it has always been held that equity would not relieve merely on the ground that it could give compensation upon breach of any covenant in a lease except the covenant for payment of rent.

And that case was followed in Eastern Teleg. Co. v. Dent [1899] 1 Q. B. 835, where Hyde v. Warden, L. R. 3 Exch. Div. 72, was disapproved.

In Roberts v. Gels, 2 Daly, 540, the court, in discussing the rights inter se of an assignor and assignee of a leasehold where the lease contained a clause of forfeiture for assignment, says the landlord could enter for condition broken, and equity would not relieve against a forfeiture thus incurred. The court says equity will relieve against a forfeiture incurred by accident or mistake, or where full compensation can be made, as for nonpayment of rent, or where there is some rule by which to measure the damages, or where an assignment is made by executors after the death of the lessee, without the lessor's consent, for there it is an alienation by the act of God; but not where the assignment is voluntarily made by the lessee without the lessor's consent. In such cases the court cannot estimate the damage. There is no rule to go by, for it cannot say whether the lessor will gain or lose by the assignment. It is sufficient that he insists upon his covenant.

But equity will relieve a tenant against a forfeiture for breach of condition against subletting if he was induced to make the sublease by conduct of his lessor, which amounts to fraud. Burke v. Prior, 15 Ir. Ch. Rep. 106. The court says the landlord will not be permitted, where, by a snare or contrivance, he has thrown the tenant off his guard to induce him to do an act amounting to a breach of covenant, then to turn around and insist on the forfeiture.

And in Hyde v. Warden, L. R. 3 Exch. Div. 72, which was a controversy between the tenant and one who had contracted for a sublease, as to the right to enforce the contract, it was objected that the required consent of the landowner had not been obtained. But the court held that it was stipulated that such consent should not be withheld from an assignment or underlease to a respectable and re-measure of damages; for the court never relieves but in cases where it can give some compensation for damages, and where there is some rule to be the measure of such damages, to avoid being arbitrary. That was quoted with approval in Sanders v. Pope, 12 Ves. Jr. 282, and is found often referred to in American decisions. The idea running through all the authorities is that one of the essentials to the application of the doctrine, that a court of equity may relieve from the consequences of a breach of a condition subsequent, is that the damages flowing from the breach must be such that the court can measure the same in money by some established rule.

If the breach of such a condition as those involved in this case could be, under some circumstances, dealt with by a court of equity, so as to save the wrongdoer from the legal consequences thereof, respondents would still have difficulty, for equity does not use its jurisdiction to save a party in such a case, if his default was wilful or inexcusable. 1 Jones, Real Prop. § 732. The doctrine applies that he who seeks equity must apply with clean hands. There must be grounds for equitable relief falling within the scope of the jurisdiction of the court, and the circumstances of the particular situation must be such as to excite a court of conscience to activity. How does this case stand tested by that rule? Neither Boyle nor his grantee, the Knickerbocker Ice Company, constructed, or attempted to construct, the connecting culverts to pre-sponsible person. And, since there was no objection to the defendant, an attempt on the part of the landowner to eject him on the ground of absence of consent would fail.

So, where a tenant for life had forfeited the estate by mortgaging it and levying a fine in corroboration of the mortgage, the court decreed that the mortgagee should hold during the life of the life tenant. Willis v. Fineux, Prec. in Ch. 100.

e. Copyholds.

Equity has concurrent jurisdiction with a court of law for illegal seizure of copyhold property for alleged breach of covenant. Andrews v. Hulse, 4 Kay & J. 392.

Where timber was cut on one copyhold for repairs on another within the same manor, equity relieved. Nash v. Derby, 2 Vern. 537.

In Penchy v. Somerset, Prec. in Ch. 574, 2 Eq. Abr. Cas. 227, pl. 9, where a copyholder had leased a portion of the estate for years, had opened a quarry upon the property, cut down trees, and inclosed part of the lands, it was held that there could be no relief in equity, unless there was some equitable circumstance in the case.

In the report in 1 Strange, 447, the lord chancellor is reported as saying, inferentially, that it is not an unconscionable thing to take advantage of a law which is known and equal to all.

f. Mining leases.

Where the lessee in an oil lease failed to comply with his covenant to commence operations within a specified time, or to pay the monthly rental, equity refused to interpose for his relief, the court saying that, while the general statement that equity abhors a forfeiture is true, it is only when it works a loss that is contrary to equity; not when it works equity to protect the landowner against the indifference and laches of the lessee, and prevents a great mischief. Brown v. Vandergift, 80 Pa. 142.

And that case was followed in Munroe v. Armstrong, 96 Pa. 307.

Where the lessor in a gas lease was attempting to enforce a forfeiture for nonpayment of rent at the day, and it appeared that time had never been insisted on as material, but payments had been received after they were due, the court said it is the settled rule 69 L. R. A.

that where time is not stipulated as essential, and a forfeiture for nonpayment of money or other matter that admits of accurate and full compensation is provided as a mere penalty whose object is to enforce performance of another and principal obligation, equity will relieve against it, and will not permit it to be used for a different and inequitable purpose. Lynch v. Versailles Fuel Gas Co. 165 Pa. 518, 30 Atl. 984.

Where the lessees in an oil and gas lease, after striking a paying well, inadvertently deprive the lessor of the use of the product, to which he is entitled under a condition in the lease, thereby incurring a forfeiture, equity may grant relief. South Penn Oil Co. v. Edgell, 48 W. Va. 348, 86 Am. St. Rep. 43, 37 S. E. 596. The court held that the provision for forfeiture was in the nature of a penalty to secure the rights of the lessor, against which equity would relieve when compensation could be fully made, and great loss, wholly disproportionate to the injury occasioned by the breach of contract, would otherwise result to the lessee, negligently, but not fraudulently, in default.

VII. Conditions against marriage.

A condition in a conveyance of property which is in restraint of all marriage has been held to be absolutely void, even at law, from a very early period; so that it has not been necessary to apply to equity for relief in such cases. But there have been a great many instances of conditions against marriage under a specified age, or without consent, which have occasioned the courts considerable trouble. They were not cases which could be settled on the theory of fraud, accident, or mistake, nor yet under the jurisdiction to relieve from forfeitures when compensation could be made. The courts, therefore, invented, or rather borrowed, a doctrine applicable solely to this class of cases, and they are, therefore, in a class by themselves, although they come within the general doctrine of relief from forfeiture.

There is no doubt that a condition to the vesting of a portion provided for the daughter, that she should never marry, is void, and will not be given effect by equity. Harvy v. Aston, 2 Comyns, Rep. 726, Reversing Cas. t. Talb. 212.

But the question whether or not a condition serve the usefulness of the cross drainage ditches. The failure was not caused by any mistake, nor was it the result of mere negligence. The obligation of the deed was intentionally disregarded. When called Boyle's attention to such obligation at the time he was preparing the granted premises for the railroad track. He was informed, in effect, that the culverts would not be put in because the purpose thereof could be served in another way. It is no answer to the neglect to construct culverts to say that the ditches made on either side of the granted premises, and the connection thereof with the cross drainage ditches, served the purpose of the culverts. The grantor was entitled to have just what he bargained for. The agreement to inclose the granted premises was not performed, though Boyle and his grantee, the ice company, were requested time and again to do so, attention being called at one time to the fact that the granted premises could be reclaimed for the default in that regard. Though in June, 1899, When consented to a delay in the construction of the fence till after harvest time, upon condition of its being then constructed, no attempt was made to fulfil that condition. In November, 1899, the railroad company inclosed the center 17 feet of the premises, being that portion theretofore leased to it by the ice company. That was not a substantial compliance with the conditions of the deed. On the contrary, it was a wilful disregard thereof. It was a distinct declaration to When that the de-that the legatee shall marry with consent of some person named is valid, has been the subject of much discussion by the English courts. The question in most of them, however, was not whether or not equity would relieve from breach of the condition, but whether the condition was in fact enforceable. The cases upon the subject are fully collected in the arguments in the case of Scott v. Tyler, 2 Bro. Ch. 431, Dick. 712, where the court held that the applicant for the legacy had not brought herself within the description of the gift, so that it had not attached, and relief was therefore denied to her.

While the discussions have been confined to the question of the validity of the conditions, since that was the only ground upon which equity could relieve, the fact that the aid of courts of equity was sought, and that the suits were entertained by them, shows that the granting of relief from forfeitures was recognized as a prerogative of such courts.

Whenever it was possible to construe the provision so as to avoid a forfeiture, such construction was given.

In Daley v. Desbouverie, 2 Atk. 261, the court says as to conditions, whether precedent or subsequent, where they are in restraint of marriage, the court has always put the most favorable construction upon them to prevent a forfeiture.

In Semphill v. Bayly, Prec. in Ch. 562, it appearing that the clause of the will giving the interest read, "and, if my daughter should happen to marry with the consent of my executors, then I devise to her" the amount named, to be paid to her at the age of twenty-one, or day of marriage, which shall first happen, it was held, further, that this showed no intention to make a forfeiture, but was only a cautionary provision.

With respect to conditions as to marriage. Lord Hardwicke stated, in Burleton v. Humfrey, 1 Amb. 256, that of late courts have done all they can to prevent a child being stripped of a portion, especially where there are no aggravating circumstances, and the end of the father's intention and caution has been attained; and have laid hold of and made such construction of words which they would not do in other cases.

In Berkley v. Ryder, 2 Ves. Sr. 533, where there was breach of a condition not to marry without consent, the chancellor proposed a compromise, stating that it would be no precedent, and it was agreed to.

In the early decisions the court felt itself bound to follow the rules of the common law if such rules were applicable. Therefore, if the condition was annexed to a devise of real estate, which, because of its local habitation, was regarded as peculiarly within the jurisdiction of the common-law courts, no relief could be afforded, because at common law there was no method of relief from a forfeiture for breach of a condition.

Therefore, where a legacy to one provided she do not marry without consent is charged on land, equity cannot relieve against a forfeiture for breach of the contract. Since, where the portion is charged on land, the case is governed by the rules of the common law, and the condition must be complied with to entitle to the benefit. Sheriff v. Morlock, W. Kelynge, 24.

But personal property was more under the control and supervision of the ecclesiastical courts, which had adopted the rule of the civil law, which regarded provisions in restraint of marriage as in terrorem because against the interests of the public, and as, therefore, not enforceable. Consequently the courts of equity considered themselves as free to follow the rule of the ecclesiastical courts when cases involving personality came before them.

In Williams ex dem. Porter v. Fry, 1 Mod. 86, Lord Hale said, with respect to a devise upon condition of marrying with consent, that chancery is so just as to enforce the civil and canon law as to personal legacies, but not as to land.

And, a bill having been brought in equity for relief, it was denied for the reason, inter alia, that it is a condition to constrain the party in that due obedience which law and nature require. There is a voluntary settlement with remainder over, both parties being in equal relation to the deviser, and the forfeiture was merely carrying out the intention of the deviser. Fry v. Porter, 1 Mod. 300.

But later, when courts of equity acquired more freedom, this distinction was no longer observed; and in Harvey v. Ashton, 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 216, pl. 12, it is stated that there is no distinction between conditions annexed to money charged upon land and those annexed to provisions arising out of personal estate.

pendants proposed to build the fence in such manner as they saw fit, instead of to inclose the 33-foot strip of land according to the terms of the deed. Such a disregard of the rights of Uhen, in the absence of proof of a waiver thereof on his part, leaves respondents in no situation to be recognized in a court of equity.

It is suggested that Uhen waived performance of the conditions of the agreement, and that his re-entry was not rightful on that account. It is elementary that a person circumstanced as he was may lose the benefit of the condition of his grant by an express or implied waiver thereof. Andrews v. Senter, 32 Me. 394; Ludlow v. New York & H. R. Co. 12 Barb. 440; Guild v. Richards, 16 Gray, 309; Hubbard v. Hubbard, 97 Mass. 188, 93 Am. Dec. 75; Sharon Iron Co. v. Erie, 41 Pa. 341; Grigg v. Landis, 21 N. J. Eq. 494; Bonniwell v. Madison, 107 Iowa, 85, 77 N. W. 530; 1 Jones, Real Prop. § 699. However, the record before us does not disclose evidence to establish a waiver. Mere silence or delay is not sufficient for that purpose any more than to create an estoppel which will prevent the assertion of a right. That was all there was in this case. Where the benefit of a condition subsequent has been adjudged lost by silence or delay, the person failing to perform relied upon the attitude of his obligee as evincing consent, and incurred expense or placed himself in such a situation by reason thereof that a change of the apparent position of such obligee, if given effect.

Conditions precedent.

In accordance with the rule which has already been noticed supra, 11., the courts conceived the idea that, if the condition was such that compliance with it was necessary to vest the estate, no relief could be had, in the absence of compliance.

Therefore, it was held that, if the portion is charged on land, equity will not vest it in case of a breach of condition precedent. Reves v. Herne, 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 215, pl. 10.

So where a legacy of a certain amount was given testator's granddaughter provided she remained with his executors and did not marry without their consent, and, upon noncompliance with either proviso she was to have a much less amount, and she married without their consent, the court held that the condition was in its nature precedent, and refused to grant her relief. Creagh v. Wilson, 2 Vern. 572.

So equity will not dispense with a condition precedent if one for whom a marriage portion is provided shall marry with consent. Harvy v. Aston, 2 Comyns, Rep. 726, Reversing Cas. t. Talb. 212.

And in the report of that case in 1 Atk. 361, it appeared that the case involved the enforcement of a condition in a will making the vesting of the estate depend upon marriage with consent, and Lord Chief Justice Lee said that though, where compensation can be made, there is but little difference between conditions precedent and subsequent, yet, where a condition is annexed to a portion in order to have a marriage with consent, there is an equitable difference. In case of a condition subsequent the thing is vested, and though in the nature of a penalty, yet, the intent shall be clear and plain by an express devise over to divest it; but in case of a condition precedent for which there can be no compensation, it would be giving an estate against the intent of the donor to dispense with the condition. And the lord chancellor said that where the condition of the vesting of the estate is marriage with consent, there is no rule in law or in equity that can excuse the want of consent. Lord Chief Justice Willes, however, said that the rule with regard to forfeiture had no application to the case; that the only question was whether or not the time had come when the sums ought to be raised and paid; reversing Hervey v. Aston, 69 L. R. A.

Cas. t. Talb. 212, where the master of rolls stated that where there was no devise over such provisions were construed to be in terrorem only. For, though the daughter marries with her father's consent, yet it is not to be supposed that this severity (was he living) would carry him so far as to leave her quite destitute. Besides, whatever is injurious to the commonwealth is unreasonable. And furthermore, the provision in this case was no more than providing for the daughter's dying unmarried.

And, as stated in the report in 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 147, pl. 6, he held that the proviso was only in terrorem, and created no forfeiture.

The distinction between conditions precedent and subsequent was, however, somewhat relaxed.

Where property was devised to testator's heir at law upon condition of her marriage with consent, it was contended that the condition was precedent, and that the estate could not vest without compliance with the condition; but the court held that this provision of the will was a mere trust, and that the daughter, as heir at law, would take the beneficial interest until marriage, so that the condition operates as a condition subsequent. Burleton v. Humfrey, 1 Amb. 256.

The question whether or not equity can relieve will depend very largely on the peculiar circumstances of each particular case. There may be cases in which it is plain that no interest has ever vested, and that, therefore, there is no ground for relief.

Thus, where a will provides a portion to be raised out of realty for testator's daughter, to be paid at the age of twenty-one, or marriage, equity will not vest the estate in case of her death before twenty-one unmarried. Foulet v. Poulet, 1 Vern. 204.

Upon further hearing, however, the decree was made to depend upon the fact that the will was only a confirmation of a prior deed, by the terms of which the estate had never vested. 1 Vern. 321.

But the same doctrine was applied in Yates v. Phettiplace, 2 Vern. 416, and Bruen v. Bruen, 2 Vern. 439.

Many of the bequests were upon condition that the beneficiary should marry with the consent of some person named. The courts were generally of opinion that marriage with such consent was a condition precedent, non-would seriously prejudice the obligor. Ludlow v. New York & H. R. Co. 12 Barb. 440, is a good illustration. The plaintiff conveyed land for right of way, to a railway company, upon condition of its road being completed over the premises on or before a particular day named in the conveyance. The condition was not satisfied. The grantor failed to claim the benefit of the condition for two years after the breach. He kept silent during that time as to any intention to claim a forfeiture, and in the meantime, to his knowledge, the grantee actually constructed the road as provided in the grant. The court held that the condition of the grant was waived by the conduct of the grantor, not because of mere delay or silence, but because such conduct induced the grantee to expend money which would be lost if he were allowed to reclaim the property. In Hubbard v. Hubbard, 97 Mass. 188, 93 Am. Dec. 75, the conditional grantor received benefits from the grant after the breach, keeping silent as to any purpose to insist upon a forfeiture. In Gray v. Blanchard, 8 Pick. 284, 292, it was said that mere indulgence alone is never construed into a waiver of a breach of condition. In Grigg v. Landis, 21 N. J. Eq. 494, a breach of a condition as to making improvements upon the granted premises was held waived because the grantee, relying upon indulgence in that there was delay in claiming a forfeiture, and silence as to any intention in that regard, conveyed the property to another, who in good faith compliance with which would bar all right to relief.

Where a legacy is given to one in case she marries with consent, it never vests if she dies unmarried. Elton v. Elton, 1 Wils. 159.

Equity will not dispense with a forfeiture for breach of a condition to marry with consent. Anonymous, 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 212, pl. 2.

So if lands are settled or a term of years created on trust to raise portions for daughters to be paid at the age of twenty-one, or marriage, death of the daughter before compliance with the condition will cause the property to sink into the estate for the benefit of the heir. Harvy v. Aston, 2 Comyns, Rep. 720, Reversing Cas. t. Talb. 212.

Equity will not relieve where a will provides an annuity of a certain amount for testator's daughter, and, if she marries with consent, then she shall have a larger amount in lieu of the annuity, since, if she marries without consent, she does not meet the condition precedent to her taking the larger amount. Gillet v. Wray, 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 213, pl. 3.

Where a legacy is given to one on condition of her marrying before a certain age with consent, and upon her failure to do so then over, marriage with consent is a condition precedent, nonperformance of which will prevent the title from vesting; and equity, therefore, cannot relieve. Malcolm v. O'Callaghan, 2 Madd. 349.

Under a devise in trust for testator's son while unmarried, and to convey to him in case he marries with consent, but in case of marriage without consent then to sell the estate and divide the proceeds, a marriage without consent vested the devise over, and defeated the son's interest. Long v. Ricketts, 2 Sim. & Stu. 179. The court says, to entitle himself to the estate, the son must marry with consent, and he has not performed that condition precedent.

Where a woman was left an annuity, but, in case she married with consent, she was to have a portion and the annuity to cease, it was held that there was a provision either way; and that, where the provision is in the alternative, and there is a condition precedent to the gift of the portion, viz. if she marries with consent, and that is not performed, and the child is still provided for, equity does not relieve. Gillet v. Wray, 1 P. Wms. 284.

But such course was by no means uniform.

For in Reynish v. Martin, 3 Atk. 330, it is 69 L. R. A.

stated that it is the doctrine of equity that, where a personal legacy is given to a child on condition of marriage with consent, this is not looked on as a condition annexed to the legacy, but as a declaration of the testator in terrorem. It being insisted that there could be no relief because the condition was precedent, the court said that where the condition is precedent the legatee takes nothing until the condition is performed, and consequently has no right to come and demand the legacy; but it is otherwise where the condition is subsequent, for in that case the legatee has a right, and the court will decree him the legacy. But this difference only holds where the legacy is a charge on real estate; and, therefore, if the legacy is merely of personality, marriage without consent would not preclude relief in equity. But if the legacy was a charge on real estate, the legatee could not come into equity to compel its payment after breach of condition, since the matter is governed by the rule of the common law. The reason is that when the jurisdiction originally and properly belonged to another forum equity would not break in, but would govern itself by the rules that had been established in that forum. The condition being good, it cannot, in law, be defeated, and, there being a full breach of it, since the law will not, equity cannot, help.

So a provision giving a certain amount in case the legatee shall marry with consent, and, in case she does not, she shall have a much less amount, is a provision in terrorem, against which equity will relieve. But it is intimated that, if any surprise or bribery had been used to procure an unsuitable marriage, the court might decree otherwise. Hicks v. Pendarris, 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 212, pl. 1.

So where an estate was given to testator's grandchild upon condition that she marry with consent of a person named, and in case she should marry without such consent, then the estate should go to another, the master of the rolls held that the condition must be held to be in terrorem; and, since the legatee had no notice of the condition, he decreed in her favor. But upon appeal the bill was dismissed upon the ground that, the condition being good, it could not be, in law, defeated, and there being a full breach of the condition which the law will not, equity cannot, help. And also, the breach was not relievable in equity because it made the improvements agreed upon, and made payments of the purchase money to the grantor, who received the same, but without knowledge of the breach of the condition.

Further discussion of this branch of the case, or citation of authority, seems unnecessary. There is some ground for saying that the demand for the construction of the fence, long after the breach in respect to the culverts, indicated a purpose to submit permanently to the method adopted by the grantee for conducting water from the cross drainage ditches off from the grantor's land, so that, if such demand had been complied with, all the conditions of the deed would be deemed waived. But the fence was not constructed. The act of building a fence inclosing the center 17 feet of the premises was such a manifestly intentional disregard of the obligations contained in the deed that the grantor lost no rights merely by not objecting thereto. It has never been held that an open, intentional violation of the obligations of a grant is sufficient in equity, coupled with mere silence on the part of the obligee, to constitute a waiver of strict performance.

The only other ground upon which judgment was awarded to respondents is that the premises in controversy were entered upon by consent of the ice company, and the railway track laid down and devoted to public purposes, and that the only remedy of appellant, if she possesses any, is under the statute in respect to the enforcement of

was a voluntary settlement to which the grantor had a right to attach such conditions as he saw fit. Fry v. Porter, 1 Ch. Cas. 138.

So where a legacy is given upon condition that the legatee marry with consent of a person named, without any devise over in case she marries without such consent, equity will hold the condition void as being merely in terrorem. Bellasis v. Ermine, 1 Ch. Cas. 22.

So in Gresley v. Luther, F. Moore, 857, Winch, J., cites Pigot's Case as holding that a legacy might be recovered notwithstanding noncompliance with a condition as to marriage with consent.

In Needham v. Vernon, Cas. t. Finch, 62, a settlement had been made to raise portions for the daughters of the settlor, payable at their respective marriages with consent, and for their maintenance in the meantime, and, if they marry without consent, then the portion of the one so marrying to go over. Both daughters, being advanced in years, and not intending to marry, applied to have the portion paid into their possession, which the court decreed upon their giving security to those entitled in remainder. Lord Chancellor Hardwicke disposes of this case in Reynish v. Martin, 3 Atk. 332, by saying that it is reported in a book of no authority. But a reference to it, of the same import, is found in 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. p. 111, pl. 6.

Alternative provisions.

Where a devise is to testator's daughter at twenty-one, or marriage, provided that, if she should marry without consent a portion of the amount should cease, and she gains the age of twenty-one, and then marries without consent, there shall be no forfeiture, for the devise vests at twenty-one. Kling v. Withers, Prec. in Ch. 348. The court says, since her marriage with consent was one condition, so her attaining her age of twenty-one was another, and whichever of them first happens entitles her to the whole portion.

Necessity of devise over.

Under the rule that a construction would be given to the condition, if possible, which would uphold the bequest, the courts held that where there was a mere bequest upon condition that the beneficiary should not marry without consent, without any disposition of the portion so bequeathed in case of breach of the condition, the testator would be regarded not as intending a forfeiture for noncompliance, but merely as having inserted the provision as a matter of advice or discipline.

tion, the testator would be regarded not as intending a forfeiture for noncompliance, but merely as having inserted the provision as a matter of advice or discipline.

In Jarvis v. Duke, 1 Vern. 19, the lord chancellor says, by way of argument, that where a legacy is given to a woman upon condition that she marry with consent, if the legacy is not limited over it is only in terrorem, and, though she marry without consent, she shall have the legacy.

In Garret v. Pritty, 2 Vern. 293, there was a devise to testator's daughter at twenty-one, or marriage, provided she married with consent, otherwise the legacy to cease. She married without consent, but the court decreed her the whole amount, "principally because it was not expressly devised over, but to fall into the surplus."

Where an interest does not accrue to a third person by breach of a condition as to marrying with consent, such a condition is void and only in terrorem, although the provision is that, in case of marriage with consent, the legacy shall be a certain amount, but, in case of marriage without consent, it shall be a less amount. Hicks v. Pendarvis, Freem. Ch. 41, 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 212.

In Marples v. Bainbridge, 1 Madd. 590, where the condition was that the devisee should continue unmarried, the court relieved from the forfeiture, not upon the ground that the condition was void as in restraint of marriage, but because there was no bequest over.

If there is no devise over upon a condition requiring marriage with consent, it will not be given effect; otherwise if there is, and also where the devise is to be raised out of land. Pulling v. Reddy, 1 Wils. 21; Rhenish v. Martin, 1 Wils. 130; Wheeler v. Bingham, 1 Wils. 135.

If there is no limitation over, it is merely a condition in terrorem, which equity will not enforce. Smphill v. Bayly, 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 213, pl. 6.

In Harvey v. Ashton, 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 216, pl. 12, it appears that the master of the rolls declared that by a clause declaring that, if any should die before marriage with consent her portion should cease, this was not a sufficient disposition, within the meaning of the cases, to allow a limitation over to be good, for this is not to take place upon the marrying without consent, but upon dying before marriage with the rights of a landowner in case of the occupancy thereof by his consent, express or implied, by a railway company, without its having compensated him therefor. Manifestly, that does not apply to the facts of this case, for two reasons: First, the track in question was laid down and operated for purely private purposes; second, the entry for that purpose is referable to an express contract. There was no intention, at the time of constructing the road, or thereafter, to devote it to any purpose other than the private use of the ice company. The evidence is all one way on that subject. It is absolutely essential to the right to exercise the power of eminent domain that there be a bona fide intention to devote the property, when acquired, to public use.

Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Morehouse, 112 Wis. 1, 56 L. R. A. 240, 88 Am. St. Rep. 918, 87 N. W. 849. The learned circuit court, in an opinion filed, seems to have had that in mind, and comprehended that the spur track in question was a purely private affair, and that, without a change in the attitude of the railway company in respect thereto, it could not, by adversary proceedings, acquire the right to continue the track if the title to the right of way were found to be in appellant; but the undisputed evidence as to the character of the way was lost sight of in making up the findings. In the opinion it is said, in effect: True, there can be no right of way secured by condemnation in the existing circumstances, but, though the track is now such consent, and it is no more than providing for the daughter's dying unmarried.

And in the report of that case in 2 Comyns, Rep. 726, Reversing Cas. t. Talb. 212, it is stated that it is settled that, if a pecuniary legacy is given on consideration that the legatee should not marry without consent, such condition is ineffectual if there is no devise over. But the contrary is true if there is a devise over.

Conversely, a devise over would prevent equitable relief.

Thus, in Sutton v. Jewke, 2 Rep. in Ch. 95, the court refused to relieve where money was left to be paid to a certain person at marriage, but, if she should marry without consent of a person named, then one third of the money should go as such person should appoint; and the marriage took place without consent, a provision having been made that in such event the one-third portion should be paid to another person named.

So, in Duffield v. Elwes, 1 Sim. & Stu. 239, where a man had conveyed certain estates in trust for his daughter, but declared that, if she married under age and without his consent, the trustees should hold the estate in trust for himself and his heirs, the court assumed that marriage without his consent vested the equitable estate in him.

So where a legacy is devised to a daughter, but, if she marry without consent, then a portion of it to go to a son, equity will not relieve in case she marries without consent. Stratton v. Grymes, 2 Vern. 357.

But even this rule was not consistently followed, for in Fleming v. Walgrave, 1 Ch. Cas. 58, a fund was raised for a feme sole in case she did not marry contrary to the liking of a person named, and if she did then to such parties as the person named should nominate. The feme sole married without consent, and the court was of opinion that it was not in the power of the trustee to dispose of the fund otherwise than for the benefit of the feme sole.

So in King v. Withers, Prec. in Ch. 348, the lord keeper says that the rule that where there is no devise over the condition shall be taken only in terrorem, is a great deal too wide.

The question what is a sufficient devise over has occasioned some discussion.

Equity will relieve against a condition in a 69 L. R. A.

bequest that the legatee shall not marry without consent, where there is no gift over other than of the general residue, without any express direction that the lapsed legacy shall sink into the residue; such condition being void as in terrorem. Wheeler v. Bingham, 3 Atk. 364. The chancellor said the true ground upon which this court has suffered the condition to effectuate is not the intention of the testator, but the right of a third person, it being given over and vesting in that third person if the condition is not performed.

So there must be an express bequest over of the particular legacy, and a mere gift of the residuum will not be sufficient to deprive the beneficiary of the legacy. The reason is because, when a testator makes one the residuary legatee, he has not that particular thing in his view or contemplation. Wheeler v. Bingham, 1 Wills. 135.

A provision for testator's niece, which should cease upon her marrying without consent, was held to be a condition subsequent, in Lloyd v. Branton, 3 Meriv. 108; and, the will having provided that the lapsed portion should fall into the residue, the court says the question whether a residuary bequest amounts to a disposition of the legacy has been a matter of much controversy, but states that in the case before it there is an express provision that the forfeited bequest shall sink into the residue, and holds that this was a sufficient express disposition of what was forfeited to prevent equity from granting relief.

The master of the rolls having suggested, in Lloyd v. Branton, 3 Meriv. 118, that the case of Garret v. Pritty, 2 Vern. 293, could not proceed upon the ground stated by the report, Merivale sets out the record from the register, and suggests that it must be inferred from the circumstances that the case really turned upon the subsequent approbation of the marriage.

Under a devise of a certain amount upon reaching a specified age, or marriage with consent; but, in case of marriage without consent, then devise to have only one half the amount named, with nothing but a general disposal of the residue,—the master of the rolls refused to relieve against the forfeiture on the ground that it was more than a clause in terrorem. Amos v. Horner, 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 112, pl. 9.

What consent sufficient.

There has been a tendency to hold that if any but a private way, it is competent for the railway company to make it a public way and to invoke the power of eminent domain to acquire a property right in the premises for that purpose; and that is sufficient to warrant a court of equity in refusing to aid appellant to secure the undisputed enjoyment of her property. That is the idea we gather from the opinion. The mere statement of the proposition is sufficient to condemn it. It has often been held that, if the owner of real estate permits a railway company to occupy the same with a public railroad track, he will be deemed to have consented to take, as compensation for the permanent use thereof, what he can obtain by the procedure laid down by the statutes for the protection of his constitutional rights. But it has never been held, and it would be manifestly absurd to hold, that consent can be obtained, expressly or by implication, for the occupancy of land by a railway company for a private purpose, and the possession thus obtained be referred to as evidence of consent to the occupancy of the property for public purposes, so as to render the doctrine mentioned applicable.

It follows from what has been said that, at the time of the commencement of this action, appellant was the owner in fee simple and in possession of the premises described in the complaint, and that, under existing circumstances, she was entitled to invoke the jurisdiction of equity to quiet her title thereto against the defendants, and to enjoin them from interfering with her consent appeared which could be held to meet the requirements of the testator it would be sufficient.

Thus, if the condition is marriage with consent of two persons named, the death of one relieves the condition. Peyton v. Bury, 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 214 pl. 9.

The ground of this ruling is stated in 2 P. Wms. 626, to be that the condition was subsequent, and that, if such a condition becomes impossible by the act of God, this excuses and discharges the grantee from it.

So, in Clark v. Lucy, 2 Ep. Cas. Abr. 213, pl. 4, it is said that conditions for marriage with consent, whether precedent or subsequent, are in the nature of forfeitures, and, if the substantial part and intent are performed, equity will supply some small defects and circumstances, and favor the devisee.

In that case the condition was marriage with consent of the trustees, but the father had given his consent before his death, and this was held sufficient. 5 Vin. Abr. 87, pl. 6.

Where the condition is that the marriage shall be with the consent or approbation of a trustee, consent after the marriage is sufficient. Burleton v. Humfrey, 1 Amb. 256.

But in Clarke v. Parker, 19 Ves. Jr. 1, equity refused to relieve where the will required consent of three, and that of two, only, was obtained.

Where lands were devised to testator's daughters for life, but upon condition that, if they married without the consent of their mother, the property should be held in trust for their separate use, and the mother, after giving consent, withdrew it from caprice, the court refused to enforce the condition, and placed the property at the separate use of the daughters. Strange v. Smith, 1 Amb. 263.

But in Dashwood v. Burkeley, 10 Ves. Jr. 230, it is said that it would be very dangerous to hold that if, at a particular time, a person in loco parentis, upon a conscious sense of duty, thinks himself required to give consent, and previous to the marriage is duly informed of circumstances that ought to have operated at first to make him withhold his consent, if he has once given it he shall not afterward alter his mind. And it was held that, upon the refusal of the intending husband to comply with his agreement to execute a settlement, the trustees had a right to withdraw their consent to the marriage, and that equity would not relieve from the result of marrying without such consent.

Necessity of notice.

In Malloon v. Fitzgerald, 3 Mod. 28, which was an action at law, there was a settlement in trust for the grantor's only heir provided she marry with consent, and it was held that she must have notice of the condition to make it enforceable against her.

The same doctrine is announced in the report of the case in 2 Shower, 323. But no judgment is announced in the report in Skinner, 125.

Relief with no reasons given.

In Bennett v. Salisbury, Freem. Ch. 119, where a certain amount was provided to be paid to the daughters of the settlor at the age of twenty-five, or marriage, so as that marriage be had after the age of sixteen with consent; and, if they shall marry otherwise, then to have one half the amount,—it was held that, even if the provisions intended that marriage under the age of sixteen should work a forfeiture, yet equity will relieve.

And in Southampton v. Cramborne, Freem. Ch. 186, where similar facts appeared, except that the additional proviso was made, that there should be issue male of the marriage, this ruling was approved on the ground that, since the daughter reached the age of sixteen, she might have been held to have married after that age. This case was, however, reversed by the House of Lords in Wood v. Southampton, Shower, P. C. 83. And in 2 Comyns, Rep. 732, this reversal is said to be on the ground that the requirement of issue male had not been complied with.

Summary.

In Stackpole v. Beaumont, 3 Ves. Jr. 89, the lord chancellor said, with respect to a condition of marriage with consent when attached to a legacy, it is impossible to reconcile the authorities, or range them under one sensible, plain, general rule. There can be no ground in the construction of legacies for a distinction between legacies out of personal and out of real estate. The construction ought to be precisely the same. I do not see more importance in reality in the distinction between conditions precedent and subsequent. In deciding questions possession thereof. The case seems clear upon all the points involved.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is reversed and the cause remanded with directions to render judgment in favor of the plaintiff according to the prayer of the complaint.

Cassoday, Ch. J., dissenting:

I do not understand this to be a bill in equity brought by the defendants, or either of them, to relieve themselves from a forfeiture. On the contrary, I understand it is a bill in equity filed by the plaintiff to have a forfeiture adjudged in her favor, and to enforce the same. The complaint alleges that at the times mentioned the plaintiff was the owner in fee simple and in the possession of the premises described. Each of the answers denies such allegations, and alleges that at all such times the defendant ice company was the owner in fee simple, and in the exclusive possession of such premises. Such was the controversy between the parties. At the close of the testimony the plaintiff requested the court to find that January 4, 1900, Boyle's grantor made re-entry in person upon the land in question, and declared the title thereto forfeited for noncompliance with the condition subsequent in the deed, and took possession of the same, and thereupon conveyed the same to the plaintiff. The trial court refused to so find, presumably upon the ground that this court had repeatedly held that "courts of equity will not take juristhat arise upon legacies out of land, the court very properly followed the rule that the common law prescribes and common sense supports to hold the condition binding where it is not illegal. Where it is illegal, the condition will be rejected, and the gift pure. In regard to legacies out of personalty, the court attempted to follow the supposed rule of the ecclesiastical court. Distinction upon distinction was taken to get out of the supposed difficulty. The rule of the civil law as to restraints upon marriage was said to be inapplicable in England. So far, therefore, as a condition operates in restraint of marriage only up to twenty-one years of age, it is not illegal, and a court of equity will not relieve against its breach. The question is not whether a forfeiture has been incurred, but whether the parties to whom the legacy is given have put themselves in a situation to answer the description of the person to take. The chancellor also says: "I do not see the great importance of the distinction upon a bequest over of the legacy. It is one of the points that occurred to the judges to deliver them from the difficulty arising from a rule of the civil law."

And that case was followed in Clifford v. Beaumont, 4 Russ. Ch. 325.

VIII. After forfeiture declared.

Although the mere declaration of the forfeiture will not, of itself, destroy the power of equity to afford relief, yet that is an important step towards the assertion of the rights of the obligee; and, where he has taken the necessary steps to reassert his title at law, the obligor must make a stronger case to entitle himself to relief.

In Gould v. Bugbee, 6 Gray, 371, the court held that evidence to show the forfeiture and entry was admissible in an action of trespass, for, "though the defendants were relievable in equity," proof of the facts offered would enable plaintiffs to maintain an action for damages at law.

Even though an action is brought in equity to compel the reconveyance for breach of a condition subsequent after re-entry for the forfeiture, that court will not aid the grantee on the theory that it will not aid in the enforcement of a forfeiture if the forfeiture has already been declared, and all that remains is the right to remove the cloud from the title of the grantor. Parsons v. Smille, 97 Cal. 647, 32 Pac. 702. The court says that the re-entry at law revested the title in the grantor, and that, in order to defeat his right to remove the cloud from his title, it would be necessary for the grantee to show that equity has the power to defeat the operation of the law and the acts of the parties, and take away from the grantor the estate which has become re-vested in him and again vest it in the grantee.

Where a tenant refused for twenty years to perform his covenants, the court denied him relief from an entry for forfeiture for the breach. Cox v. Higford, 2 Vern. 664.

Relief will not be granted to a lessee if the lessor has entered for nonperformance of the covenant, so that he cannot be restored to his former position. Peoples' Bank v. Mitchell, 78 N. Y. 408.

Where the tenant wilfully refuses to pay the arrears, he will not be relieved after the landlord has entered and leased the premises to another. Dorrington v. Jackson, 1 Vern. 449.

In Stamps v. Cooley, 91 N. C. 316, where the landlord entered for nonpayment of rent, and terminated a lease which gave the tenant the right to remove improvements at the end of the term, whereupon the tenant brought an action for their value, it was held that a court of equity will not interfere for the purpose of exposing a party to an action for damages. If any relief shall be granted it will be one for extending the time for removal of the improvements.

After forfeiture and re-entry for breach of covenant to pay taxes, equity will grant no relief. Baldwin v. Rees, 6 Ohio Dec. Reprint. 869. The court says nonpayment of taxes is not like nonpayment of rent, it puts in jeopardy the estate of the lessor, and equity does not relieve against a forfeiture effected for such a breach.

In Wilmington Star Min. Co. v. Allen, 95 Ill. 288, the court refused to protect the lessee of a mine from forfeiture for breach of his contract to continue mining operations, without discussing the principles upon which courts of equity proceed in such cases. But in that case it appeared that the lessee had abandoned the lease and surrendered possession, while the lessor had re-entered and released the property; and the court says that, after such conduct, it would be highly inequitable to retract what diction of a case for the purpose of aiding or enforcing a forfeiture, but will leave the complainant to his remedy at law." Clark v. Drake, 3 Pinney (Wis.) 228; Lawe v. Hyde, 39 Wis. 345; Mills v. Evansville Seminary, 47 Wis. 354, 2 N. W. 550, 52 Wis. 669, 9 N. W. 925, 58 Wis. 135, 15 N. W. 133; Hagerty v. White, 69 Wis. 317, 326, 34 N. W. 92. In my judgment it is not the case of a party in the exclusive possession of land after the breach of condition subsequent, and then filing a bill in equity to quiet the title and protect such possession. To my mind the trial court properly relegated the plaintiff to her remedy at law.

was a virtual surrender of the lease, and there should be an estoppel to do so.

Equity will not entertain a bill to relieve from a forfeiture of a leasehold for nonpayment of rents where the right to declare it was reserved in the lease, and the power so reserved has been properly exercised. But where the lessor has neglected to declare a forfeiture until long after the rent became due pending negotiations for a change in the contract, he will not be permitted to declare the forfeiture without giving notice to the lessee. Palmer v. Ford, 70 Ill. 369.

But equity may relieve where the forfeiture is illegally enforced, as where it is enforced against an infant. Litton's Case, Cary, 6.

And the jurisdiction to grant relief to the tenant who has forfeited his lease for nonpayment of rent extends to cases where the lessor has obtained peaceable possession of the property without the aid of the court. Howard v. Fanshawe [1895] 2 Ch. 589.

IX. Statutory forfeiture.

If the forfeiture is declared by statute, equity has not jurisdiction to afford relief from it.

Where a forfeiture is imposed by statute for failure to comply with the condition of a public grant, equity cannot relieve against it. Woodson v. Skinner, 22 Mo. 13; Huth v. Carondelet, 26 Mo. 466; Taylor v. Carondelet, 22 Mo. 105.

Equity has no power to avoid the provisions of a statute limiting a lessee to six months in which to regain possession after he has been dispossessed for breach of condition. Gorman v. Low, 2 Edw. Ch. 324.

Equity will not interpose to relieve from a forfeiture under a statute providing that, upon failure to make payments for public land at the time specified in the contract, all right of the purchaser shall cease. Where the expression of the legislative will is clear and explicit, equity cannot defeat its operation on the ground that it is harsh and severe. Smith v. Mariner, 5 Wis. 551, 68 Am. Dec. 73.

In Keating v. Sparrow, 1 Ball & B. 373, where a tenant had incurred a forfeiture under the statute for failure to pay a renewal fine at the time specified, the court says that the principle that equity will relieve against forfeitures when compensation can be made is applicable to cases of contract between the parties, but not to the provisions of an act of Parliament or conditions in law. The true ground of relief against penalties is when, from the original intent of the case, the penalty is designed only to secure the money.

Keating v. Sparrow was recognized in Re Brain, L. R. 18 Eq. 389, which involved the forfeiture of a lease of a government mine; but the court refused the relief in that case because the time in which, in analogy to the statute governing the rights between landlord and tenant, it might have been granted, had passed.

69 L. R. A.

But where a statute provides for the lease of government land by an instrument which shall contain the usual covenant for payment of rent, and a condition for re-entry on nonpayment thereof, equity will regard the clause as subject to the ordinary rule that equity will relieve from a forfeiture for noncompliance therewith. Atty. Gen. v. Eitershank, L. R. 6 P. C. 354.

The forfeiture of a lease by a municipal corporation under authority of the legislature for nonpayment of rent cannot be relieved against. Carondelet v. Wolfert, 39 Mo. 305.

X. Statutory jurisdiction.

As has already been stated supra, III., b. 5, as soon as the English House of Lords refused to grant relief in cases of failure promptly to renew leases a statute was passed providing for such relief. Other statutes have been passed regulating the relief of tenants, and the powers of the court in such cases are very largely controlled by the provisions of the statutes.

By statute, in New York, equity is given jurisdiction of a suit to avoid a forfeiture for nonpayment of rent. Horton v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 12 Abb. N. C. 30, Affirmed in 102 N. Y. 697.

The Irish act of 19 & 20 Geo. III. provided that equity, upon adequate compensation being made, shall relieve tenants against lapse of time for payment of rent if no circumstances of fraud be proved, unless it shall appear that after a demand made the tenant refused or neglected to renew within a reasonable time after such demand. Therefore the court will relieve from a forfeiture for delay in payment of rent or renewal of the lease where the delay is satisfactorily accounted for. Jessop v. King, 2 Ball & B. 81.

Under the Irish tenantry acts, the right of equity to relieve was limited to cases of mere negligence. Jackson v. Saunders, 2 Dow, P. C. 442.

Under-tenants are entitled to relief under the Irish acts. Berney v. Moore, 2 Ridgw. P. C. 310.

Under a statute providing that, upon neglect to renew a lease at the time specified, courts of equity, upon adequate compensation being made, shall relieve the tenant against lapse of time if no circumstances of fraud be proved against him, unless it be proved that the landlord had demanded the payment of the fine and the same had been refused or neglected to be paid within a specified time, renewal will not be decreed in equity where the tenant refuses, for a number of years after demand, to comply with it; and inability to comply is no excuse. Mountnorris v. White, 2 Dow, P. C. 459.

In Doe ex dem. Hitchings v. Lewis, 1 Burr. 619, it is stated that the purpose of the act of 4 Geo. II., chap. 28, was to require the tenant to take his proceedings to secure relief from

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

Albert L. GORDON, Appt.,

v.

Alice G. RICHARDSON.

(185 Mass. 492.)

1. A tenant cannot be relieved from forfeiture of his term because of breach of his covenant to pay taxes after the premises have been sold because of his default, since he can no longer perform his covenant, or make compensation for the breach, so as to entitle himself to equitable relief.
2. That there is evidence in the record that a tenant permitted the premises to be sold for taxes in violation of his covenant through mistake does not require a reversal of a judgment dismissing his bill for equitable relief from a forfeiture claimed on that ground, where there is no statement of facts found, or of rulings made; since it cannot be held to have been error to refuse to give credence to such evidence.
3. One filing a bill for relief from a forfeiture, at law, of a lease, will not be heard to contend that the entry of the landlord was invalid because there was no forfeiture.

(May 17, 1904.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Suffolk County in favor of defendant in an action brought to secure relief from an attempted forfeiture of a lease. Affirmed.

Plaintiff had taken a lease of property on Winter street, Boston, under an instrument a forfeiture within a specified time, or be barred from all relief.

Under the statute 4 Geo. II., relief can be given the tenant only in case the breach is for nonpayment of rent. Wadman v. Calcraft, 10 Ves. Jr. 67.

Under the English act of 4 Geo. II., it is not necessary that the arrears of rent be brought into court to entitle the lessee to relief. Bowser v. Colby, 1 Hare, 109.

The English statute of 22 & 23 Vict., chap. 35, provides for relief from forfeiture for failure to insure, and applies to contracts made before as well as after its passage. Page v. Bennett, 6 Jur. N. S. 419.

And so the provisions of the act of 44 & 45 Vict., chap. 41, for the relief of the tenant, were held to extend to breaches committed before the enactment of that statute, and to proceedings pending when they came into operation. Quilter v. Mapleson, L. R. 9 Q. B. Div. 672.

In Croft v. London & C. Banking Co. L. R. 14 Q. B. Div. 347, Cotton, L. J., says that the terms imposed by the statute governing the rights of tenants as to payment of rent and costs are conditions imposed by the act, without compliance with which the injunction to restrain ejectment for nonpayment of rent could not be granted by the court.

69 L. R. A.

which reserved a right of entry for breach of covenant, and provided that "thereupon the lessor may, at discretion, relet the premises, or any part thereof, at the risk of the lessee, who shall remain for the residue of the term responsible for the rent, taxes, and water rates herein reserved, and shall be credited with such sums, only, as shall be by the lessor actually realized."

Plaintiff sublet the premises, permitted some taxes to become in arrear, and defendant entered for breach of covenant, and made a new contract with the sublessee.

Further facts appear in the opinion.

Mr. Charles R. Darling, for appellant:

Under the provision of the lease, the plaintiff is to continue to pay rent, eo nomine, and, as one who pays rent is a tenant, the attempt is to retain him as a tenant while denying him the tenant's right to possession of the premises.

Accepting a sum of money as rent eo nomine, after an alleged forfeiture, operates as a waiver of the forfeiture, although the landlord may protest that he does not waive it.

Croft v. Lumley, 5 El. & Bl. 648; Davenport v. Queen, L. R. 3 App. Cas. 115; Smith v. McNany, 170 Mass. 28, 64 Am. St. Rep. 272, 48 N. E. 871.

If the defendant had a right of re-entry under the lease, he parted with it by the lease to Bailey, since he thereby parted with the reversion, and the right of re-entry attends the reversion.

The statute in England authorizes relief from forfeiture for nonpayment of rent and failure to insure in proper cases. Bamford v. Creasy, 3 Giff. 675.

In Swanton v. Biggs, Beaty, 170, the court says it was the object of the statute to give an evicted tenant a remedy for fraud,—reinstatement in case he paid his arrears of rent within a specified time; and that the court could not take into consideration breaches of other conditions in the lease for the purpose of defeating that remedy.

Failure to give the notice required by the act of 1881 is ground for relief in equity. North London Freehold Land & House Co. v. Jaques, 49 L. T. N. S. 659. [1883] W. N. 187.

Under the statute, when a demand is made the neglect to pay when it goes beyond what is a reasonable time for payment, ceases to be mere neglect, and becomes wilful. Barrett v. Burke, 5 Dow, 1.

Under the Canadian statute (Ont. Rev. Stat. chap. 143, § 22) providing that, if the lessee obtain equitable relief he shall hold and enjoy etc., he is not entitled to relief from forfeiture for nonpayment of rent as matter of right without regard to the collateral equities. Coventry v. McLean, 21 Ont. App. Rep. 176.

H. P. F.

Dumpor's Case, 4 Coke, 119; Wright v. Hurrelghes, 3 C. B. 685.

Conditions in leases are intended as security, and are enforceable only for that purpose. Where compensation can be made for the breach, that is all that can be demanded.

2 Story, Eq. Jur. 13th ed. §§ 1314-1316; 2 Platt, Leases, pp. 475, 479, 482; 2 Taylor, Land. & T. 8th ed. §§ 495, 496; Tiedeman, Eq. Jur. § 35; Mactier v. Osborn, 146 Mass. 399, 4 Am. St. Rep. 323, 15 N. E. 641; Lundin v. Schæffel, 167 Mass. 465, 45 N. E. 933.

Breach of covenant to pay taxes comes within the rule.

Lundin v. Schæffel, 167 Mass. 465, 45 N. E. 933; Giles v. Austin, 62 N. Y. 486; Hagar v. Buck, 44 Vt. 285, 8 Am. Rep. 368.

For most purposes, a tax sale is considered to create an encumbrance rather than to divest the title, so long as the right of redemption remains.

Stuart v. Reliance Ins. Co. 179 Mass. 434, 60 N. E. 929.

Indulgence by the landlord may prevent him from taking advantage of delay in payment by the tenant.

Thropp v. Field, 26 N. J. Eq. 82; Horton v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 12 Abb. N. C. 30.

It is no objection to the maintenance of this bill that the overdue rent and taxes were not paid before bringing the bill. This is not required when the landlord is in possession, as here, and no injunction is granted against him pending suit.

2 Platt, Leases, p. 479; Bowser v. Colby, 1 Hare, 109; Atkins v. Chilson, 11 Met. 112; Thomas v. Beals, 154 Mass. 51, 27 N. E. 1004.

The alienation to Bailey by the lease given to him by the defendant does not affect the plaintiff's right to relief; Bailey takes subject to all the equities of the plaintiff.

Abrams v. Watson, 59 Ala. 524.

Mr. Harvey N. Shepard, for respondent:

The provision, in the indenture, for forfeiture on nonpayment of rent and taxes, is good in law, and enforceable.

Brand v. Frumveller, 32 Mich. 215; Allen v. Dent, 4 Lea, 676; Morrill v. De la Granja, 99 Mass. 383.

In this cause there is no accident or mistake for the petitioner to plead; but, on the contrary, his neglect was deliberate and wilful, and in the face of repeated warnings. His petition is without equity.

Barnet v. Passumpsic Turnp. Co. 15 Vt. 757; Gregory v. Wilson, 9 Hare, 683; Hill v. Barclay, 18 Ves. Jr. 56.

The petitioner cannot be restored, as prayed by his bill of complaint, without injury to Byron E. Bailey; and it would be a hardship to compel Mr. Bailey, who is without fault, to become again a subtenant of the petitioner. The court, therefore, will not interfere.

Kerr, Fraud & Mistake, 436; Giles v. Austin, 62 N. Y. 486.

Loring, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The ground on which a tenant gets relief in equity from the forfeiture of his estate for a failure to pay rent is that in equity the landlord's right of re-entry is given as security for the payment of the rent, and on the rent being paid the very thing is done for which the security was given; and, although the payment in that case is made after it is due, on interest being paid compensation is made for the delay in performance, and on compensation being made the plaintiff is entitled to relief. Peachy v. Somerset, 1 Strange, 447; Hill v. Barclay, 16 Ves. Jr. 402, and 18 Ves. Jr. 56; Reynolds v. Pitt, 19 Ves. Jr. 134; Howard v. Fanshawe [1895] 2 Ch. 589. The Massachusetts cases are Atkins v. Chilson, 11 Met. 112; Sanborn v. Woodman, 5 Cush. 36. See also, in this connection, Stone v. Ellis, 9 Cush. 95; Hancock v. Carlton, 6 Gray, 39, explained in Mactier v. Osborn, 146 Mass. 399, 402, 4 Am. St. Rep. 323, 15 N. E. 641.

But that does not cover the case before us. In this case the defendant entered for breach of the covenant to pay taxes, as well as for breach of the covenant to pay rent. When he exercised his right of re-entry in September, 1902, not only was the tax for 1900 not paid, but the estate of the defendant had been sold because of the plaintiff's failure to pay this tax as he had covenanted to do. The defendant's estate had been sold to pay this tax in the June preceding the September when the defendant entered on the estate. The thing here in question secured by the right of re-entry not only has not been performed, but it cannot be performed now. The tax for 1900 has been paid, and no longer can be paid by the plaintiff. The tax was paid to the collector by the application thereto of the proceeds of the tax sale. There is a right to redeem this tax title, but the tax has been paid, and the thing secured by the landlord's right of re-entry can no longer be performed by the tenant. By the very terms of the covenant secured by the forfeiture, any performance of it is at an end, and that is the end of the plaintiff's application for relief from the forfeiture in the case at bar.

Moreover, if it were permissible to look behind the terms of the covenant here in question to what might be termed its true nature and substance, the plaintiff would gain nothing. If you look beyond its terms, the real substance and nature of a covenant to pay taxes assessed on the demised premises is to protect and hold harmless the landlord's estate. When the breach of the covenant has reached the stage where the landlord's estate has been sold to pay the taxes which the tenant should have paid, and through the default of the tenant a paramount outstanding title has come into existence, we have a breach of covenant for which the plaintiff fails to show that compensation can be made. It is like the breach of a covenant to insure or repair, where equity does not ordinarily grant relief against forfeiture of the tenant's estate. Mactier v. Osborn, 146 Mass. 399, 402, 4 Am. St. Rep. 323, 15 N. E. 641. Hill v. Barclay, 16 Ves. Jr. 402, and 18 Ves. Jr. 56 (overruling Lord Erskine's opinion in Sanders v. Pope, 12 Ves. Jr. 282, which never went to decree, page 294); Reynolds v. Pitt, 19 Ves. Jr. 134; Bracebridge v. Buckley, 2 Price, 200; Green v. Bridges, 4 Sim. 96. Lord Erskine's opinion in Sanders v. Pope was in effect that the forfeiture of a leasehold estate for breach of a collateral covenant stood on the same ground at common law as that on which the forfeiture of a bond stands under Stat. 8 & 9 Wm. III., chap. 11, § 8, which (as Baron Parke said in Beckham v. Drake, 2 H. L. Cas. 579, 629) "in effect makes the bond a security only for the damages really sustained." But that view did not prevail. It is settled that in case of waste (Peachy v. Somerset, 1 Strange, 447), in case of a breach of a covenant to make repairs (Hill v. Barclay, 16 Ves. Jr. 402, and 18 Ves. Jr. 56; Bracebridge v. Buckley, 2 Price, 200), and in case of the breach of a covenant to insure (Reynolds v. Pitt, 19 Ves. Jr. 134; Green v. Bridges, 4 Sim. 96), it being impossible for the tenant to show affirmatively that compensation can be made, relief ordinarily will not be given. It was this which C. Allen, J., had in mind in Lundin v. Schæffel, 167 Mass. 465, 469, 45 N. E. 933, when he said of the case then before the court that it "was not like a case where the omission caused a present injury or increase of risk to the lessors, as in the case of waste, nonrepair, or noninsurance." The lack of recent cases in England is owing to the fact that relief is given by statute in case of covenants other than the covenant to pay rent. Stat. 22 & 23 Vict. chap. 35, § 4, authorized relief in case of the breach of a covenant to insure, and Stat. 44 & 45 Vict. chap. 41, § 14, in case of all other covenants except the covenant to pay rent (see clause 8 of § 14), in which case a bill must be brought within six months from the execution putting the landlord in possession, by force of Stat. 4 Geo. II. chap. 28. It is settled that, if a bill is brought within the time allowed for relief against a forfeiture for breach of a covenant to pay rent, the relief is given at common law. Howard v. Fanshawe [1895] 2 Ch. 589; Stanhope v. Haworth, 3 Times, L. R. 34. As to the purpose of Stat. 4 Geo. II. chap. 28, see Lord Mansfield in Doe ex dem. Hitchings v. Lewis, 1 Burr. 614, 619, and Wigram, V. C., in Bourser v. Colby, 1 Hare, 109, 125.

From what has been said it is apparent that we are not prepared to go so far as the court of appeals went in its opinion in Giles v. Austin, 62 N. Y. 486, 493. The facts in that case are stated in 6 Jones & S. 215, and it appears that the failure to pay the taxes in that case was in fact through accident and mistake, although that was not relied on in the opinion of the court.

There is, however, jurisdiction to relieve against a forfeiture for breach of collateral covenants, if the breach came through accident or mistake. This was established in this commonwealth in Mactier v. Osborn, 146 Mass. 399, 4 Am. St. Rep. 323, 15 N. E. 641, following the suggestion of Lord Eldon in Hill v. Barclay, 18 Ves. Jr. 56, 62, Affirmed in Bamford v. Creasy, 3 Giff. 675, 680, and Bargent v. Thomson, 4 Giff. 473. If it be assumed in favor of the plaintiff that he could have relief here on proving that it was through an accident or a mistake on his part that the nonpayment of the 1900 taxes went to a sale, yet the decree in the case at bar must be affirmed. The case comes here by appeal from a decree dismissing the bill. The evidence is before us, but there is no statement of facts found, or of rulings made. The decree, so far as it involves matters of fact, is to stand, unless it appears by the evidence to be clearly erroneous. Brown v. Brown, 174 Mass. 197, 75 Am. St. Rep. 303, 54 N. E. 532; Dickinson v. Todd, 172 Mass. 184, 51 N. E. 976; S. K. Edwards Hall Co. v. Dresser, 168 Mass. 136, 46 N. E. 420; Lundin v. Schæffel, 167 Mass. 465, 45 N. E. 933. See also Blossom v. Negus, 182 Mass. 515, 65 N. E. 846. It is enough that the presiding judge who saw the plaintiff on the stand may not have given credit to the excuse which he made, namely, that the sale for the 1900 tax was made earlier than usual.

We have not considered the plaintiff's argument that there was no forfeiture of the lease. We are of opinion that, in a bill in equity to be relieved from a forfeiture at law, it is not open to him to make the contention that there is no forfeiture at law. Such a case comes within Pitkin v. Springfield, 112 Mass. 509, in which it was held that, in a petition for compensation for land taken, it was not open to contend that the statute providing for the taking was unconstitutional, or that the taking was invalid.

See also, in this connection, Smith v. Valence, 1 Rep. in Ch. 169. The case of Boston & M. R. Co. v. Graham, 179 Mass. 62, 60 N. E. 405, stands on its special circumstances. Whether the plaintiff could have attached the forfeiture at law and filed this bill in case he was unsuccessful at law (see Moore v. Sanford, 151 Mass. 285, 7 L. R. A. 151, 24 N. E. 323), or must in such a case make his election in the first instance, it is not necessary to consider.

Decree affirmed.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

Lida M. GARRIGUE, Impleaded, etc., Appt.,
v.

Jacob KELLER

(.....Ind.....)

1. That a note for the payment of which a married woman becomes surety is made payable in a state where such contract is invalid will not, although the suit is brought in that state, defeat her liability if the contract was valid at her domicile, where it was executed.
2. The execution of a renewal note in consideration of the surrender of one upon which the signer was liable as surety will bind him as principal, as between himself and the payee.
3. The admission of evidence of a conversation between the maker and payee of a note as to the law by which it shall be governed, which took place in the absence of the surety, is not reversible error upon complaint of the surety, where the conversation merely corroborated the effect of the contract itself, and there was no evidence to the contrary.
4. Failure to set out instructions to which objection is made, as required by rule of court will waive the objection.
5. Delivery of notes into the mail, to be forwarded to another state in accordance with the understanding between maker and payee, completes the delivery so as to make the contract one to be governed by the laws of the state where the postoffice is located.
6. The enforcement of a contract of suretyship against a married woman, which is valid in the state where made, is not impossible in another state, as violative of its public policy, merely because its statutes forbid her to bind herself by such a contract.

(May 23, 1905.)

APPPEAL by defendant Lida M. Garrigue from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Noble County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to enforce payment of certain promissory notes out of the property

NOTE.—For conflict of laws as to capacity of married women to contract, see also, in this series. Union Nat. Bank v. Chapman, 57 L. R. A. 513, and note.

For conflict of laws as to negotiable paper, see also Spies v. National City Bank, 61 L. R. A. 193, and note, and Cherry v. Sprague, 67 L. R. A. 33.
69 L. R. A.

of a married woman, who signed them as surety. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. L. W. Welker, for appellant:

It matters not where the domicile of the maker of the note is if the parties fix a place for the performance of the contract, for in such case the parties will be presumed to have contracted with reference to the law of the place.

Hunt v. Standart, 15 Ind. 36, 77 Am. Dec. 79; Butler v. Myer, 17 Ind. 77; Browning v. Merritt, 61 Ind. 425; Midland Steel Co. v. Citizens' Nat. Bank (Ind. App.) 72 N. E. 290; Fordyce v. Nelson, 91 Ind. 447; Gray v. State, 72 Ind. 567; Kopelke v. Kopelke, 112 Ind. 435, 13 N. E. 695; Brown v. Jones, 125 Ind. 375, 21 Am. St. Rep. 227, 25 N. E. 452; Pritchard v. Norton, 108 U. S. 124, 27 L. ed. 104, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 102; Coghlan v. South Carolina R. Co. 142 U. S. 101, 35 L. ed. 951, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 150; Buchanan v. Drovers' Nat. Bank, 5 C. C. A. 83, 6 U. S. App. 566, 55 Fed. 223; Bascom v. Zediker, 48 Neb. 380, 67 N. W. 148; Baum v. Birchall, 150 Pa. 164, 30 Am. St. Rep. 797, 24 Atl. 620; Bell v. Packard, 69 Me. 105, 31 Am. Rep. 251; Milliken v. Pratt, 125 Mass. 374, 28 Am. Rep. 241; Evans v. Beaver, 50 Ohio St. 190, 40 Am. St. Rep. 666, 33 N. E. 643; Chapman v. Robertson, 6 Paige, 627, 31 Am. Dec. 264; 22 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 1325, ¶¶ 4, 5, 6; 1 Beach, Modern Law of Contracts, §§ 592, 595; 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. 3d ed. § 895; Story, Confli. L. 8th ed. § 301a.

The court erred in refusing to enter judgment in favor of appellant, Lida M. Garrigue.

Frankel v. Michigan Mut. L. Ins. Co. 158 Ind. 304, 62 N. E. 703; Geddes v. Blackmore, 132 Ind. 551, 32 N. E. 567; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Stansberry, 132 Ind. 533, 32 N. E. 218; Shirk v. Wabash R. Co. 14 Ind. App. 127, 42 N. E. 656; Todd v. Fenton, 66 Ind. 25; Manning v. Gasharie, 27 Ind. 399; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Pedigo, 108 Ind. 481, 8 N. E. 627; Toledo & W. R. Co. v. Goddard, 25 Ind. 185; Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Spencer, 98 Ind. 186; Walkup v. May, 9 Ind. App. 409, 36 N. E. 917; Cincinnati I. St. L. & C. R. Co. v. Grames, 8 Ind. App. 112, 34 N. E. 613. 37 N. E. 421:

National Exch. Bank v. Berry, 21 Ind. App. 261, 52 N. E. 104; Dixon v. Duke, 85 Ind. 434; Indianapolis v. Kingsbury, 101 Ind. 200, 51 Am. Rep. 749.

Admissions of the maker of a note, who is not making a defense, are not competent against a surety if not made in her hearing.

Pierce v. Goldsberry, 35 Ind. 317; Leach v. Dickerson, 14 Ind. App. 375, 42 N. E. 1031; Ricketts v. Harvey, 78 Ind. 152; Smith v. Wagaman, 58 Iowa, 11, 11 N. W. 713; Baker v. Briggs, 8 Pick. 122, 19 Am. Dec. 311; Rogers v. Anderson, 40 Mich. 290; D. M. Osborne & Co. v. Bell, 62 Mich. 214, 28 N. W. 841.

The notes in controversy were executed in this state, and made payable at a bank in this state; consequently they are governed by the laws of this state.

The parties fixing the place of performance of the contract as the Noble County Bank, Kendallville, Indiana, the contract from that fact alone must be governed by the laws of this state.

Story, Conf. L. § 241.

Messrs. R. P. Barr and Chapin & Denny for appellee.

Montgomery, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought upon three promissory notes executed by appellants to the Noble County Bank, and payable at said bank, and by it assigned before maturity to appellee. Appellee filed with his complaint an affidavit and undertaking, and obtained a writ of attachment upon which certain real estate owned by appellant, Lida M. Garrigue, was attached. Appellant, Lida M. Garrigue, answered the complaint, first, by general denial, and, second, by alleging her suretyship and coverture. Appellee replied in three paragraphs to the second paragraph of answer; First. That at the time of the execution of said notes said appellant was and that she still is, a resident of the state of Illinois; that said notes were executed in said state; and that under the laws of said state, set out in full, she had the capacity to execute said notes as surety. Second. The same averments as in the first, and further, that said notes were given in renewal of a note for the principle sum of $3,750, executed by both of the appellants on the 30th day of July, 1900, in the city of Chicago, and payable in said city in one year after date, for money loaned and paid to Rudolph H. Garrigue in the city of Chicago. Third. General denial. The cause was tried by a jury, and a general verdict returned for appellee, with answers to interrogatories. Appellant unsuccessfully moved the court for judgment in her favor upon the answers to interrogatories and for a new trial, and judgment was thereupon rendered in favor of appellee for $4,300 and for the sale of the attached real estate.

The assignment of errors requires us to review the decision of the court in overruling the demurrer to the first and second paragraphs of reply, and in overruling the motion for judgment on the special findings of the jury, and in overruling the motion for a new trial. The first question for decision is presented by appellant's demurrer to the first paragraph of reply, and is this: Is a note executed in Illinois, by a married woman, as surety, while domiciled in that state, but made payable at a bank in this state, valid and enforceable in Indiana? The statute of Illinois in regard to contracts of married women, in force at the time of the execution of the notes in suit and at all other times covered by this controversy, is as follows: "Contracts may be made and liabilities incurred by a wife, and the same enforced against her, to the same extent and in the same manner, as if she were unmarried; but, except with the consent of her husband, she may not enter into or carry on any partnership business unless her husband has abandoned or deserted her, or is idiotic or insane, or confined in the penitentiary." Hurd's Rev. Stat. 1903, chap. 68, § 6. The Indiana statute applicable to the matter under consideration is as follows: "A married woman shall not enter into any contract of suretyship, whether as indorser, guarantor, or in any other manner; and such contract, as to her, shall be void." Burns's Anno. Stat. 1901, § 6964. The decisions of the courts of different states upon the question before us are in irreconcilable conflict and in hopeless confusion. It has been held by some courts that when conflicting laws affect the enforcement of a contract like the one in suit the law of the domicile of the maker governs, by others the law of the place of execution, by others the law of the place of performance, and by others the law of the place of enforcement. We cannot reconcile the cases, or harmonize the divergent views contained in the books, but must be content to extract therefrom such principles as we believe to be sound, and declare the law as it is and ought to be in this state. The law applicable to promissory notes executed in one state and payable in another, having conflicting laws, may be summed up as follows: (1) All matters bearing upon the execution, the interpretation, and validity of the note including the capacity of the parties to contract, are to be determined by the law of the place where the contract is made. (2) All matters connected with the payment, including presentation, notice, demand, protest, and damages for nonpayment, are to be regulated by the law of the place where by its terms the note is to be paid. (3) All matters respecting the remedy to be pursued, including the bringing of suits, service of process, and admissibility of evidence, depend upon the law of the place where the action is brought. Scudder v. Union Nat. Bank, 91 U. S. 406, 23 L. ed. 245; Bowles v. Field, 78 Fed. 742; Union Nat. Bank v. Chapman, 169 N. Y. 538, 57 L. R. A. 513, 88 Am. St. Rep. 614, 62 N. E. 672; Ruhe v. Buck, 124 Mo. 178, 25 L. R. A. 178, 46 Am. St. Rep. 439, 27 S. W. 412; Mendenhall v. Gately, 18 Ind. 149. A contract must be construed and its validity determined under the laws of the state where it is executed, unless it can be fairly said that the parties at the time of its execution clearly manifested an intention that it should be governed by the laws of another state. Grand v. Livingston, 4 App. Div. 589, 38 N. Y. Supp. 490; F. B. Hauck Clothing Co. v. Sharpe, 83 Mo. App. 385; Wharton, Conf. L. § 401. If a contract is valid in the state where it is executed, it is valid everywhere. Milliken v. Pratt, 125 Mass. 374, 28 Am. Rep. 241; Wright v. Remington, 41 N. J. L. 48, 32 Am. Rep. 180; Taylor v. Sharp, 108 N. C. 377, 13 S. E. 138; Holmes v. Reynolds, 55 Vt. 39; Miller v. Wilson, 146 Ill. 523, 37 Am. St. Rep. 186, 34 N. E. 1111; Baer Bros. v. Terry, 105 La. 479, 29 So. 886; First Nat. Bank v. Mitchell, 34 C. C. A. 542, 92 Fed. 565. Applying these general principles to the case in hand, it is our conclusion that the validity of the notes in suit, as to the appellant, Lida M. Garrigue, must be determined by the laws of Illinois, where it is alleged they were executed, notwithstanding the fact that the place of payment was in Indiana. If the notes were executed in Illinois, as averred, and were valid there, the designation of a place of payment in this state will not be accepted as conclusive evidence, or as clearly manifesting an intention by the parties, that their validity should be governed by the laws of Indiana, when such an interpretation would render them wholly void as to one of the makers. This conclusion is supported by the rule of sanity and honesty "that no contract must be held as intended to be made in violation of the law, whenever by any reasonable construction it can be made consistent with the law, and which it was competent for the parties to adopt." Bell v. Packard, 69 Me. 105, 31 Am. Rep. 251; Wharton, Conf. L. § 429. The substantial essence of a contract evidenced by a promissory note is the undertaking by the makers to pay the principal sum of money named. The place of payment is an incidental matter. The makers are not discharged from their principal obligation by an unaccepted tender of the amount owing at the time and place designated for payment, but by such tender are released only from liability for damages, which otherwise would accrue from nonpayment. Makers of promissory notes cannot insist that they will pay at the place designated or not at all, but may be sued upon their obligation and payment of the principal amount enforced at any place where jurisdiction over their persons or property may be acquired.

In the case of Union Nat. Bank v. Chapman, 169 N. Y. 538, 57 L. R. A. 513, 88 Am. St. Rep. 614, 62 N. E. 672, a married woman executed a note as surety, in Alabama, payable in Illinois, and the court said: "It seems clear that the capacity of Mrs. Chapman to contract must be determined by the law of the state where the contract was executed, unless it can fairly be said that she, at the time of the execution of the instrument, clearly understood and intended that it should be governed by the laws of another state. Such an intention or understanding is not manifest in this case." In the case of F. B. Hauck Clothing Co. v. Sharpe, 83 Mo. App. 385, the defendant was a married woman, and resided in Missouri, where she executed a note for the accommodation of her son, and made it payable at a bank in Indiana, and the court said: "The law of the place of performance does not in any way affect the capacity of a married woman to contract in a state which authorized her to make the contract, unless made with reference to real estate situated in the state of performance, or it is apparent from the terms of the contract that the parties intended to incorporate the laws of the state of performance in the contract." From the case of Wm. Glenny Glass Co. v. Taylor, 99 Ky. 24, 34 S. W. 711, we quote the following paragraph: "The mere fact that the note was made payable in New York, and received by the payee in that city, under the circumstances of this case is not sufficient evidence of the fact that it was intended the law of that state should govern, or its validity to be tested by the statute in regard to usury. We will not assume, nor does the evidence authorize such a conclusion, that the brother living in Washington city, and executing the note in that place, and his sister executing the note in Bracken county, Kentucky, regarded or expected their liability to be determined by the statute of New York, and when sued in Kentucky could defeat the recovery upon the paper on the ground that the charge of the extra interest rendered the entire obligation void." Our statute makes void, at her option, the suretyship contracts of a married woman executed within this state. If a promissory note executed within this state by a married woman, as surety, by merely inserting therein that it should be payable in Cincinnati, Chicago, or St. Louis, might be made an Ohio, Illinois, or Missouri contract, and thereby rendered valid and enforceable against her, our statute would be easily evaded, and its beneficent provisions in a large measure destroyed. We cannot so construe these contracts, but the declarations of principles above quoted accord with our views, and the conclusion follows that appellee's first paragraph of reply was sufficient, and the demurrer to the same was rightly overruled.

Appellant has cited a number of Indiana cases, in some of which the court has said that the maker of a promissory note will be held liable according to the place where it is payable. This and other like statements were made with regard to the liability of the maker to pay interest or damages after protest; and the decisions of the questions properly presented in those cases are not in conflict with the result reached in this case. In the cases of Hunt v. Standart, 15 Ind. 33, 77 Am. Dec. 79, and Midland Steel Co. v. Citizens' Nat. Bank (Ind. App.) 72 N. E. 290, the only question involved was the liability of the indorsers. In the cases of Butler v. Myer, 17 Ind. 77; Browning v. Merritt, 61 Ind. 425; Gray v. State, 72 Ind. 567; and Kopelke v. Kopelke, 112 Ind. 435, 13 N. E. 695,—the contention related only to the rate of interest recoverable. In Fordyce v. Nelson, 91 Ind. 447, the question was to the negotiability of the note, and in Brown v. Jones, 126 Ind. 375, 21 Am. St. Rep. 227, 25 N. E. 452, the controversy was with regard to days of grace and the time of protest.

If the first paragraph of reply was sufficient, it follows, also, that the second paragraph is good. The second paragraph, in addition to the allegations of the first, averred that the notes in suit were given in payment of a prior note for the same amount, executed by the same parties in the state of Illinois, and payable in that state. The first note, upon the facts alleged, was a valid and enforceable obligation against both the makers. The surrender of this note was a sufficient consideration for the execution of the renewal notes, and by the execution of the renewal notes the appellant, Lida M. Garrigue, as between her and the payee, became bound, not as surety, but as principal. Vogel v. Lechner, 102 Ind. 55, 1 N. E. 554; Young v. Hart, 101 Va. 480, 484, 44 S. E. 703; Savage v. Fox, 60 N. H. 17; New York L. Ins. Co. v. McKellar, 68 N. H. 326, 44 Atl. 516. In the case of Young v. Hart, 101 Va. 480, 484, 44 S. E. 703, the court said: "The circuit court was of opinion that, treating Mrs. Young as a mere surety on the Chicago notes, which she had the unquestioned capacity to make, she could have been sued upon them in either the state of Pennsylvania or the state of Kentucky, and a personal judgment recovered against her, and that the renewal of the notes in the state of Pennsylvania under the facts of this case did not release her nor lessen her liability." The court did not err in overruling appellant's demurrer to the second paragraph of reply.

In answer to interrogatories propounded by the parties, the jury found the following facts specially: That the three notes were given in renewal of a note for $3,750, dated July 30, 1900, for money loaned to Rudolph H. Garrigue, and upon which Lida M. Garrigue was surety, and for the payment of which collateral security was pledged, and which note was signed in Chicago, and sent by mail to the Noble County Bank at Kendallville, Indiana, and a draft for the amount, less exchange and revenue stamps, sent by mail to R. H. Garrigue at Chicago; that the notes in suit were executed in Chicago, Illinois, where the said Lida M. Garrigue then resided, and ever since has resided, and that at and before that time the statute hereinbefore set out was, and the same still is, in force in said state; that said notes were signed by Lida M. Garrigue as surety for her husband, who, with her consent, enclosed them in a sealed letter, and mailed them, with a draft for the interest accrued on the old note, at Chicago, directed to the Noble County Bank at Kendallville, Indiana; that the notes were prepared and sent by the bank to R. H. Garrigue at Chicago, who inserted the words "on or before," and signed and caused his wife to sign them, and that the signing and mailing at Chicago as aforesaid was done in pursuance of an agreement to that effect between Rudolph H. Garrigue and appellee, president, and acting for said bank; that the bank received said notes by mail, and thereupon returned the old note by mail to R. H. Garrigue at Chicago, and subsequently indorsed the notes to appellee; and that the bank and appellee at all times knew that Lida M. Garrigue was surety for her husband on said notes. These facts were not in conflict with the general verdict, but, in our opinion, support it; and what has already been said in discussing the sufficiency of the replies leads to the conclusion that there was no error in overruling appellant's motion for judgment in her favor upon the answers to interrogatories, notwithstanding the general verdict.

Appellant's motion for a new trial embraced a number of causes, many of which have been waived. Appellee testified to a conversation between himself and Rudolph H. Garrigue had at Chicago the latter part of July, 1901, with regard to the payment or renewal of the note then outstanding and almost due, in which Mr. Garrigue said that he could not pay the note, but would make new notes on shorter time, and have his wife sign them, and the notes would then be sent to Kendallville, and that a wife could sign in Illinois, and her signature would be good against her property; and appellee said that would be satisfactory. Appellant, Lida M. Garrigue insists that the admission of this evidence over her objection was error. Appellee suggests that the record does not show that she was not present during this conversation. Her absence is not shown, unless it may be implied from the objection itself. As we have already shown, it will not be inferred from the substance of the notes themselves that they were Indiana contracts, and appellee's case was already made out, without reference to this extraneous evidence. If the notes were Illinois contracts as against the principal maker, they were the same, also, as to the surety under the facts of this case. Appellant, Lida M. Garrigue had no evidence, other than the notes themselves, upon which to rest her contention that they were Indiana contracts. It follows, therefore, that, conceding her absence, and that she could not be bound by the conversation to which objection was made, the utmost that may be said is that the evidence was harmless.

Exceptions were taken to the giving and refusal of the court to give, upon request, a number of instructions. The general ground of the objections of the appellant to these instructions was predicated upon the view that the law of the place of payment governs the validity of the notes. This subject has been sufficiently discussed.

Objection is urged to instruction No. 13 given by the court; but we are unable to find this instruction, either in full or in substance, set out anywhere in the brief of appellant, and must treat the objection as waived for noncompliance with subdivision 5 of rule 22 of this court (55 N. E. vi.). Chicago Terminal Transfer Co. v. Walton (Ind.) 72 N. E. 646; Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Lain (Ind. App.) 72 N. E. 539; Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. McFall (Ind.) 72 N. E. 552; Penn Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Norcross, 163 Ind. 379, 72 N. E. 132; Barricklow v. Stewart, 163 Ind. 438, 72 N. E. 128.

The remaining question presented by the motion for a new trial is whether the verdict of the jury is sustained by sufficient evidence, or is contrary to law. Appellant's counsel contends that the notes were not delivered in Illinois, but in Indiana, and, if this contention is true, then they are Indiana contracts, and the judgment must be reversed. A precedent agreement between the principal in the notes and the appellee acting for the payee was shown by the evidence, according to the terms of which the notes were to be signed by the makers in Chicago, and sent to the payee by mail. They were properly signed and sealed in an envelope addressed to the payee, and delivered to the United States mail in the City of Chicago, according to agreement, and, in our opinion, the delivery was then and thereby completed. In the case of Purviance v. Jones, 120 Ind. 162, 16 Am. St. Rep. 319, 21 N. E. 1099, Justice Mitchell, speaking for the court (p. 164 of 120 Ind., p. 321 of 16 Am. St. Rep., p. 1099 of 21 N. E.), says: "While it is not indispensable that there should have been an actual manual transfer of the instrument from the maker to the payee, yet to constitute a delivery it must appear that the maker in some way evidenced an intention to make it an enforceable obligation against himself, according to its terms, by surrendering control over it, and intentionally placing it under the power of the payee, or of some third person for his use." In the case of Wm. Glenny Glass Co. v. Taylor, 99 Ky. 24, 34 S. W. 711, involving conflicting laws, Pryor, Ch. J., in the opinion says: "The note, when signed by Mary D. Bradford in Kentucky, and inclosed to the payee, was an executed instrument; as much so as if the payee had been present and the note delivered to her in Kentucky." In the case of Barrett v. Dodge, 18 R. I. 740, 27 Am. St. Rep. 777, 19 Atl. 530, the court, speaking upon the question under immediate consideration, said: "In the absence of instructions to the maker as to the mode by which he should return them when signed, the payees must have contemplated that the maker would return them by the natural and ordinary mode of transmitting such obligations, and must be deemed to have authorized him to so return them. The natural and ordinary mode of transmitting them was by mail, the mode adopted by the maker. In such cases the postoffice may be regarded as the common agent of both parties,—of the maker for the purpose of transmitting the note, and of the payee for the purpose of receiving it from the maker. By depositing the note in the mail with the intent that it shall be transmitted to the payee in the usual way, the maker parts with his dominion and control over it, and the delivery is, in legal contemplation, complete." We accordingly conclude that the notes were fully executed by delivery in the state of Illinois, and are Illinois contracts, and are der the laws of that state, valid against both the makers. The notes, being valid under the laws of Illinois, are equally valid and enforceable in this state, by the principle of comity, unless their enforcement would be contrary to good morals, or in violation of public policy, or forbidden by positive law. It is clear that a contract of suretyship by a married woman, executed in a foreign state, is not in itself immoral, nor is its enforcement forbidden by our laws. In some states, where the common-law disabilities of married women still exist, it has been held that the enforcement of such an alleged contract against them would be contrary to the public policy of the state, and that it was nonenforceable within that jurisdiction. Almost all the states of the Union have removed substantially all the disabilities of married women to contract, and in the interests of commerce and business, and upon the principle of comity among the states, have sustained and enforced contracts validly executed elsewhere, although the particular contract, if executed within such states, would have been unauthorized and invalid. In the case of Baer Bros. v. Terry, 105 La. 479, 29 So. 886, the supreme court of Louisiana, speaking to this point, said: "Nor do we agree with the counsel's contention that, assuming defendant to have been liable on the notes before she came to this state the law of this state prohibiting wives from binding themselves for the debts of their husbands precludes recovery against her. That law is satisfied, and its whole object and purpose is accomplished, when Louisiana wives are protected against binding themselves for the debts of their husbands. This protection is not extended to Missouri wives, and, if these bind themselves in the state of their domicile for the debts of their husbands, they cannot be permitted to come to this state to be divorced from their obligations. When defendant crossed our borders as an immigrant to our soil the debt was already hers, and it has continued to be such. There is nothing in the atmosphere of Louisiana law and Louisiana jurisprudence to disintegrate or dissolve valid obligations. To such it is a healthful and bracing atmosphere." See also Wright v. Remington, 41 N. J. L. 48, 32 Am. Rep. 180.

We hold, in accord with the great weight of authority, that the enforcement of the notes in suit against appellant, Lida M. Garrigue, is in no sense violative of the public policy of this state. There is no suggestion that any unfair means or undue influence was used to procure the execution of the notes, and, their collection not being in conflict with our public policy, we affirm that the verdict is sustained by the evidence, and 69 L. R. A.

in accordance with the law, and that the motion for a new trial was properly overruled.

The judgment is affirmed.

PITTSBURGH, CINCINNATI, CHICAGO, & ST. LOUIS RAILROAD COMPANY.
Appt.,

v.

William J. MONTGOMERY.

(152 Ind. 1.)

1. An employee injured by the negligence of another while both are acting in the line of duty as employees of a corporation has a right of action against the company, under the Indiana employer's liability act of 1893.
2. A provision creating a new liability is within the title of a statute, "An Act Regulating Liability of Railroads and Other Corporations."
3. The employer's liability act changing the law as to the defense in case of negligence of fellow servants of corporations is not within a constitutional provision as to local or special laws "regulating the practice in courts."
4. The question whether a general law can be made applicable to a particular case is for the legislature, and not for the court, to determine.
5. Railroad corporations are persons within the constitutional provisions as to equal privileges and immunities of citizens and the equal protection of persons.
6. A question of the unconstitutionality of a statute as to other corporations cannot be raised by a railroad company as to which the act is valid.
7. The exemption of municipal corporations from a statute making other corporations liable to a servant for negligence of a fellow servant does not make the statute invalid.
8. A statute making void a contract by a corporation for the release or relief from liability to an employee for negligence of a fellow servant is not unconstitutional.
9. A prohibition of contracts releasing corporations from their liability to injured employees is within the main subject expressed in the title, which is the regulation of liability in such cases.
10. An agreement by a railroad employee that the acceptance of benefits from a relief fund shall operate as a release of all claims against the railroad company is void, under the employer's liability act of 1893, although the release is only conditional.
11. The excusing of a competent juror on motion of the court itself is not ground of error, if a fair and impartial jury was obtained.

NOTE.—As to validity of statute imposing liability for injury by fellow servant, see Johnson v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. 8 L. R. A. 419, and Funk v. St. Paul City R. Co. 29 L. R. A. 208, also the case following this one.

12. The court may properly refuse to require the jury to return to their room and insert specified facts in their special verdict; but the remedy, if any, is by motion for a new trial.
13. Instructing the jury not to consider evidence withdrawn by the party who offered it is proper, when requested by the other party.
14. Physical and mental suffering arising out of a personal injury may be taken into consideration in estimating damages.
15. A manifest clerical mistake in copying an instruction is not prejudicial error.

(February 19, 1898.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Cass County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. N. O. Ross and G. E. Ross, for appellant:

The statute in question is in derogation of the common law, and must be strictly construed.

Thornburg v. American Strawboard Co. 141 Ind. 443, 50 Am. St. Rep. 334, 40 N. E. 1062.

What contracts does this statute prohibit?

The contract must be between a railroad company and one of its employees, or between some other corporation and one of its employees.

The contract was not one made by appellant with appellee. It was made by the appellee with an organization known as the "Voluntary Relief Department of the Pennsylvania Lines West of Pittsburgh;" hence it is not within the prohibition of the statute.

The terms of the contract must be to release or relieve appellant from a liability to the appellee. The liability must be released by the contract alone. In this case it was not. This contract provided that, if appellee accepted certain payments for a certain period of time, such payments should operate as a release, and nothing more. Having accepted the former, he cannot justly ask the latter in addition.

Johnson v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 163 Pa. 127, 29 Atl. 854.

This contract has been considered and construed with reference to the question now under consideration in the following cases:

Donald v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 93 Iowa, 284, 33 L. R. A. 492, 61 N. W. 971; 69 L. R. A.

Otis v. Pennsylvania Co. 71 Fed. 136; Cor v. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 1 Ohio N. P. 213; Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Cox, 55 Ohio St. 497, 35 L. R. A. 507, 45 N. E. 641; Vickers v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 71 Fed. 139.

That this contract was not between appellant and appellee, but between appellee and a third party, does not prevent the appellant from claiming protection under it.

Rodenbarger v. Bramblett, 78 Ind. 213; Harrison v. Wright, 100 Ind. 515, 50 Am. Rep. 805; Waterman v. Morgan, 114 Ind. 237, 16 N. E. 590; Leake v. Ball, 116 Ind. 214, 17 N. E. 918; Claypool v. School Comrs. 132 Ind. 261, 31 N. E. 665.

Said act denies to certain persons or citizens equal protection of the laws, and grants privileges and immunities to some which are not granted to others similarly situated. It abridges the right and privileges of certain citizens, and deprives them of their liberty and property without due process of law.

While there may be a classification of subjects or kinds of business by the legislature, it cannot classify the persons to be affected so that all similarly situated shall not be granted the same privileges or immunities.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 391; Wally v. Kennedy, 2 Yerg. 554, 24 Am. Dec. 511; Lodi Twp. v. State, 51 N. J. L. 402, 6 L. R. A. 56, 18 Atl. 749; State ex rel. Randolph v. Wood, 49 N. J. L. 85, 7 Atl. 286; Edmonds v. Herbrandson, 2 N. D. 270, 14 L. R. A. 725, 50 N. W. 970.

Inasmuch as the law must apply equally to all persons or citizens similarly situated, if for any reason any part of them cannot be made to come within its compass it is unconstitutional. If the act is invalid as to any of the persons embraced in its provisions, it is invalid as to all, since the valid can only be separated from the invalid by construction, which is not permissible.

United States v. Reese, 92 U. S. 214, 23 L. ed. 563; Baldwin v. Franks, 120 U. S. 678, 30 L. ed. 766, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 656, 763; State ex rel. McCue v. Ramsey County, 45 Minn. 236, 31 Am. St. Rep. 650, 51 N. W. 112; Lavalley v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 40 Minn. 249, 41 N. W. 974; Nichols v. Walter, 37 Minn. 264, 33 N. W. 800; State ex rel. Richards v. Hammer, 42 N. J. L. 436; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Mackey, 127 U. S. 205, 32 L. ed. 107, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1161; Deppe v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 36 Iowa, 52; Johnson v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. 43 Minn. 222, 8 L. R. A. 419, 45 N. W. 156; Pearson v. Portland, 69 Me. 278, 31 Am. Rep. 276; Millett v. People, 117 Ill. 294, 57 Am. Rep. 869, 7 N. E. 631; Holden v. James, 11 Mass. 396, 6 Am. Dec. 174; Min- neapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Herrick, 127 U. S. 210, 32 L. ed. 100, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1176; Bucklew v. Central Iowa R. Co. 64 Iowa, 611, 21 N. W. 103; Herrick v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 31 Minn. 11, 47 Am. Rep. 771, 16 N. W. 413.

Laws must not only be uniform in their application throughout the territory over which the legislative jurisdiction extends, but they must apply to all classes of citizens alike.

Shaver v. Pennsylvania Co. 71 Fed. 931.

Such contracts have been upheld, and the answers based thereon sustained, in—

Graft v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 5 Sadler, (Pa.) 94, 8 Atl. 206; Fuller v. Baltimore & O. Employees' Relief Asso. 67 Md. 433, 10 Atl. 237; Owens v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 1 L. R. A. 75, 35 Fed. 715; State use of Black v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 36 Fed. 655; Martin v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 41 Fed. 125; Com. v. Equitable Beneficial Assn. 137 Pa. 412, 18 Atl. 1112; Lease v. Pennsylvania Co. 10 Ind. App. 47, 37 N. E. 423; Johnson v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 163 Pa. 127, 29 Atl. 854; Ringle v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 164 Pa. 529, 44 Am. St. Rep. 628, 30 Atl. 492; Donald v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 93 Iowa, 284, 33 L. R. A. 492, 61 N. W. 971; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Bell, 44 Neb. 44, 62 N. W. 314; Vickers v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 71 Fed. 139; Otis v. Pennsylvania Co. 71 Fed. 136; Shaver v. Pennsylvania Co. 71 Fed. 931; Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Cox, 55 Ohio St. 497, 35 L. R. A. 507, 45 N. E. 641; Maine v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 109 Iowa, 260, 70 N. W. 630, 80 N. W. 315; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Curtis, 51 Neb. 442, 66 Am. St. Rep. 456, 71 N. W. 42; Eckman v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 169 Ill. 312, 38 L. R. A. 750, 48 N. E. 496.

Section 5 of said act is in conflict with the 14th Amendment to the Constitution and the acts of Congress passed for the enforcement thereof.

State v. Julow, 129 Mo. 163, 29 L. R. A. 257, 50 Am. St. Rep. 443, 31 S. W. 781; Bertholf v. O'Reilly, 74 N. Y. 515, 30 Am. Rep. 323; Braceville Coal Co. v. People, 147 Ill. 66, 22 L. R. A. 340, 37 Am. St. Rep. 206, 35 N. E. 62; State v. (Goodwill), 33 W. Va. 179, 6 L. R. A. 621, 25 Am. St. Rep. 863, 10 S. E. 285; Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 30 L. ed. 220, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064; Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 30, 21 L. ed. 304; Butchers' Union S. H. & L. S. L. Co. v. Crescent City L. S. L. & S. H. Co. 111 U. S. 746, 28 L. ed. 585, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 652; Re Parrott, 6 Sawy. 349, 1 Fed. 481; Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 50 Am. Rep. 636; People v. Marx, 99 N. Y. 377, 52 Am. Rep. 34, 2 N. E. 29; Ex parte Westersfield, 55 Cal. 550, 36 Am. Rep. 47; Ragio v. State, 69 L. R. A.

86 Tenn. 272, 6 S. W. 401; State v. Divine, 98 N. C. 778, 4 S. E. 477.

The vocation of an employer, as well as that of his employee, is his property.

Depriving the owner of property of one of its attributes is depriving him of his property under the provisions of the Constitution.

People ex rel. Manhattan Sav. Inst. v. Otis, 90 N. Y. 48; State v. Fire Creek Coal & Coke Co. 33 W. Va. 188, 6 L. R. A. 359, 25 Am. St. Rep. 891, 10 S. E. 288; Godcharles v. Wigeman, 113 Pa. 431, 6 Atl. 354; State v. Loomis, 115 Mo. 307, 21 L. R. A. 789, 22 S. W. 350; Frorer v. People, 141 Ill. 171, 16 L. R. A. 492, 31 N. E. 395; Com. v. Perry, 155 Mass. 117, 14 L. R. A. 325, 31 Am. St. Rep. 533, 28 N. E. 1126; Ramsey v. People, 142 Ill. 380, 17 L. R. A. 853, 32 N. E. 364; San Antonio & A. Pass. R. Co. v. Wilson, 4 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (Willson) p. 565, 19 S. W. 910; Harding v. People, 160 Ill. 459, 32 L. R. A. 445, 52 Am. St. Rep. 344, 43 N. E. 624; Ritchie v. People, 155 Ill. 98, 29 L. R. A. 79, 46 Am. St. Rep. 315, 40 N. E. 454; Ex parte Kuback, 85 Cal. 274, 9 L. R. A. 482, 20 Am. St. Rep. 226, 24 Pac. 737; Low v. Rees Printing Co. 41 Neb. 127, 24 L. R. A. 702, 43 Am. St. Rep. 670, 59 N. W. 362; State ex rel. Luria v. Wagener, 69 Minn. 206, 38 L. R. A. 677, 65 Am. St. Rep. 565, 72 N. W. 67; Re House Bill No. 203, 21 Colo. 27, 39 Pac. 431; People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 389, 4 Am. St. Rep. 465, 17 N. E. 343; Wallace v. Georgia, C. & N. R. Co. 94 Ga. 732, 22 S. E. 579; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Smith (Tex. Civ. App.) 41 S. W. 680; Fraser v. McDonway & T. Co. 82 Fed. 257; Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Jacksonville, 67 Ill. 37, 16 Am. Rep. 611; Vanzant v. Waddell, 2 Yerg. 270; Madison & I. R. Co. v. Whiteneck, 8 Ind. 217.

This section does not seek to regulate the terms and conditions upon which a right may be enjoyed, but it denies to both the employer and the employee the right to contract at all. If contracts such as this section forbids are, or can be, classed as liable to be injurious to public morals or public safety, or as in any way jeopardizing the public welfare, they might be subject to reasonable restrictions, but not forbidden.

Printing & Numerical Registering Co. v. Sampson, L. R. 19 Eq. 462; Diamond Match Co. v. Roeder, 106 N. Y. 473, 60 Am. Rep. 464, 13 N. E. 419; United States Chemical Co. v. Provident Chemical Co. 64 Fed. 946; Dent v. West Virginia, 129 U. S. 114, 32 L. ed. 623, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 231.

Messrs. D. H. Chase, S. O. Pickens, and G. W. Funk also for appellant.

Messrs. McConnell & Jenkins and Nelson & Myers for appellee.

McCabe, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought by the appellee against the appellant to recover damages suffered by him on account of the alleged negligence of the defendant, resulting in a personal injury to the plaintiff. A demurrer to the complaint for want of sufficient facts, and a demurrer to the second paragraph of the answer, were overruled, and the issues joined were tried by a jury, resulting in a special verdict and judgment, over defendant's motion for a new trial, for $3,000 damages. The errors assigned call in question the rulings on demurrer, the refusal of a new trial, overruling motions for a venire de novo, for judgment in appellant's favor on the special verdict, and sustaining appellee's motion for judgment on the special verdict in his favor.

The only objection urged to the complaint is that it shows that the plaintiff was a freight brakeman in the defendant's service on its railroad, and that it was the negligence of the engineer of the train on which he was serving that caused his injury, and that, under the fellow-servant rule, there was no liability. The injury occurred on July 1, 1893, after the act approved March 4, 1893, took effect, touching the liability of railroads, commonly called the "employer's liability act." Acts 1893, p. 294; Burns' Rev. Stat. 1894, §§ 7083-7087 (Horner's Rev. Stat. 1897, §§ 5206-5206v).

Appellant's learned counsel contend that it is settled law that the employer is not liable to an employee for injuries caused by the negligence of a coemployee in the same general service, unless the employer was guilty of some negligence in employing the servant, with knowledge of his negligent habits or incompetency, or retained him after knowledge of such negligence or lack of skill. There is no showing of any such negligence on the part of the appellant, as employer, in the complaint. Appellee concedes this to be the common-law rule, and that it prevailed in this state prior to the enactment above mentioned. Indeed, it is conceded by the appellee that his complaint depends upon that act for its sufficiency in its facts to constitute a cause of action, and is founded thereon.

It is first contended by the appellant that the act does not change the common-law rule, and it would seem to follow, if that is true, that the complaint is clearly bad. The 1st section provides: "That every railroad or other corporation, except municipal, operating in this state shall be liable in damages for personal injury suffered by any employee while in its service, the employee so injured being in the exercise of due care and diligence, in the following cases." Then 69 L. R. A.

follow four subdivisions, specifying the cases in which liability is to attach, the fourth of which, and the one on which this action is founded, reads thus: "Where such injury was caused by the negligence of any person in the service of such corporation, who has charge of any signal, telegraph office, switch yard, shop, roundhouse, locomotive engine, or train upon a railway, or where such injury was caused by the negligence of any person, coemployee, or fellow servant engaged in the same common service in any of the several departments of the service of any such corporation, the said person, coemployee, or fellow servant, at the time acting in the place, and performing the duty of the corporation in that behalf, and the person so injured, obeying or conforming to the order of some superior at the time of such injury, having authority to direct; but nothing herein shall be construed to abridge the liability of the corporation under existing laws." Appellant's learned counsel say: "The complaint lacks two allegations to make it good under this provision. (1) That the engineer at the time was acting in the place and performing the duty of the corporation in that behalf; and (2) that appellee was obeying or conforming to the order of some superior at the time of such injury, having authority to direct. It was not alleged that the engineer was acting in the place or performing the duty of the master, or that appellee was acting in obedience to a superior," etc.

This language, together with other parts of appellant's brief, indicates that appellant's learned counsel construe the language of the statute above quoted as conveying the meaning that the right to recover against an employer for the negligence of a coemployee or fellow servant rests upon the condition that such negligent coemployee was at the time acting in the place and performing the duty that the master or employer owed to his or its servants or employees generally; and yet they do not say so in so many words. The majority of the court are of the opinion that the decision of that question is not necessary to the decision of this case. They hold that the only part of the 4th subdivision of said section which is necessary to be considered in determining the sufficiency of the complaint is the following: "Where such injury was caused by the negligence of any person in the service of such corporation who has charge of any . . . locomotive engine or train upon a railway, . . . and the person so injured, obeying or conforming to the order of some superior at the time of such injury, having authority to direct;" and that, hence, it was not necessary that the complaint should state that the alleged negligent engineer, at the time he committed the alleged negligent injury, as provided in such concluding clause, was acting in the place and performing the duty of the corporation in that behalf; while the writer hereof is of the opinion that the whole of the 4th subdivision must stand together, and that the words quoted from the concluding clause qualify the liability created in the first clause or clauses. But the duty of the corporation therein mentioned, in the opinion of the writer, means, not the duty it owes to its servants, but the duty it owes to the public in carrying on its business; and the words, "acting in the place of such corporation," with the other words quoted, were used to convey the idea that, in order that the liability mentioned should exist, the negligent person, coemployee, or fellow servant must be acting as such employee, in the line of his duty, at the time of his negligence. The writer is of opinion that the complaint is good under this construction; and the holding of the court is that, in order to make the complaint good under the first part of the subdivision quoted, as to the point in question, it is only required that it state that the engineer, while in the service of appellant, in charge of a locomotive engine, negligently injured the appellee, both being at the time acting in the line of duty as employees of the appellant. That being so, the averments of the complaint, showing, as they do, that at Hartford City, Indiana, the freight train upon which appellee was brakeman stopped to switch out loaded cars; that the conductor of said train, acting in the service of appellant, the authority and position of said conductor making it appellee's duty to obey his orders in respect to said train and switching, ordered appellee to go between said cars to make couplings, and while so engaged the engineer in charge of said train, also in appellant's service, and in the line of his duty, without signal, carelessly, negligently, and recklessly reversed said engine and applied full steam, whereupon said cars were driven and jammed together with terrific force, without notice to appellee, whereby appellee's entire right hand was caught between the bumpers and mashed off, without any fault on his part,—make the complaint sufficient, under the statute, as to the objection thereto urged.

The next contention against the sufficiency of the complaint is that the act is unconstitutional, that being confessedly the foundation of the action. It is first contended that it violates § 19 of article 4 of the state Constitution, which provides that "every act shall embrace but one subject and matters properly connected therewith; which subject shall be expressed in the title." It is contended that the subject is not expressed in the title, in that the title is "An Act Regulating Liability of Railroads and Other Corporations except Municipal," while the provisions of the act itself are, as claimed by appellant, to create a liability which up to that time had no existence. The precise question here involved was decided adversely to appellant's contention, on a statute similar to our own, under a Constitution an exact copy of our own in this respect, in McAunich v. Mississippi & M. R. Co. 20 Iowa, 338. We feel content to follow that case, without extending this opinion by repeating its reasoning, and, accordingly, hold that the subject is sufficiently expressed in the title.

The same rule has been, in effect, followed by this court in holding that the title of an act need not go into details. It is sufficient if it indicates with reasonable precision and clearness the subject it embraces. Nor is an act invalid because it includes details not mentioned in the title, provided the details are germane to the general subject designated in the title. Bitters v. Fulton County, 81 Ind. 125; Crawfordsville & S. W. Turnp. Co. v. Fletcher, 104 Ind. 97, 2 N. E. 243; Benson v. Christian, 129 Ind. 535, 29 N. E. 26; State ex rel. Terre Haute v. Kolsem, 130 Ind. 434, 14 L. R. A. 566, 29 N. E. 595; State ex rel. Duensing v. Roby, 142 Ind. 168, 33 L. R. A. 213, 51 Am. St. Rep. 174, 41 N. E. 145; Lewis v. State, 148 Ind. 346, 47 N. E. 675.

In the course of some of the briefs filed in other cases involving the validity of the act, it is contended that the act is void, in that it violates § 22 of article 4 of the state Constitution, providing that "the general assembly shall not pass local or special laws in any of the following enumerated cases, that is to say: . . . Regulating the practice in courts of justice." That the act does not violate the provision quoted is settled by Woods v. McCay, 144 Ind. 316, 33 L. R. A. 97, 43 N. E. 269, and cases cited; Mode v. Beasley, 143 Ind. 306, 42 N. E. 727, and cases there cited; Jackson County v. State, 147 Ind. 476, 46 N. E. 908. Also that it violates § 23 of the same article, requiring all laws to be of general and uniform operation throughout the state, where such a law can be made applicable. But that is a question for the legislature, whose determination is final and conclusive on the courts. Mode v. Beasley, 143 Ind. 306, 42 N. E. 727, and cases there cited; Woods v. McCay, 144 Ind. 316, 33 L. R. A. 97, 43 N. E. 269, and cases there cited.

It is next contended that the act violates § 23 of article 1 of the Constitution, providing that "the general assembly shall not grant to any citizen, or class of citizens, privileges or immunities which upon the same terms shall not equally belong to all citizens." Railroad corporations are persons within the meaning of this provision of our Bill of Rights, and the equality clause of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. v. Gibbs, 142 U. S. 386, 35 L. ed. 1051, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255; Santa Clara County v. Southern P. R. Co. 118 U. S. 394, 30 L. ed. 118, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1132; Pembina Canal. Silver Min. & Mill. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 125 U. S. 187, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 24, 31 L. ed. 650, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 737. The inequality complained of is that corporations, except municipal, are made liable for damages caused to one of their servants by the negligence of a coemployee or fellow servant, without any negligence on the part of the employer, while other employers are left free from such liability to their employees. Appellant also contends that the act violates the equality clause of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, demanding for every person the equal protection of the laws. The same provision, quoted from the Bill of Rights in the Constitution of this state, is found word for word in the Bill of Rights of the Constitution of Iowa. The supreme court of that state, in upholding the employers' liability act of that state, held that the provision mentioned in the Bill of Rights in the Constitution of that state was, in effect, the same as the equality clause of the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution, and that the employers' liability act did not violate either Constitution in respect of equality of laws or equality of rights secured by each of said provisions, in Buckle v. Central Iowa R. Co. 64 Iowa, 611, 21 N. W. 103. That decision rests largely on two decisions made upon the subject of the constitutionality of the employers' liability act of Kansas and that of Iowa in the Supreme Court of the United States. Mackey had recovered a judgment for $12,000 damages against the Missouri Pacific Railway Company for injuries caused by a coemployee of that company, which, on appeal, was affirmed by the supreme court of Kansas. From that judgment the company appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, on the ground that the Kansas statute violated the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. But that court affirmed the judgment, holding that the act in no way infringed that amendment. Missouri P. R. Co. v. Mackey, 127 U. S. 205, 32 L. ed. 107, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1161. Mr. Justice Field, speaking for the court, there said: "The company calls the attention of the court to the rule of law exempting from liability an employer for injuries to employees caused by the negligence or incompetency of a fellow servant, which prevailed in Kansas and in several other states previous to the act of 1874, unless he had employed such negligent or incompetent servant without reasonable inquiry as to his qualifications, or had retained him after knowledge of his negligence or incompetency. The rule of law is conceded where the person injured and the one by whose negligence or incompetency the injury is caused are fellow servants in the same common employment, and acting under the same immediate direction. . . . Assuming that this rule would apply to the case presented but for the law of Kansas of 1874, the contention of the company . . . is that the law imposes upon railroad companies a liability not previously existing, in the enforcement of which their property may be taken, and thus authorizes, in such cases, the taking of property without due process of law, in violation of the 14th Amendment. . . . The supposed hardship and injustice consist in imputing liability to the company where no personal wrong or negligence is chargeable to it or to its directors. But the same hardship and injustice, if there be any, exist when the company, without any wrong or negligence on its part, is charged for injuries to passengers. . . . The utmost care on its part will not relieve it from liability, if the passenger injured be himself free from contributory negligence. The law of 1874 extends this doctrine, and fixes a like liability upon railroad companies, where injuries are subsequently suffered by employees, though it may be by the negligence or incompetency of a fellow servant in the same general employment and acting under the same immediate direction. That its passage was within the competency of the legislature we have no doubt. The objection that the law of 1874 deprives the railroad companies of the equal protection of the laws is even less tenable than the one considered. It seems to rest upon the theory that legislation which is special in its character is necessarily within the constitutional inhibition; but nothing can be further from the fact. The greater part of all legislation is special, either in the objects sought to be attained by it or in the extent of its application. Laws for the improvement of municipalities, the opening and widening of particular streets, the introduction of water and gas, and other arrangements for the safety and convenience of their inhabitants, and laws for the irrigation and drainage of particular lands, for the construction of levees, and the bridging of navigable rivers, are instances of this kind. . . . A law giving to mechanics a lien on buildings constructed or repaired by them, for the amount of their work, and a law requiring railroad corporations to erect and maintain fences along their roads, separating them from land of adjoining proprietors so as to keep cattle off their tracks, are instances of this kind. Such legislation is not obnoxious to the last clause of the 14th Amendment, if all persons subject to it are treated alike under similar circumstances and conditions in respect both of the privileges conferred and liabilities imposed. . . . But the hazardous character of the business of operating a railway would seem to call for special legislation with respect to railroad corporations, having for its object the protection of their employees, as well as the safety of the public." A like decision was made by the same court, upholding the employers' liability law of Iowa, which has been in force in that state ever since 1862. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Herrick, 127 U. S. 210, 32 L. ed. 109, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1176. The Iowa statute is expressed in fewer words and better language than our own. It reads thus: "Every corporation operating a railway shall be liable for all damages sustained by any person, including employees of such corporation, in consequence of the neglect of agents, or by any mismanagement of the engineers or other employees of the corporation, and in consequence of the wilful wrongs, whether of commission or omission, of such agents, engineers, or other employees, when such wrongs are in any manner connected with the use and operation of any railway on or about which they shall be employed; and no contract which restricts such liability shall be legal or binding." Code Iowa, 1873, § 1307. Herrick was injured in Iowa by the negligence of a fellow servant in the employ of said railroad company. He sued and recovered against the company on the Iowa statute in the state court of Minnesota, which judgment was affirmed in the supreme court of that state, upholding the constitutionality of the Iowa statute. Herrick v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 31 Minn. 11, 47 Am. Rep. 771, 16 N. W. 413, 32 Minn. 435, 21 N. W. 471. On appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, the constitutionality of the Iowa statute was upheld on the authority of Missouri P. R. Co. v. Mackey, 127 U. S. 205, 32 L. ed. 107, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1161, as above stated. Some ten or twelve states of the Union have such acts on their statute books, and none of them have ever been held unconstitutional, while the following decisions of state supreme courts have held such legislation to be constitutional and valid: McAunich v. Mississippi & M. R. Co. 20 Iowa, 338; Bucklew v. Central Iowa R. Co. 64 Iowa, 603, 21 N. W. 103; Rose v. Des Moines 69 I. R. A.

Valley R. Co. 39 Iowa, 246; Kansas P. R. Co. v. Peavey, 29 Kan. 169, 44 Am. Rep. 630; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Mackey, 33 Kan. 298, 6 Pac. 291; Atty. Gen. v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 35 Wis. 425; Ditberner v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 47 Wis. 138, 2 N. W. 69. The questions decided by this court in Townsend v. State, 147 Ind. 624, 37 L. R. A. 294, 46 Am. St. Rep. 477, 47 N. E. 19, are analogous to and on the same lines as the cases just cited.

Appellant's learned counsel have urged upon our attention Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 41 L. ed. 666, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255, as probably declaring a different rule. The reference to that case is fortunate, because, while it does not in the least depart from the rule laid down in the two cases above cited, it lays down some principles governing the subject, doubtless in mind in both of the other judgments of the Federal Supreme Court, but not deemed necessary in those cases to be fully stated. In the course of the opinion, Mr. Justice Brewer, speaking for the court, said: "That such corporations may be classified for some purposes is unquestioned. The business in which they are engaged is of a peculiarly dangerous nature, and the legislature, in the exercise of its police powers, may justly require many things to be done by them in order to secure life and property. Fencing of railroad tracks, use of safety couplers, and a multitude of other things easily suggest themselves. And any classification for the imposition of such special duties—duties arising out of the peculiar business in which they are engaged—is a just classification, and not one within the prohibition of the 14th Amendment. Thus it is frequently required that they fence their tracks, and, as a penalty for a failure to fence, double damages in case of loss are inflicted. Missouri P. R. Co. v. Humes, 115 U. S. 512, 29 L. ed. 463, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 110. But this and all kindred cases proceed upon the theory of a special duty resting upon railroad corporations by reason of the business in which they are engaged,—a duty not resting upon others; a duty which can be enforced by the legislature in any proper manner; and, whether it enforces it by penalties in the way of fines coming to the state, or by double damages to a party injured, is immaterial. It is all done in the exercise of the police power of the state, and with a view to enforce just and reasonable police regulations. . . . But arbitrary selection can never be justified by calling it classification. The equal protection demanded by the 14th Amendment forbids this. . . . It is apparent that the mere fact of classification is not sufficient to relieve a statute from the reach of the equality clause of the 14th Amendment, and that in all cases it must appear not only that a classification has been made, but also that it is one based upon some reasonable ground,—some difference which bears a just and proper relation to the attempted classification,—and is not a mere arbitrary selection.”

Objection is made to the validity of the act because it embraces all corporations except municipal, and that there are other corporations whose business may be such as not to afford any reasonable ground for their classification, in that their business may not be peculiarly dangerous to life and limb, like that of railroads. To this it may be answered, if the act is valid as to railroad companies, the appellant, a railroad corporation, cannot be permitted to litigate the constitutionality of the act as to other corporations. Henderson v. State, 137 Ind. 552, 24 L. R. A. 469, 36 N. E. 257; Switzerland County v. Reeves, 148 Ind. 467, 46 N. E. 995; Currier v. Elliott, 141 Ind. 394, 39 N. E. 554. It will be time enough to decide its validity as to other corporations when any of them come before this court with a case presenting the question.

It is also urged, as an objection to the validity of the act, that it exempts municipal corporations from its operation. But no reason has been suggested why municipal corporations should be classed as railroad corporations. We have many statutes applying to railroad corporations that do not apply to municipal corporations. There is no necessary similarity between them. Nor is the business of municipal corporations so peculiarly hazardous to their employees as to call for such special legislation as is called for in case of railroad corporations to protect their employees. We therefore conclude that the act does not violate the Constitution, either Federal or state.

It is next contended that the circuit court erred in sustaining the plaintiff's demurrer to the second paragraph of the defendant's answer. It sets up that on the 8th day of March, 1893, and prior to the plaintiff's injury, he became a member of the voluntary relief department of the Pennsylvania lines west of Pittsburgh, and was such member at the time he was injured, and so continued long after his said injury; that the management of said department is under the charge of said lines west of Pittsburgh; that said fund is made up of stated contributions from said lines and the employees thereon, and said lines guarantee the fulfillment of all the obligations of said department, and make up and pay all deficiencies in the amounts necessary to pay all benefits to its members. In becoming a member of said relief department, he agreed to be bound by its rules and regulations, among which was that each member, on complying with its rules, was entitled to receive stipulated benefits on account of disability incurred by injury received to such member in the service of the company. This agreement is all set forth in the appellee's written application for membership, and signed by him; and, among the stipulations contained therein, is the following, namely: "And I agree that the acceptance of benefits from the said relief fund for injury or death shall operate as a release of all claims for damages against said company arising from injury or death which could be made by or through me, and that I, or my legal representatives, will execute such further instrument as may be necessary formally to evidence such acquittance." And it is further averred that, after receiving the injury complained of, while disabled thereby, he accepted benefits from said relief department to the amount of $385. But it is contended by the appellee that by the 5th section of the act we have been considering the contract set up in this answer as a bar is made void. The contract set up is shown therein to have been entered into after the act took effect and became a law. The section reads thus: "All contracts made by railroads or other corporations with their employees, or rules or regulations adopted by any corporation releasing or relieving it from liability to any employee having a right of action under the provisions of this act, are hereby declared null and void." Burns's Rev. Stat. 1894, § 7087. The balance of the section makes the whole act apply to future injuries, and not to past. The validity of this section is assailed on the grounds that it violates the Bill of Rights and the 14th Amendment of the Federal Constitution. What we have said as to the validity of the other parts of the act, under these constitutional provisions, is applicable to this section, and hence it must be held not to infringe them.

And it is further insisted by appellant that said section violates § 19 of article 4 of the state Constitution, in that the subject of the 5th section is not expressed in the title, nor properly connected with the subject expressed in the title. The prohibition of contracts releasing corporation from their liability, as prescribed in the act, is germane to and properly connected with that main subject of the act, and hence the matter of the 5th section thereof need not be expressed in the title. State ex rel. Duensing v. Roby, 142 Ind. 168, 33 L. R. A. 213, 51 Am. St. Rep. 174, 41 N. E. 145, and cases there cited; Warren v. Britton, 84 Ind. 14; Bitters v. Fulton County, 81 Ind.

125; Benson v. Christian, 129 Ind. 535, 20 N. E. 26; Farrell v. State, 45 Ind. 371; Thomasson v. State, 15 Ind. 449; Reams v. State, 23 Ind. 111; Bank of State v. New Albany, 11 Ind. 139; State ex rel. Stingley v. Sullivan, 74 Ind. 121; Indianapolis v. Huegele, 115 Ind. 581, 18 N. E. 172; Hunter v. Burnsville Turnp. Co. 56 Ind. 213; Walker v. Dunham, 17 Ind. 483; McCaslin v. State, 44 Ind. 151; State ex rel. Terre Haute v. Kolsem, 130 Ind. 434, 14 L. R. A. 566, 29 N. E. 595; Shoemaker v. Smith, 37 Ind. 122; Crawfordsville & S. W. Turnp. Co. v. Fletcher, 104 Ind. 97, 2 N. E. 243; Barnett v. Harshbarger, 105 Ind. 410, 5 N. E. 718; Hunt v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 112 Ind. 69, 13 N. E. 263. We therefore hold that the 5th section is not invalid, because it is a matter properly connected with the subject of the act.

Assuming that it is valid, and makes contracts releasing or relieving corporations from liability under the act absolutely void, appellant's learned counsel contend that there is nothing in the agreement set forth in the second paragraph of the answer relieving or releasing the company from liability for negligence, or from any liability whatever. They say appellee "elected to accept benefits from the relief fund, and, having done so, he cannot maintain this action for damages. That is the essence of his agreement." Appellant's counsel further say in one of their briefs that "the payment and acceptance of benefits under the terms of the contract in this relief fund is simply a compromise and settlement of the claim of the injured employee against the company." Let us suppose that the above statement is true; it is certainly the strongest and best statement that can be made of appellant's position. What is it that makes the acceptance of benefits from the relief fund a compromise and settlement of appellee's claim? Only one answer can be made to this question, and that is that the antecedent contract alone makes it such. There is no allegation in the answer that in accepting the benefits appellee made any agreement or compromise whatever, and there is no claim that he did. He simply accepted that which he had a legal and moral right to demand. His own contributions helped to create the fund, and his injury brought him within the rules and regulations entitling him to the benefits. So, even if it was a compromise and settlement, it was such wholly and solely by virtue of the antecedent contract,—a contract executed before the injury occurred; and, that being so, it amounts to nothing more than an attempt to secure a release of future liability under the act, call it by whatsoever name we may. But such acceptance is not, in any proper or legal sense, a compromise and settlement of liability under the act. The language of the contract is: "And I agree that the acceptance of benefits from said relief fund shall operate as a release of all claims for damages against said company, arising from such injury or death," etc. So, by the express terms of the contract, it is a release, and not a compromise and settlement. The acceptance of benefits shall operate as a release. But what makes it so? If the antecedent contract was abrogated, the acceptance of benefits would have no effect whatever upon the question of appellant's liability under the act; because he had a legal and moral right, as before remarked, to demand and receive such benefits. So, if the release takes place, it is not by virtue of the acceptance, but it is by the force, vigor, and effect of the antecedent contract. It breathes that effect into the acceptance.

But it is contended that the contract does not, of itself, operate as a release of liability under the act. The only difference between it and a contract of absolute release is that the one would be unconditional while the other is conditional. The conclusion seems unavoidable that the contract here is a conditional release of appellant from liability under the act. The condition upon which it is to become absolute is the acceptance of benefits from the relief fund. Section 5 of the act makes "all contracts . . . by any corporation releasing or relieving it from liability" under the act "null and void."

Appellant's learned counsel contend that an exact copy of this contract was held valid in the following cases: Johnson v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 163 Pa. 127, 29 Atl. 854; Ringle v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 164 Pa. 529, 44 Am. St. Rep. 628, 30 Atl. 492; Lease v. Pennsylvania Co. 10 Ind. App. 47, 37 N. E. 423; Donald v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 93 Iowa, 284, 33 L. R. A. 492, 61 N. W. 971. The first three cases just cited were decided in states not having employers' liability acts forbidding contracts of this kind in force at the time the injury sued for occurred. And they proceeded upon the sole ground that the contract did not violate public policy, and therefore they were upheld. But the Iowa case was decided in a state having in force at the time such an act. But in that case the injury resulted in death, and the administrator of the deceased had recovered a judgment against the company for the benefit of the mother of the deceased on account of his death, on a similar statute to our own. The deceased was a member of the relief association very similar to the one here involved. The case decided in 93 Iowa, 284, 33 L. R. A. 492.

and 61 N. W. 971, was a suit by the mother against the relief association for the $500 death benefits provided by the rules of the association. The case was decided against her because of the following stipulation in the contract signed by the deceased when he became a member of the relief association, namely: "Should a member or his legal representatives bring suit against the company . . . for damages on account of injury or death of such member, payment of benefits from the relief fund on account of the same shall not be made until such suit is discontinued; and if suit shall proceed to judgment, or shall be compromised, all claims upon the relief fund for benefits on account of such injury or death shall be thereby precluded." That contract does not seek to avoid the liability of the company under the Iowa act, and hence was a perfectly legal contract. As before observed, the other cases involved the question whether such a contract as that now before us was invalid because of its violation of public policy. Without either approving or disapproving of the rule laid down by the Pennsylvania supreme court and our own appellate court, yet the United States circuit court for the district of Colorado decided the question the other way in a strong and able opinion in Miller v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 65 Fed. 305; and we think there is a marked distinction in the rule where a contract is charged with violating public policy and where it contravenes a positive statutory prohibition, and especially where the statute provides that the inhibited contract shall be null and void. In Barrett v. Carden, 65 Vt. 431, 36 Am. St. Rep. 876, 26 Atl. 530, the supreme court of Vermont said: "The defendant insists that the alleged undertaking of the plaintiff is contrary to public policy, and that for this reason the bond should be declared void. Courts will not declare contracts void on grounds of public policy except in cases free from doubt, and prejudice to the public interest must clearly appear before a court is justified in pronouncing an instrument void on this account. In Richmond v. Dubuque & S. C. R. Co. 26 Iowa, 191, it is said 'that the power of courts to declare a contract void for being in contravention of sound public policy is a very delicate and undefined power, and, like the power to declare a statute unconstitutional, should be exercised only in cases free from doubt.' . . . In Richardson v. Mellish, 2 Bing. 229, Sir James Burrough said: 'I protest, as my lord has done, against urging too strongly upon public policy. It is a very unruly horse, and, when once you get astride it, you never know where it will carry you. It may lead you from the sound law. It is never urged at all but when other points fail.' In Walsh v. Fussell, 6 Bing. 169, Lord Chief Justice Tindal, in pronouncing judgment, said: 'It is not contended that the covenant was illegal on the ground of the breach of any direct rule of law, or the direct violation of any statute, and we think, to hold it to be void on the ground of its impolicy or inconvenience, we ought to be clearly satisfied that the performance of it would be necessarily attended with injury or inconvenience to the public.' As was said in Brooks v. Cooper, 50 N. J. Eq. 761, 21 L. R. A. 617, 35 Am. St. Rep. 793, 26 Atl. 978: "Where there is no statutory prohibition, the law will not readily pronounce an agreement invalid on the ground of policy or convenience, but is, on the contrary, inclined to leave men free to regulate their affairs as they think proper. . . . Now, the intention of the contract was to contravene the statute, and this intention is revealed in the contract. This renders the contract vicious and unenforceable." An eminent author says: "By public policy is intended that principle of the law which holds that no citizen can lawfully do that which has a tendency to injure the public, or which is against the public good. Courts will not declare contracts void on grounds of public policy, except where the case is free from doubt, and where an injury to the public interest clearly appears. A doubtful matter of public policy is not sufficient to invalidate a contract." 2 Beach, Modern Law of Contracts, § 1498, and authorities there cited. It might be difficult to say that such a contract has a tendency to injure, or is against the public good, beyond all doubt. On the other hand, the same author says (§ 1447) that "contracts requiring the performance of acts forbidden by statute, or tending to promote such acts, are void, even though the statute does not declare them void." See the authorities there cited. The same author, in § 1443, says: "Whatever tends to interfere with the beneficial operation of the statute is unlawful, as against the policy of the law. Whatever tends to obstruct duty, by defeating the letter or spirit of the law, is also unlawful, and the courts will not enforce any agreement or contract for the benefit of one through whose direction or assistance the law is violated. . . . The law attempts to close the doors to temptations by refusing such parties recognition in the courts." See authorities there cited. It is laid down in 3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 872, that "where a transaction is forbidden by a statute it is void; the grounds of the proposition are immaterial." As we have before said, the contract in question is a release of appellant's liability under the act upon a certain condition. That it is a conditional release of such liability, dependent upon the happening of the condition, namely, the acceptance of said benefits by appellee, there can be no doubt. If that condition happens, as it did, appellant's liability under the act is released by virtue of the antecedent contract, if it is enforced. If it is enforced, it must be so done in violation of the statute which makes all such contracts null and void. That certainly more than tends to obstruct both the letter and spirit of the statute. Our cases are to like effect in holding that a contract in violation of a statute is void. State Bank v. Coquillard, 6 Ind. 232; Cassaday v. American Ins. Co. 72 Ind. 95. And the same is true if any part of the contract is in violation of the law and the consideration unseverable. Daniels v. Barney, 22 Ind. 207; Case v. Johnson, 91 Ind. 477; Benton v. Hamilton, 110 Ind. 294, 11 N. E. 238; Woodford v. Hamilton, 139 Ind. 481, 39 N. E. 47; Sandage v. Studabaker Bros. Mfg. Co. 142 Ind. 148, 34 L. R. A. 363, 51 Am. St. Rep. 165, 41 N. E. 380; Sullivan v. State, 121 Ind. 342, 23 N. E. 150.

But the contract is only conditionally in conflict with the statute; that is, if the condition never happens, it does not and never can conflict with the statute. But it is equally true if the condition does happen it will directly conflict with the statute. One of the most learned of law writers upon this topic says: "A condition is a limitation making a contract arbitrarily dependent on an event at the time uncertain." 1 Wharton, Contr. § 545. And in § 548 the same learned author says: "The promisor is not to be bound only in the future. He is bound from the time he makes the promise, and the title he passes vests subject to the condition. Any intermediate disposition of the title, made by the promisor before the happening of the condition, is subject to the condition. . . . The promisor, also, who agrees to convey an estate on a future contingency, is liable in damages if he makes his compliance with his promise impossible, or subjects the property to waste." And in § 551 he further says: "The same may be said of all contracts to be performed on the happening of a certain event. The contract binds from the time it is made, and ceases to bind on the nonoccurrence of a certain event, which is therefore, in this sense, a condition subsequent." To the same effect is Clark, Contr. Hornbook Series, p. 663, § 277.

If we were even mistaken in construing this contract as a conditional one, so as to bring it within the principles above laid down and within the condemnation of the 69 L. R. A.

statute in question, it unquestionably falls within the principle laid down by Wharton, thus: "The prohibition of a statute cannot be evaded by putting a contract in a shape which, while nominally not inconsistent with the statute, virtually contravenes its provisions. This has been frequently held with regard to stipulations evading usury statutes and with regard to assignments evading bankrupt laws. If a contract conflicts with the general policy and spirit of a statute governing it, it will not be enforced, although there may be no literal conflict."

1 Wharton, Contr. § 362. In State ex rel. Matthews v. Forsythe, 147 Ind. 466, 33 L. R. A. 221, 44 N. E. 593, it was said: "In chapter 4, § 1, of Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes, under the title of 'Construction to Prevent Evasion,' it is accordingly said, at pages 133 and 134: 'It is the duty of the judge to make such construction as shall suppress all invasions for the continuance of the mischief. To carry out effectually the object of a statute, it must be so construed as to defeat all attempts to do or avoid, in an indirect or circuitous manner, that which it has prohibited or enjoined. In fraudem legis facit, qui salvis verbis legis, sententiam ejus circumvenit; and a statute is understood as extending to all such circumventions, and rendering them unavailing. Quando aliquid prohibetur, prohibetur et omne per quod devenitur ad illud. When the acts of the parties are adopted for the purpose of effecting a thing which is prohibited, and the thing prohibited is in consequence effected, the parties have done that which they purposely caused, though they may have done it indirectly. When the thing done is substantially that which was prohibited, it falls within the act simply because, according to the true construction of the statute, it is the thing thereby prohibited. Whenever courts see such attempts at concealment 'they brush away the cobweb varnish,' and show the transaction in its true light. They see things as ordinary men do, and see through them. Whatever might be the form or color of the transaction, the law looks to the substance of it. In all such cases it is, in truth, rather the particular transaction than the statute which is the subject of construction; and, if it is found to be in substance within the statute, it is not suffered to escape from the operation of the law by means of the disguise under which its real character is masked.'" We are therefore of opinion that the contract set up in the second paragraph of the answer is in contravention of the statute, and hence, by force thereof, the contract so set up is null and void; and, that being so, said answer was bad and the circuit court did not err in sustaining the demurrer thereto for want of sufficient facts.

It is complained, under the motion for a new trial, that the circuit court erred in excusing on its own motion the juror Overholser, who it is alleged was a competent juror, over appellant's objection. But it is not shown that the jury which was finally impaneled was not a fair and impartial jury. In such a case the matter is very much in the discretion of the trial court, and no error is committed where no injury results from the court's action in excusing the juror. De Pew v. Robinson, 95 Ind. 109. It is not even claimed that any injury resulted therefrom. We therefore conclude there was no error committed in excusing the juror.

It is further contended that the seventh item in the special verdict is not supported by the evidence. It reads thus: "We further find that, under the rules of the defendant company governing the operation of defendant's freight trains in cases where it became necessary for brakemen to go between defendant's cars, attached to the engine drawing the same, for the purpose of making couplings, it was the duty of the engineer in charge of the engine of said train, after receiving a signal from a brakeman, to stop the engine and train for the purpose of allowing such brakeman to pass between the cars thereof and make a coupling, to obey a signal and stop the engine and train, and so remain until receiving a signal from some member of the train crew to back or pull forward." Counsel say: "The evidence does not sustain this finding. There was no evidence of such a rule." The finding is not that there was such a rule, but that, "under the rules of the defendant," not rule, "it was the duty of the engineer" to do certain things. Those rules might have been such as were adopted by the company, or such as by long usage and custom had become understood as incumbent on appellant's servants. We think there was evidence sufficient to support this finding.

The tenth finding was objected to because the evidence on that branch of the verdict was not sufficient to sustain it, but there was evidence sufficient to support it, though there was strong conflicting evidence. We can only look to that part of the evidence that supports the finding.

It is also complained that the circuit court erred in refusing to require the jury to return to their room and insert in their special verdict certain facts specified. To have sustained the motion would have been an invasion by the court of the province of the jury to determine the facts. If a special verdict fails to find material facts, within the issue, which were established by the evidence the remedy is not by a motion to coerce them into making such finding, but by a motion for a new trial by the party aggrieved. Brazil Block Coal Co. v. Hoodlet, 129 Ind. 327, 27 N. E. 741, and cases there cited; Vinton v. Baldwin, 95 Ind. 433, and cases there cited; Lafayette v. Allen, 81 Ind. 166, and cases cited.

Overruling appellant's objection to the question and answer of the witness Ballard is also urged as error. The appellee's counsel had asked the witness the question what danger there was to appellee's life at the time witness saw him, and he answered: "I considered him in a great deal of danger; a man continuing in that condition could not live many days." Appellee's counsel immediately withdrew the evidence, and the court, at the request of appellant's counsel, instructed the jury not to consider such evidence. There was no available error in the ruling.

Complaint is made of the third instruction given by the court: "That in estimating the plaintiff's damages it is proper . . . that you should take into consideration the plaintiff's physical and mental suffering." In Wabash & W. R. Co. v. Morgan, 132 Ind., at page 438, 31 N. E., at page 663, an instruction "that in making such estimate the jury should take into consideration appellee's physical and mental suffering if any were caused by and arising out of the injury," was upheld as not an "erroneous statement of the rule governing the assessment of damages contained in either of the instructions." There was no error in giving the instruction.

The fourth instruction is complained of, reading, as appellant's counsel say in their brief, thus: "The jury are instructed that if they find that the plaintiff had proved by a preponderance of the evidence the injuries he has sustained as charged in the complaint, then every particular and phase of the injury may enter into the consideration of the jury in estimating his damages, loss of time, with reference to his condition and ability to earn money in his business or calling, his loss from permanent improvement of his physical powers, his pain and suffering already endured, and that may be endured, from his injuries in the future, his personal disfigurement; and the jury should give the plaintiff such a sum as will compensate him for the injuries received, taking into consideration all the facts proved in the case." The appellee's counsel have copied the same instruction into their brief, except the word printed "improvement" in appellant's copy of the instruction is printed "impairment" in appellee's copy. Neither brief cites us to the place in the transcript where the instruction can be found, and we have spent some time hunting for it without success. Under such circumstances, we are justified in assuming that the word "improvement" in appellant's copy is a clerical or typographical error, and that the real instruction had the word "impairment" in it instead of the word "improvement," as set out in appellant's brief. Indeed, if the word "improvement" were in the transcript, instead of the word "impairment," it is so manifestly a clerical mistake in copying the instructions that we are authorized to read it "impairment" instead of "improvement." Landon v. White, 101 Ind. 249; Indiana, B. & W. R. Co. v. Dailey, 110 Ind. 75, 10 N. E. 631. With that reading the instruction is correct. Wabash & W. R. Co. v. Morgan, 132 Ind. 438, 31 N. E. 663, 32 N. E. 85. We have thus patiently gone over all the rulings of the circuit court urged and properly presented here as error, and conclude that the circuit court did not err in overruling the motion for a new trial.

The judgment is affirmed.

Petition for rehearing overruled.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

Jacob SCHUS, Respt.,
v.

POWERS-SIMPSON COMPANY, Appt.

(85 Minn. 447.)

1. Defendant is a corporation organized for the purpose of manufacturing and dealing in lumber; buying, improving, selling, and dealing in real and personal property connected with its lumbering business; and, in addition thereto and in connection therewith, it owns and operates what is called a "logging railroad," which is equipped with four locomotives and a number of logging and box cars, used in carrying logs from the pinneries to the saw mills owned and operated by it. It does not follow the business of a common carrier of passengers and freight, the operation of the road being limited exclusively to its own private business; but its servants and employees engaged in the operation of its trains are exposed to the same dangers and risks as are employees and servants of railroad corporations engaged as common carriers. Held, that Gen. Stat. 1894, § 2701, known as the "fellow servant act," applies to defendant, and it is liable to an employee engaged in the operation of such railroad for injuries caused by the negligence of a co-employee or fellow servant.

2. In this action (one to recover damages for personal injuries received by a brakeman in coupling cars on defendant's said railroad) the evidence received on the trial tended to show that there was a general custom in respect to the operation of the road for the engineer, when cars being coupled came together, immediately to stop his engine and hold it stationary until signaled to again move it by the brakeman making the coupling. It further tended to show that, on the occasion complained of, this custom was not observed by defendant's engineer, in consequence of which plaintiff was injured. It is held that the evidence was sufficient to require the submission of the case to the jury, and to sustain their verdict to the effect that such custom existed, and that the engineer's failure to follow and observe it at the time complained of was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injury.

3. Evidence examined and considered, and held to sustain the verdict of the jury to the effect that plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence, and did not assume the risks incident to making the coupling in question; also to sustain the verdict that plaintiff's cause of action was not settled and adjusted by an agreement between the parties made and entered into prior to the commencement of the action.

(February 21, 1902.)

A PPEAL by defendant from an order of the District Court for Hennepin County denying judgment non obstante veredicto, and denying a new trial after verdict in plaintiff's favor, in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Woods, Kingman, & Wallace, for appellant:

In order that plaintiff may recover he is bound to show facts and circumstances from which it can be ascertained with reasonable certainty what particular precaution defendant ought to have taken but did not.

Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 5th ed. § 57 p. 74. Ellison v. Truesdale, 49 Minn. 240, 51 N. W. 918; Johnson v. Walsh, 83 Minn. 74, 85 N. W. 910.

Plaintiff admits that he did not give the signal, which was the only way the engineer had of knowing when to stop, and which it was his duty to give.

Merritt v. Great Northern R. Co. 81 Minn. 496, 84 N. W. 321; Ellison v. Truesdale, 49 Minn. 240, 51 N. W. 918; 1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 5th ed. § 110, p. 170.

He must be held to have understood and

*Headnotes by Brown, J.

NOTE.—See preceding case and note thereto.
69 L. R. A.

appreciated the hazard of making this coupling, and hence, in attempting to make it, assumed all the risks incident thereto.

McLaren v. Williston, 48 Minn. 299, 51 N. W. 373; Tennessee, Coal, I. & R. Co. v. Kyle, 93 Ala. 1, 12 L. R. A. 103, 8 So. 764; Georgia P. R. Co. v. Dooly, 12 L. R. A. 342, and note, 86 Ga. 294, 12 S. E. 923; Bailey, Master's Liability for Injuries to Servant, pp. 150, 170; 1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 5th ed. § 185, p. 276; Cooley, Torts, pp. 550-553; Wood, Mast. & S. § 214, p. 673; Scharenbroich v. St. Cloud Fiber-Ware Co. 59 Minn. 116, 60 N. W. 1093; Smith v. Tromanhauser, 63 Minn. 98, 65 N. W. 144; Anderson v. C. N. Nelson Lumber Co. 67 Minn. 79, 69 N. W. 630; Swanson v. Great Northern R. Co. 68 Minn. 184, 70 N. W. 978; Quick v. Minnesota Iron Co. 47 Minn. 361, 50 N. W. 244; Greene v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 31 Minn. 248, 47 Am. Rep. 785, 17 N. W. 378; Woods v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. 39 Minn. 435, 40 N. W. 510; Smith v. Winona & St. P. R. Co. 42 Minn. 87, 43 N. W. 968; Tuttle v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. 122 U. S. 189, 30 L. ed. 1114, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1166; Southern P. Co. v. Seley, 152 U. S. 145, 38 L. ed. 391, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 530.

Releases for torts stand on the same level as other contracts.

Och v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 130 Mo. 27, 36 L. R. A. 455, 31 S. W. 962; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Shay, 82 Pa. 198; Squires v. Amherst, 145 Mass. 192, 13 N. E. 609; Christianson v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 67 Minn. 94, 69 N. W. 640.

Defendant does not own and operate a railroad in the sense that the word "railroad" is used in the statute in question.

23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 400; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 5th ed. § 241c, p. 444; Lavallee v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 40 Minn. 249, 41 N. W. 974; Johnson v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. 43 Minn. 222, 8 L. R. A. 419, 45 N. W. 156; Kreuzer v. Great Northern R. Co. 83 Minn. 385, 86 N. W. 413.

It is impossible that the legislature meant to include logging railroads under the term "railroads," because at the time this statute was passed there was not a logging railroad built in this state.

Funk v. St. Paul City R. Co. 61 Minn. 435, 29 L. R. A. 208, 52 Am. St. Rep. 608, 63 N. W. 1099; State v. Duluth Street R. Co. 76 Minn. 96, 57 L. R. A. 63, 78 N. W. 1032; Fidelity Loan & T. Co. v. Douglas, 104 Iowa, 536, 73 N. W. 1039; Massachusetts Loan & T. Co. v. Hamilton, 32 C. C. A. 46, 59 U. S. App. 403, 88 Fed. 588.

In order to ascertain the subject-matter, scope, and object of an enactment the interpreter should ascertain what is the mischief or defect it is intended to remedy.

23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 336; Beeson 69 L. R. A.

v. Busenbark, 44 Kan. 669, 10 L. R. A. 839, 25 Pac. 48; Ellington v. Beaver Dam Lumber Co. 93 Ga. 53, 19 S. E. 21; Railey v. Garbutt, 112 Ga. 288, 37 S. E. 360; McKnight v. Iowa & M. R. Constr. Co. 43 Iowa, 406.

Mr. F. D. Larrabee, for respondent:

The defendant in this case, as to this plaintiff, is in truth and fact a railroad corporation.

McLaren v. Williston, 48 Minn. 299, 51 N. W. 373; Funk v. St. Paul City R. Co. 61 Minn. 435, 29 L. R. A. 208, 52 Am. St. Rep. 608, 63 N. W. 1099; Mikkelsen v. Truesdale, 63 Minn. 137, 65 N. W. 260; Union Trust Co. v. Kendall, 20 Kan. 515; McKnight v. Iowa & M. R. Constr. Co. 43 Iowa, 406; Massachusetts Loan & T. Co. v. Hamilton. 32 C. C. A. 46, 59 U. S. App. 403, 88 Fed. 588.

Because the cars were moved after the coupling was made, contrary to custom, it certainly was a question for the jury to say whether or not the engineer was negligent.

Kelly v. Southern Minnesota R. Co. 28 Minn. 98, 9 N. W. 588; Kolsti v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 32 Minn. 133, 19 N. W. 655; O'Malley v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 43 Minn. 289, 45 N. W. 440; Larson v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 43 Minn. 423, 45 N. W. 722; Moran v. Eastern R. Co. 48 Minn. 46, 50 N. W. 930; Bergquist v. Chandler Iron Co. 49 Minn. 511, 52 N. W. 136; Flanders v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 51 Minn. 193, 53 N. W. 544; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Carpenter, 5 C. C. A. 551, 12 U. S. App. 392, 56 Fed. 451; Nelson v. Southern P. Co. 18 Utah, 244, 55 Pac. 364; Pier v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 94 Wis. 357, 68 N. W. 464; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. O'Sullivan, 143 Ill. 48, 32 N. E. 398; Pennsylvania Co. v. McCormack, 131 Ind. 250, 30 N. E. 27; O'Mellia v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. 115 Mo. 205, 21 S. W. 503; Whitsett v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 67 Iowa, 150, 25 N. W. 104.

Brown, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by the negligence of defendant. Plaintiff had a verdict in the court below, and defendant appeals from an order denying its alternative motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, or for a new trial. The facts are as follows: Defendant is a corporation organized for the purpose of buying and selling timber land; cutting, hauling, and driving logs and timber; buying, improving, selling, and dealing in real and personal property; and the carrying on of such other business as is conveniently and necessarily connected therewith. In addition to its lumbering business, and in connection therewith, it owns and operates what is called a "logging railroad." Its line extends into the pine woods from Hibbing, in St. Louis county, the distance of about 29 miles, including spur tracks and branches. It is equipped with four locomotives and a number of logging and freight cars, which are used in carrying logs from the pineries to the sawmills owned and operated by it. It does not follow the business of a common carrier of passengers or freight, the operation of its road being limited exclusively to its own business. At the time complained of, plaintiff was in the employ of defendant upon this railroad as a brakeman, and was injured while coupling cars. The facts with respect to his injury, the manner in which it was received, and the evidence tending to show negligence on the part of the defendant will be stated further on in this opinion. Four principal questions are presented for our consideration: (1) Whether defendant is a railroad corporation within the meaning, or comes within the operation, of chapter 13, Laws 1887 (Gen. Stat. 1894, § 2701), known as the "fellow servant act;" (2) whether the evidence establishes negligence on the part of defendant, which was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injury; (3) whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence; and (4) whether his cause of action for damages was settled and adjusted, and defendant released and discharged therefrom, by an agreement made and entered into between the parties prior to the commencement of the action.

1. It is contended that defendant is not a railroad corporation, within the intent and meaning of chapter 13, supra, and that in consequence it is not liable to one of its servants for injuries caused by the negligence and carelessness of a fellow servant. It is urged that the statute does not apply to defendant, for the reason that it was not organized as a railroad corporation, and for the further reason that it is not engaged as a common carrier of passengers and freight; its railroad business being confined exclusively to its own private affairs. The statute provides, generally, that every railroad corporation owning or operating a railroad in this state shall be liable for all damages sustained by an agent or servant thereof by reason of the negligence of another agent or servant; but railroads under construction and not open to public use are excepted from the operation of the act. The statute has been before the court repeatedly with respect to its validity and its application to particular servants and employees, and has been sustained, not as a law applying exclusively to railroad corporations as a class,—for, if that were its purpose, it would, as intimated by Judge Mitchell in Johnson v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. 43 Minn. 222, 8 L. R. A. 419, 45 N. W. 156, be unconstitutional and void as class legislation,—but as applying to employers whose servants and employees are exposed to the peculiar hazards and dangers incident to the operation of railroads. In that case the court said: "If a distinction is to be made as to the liability of employers to their employees, it must be based upon a difference in the nature of the employment, and not of the employers. One rule of liability cannot be established for railway companies, merely as such, and another rule for other employers, under like circumstances and conditions." Within the reasoning of that decision, and other cases in this court (Smith v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. 44 Minn. 17, 46 N. W. 149; Lavallee v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 40 Minn. 249, 41 N. W. 974; Mikkelsen v. Truesdale, 63 Minn. 137, 65 N. W. 260). the test in interpreting and construing this statute is not whether the corporation engaged in operating the railroad was organized as a railroad corporation, but whether the road being operated is a railroad, within the ordinary meaning of the term, in and about the operation of which employees are exposed to those dangers and risks against the consequences of which the legislature intended to provide. In Sutherland, Stat. Constr. 218, it is said to be indispensable to a correct understanding of a statute to inquire what is the subject of it,—what object is intended to be accomplished by it. When the subject-matter is once clearly ascertained, and its general intent, a key is found to all its intricacies. General words may be restrained to it, and those of narrower import may be expanded to embrace it, to effectuate that intent. When the intention can be collected from the statute, words may be modified, altered, or supplied so as to obviate any repugnancy or inconsistency with such intention. The subject-matter of the statute under consideration, and its intent and purpose, were to protect employees engaged in a dangerous and hazardous employment; and, within the decisions cited, the character of the employer is not of controlling importance. The statute is to be given, if not a liberal, at least a reasonable, interpretation, and one that will carry into effect the intent of the legislature. If the character of the employer, within the meaning of the statute, is not important, and the nature of the employment is the test to be applied in construing the statute, the expression "any railroad corporation engaged in the operation of a railroad" should, within the rule laid down by Sutherland. be enlarged and expanded so as to include any person, company, or corporation engaged in operating a railroad, incident to which operation are the dangers and hazards from which the legislature intended to protect the employees. Winters v. Duluth, 82 Minn. 127, 84 N. W. 788. Defendant was not organized as a railroad corporation, it is true; but it is conceded that it is operating a line of railroad equipped with engines and cars, the operation of which, so far as concerns the running of its trains, is identical with ordinary railroads, except that it is in the interests of its own private affairs. Every purpose intended to be subserved by the statute applies to it. Its servants and employees in the operation of its trains are exposed to the same dangers and hazards, if not greater, as employees of ordinary railroads; and to hold that it does not come within the statute would, in our judgment, be illogical and out of harmony with the prior decisions of the court, against the manifest intent of the legislature, and a cramped and unnecessarily restricted interpretation of the law. The mere fact that it is called a "logging railroad," and came into existence since the passage of that act, is by no means decisive of the question. It is a general rule of statutory construction that legislative enactments in general and comprehensive terms, prospective in operation, apply alike to all persons, subjects, and business within their general purview and scope coming into existence subsequent to their passage. McAunich v. Mississippi & M. R. Co. 20 Iowa, 338. And within this rule, even though a defendant is engaged in operating a "logging railroad" only, and exclusively in the interests of its private affairs; and though such railroads were not known at the time of the passage of the statute, and consequently not then in the contemplation of the legislature,—the operation of its road, in respect to the dangers and hazards to which its employees are exposed, brings it squarely within the spirit and purpose of the law; and it must, to effectuate fully the intention of the legislature, be held to be within its scope and operation. In the case of Mikkelsen v. Truesdale, 63 Minn. 137, 65 N. W. 260, it was held that the statute applies to a receiver engaged in operating a line of railroad as the representative of the court, in the interests of bondholders and creditors. We are unable to point out any logical distinction between a receiver engaged in operating a railroad and a lumber company similarly engaged, in so far as applicable to this statute. A like conclusion was reached in Wall v. Platt, 169 Mass. 398, 48 N. E. 270,—a case involving a similar statute. In Daniels v. Hart, 118 Mass. 543, mortgagees in possession of a railroad and operating it were held to be within the meaning of the statute. These decisions are in line with sound reasoning and the spirit and purpose of such statutes. It was held in Funk v. St. Paul City R. Co. 61 Minn. 435, 29 L. R. A. 208, 52 Am. St. Rep. 608, 63 N. W. 1099, that the statute did not apply to street railways. But the reasons for the statute do not in any essential degree apply to such railways. Employees on such roads are not exposed to such hazards, risks, and dangers as are the employees of railroad corporations proper. The spirit and purpose of the statute must be looked to in determining its scope and application; and, as the spirit and purpose of this law was the protection of employees engaged in a hazardous and dangerous work, though the literal language thereof limits its operation to railroad corporations, we hold that it applies to any corporation or person engaged in operating a line of railroad, incident to which operation are the dangers and hazards to employees the legislature intended to provide against.

2. It is contended by appellant that there is no evidence sufficient to support the finding of the jury that plaintiff's injury was caused by defendant's negligence. The accident occurred in the nighttime, when it was very dark. The employees in charge of the logging train had been engaged in hauling car loads of logs from spur tracks to the main track of defendant's road, and plaintiff was injured in coupling two of the cars. The cars so coupled by him were loaded with logs which were so placed thereon that the ends projected over the ends of the cars to such an extent that the first effort to couple them failed, the ends of the logs coming together and preventing the coupling. The impact, however, drove the logs back on the respective cars, so that at the next attempt to couple the drawbars came together, and the coupling was made. The evidence tends to show that it was customary, in making couplings of this kind, for the engineer, when the cars being coupled came together, to stop his engine immediately, and not move it until signals were received from the person making the coupling, and after he had come from between the cars. This custom and practice are not disputed. There is evidence, also, that the brakeman making the coupling usually signaled the engineer for the purpose of guiding the movement of the engine as it approached the car to which the coupling was to be made, and that just prior to the time the cars came together a signal would be given by the brakeman to stop the engine. No such signal was given on this occasion; but plaintiff relies for recovery, not upon a failure to obey that signal, but upon a failure on the part of the engineer to observe the usual custom in respect to stopping the engine and train at the time the coupling is made. It is not disputed in the evidence but that the engineer is able to tell from the jar of the train when the cars come together, and, in view of the fact that it appears from his testimony that when they came together on this occasion he did immediately stop his engine, it is not important that the usual signal to stop was not given. The custom being established, it is clear that plaintiff had the right to rely upon its observance, and the failure on the part of the engineer to do so was negligence. Romic v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 62 Iowa, 167, 17 N. W. 458; Hooper v. Great Northern R. Co. 80 Minn. 400, 83 N. W. 440. Besides, it is not claimed that the failure to give the stop signal was the cause of the continued movement of the train after the coupling was made; but it is insisted by appellant that the engine was in fact stopped, and did not move a greater distance than 2 or 3 feet. It is contended by plaintiff that at the time he entered between the cars to make the coupling, instead of observing the usual custom and rule as to stopping the engine when the coupling is made, the engineer continued to move and push the cars forward, in consequence of which plaintiff was injured. Because of the fact that the logs extended over the ends of the cars so being coupled, plaintiff could not enter between them in an erect position, but was compelled to do so in a stooping position. To make the coupling was a dangerous undertaking. He knew of the situation and the manner in which he would be required to go between the cars, and before doing so he called the engineer's attention to the fact, and requested him to move his engine back carefully, so as to avoid any danger. As stated, the specific charge of negligence is that the engineer failed to observe the usual custom in respect to stopping the engine at the time the coupling was made. On this theory the case was sent to the jury. The evidence on the part of the defendant tends to show not only that no signal was given to the engineer to stop his engine at the time plaintiff entered between the cars to make the coupling, but that the engineer did in fact stop it, by shutting off steam and reversing the machinery. It is claimed that the evidence is conclusive that the engineer exercised care and prudence, and was guilty of no failure or neglect in the respects contended for by plaintiff. If this were true, defendant should have judgment; but a careful examination of the evidence satisfies us that a case was fairly made for the jury, and their verdict in plaintiff's favor cannot be disturbed. Plaintiff's evidence to the effect that the engineer did not stop the engine and cars at the time the coupling was made is corroborated by undisputed evidence tending to show that fact. It appears that there were not more than four cars attached to the engine at the time the coupling was made, and five after it was made. It further appears that, just before making this coupling, plaintiff and his fellow brakeman blocked the wheels of the fifth car with a large stick of timber or wood, about 6 inches in thickness; the testimony is that (and we find nothing in the record to dispute it), after the coupling had been made, the fifth car, to use the language of the witness, "passed clear over the blocks." It is the claim of plaintiff that the train proceeded a distance of a car length and a half after the coupling was made. If defendant's testimony that the engineer did in fact bring the engine and cars to a standstill at the time the coupling was made be true, it is not very clear how the fifth car could have passed over the blocking. The fact that it did tends to show, and to corroborate plaintiff's assertion, that the engine was not stopped. Again, plaintiff was picked up after his injury at the side of the track, about the center of the third car from the engine, and he testified that the coupling was made between the fourth and fifth cars. It is not seriously controverted that plaintiff was found near the track at about the center of the third car though it is claimed by defendant that the coupling was made between the third and fourth. If plaintiff's testimony that the coupling was made between the fourth and fifth cars is true, the fact that he was found immediately after the accident at about the center of the third car tends to corroborate his claim that the engine was not stopped when the coupling was made, but continued to move forward the distance of a car or more. The truthfulness of the several witnesses was for the jury to determine, and we are unable to see our way clear to declare, as a matter of law, that the evidence is conclusive against the contention that the engineer was negligent.

3. It is claimed that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, and that he assumed the risks incident to making the coupling in question. It is true, as a general rule, that, if a person by his own carelessness contributes to his injury, he cannot recover. It is also true that a railroad employee assumes all the ordinary risks and dangers of his employment; but this assumption of risks extends only to such as are, in point of fact, ordinary risks of the employment. He does not assume risks and dangers resulting from the negligence of his fellow servants. The question of plaintiff's contributory negligence is disposed of, we think, by the decision in Corbin v. Winona & St. P. R. Co. 64 Minn. 185, 66 N. W. 271,—a very similar case. There the car was loaded with iron rails, and, as here, they projected over the end of the car; and, in order to make the coupling, it was necessary that the brakeman stoop over in going between the cars for that purpose. He knew the situation, and the condition in which the cars were loaded; and the court held that he was not guilty of contributory negligence, as a matter of law, but that the question was one of fact for the jury to determine. That case is on all fours with the case at bar, so far as this question is concerned, and is decisive and controlling.

4. About a month after plaintiff received his injury, and while he was still at the hospital, an agent of the defendant called upon him and paid him the sum of $75, obtaining therefor a written release of defendant of all claims for damages arising in plaintiff's favor by reason of this accident. It is claimed by defendant that this payment was made and accepted in full settlement of plaintiff's claim, that an agreement to that effect was entered into by plaintiff understandingly, and that he was fully apprised of the contents of the written release before it was signed by him. Plaintiff claims that the payment to him was stated at the time to be a donation by defendant; that nothing was said to him about the settlement of his claim for damages; that his signature to the written release was obtained by the fraudulent representations of defendant's agent; that he cannot read the English language, and did not read the paper or release signed by him, but relied wholly upon the statements of defendant's agent as to its contents. A similar situation was presented in the case of Christianson v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 67 Minn. 94, 69 N. W. 640. It was there held, upon evidence similar to that presented in the record in this case, that the question whether the money was paid in satisfaction of plaintiff's damages, and whether the release was signed for the purpose of discharging the railroad company from liability, or whether it was procured by fraud on the part of the company's agent, were questions for the jury to determine. The verdict in that case was to the effect that the release was obtained by fraud, and this court sustained it. We discover no reason, after a careful reading of the evidence, for disturbing the finding of the jury in this case, though there are some items of evidence which tend strongly to corroborate defendant's contention, but it is by no means conclusive in its favor. Mullen v. Old Colony R. Co. 127 Mass. 86, 34 Am. Rep. 349. There are circumstances, too, tending to corroborate plaintiff's contention that the money was paid as a donation. If defendant did not deem itself liable to plaintiff on account of his injuries, no reason is apparent why it should donate to him any sum whatever; and, on the other hand, if, in its opinion, a liability in fact existed, and one which, in justice, it ought to settle, it is fair to assume, as the jury probably did, taking into consideration the nature and extent of plaintiff's injuries, that it would have offered him considerably more than the very nominal sum of $75.

Our conclusion is that the verdict of the jury must be sustained. Order affirmed.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

Barney BLUE, Appt.,

v.

L. F. GUNN.

(.....Tenn.....)

Commercial finishing material, such as doors, mantels, casings, etc., which have been purchased for an unfinished building and placed therein, but not affixed thereto, does not pass by a sale of the real property under a mortgage foreclosure, where it is not mentioned or deemed a part of the sale.

(May 1, 1905.)

NOTE.—Are things placed on land with the intention of annexing them fixtures, where they are never actually attached?

I. Introduction, 892.

II. Actual annexation, 893.

III. Constructive annexation, 893.

IV. Mere intention to annex.

a. Machinery or parts thereof, 894.

b. Materials for use, repair, or reconstruction of railroads, 897.

c. Building materials, 898.

d. Fencing materials, 901.

e. Fertilizers, 902.

V. Conclusion, 902.

69 L. R. A.

I. Introduction.

It is not intended in this note to include all of the cases bearing upon the question whether an article or thing may become a fixture without actual annexation to real property, as it has generally arisen where the chattels in dispute were in place and actually in use, or, at least, ready for the work, or business, or purpose for which they were designed and made, although not actually annexed or let into the real property. A few leading cases on the general subject will be referred to where it is thought they will be of some help on the point defined in the subject of this note. Cases in which the APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Lawrence County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover the value of certain building materials alleged to have been wrongfully converted by defendant to his own use. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Robert B. Williams and L. B. White, for appellant:

The property did not pass under the mortgage.

11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 519-521, note; Topliff v. Topliff, 122 U. S. 121, 30 L. ed. 1110, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1057; Citizens' Fire Ins. Security & Land Co. v. Doll, 35 Md. 89, 6 Am. Rep. 360; Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Trimble, 10 Wall. 367, 19 L. ed.

948; Fogg v. Middlesex Mut. F. Ins. Co. 10 Cush. 337; Wromp. v. Moses, 3 Baxt. 467; Kirtland v. Montgomery, 1 Swan, 452; Jones v. Richardson, 99 Tenn. 614, 42 S. W. 440; Philadelphia Mortg. & T. Co. v. Miller, 20 Wash. 607, 44 L. R. A. 560, 72 Am. St. Rep. 138, 56 Pac. 382.

There is no ambiguity in said mortgage as to its meaning, and no meaning can be read into it, as its terms are plain.

11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 519, note 1, p. 520, notes 1, 2, ¶ 2; Chicago v. Sheldon, 9 Wall. 50, 19 L. ed. 594; Stapenhorst v. Wolff, 3 Jones & S. 25; Vinton v. Baldwin, 95 Ind. 433.

Simply being stored on the mortgaged premises, though part of the property may have been used in the building, is not a issue is whether mechanics' liens reach things not yet annexed to the freehold are omitted, as they turn upon the application of special statutes, rather than upon the law of fixtures.

II. Actual annexation.

In Capen v. Peckham, 35 Conn. 88, the court says the great weight of authority is in favor of the doctrine that to constitute a fixture it is necessary that the article should be annexed to the freehold, as the name itself imports; but that there is great diversity of opinion in relation to the degree of annexation which is essential for this purpose.

In Williamson v. New Jersey Southern R. Co. 29 N. J. Eq. 311, it is stated that the mere intention of the parties to make a chattel a part of the freehold does not make it a fixture; that to accomplish that result there must be an actual annexation to the freehold, though the strength of the union is not material if in fact it be annexed; that the intent of the party affixing it is only important on the question whether he intended to make the chattel so annexed a temporary or a permanent accession to the freehold.

The rule that actual annexation is necessary before a chattel can be turned into realty is also laid down in Brown v. Lillie, 6 Nev. 244. After referring generally to the cases holding that movables of a certain class may be constructively annexed to the realty, the court says: "We do not wish to be understood as indorsing these authorities, except so far as they hold that actual annexation to the soil is necessary. All the cases deserving consideration certainly make that an essential requisite, while others not only require an actual annexation, but something in addition thereto."

And in Wolford v. Baxter, 33 Minn. 12, 53 Am. Rep. 1, 21 N. W. 744. It is stated that the authorities, while not agreeing as to the necessity for, or the degree of importance to be attached to the fact of, actual physical annexation, yet that they generally unite in holding that, to constitute a fixture, the thing must be of an accessory character, and must be in some way in actual or constructive union with the principal subject, and not merely brought upon it. "To make a fixture," says the court, "it must not merely be essential to the business of the structure, but it must be attached to it in some way; or, at least, it must be mechanically fitted so as, in ordinary understanding, to constitute a part of the structure itself. It must be permanently attached to, or the component part of some erection, structure, or machine which is attached to the freehold, and without which the erection, structure or machine would be imperfect or incomplete."

III. Constructive annexation

The criterion of an immovable fixture is the united application of these three requisites: (1) Real or constructive annexation of the article in question to the freehold; (2) appropriation or adaptation to the use or purpose of that part of the realty with which it is connected; (3) the intention of the party making the annexation to make the article a permanent accession to the freehold. Binkley v. Forkner, 117 Ind. 176, 3 L. R. A. 33, 19 N. E. 753.

Where the first of these three tests may be satisfied by constructive annexation, the courts are not in harmony as to just how far the doctrine should be carried.

A thing may be said to be constructively attached to realty where it has been annexed, but is separated for a temporary purpose, as in the case of a millstone removed for the purpose of being dressed, or where the thing, although never physically fixed, is an essential part of something which is fixed; as in the case of keys to a door, or the loose cover of a kettle set in brick work. Wolford v. Baxter, 33 Minn. 12, 53 Am. Rep. 1, 21 N. W. 744.

Articles held to be constructively annexed are of that class which, although movable, and purely personal property in themselves, yet form a part of, or are essential to the completion of, something which is actually fastened to the soil. As articles embraced in this class, may be mentioned, the doors, windows, locks, keys, rings of a house, and an ordinary Virginia rail fence. Brown v. Lillie, 6 Nev. 244.

In Williamson v. New Jersey Southern R. Co. 29 N. J. Eq. 311, it is stated that cases of what are called constructive annexation are only apparent exceptions to the general rule requiring actual annexation. The instances of constructive annexation, says the court, such as keys, doors, and windows of a house removed for a temporary purpose, a millstone taken out of the mill to be picked, the saws and leather belting taken to be repaired or laid aside for future use, and the like, are all cases where the chattel, sufficient altering of its property nature as to convert it into a fixture, or into realty.

8 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 41, 43; Cubbins v. Ayres, 4 Lea, 329.

Mere intention to put this material into this building without doing so is not sufficient to convert it from a chattel into a fixture.

Wolford v. Baxter, 33 Minn. 12, 53 Am. Rep. 1, 21 N. W. 744; Arnold v. Crowder, 81 Ill. 56, 21 Am. Rep. 260; Treadway v. Sharon, 7 Nev. 37.

Mr. W. R. King, for appellee:

Nothing but a description of the lot or parcel of land was necessary to carry with it all the improvements on the land, and the appurtenances on the land thereunto belonging.

Shannon's Code, § 3680; Daly v. Willis, 5 Lea, 104.

The most controlling test of the question whether property connected with real estate is to be deemed realty or a mere chattel, removable at the pleasure of the owner; is the intention and purpose of the erection.

Johnson v. Patterson, 13 Lea, 631; McDavid v. Wood, 5 Heisk. 95; Hopewell Mills v. Taunton Sav. Bank, 150 Mass. 519, 6 L. R. A. 249, 15 Am. St. Rep. 235, 23 N. E. 327; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Morgan, 42 Kan. 23, 4 L. R. A. 284, 16 Am. St. Rep. 471, 21 Pac. 809.

This material had been purchased, together with other material, for the express purpose of completing the building, and the material had actually been deposited in the building for that purpose at the time of the execution of the trust deed under which the property was sold; and part of it had been used, and was being used, in furnishing the house when the trust deed was executed.

Plaintiff and wife, in the trust deed, expressly covenanted to keep improvements in a good state of repair and preservation. Plaintiff moved out and left this material in the building.

In determining what is a fixture the notion of physical attachment is exploded. It is now to be determined by the character of the act by which the structure is put in place, the policy of the law connected with its purpose, and the intention of those concerned.

Meigs's Appeal, 62 Pa. 28, 1 Am. Rep. 372. Constructive annexation is sufficient.

13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 605, note 3.

Articles placed on the ground for the purpose of annexation at once become part of the realty, and will pass as such.

Patton v. Moore, 16 W. Va. 428, 37 Am. Rep. 789; McFadden v. Crawford, 36 W. Va. 671, 32 Am. St. Rep. 894, 15 S. E. 408; Hackett v. Amsden, 57 Vt. 432; Conklin v. Parsons, 2 Pinney, 264; Palmer v. Forbes, 23 Ill. 301; McLaughlin v. Johnson, 46 Ill. 163; Daniel v. Weaver, 5 Lea, 393.

by actual annexation, was once part of the realty, and had been detached for temporary purposes without the intention to sever it from the freehold. Having once been a part of the realty, removal temporarily without intent to sever permanently does not reconvert the chattel into personalty, and destroy its character as a fixture.

The following things have been declared fixtures, although not actually annexed to the freehold: Loom beams in a cotton mill, which are essential parts of the looms,—Hopewell Mills v. Taunton Sav. Bank, 150 Mass. 519, 6 L. R. A. 249, 15 Am. St. Rep. 235, 23 N. E. 327; ice in an ice house on premises sold for hotel purposes,—Hill v. Mundy, 89 Ky. 36, 4 L. R. A. 674, 11 S. W. 956, detachable chain, which was part of the machinery of a sawmill,—Farrar v. Stackpole, 6 Me. 154, 19 Am. Dec. 201; a hayfork, which was part of a plant consisting of a track, a truck, pulleys, and the fork, the track being attached to the realty,—McCarthy v. McCarthy, 20 Can. Law Times, 211; machinery, or parts thereof, temporarily severed, but intended to be reannexed to the freehold,—Wistow's Case of Gray's Inn, 14 Hen. VIII. 25 b, Cited in report of Liford's Case, 11 Coke, 50b; Grant v. Wilson, 17 U. C. Q. B. 144; Wadleigh v. Janvrin, 41 N. H. 503, 77 Am. Dec. 780; Security Co. v. Security Co. 13 Montg. Co. L. Rep. 126; Voorhis v. Freeman, 2 Watts & S. 116, 37 Am. Dec. 490, infra; Pyle v. Pennock, 2 Watts & S. 390, 37 Am. Dec. 517, infra; materials from a building which has been torn down, where they are intended to be used in rebuilding,—Moore v. Cunningham, 23 Ill. 328; Beard v. Duralde, 23 La. Ann. 284; fence rails or materials accidentally or temporarily detached, but intended to be reannexed to the land,—Goodrich v. Jones, 2 Hill, 142; McLaughlin v. Johnson, 46 Ill. 163; Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Crawford, 68 Mo. 80; hop poles taken down for the purpose of gathering the crop, and piled up with the intention of being used over again,—Bishop v. Bishop, 11 N. Y. 123, 62 Am. Dec. 68; (but not as between tenant and grantee of landlord where the poles were put up by tenant for his temporary use. Wing v. Gray, 36 Vt. 261); a bell taken from a belfry of an old church, set up on a temporary frame on the lot, and intended to be placed in the tower of a new building,—Congregational Soc. v. Fleming, 11 Iowa, 533, 79 Am. Dec. 511; the rolling stock of a railroad,—Palmer v. Forbes, 23 Ill. 301. infra; Titus v. Mabee, 25 Ill. 257; Michigan C. R. Co. v. Chicago & M. L. S. R. Co. 1 Ill. App. 399; although the weight of authority as to this last-named class of property is the other way. For cases holding the contrary rule, see Williamson v. New Jersey Southern R. Co. 29 N. J. Eq. 311, supra; Randall v. Elwell, 52 N. Y. 521, 11 Am. Rep. 747; Hoyle v. Plattsburgh & M. R. Co. 54 N. Y. 315, 13 Am. Rep. 595; Coe v. Columbus P. & I. R. Co. 10 Ohio St. 372, 75 Am. Dec. 518.

IV. Mere intention to annex.

a. Machinery or parts thereof.

The cases are comparatively few in which the

McAlister, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The question to be solved on this record is whether or not certain doors, mantels, casings, columns, etc., deposited in a building for the purpose of annexation, but which, as a matter of fact, were never physically attached to the building, passed to the purchaser under a mortgage sale of the premises.

The facts revealed in the record are that plaintiff and wife on the 17th day of June, 1901, executed a deed of trust on certain real estate to James T. Dunn, trustee, to secure an indebtedness to one D. E. Rose, for the sum of $1,000. There was a foreclosure of this trust deed, and the property was purchased by M. S. McDougal for the sum of $2,100. The latter sold the property in a short time thereafter to the defendant, L. F. Gunn. It appears that when the property was first mortgaged a house had been erected upon the premises, which was not entirely finished. Prior to the sale by the trustee, the plaintiff mortgagor had bought certain finishing material, and deposited it in a room of the building on the second floor. The material consisted of doors, mantels, casings, columns, corner beads, etc., which had been ordered with the intention of being used in this house, but none of it was attached in any way to the building.

It further appears that this finishing material was not especially designed for that particular house, but could be utilized in any other residence. The plaintiff lived on the property at the time the trust deed was executed, and continued to occupy it until after the foreclosure sale. It further appears that in the deed from the trustee to the purchaser said material was not mentioned, nor was it mentioned in the trustee's advertisement of the foreclosure sale. There is evidence tending to show that plaintiff at all times claimed this material, and after the first sale gave notice to the purchaser, McDougal, that he claimed it. It is also shown that he notified the trustee before the sale not to sell this material, and claimed it as his property. It further appears that, about a year after L. F. Gunn went into possession of the premises under his purchase from McDougal, he used said material which he found stored in the building for the purpose of completing it. Thereupon the plaintiff, Barney Blue, who was the original mortgagor, and had purchased this material and left it in the building, brought suit to recover the sum of $148, the value of said material. There was a verdict and judgment in the court below in favor of the defendant. The plaintiff appealed and has assigned errors.

The disputed question of law is whether said material passed, under the mortgage attempt has been made to have movable articles declared fixtures because of mere intention to annex them to the freehold when they have never been actually attached, as was done in BLUE v. GUNN, and BYRNE v. WERNER. This has been termed mere ideal annexation, and, if it may be said to be a species of constructive annexation, it marks the utmost limit that doctrine has reached.

The roller-mill cases have furnished an interesting contribution to the subject. In Voorhis v. Freeman, 2 Watts & S. 116, 37 Am. Dec. 490, the question was whether a number of detached rolls which were part of the machinery of an iron rolling mill were fixtures. The rolls included among their number several duplicates but all of them had at one time or another been in actual operation, so that it was impossible to say which were proper members of the set and which were supernumeraries. "But even if that could be told," says the court, "all might, nevertheless, be deemed a part of the mill, seeing that they are often broken, and cannot be instantly replaced if they are not kept ready on hand." It was held that even the duplicates were part of the realty. The court gives the following curious reason as the ground for its decision: "In Pennsylvania, where a statute directs that real estate shall not be sold on execution before the rents, issues, and profits shall have been found by an inquest insufficient to satisfy the debt in seven years, not only might this conservative provision be evaded, but a cotton spinner, for instance, whose capital is chiefly invested in loose machinery, might be suddenly broken up in the midst of a thriving business, by suffering a creditor to gut his mill of everything which happened not to be spiked and riveted to the walls, and sell its bowels, not only separately, but piecemeal."

This is perhaps the first instance, says the court, in Teaff v. Hewitt, 1 Ohio St. 530, 59 Am. Dec. 634, supra, in which movable property was, by constructive annexation, adjudged parcel of the realty for the avowed reason that it ought to be placed beyond the convenient reach of creditors. Nevertheless a similar reason was advanced in the case of Patton v. Moore, 16 W. Va. 428, 37 Am. Rep. 789.

In Pyle v. Pennock, 2 Watts & S. 390, 37 Am. Dec. 517, extra rolls of an iron rolling mill, some of which were in housings and some of which had been used, but had been removed from buildings in which they had been accustomed to run, and were not in any way connected therewith, were held to be part of the realty. It does not appear from the report of this case whether any of the detached rolls in question had never been fitted or used in the mill.

In the later case of Johnson v. Mehaffey, 43 Pa. 308, 82 Am. Dec. 568, the issue was squarely presented, and it was held that rolls cast for a rolling mill and paid for and delivered beside it, where they had lain for two or three years in a rough, unfinished state, did not pass on a sheriff's sale of the realty. The court said: "Do the rolls go with the mill to the purchaser? The test question is, Were they elementary parts of the mill at the time of the sale? And, as matter of fact, it is quite plain that they were sale, as fixtures, or whether it remained the personal property of the original mortgagor.

As already stated, said material was not mentioned in any of the various conveyances of the property, and there was no physical attachment of said material to the building; and, while this material was originally purchased to be affixed to this building, it was commercial finishing, carried in stock by dealers, and could have been used on other buildings.

While the question thus presented is of first impression in this state, so far as we are advised, it seems to have been settled as a matter of legal controversy in many other states. The question of what constitutes a fixture has usually arisen in cases where the article, appurtenance, or material has been affixed to the freehold, and the question for determination in that class of cases was whether the fixture could be detached from the freehold; the solution of that question being dependent generally upon the intention of the parties in annexing it, and whether the right of removal had been reserved. This phase of the question was fully considered by this court at the present term in the case of Union Bank & T. Co. v. Fred W. Wolf Co. 86 S. W. 310, in an elaborate opinion by Judge Neill.

But, as already observed, the question presented by this record is whether an article which has been deposited upon the premises with a view of annexation, and for the purpose of finishing a building, thereby becomes a part of the realty, in such a sense that it passes under the deed to the purchaser.

The definition of a fixture usually given is, "An article which was a chattel, and which, by being physically annexed or affixed to the realty, becomes accessory to it, and a part and parcel of it." 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 596.

It thus appears that annexation is the controlling element in the very definition of a fixture, and we find, on examination, that the overwhelming weight of authority in this country is that the physical annexation of a chattel to the realty is necessary in order to render it a part of the realty. See cases cited in 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 600.

But the question as to the necessity of actual attachment has also arisen as to articles which have not been annexed to the land, but have merely been brought on or near to the land with the intention of annexing them. The great weight of authority is that such articles are still to be considered as chattels. Rails lying on the land, and not yet placed in a fence, have been held to be personalty. Thweat v. Stamps, 67 Ala. 96; Robertson v. Phillips, 3 G. Greene, 220; Harris v. Scoovel, 85 Mich. 32, 48 N. W. 173. So of lumber intended for a building. Carlin v. Babbitt, 58 N. H. 579. So windows and window blinds made to be used in a house, but not actually put in place and not; for the mill had always run without them. No doubt they were intended to be made a part of the mill; but we do not see how we can take the intention, without fact, in order to declare what constitutes the mill. . . . And, if mere intention could affix such articles to the realty, then a mere change of intention would unfix them, or prevent their becoming affixed, and we should thus be without any rule at all to guide us. Besides, it is rather a contradiction in terms to say, at the same time, that they are parts of the structure, and are intended to be made so. That these rolls will fit no other mill does not make them part of this one, or prove them so. . . . The rolling mill, consisting of all its constituent parts, as it was actually constructed and used at the time of the sale, is all that passed by the sale; and therefore these rolls were not included."

The two earlier cases in the state were not referred to in the opinion.

So, in England loose duplicate rolls of a fixed rolling mill machine and detached rolls of different sizes for use in the machine, and which had been actually fitted to it, are essential parts of the machine; but rolls that have never been used in, or fitted to, the machine, which require something more to be done to them before they are fitted, are not essential parts of it. Ex parte Astbury, L. R. 4 Ch. 630.

As to other machinery, it was held, in Patton v. Moore, 16 W. Va. 428, 37 Am. Rep. 789, that an engine and boiler, bought by the owner of a mill, and hauled into the yard with the bona fide intention of attaching them to the mill, and which were necessary for the purpose for which they were to be used, must be regarded as part of the realty, and not liable to the levy of an execution as personal property. The reason given for the decision was that persons involved in any degree would not have much encouragement to erect permanent improvements; that they might have all their arrangements made to build, their contracts made, the material all on the ground, and that the whole scheme might then be frustrated, and irreparable loss be inflicted by the levy of an execution on the materials thus collected on the ground.

The Patton Case was cited and followed in McFadden v. Crawford, 36 W. Va. 671, 32 Am. St. Rep. 894, 15 S. E. 408. In the latter case a rolling mill company had purchased two railroad spike machines to be attached to its mills. The machines had been shipped on a car which had been run in on a railroad switch belonging to the mill company upon its grounds. The foundation had been prepared to receive the machines, and one of them had been unloaded, and the other was still on the car, but had been partially moved, when they were levied on as personal property. The court held that they were not liable to seizure and sale as personal property.

In Iowa a steam engine and other machinery for a mill do not become a fixture so as to defeat the lien of a chattel mortgagee as against a holder of a prior vendor's lien on the land, although it was purchased to be annexed, and it was the intention to annex it, and it was fastened, nor otherwise annexed to it, are articles held not to be a part of the realty. Peck v. Batchelder, 40 Vt. 233, 94 Am. Dec. 392. So of a stone brought within a doorway to be placed as a doorstep. Woodman v. Pease, 17 N. H. 282. And so of machinery and parts thereof. Miller v. Wilson, 71 Iowa, 610, 33 N. W. 128; Burnside v. Twitchell, 43 N. H. 390. So the rolling stock of a railroad is held not to be treated as realty. In Williamson v. New Jersey Southern R. Co. 29 N. J. Eq. 311, it was said: "The criterion above stated, of actual annexation to the freehold as a rule for determining when chattels become part of the realty, is as well settled in this state as any other rule of property. Exceptions founded on financial and groundless distinctions only tend to produce uncertainty and confusion in the rules of property, which should be permanent and uniform. . . . Tested by the foregoing criterion, it is manifest that the rolling stock of a railroad must be regarded as chattels which have not lost their distinctive character as personality by being affixed to and incorporated in the realty."

There are authorities which hold a contrary doctrine, being based on the theory that material deposited on the land for the purpose of becoming a part thereof, or machinery deposited in a house for the purpose of being attached thereto, is, in the eye of the law, constructively attached thereto. But, as said by the author in 13 Am. &

Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 605: "Of the cases treated as illustrations of constructive annexation, some are merely cases of temporary severance, in which the articles, though not at the time actually attached, are treated as still annexed and part of the realty; and the term has been at times applied to deer in a park, fish in a pond, and doves in a dove-cote, which passed to the heir, and not to the executor."

This class of cases was discussed in Williamson v. New Jersey Southern R. Co. 29 N. J. Eq. 311, in which it was said: "The illustrations of doves in a cote, deer in a park, and fishes in a pond are entirely inapplicable to the present subject. They go with the inheritance, for special and peculiar reasons. In Amos & Ferard on Fixtures, they are classified under the head of heirlooms,—a class of property entirely distinct from fixtures." See also Hoyle v. Plattsburgh & M. R. Co. 54 N. Y. 315, 13 Am. Rep. 595.

It remains to notice several cases decided by this court which are supposed to illustrate the policy of our laws upon this subject. They are cases in which furnishers of material for a building are allowed a lien on the lot upon which the building is to be erected, whether the material was ever actually used or not. In Daniel v. Weaver, 5 Lea, 393, this court said it is not the actual use of the lumber in repairs to a building by the owner that gives the furnisher a lien, but delivered on the ground for that purpose, and although work had been begun for the purpose and with the intention of annexation; where all the machinery was lying on the ground near the mill, or in it, but where none of it had been put in place. Miller v. Wilson, 71 Iowa, 610, 33 N. W. 128.

And in New Hampshire the mere fact that saws which have been kept in a mill for a year or more, and never attached, were purchased with the intention to be used as a part of the mill, is not sufficient to make them fixtures; but other saws, which have been set and used in the mill, are part of the real estate. Burnside v. Twitchell, 43 N. H. 390.

b. Materials for use, repair, or reconstruction of railroads.

In Illinois materials provided for and designed to be attached to a railroad are, for the purpose of a mortgage or conveyance, a part of the real estate itself. Palmer v. Forbes, 23 Ill. 301. In this case the controversy was between mortgagee and execution creditor, and the property in dispute was certain car wheels, car axles, a quantity of locomotive ties, and miscellaneous iron and fuel oil. The court said: "We are of opinion that the rolling stock, rails, ties, chairs, spikes, and all other material brought upon the ground of the company encumbered by the mortgage, and designed to be attached to the realty, should be considered as a part of the realty, and encumbered by the mortgage as such; but fuel oil, and the like, which are designed for consumption in the use and which may be sold and carried away, and used as well for other purposes, as in the operation of the road, and, when taken away, have no distinguishing marks to show that they were designed for railroad uses, cannot, we think, with any propriety, be treated or considered as anything but personal property, and subject to, and governed by, the law applicable to such property." One of the judges of the court dissented as to the opinion that rails, chairs, spikes, and ties, drawn upon and not attached to the road, but intended to be so, savored of the realty, or passed with it, by conveyance.

In Wyatt v. Levis & K. R. Co. 6 Quebec Law Rep. 213, it was held that railroad fastenings and sleepers on hand for the repair of the road were not immovables by destination under article 379 of the Code, which reads as follows:

"Movable things which a proprietor has placed on his real property, for a permanency, or which he has incorporated therewith, are immovable by their destination so long as they remain there. Thus within these restrictions, the following and other like objects are immovable: (1) Presses, boilers, stills, vats, and tuns; (2) all utensils necessary for working forges, paper mills, and other manufactories; manure, and the straw and other substances intended for manure, are likewise immovable by destination."

In Covey v. Pittsburg, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. 8 Phila. 173, the question whether old and new rails, and rail chairs, lying along the track the furnishing under the contract for that use; and the lien exists whether the lumber was used or not. That case involved a construction of Shannon's Code, § 3531, establishing a mechanic's lien and furnisher's lien on any lot of ground or tract of land upon which a house had been erected, built, or repaired, or fixtures or machinery furnished or erected, or improvements made by special contract with the owner or his agent, in favor of the mechanic or undertaker, founder, or machinist who does the work, or any part of the work, or furnishes the materials, or any part of the materials, or puts thereon any fixtures, machinery, or material, either of wood or metal, and in favor of all persons who did any portion of the work or furnished any portion of the material for the building contemplated in this section. Section 3539 provides: "The lien shall include the building, fixture, or improvement, as well as the lot or land, and continue for one year after the work is finished or materials are furnished." The court, in dealing with these two sections, held that it is the furnishing of the lumber for repairs, etc., that creates the lien; and that it does not depend upon the use of it by the purchaser whether the seller shall have a lien. Otherwise, by not using it for a year, the owner could entirely defeat the lien of the purchaser. Such is not the proper construction of said acts, and this is made more clear by the provision in § 3539 that the lien shall continue for one year "after the work is finished," in favor of the workman, or "materials are furnished," as to the furnisher. The furnisher may, therefore, within one year after he has delivered the materials contracted for, have his remedy by attachment to enforce his lien.

The case of Halley v. Alloway, 10 Lea, 523, was another case involving the furnisher's lien for repairing and furnishing the Grand Opera House in the city of Nashville. The question presented for determination in that case was whether the things claimed to have been furnished entitled the furnisher to a lien on the house and lot. The material furnished consisted of stage machinery, such as pulleys, rollers for cylinders, etc., used for fitting up the stage,—some attached and some not,—chairs furnished and fitted to the floor, and seats for the accommodation of the audience, painting the scenery, curtains, and the like. The court held the nature of the thing done and the character of the house repaired, and for which the materials were furnished, as well as the intent of the party building, served to guide to the correct conclusion as to whether the work done was work done on the house, and became part of it. These elements are better guides than the old idea as to fixtures, which was whether the thing was permanently attached and fixed in or to the freehold. In getting up a theater, the whole building, considered in reference to its use, makes the house contracted for. All that serves to complete and furnish such house for the purpose designed in readiness for repairs or reconstruction, are fixtures, was raised, but not decided; the court taking the position that such property is not liable to seizure and sale on execution for an ordinary debt on the ground of public policy. But the court said that, independently of the public purpose for which they were used, doubtless they were liable to seizure.

c. Building materials.

The attempt to have building materials that have never been attached to the freehold declared fixtures seems to have been generally unsuccessful.

In Tripp v. Armitage, 4 Mees. & W. 687, it appeared that wooden sash frames intended to be annexed to a hotel building were delivered on the premises by the contractor, where they were duly approved and returned to him for the purpose of having iron pulleys belonging to the hotel owners affixed. While the frames were in his shop he went into bankruptcy. The owners of the hotel claimed the property under the terms of their contract with the builder as work actually done and fixed, but it was held that it passed to the assignee.

In King v. Hedges, 1 Leach, C. L. 201, a prisoner was indicted for stealing six light, glazed window sashes. The window frames from which they were taken were fixed in their proper places, but the sashes were neither hung nor headed in the frames, but were fastened in by laths nailed across the frames to prevent their falling out. The court held that they were not fixed to the freehold.

In Cook v. Whiting, 16 Ill. 480, it was held that hewed timbers provided and intended for a granary, and lying on the ground at the time it was sold, did not pass to the vendee. The court, conceding the vendee to be strictly protected and entitled to all that in law belongs to the land, said that, after doing this in the most extended sense, it was unable to include these timbers as fixtures becoming part of the land.

In Bandall v. Twyman, 71 Ill. App. 253, Affirmed in 172 Ill. 123, 49 N. E. 985, it appeared that a purchaser of land at sheriff's sale claimed a quantity of brick and other building materials that had been brought upon the premises for the purpose of replacing a building destroyed by fire. Operations having been suspended by the financial embarrassment of the owner of the land, the materials in question had previously been sold by the sheriff under an execution as personal property. The purchaser of the premises claimed the materials as constructively annexed to the land, but the evidence showed that he had impliedly consented to the prior sale. The court said that it might be assumed that, where one brings a quantity of material on his land for the purpose of building a permanent structure, there is, constructively, an annexation of the chattels to the realty, and that, were the owner to sell the land while matters were in that stage, the buyer would take the whole; but held that makes up the house, and is part of it when completed. Scenery, seats, pulleys, etc., and the like, make up a necessary part of a building designed for theatrical exhibitions. as much as do the counters on which goods are exposed for sale in a retail mercantile store. It is probable the scenery and other articles herein mentioned are as permanently attached to and were a part of the building as such counters.

In Steger v. Arctic Refrigerating Co. 89 Tenn. 453, 11 L. R. A. 580, 14 S. W. 1087, it was held that statutes creating liens upon real estate in favor of those who, under contract with the owners, have furnished lumber or materials for erection of buildings, machinery, etc., thereon, are construed liberally in favor of lienholders, as regards the subject-matter to which the lien should attach. In that case it appears that the Arctic Refrigerating Company erected a factory on a lot in Nashville for the manufacture of vapor for cold storage. By permission of the city this company laid subterranean pipes in the streets, connecting with its factory, to convey the vapor to its customers. P. supplied labor and materials in the erection of the factory, and also furnished and laid down the pipes in the streets. It was held that the plant, including lot, factory, pipes, etc., is an entirety, and P.'s lien for materials furnished or labor done upon any part of it attached to the whole.

The case last cited, it will be observed, does not even remotely touch the question with which we are dealing in the present case.

In the case of Grosvenor v. Bethell, 93 Tenn. 579, 26 S. W. 1090, one of the objects of the bill was to determine whether or not Bethell, the purchaser at first mortgage sale, thereby acquired title to all the theater furniture and fixtures; the same not having been specifically mentioned. It was held that a mortgage by an incorporated opera house company, made after the purchase of lot, and while the theater buildings were in course of erection thereon, conveying the lot and "all the buildings and improvements thereon or to be erected thereon," operates to pass all furniture, fixtures, and furnishings then or thereafter placed in the theater building, and essential to its successful operation; citing Halley v. Alloway, 10 Lea, 523, as settling this question.

In Grewar v. Alloway, 3 Tenn. Ch. 584, it was held that the rollers, pulleys, etc., for shifting scenery, and other stage properties, were fixtures or machinery, within the meaning of the mechanic's and furnisher's lien act. It was further said that the movable machinery and flying stages of a theater, necessary for the purpose of theatrical exhibitions, are trade fixtures, and removable by the tenant, as between him and his landlord, but, as between the owner and mechanic, are subject to the mechanic's lien law. The question whether a thing is a fixture or not, as between owner and mechanic, depends little upon the mode of annexation. Its fit-the plaintiff could not recover because there had been a severance of the property by legal proceedings, with the implied consent of the parties themselves.

In Indiana clapboards, piled upon land at the time it is sold and intended for general repairs, do not pass with a deed to the land. Hinkle v. Hinkle, 69 Ind. 134.

In Woodman v. Pease, 17 N. H. 282, the court held that a chattel fit to be annexed to the freehold, and which has been brought upon it with the intention on the part of the possessor to annex it, does not become a fixture, unless actually annexed or placed in position in which it is intended to be used, and in which it is adapted for use. The court, however, did not take the position that actual annexation is necessary to constitute a fixture, stating that the term might embrace other things than such as are denoted by the word in its strict etymological sense. The question in the case was whether a stone which had been quarried and brought onto the land for the purpose of being fitted and used at some future time in a doorstep passed, while in this condition, to the vendee upon a sale of the land. The court decided that it did not.

Blinds intended for a house, but not painted, and not hung on the house to remain as part of it, do not become annexed to the house so as not to be liable to seizure under an execution against the property of the builder by whom they were furnished, although the blinds have been fitted to the windows, marked with 69 L. R. A.

the number corresponding with their respective windows, and the work of painting them has been actually begun. Manchester Mills v. Rundlett, 23 N. H. 271.

In Louisiana bricks and lumber, lying on the premises and intended to be used for a new building, do not form part of the realty under article 468 of the Civil Code, which provides that "materials arising from the demolition of a building, those which are collected for the purpose of raising a new building, are movables until they have been made use of in raising a new building. But if the materials have been separated from the house or other edifice only for the purpose of having it repaired or added to, and with the intention of replacing them, they preserve the nature of immovables, and are considered as such." Beard v. Duralde, 23 La. Ann. 284.

In Maxwell v. Willard, 1 W. N. C. 355, it is held that lumber, mill work, sashes, etc., delivered on the premises for the purpose of being used in a building, are not fixtures. The court stated that it did not know of any decision which treated materials or machinery in such condition as fixtures. The roller mill cases (Voorhis v. Freeman, 2 Watts & S. 116, 37 Am. Dec. 490, and Pyle v. Pennock, 2 Watts & S. 390, 37 Am. Dec. 517, supra) were the nearest to it; but neither of them, the court said, went so far as to include raw materials not yet used at all in the building.

In Peck v. Batchelder, 40 Vt. 233, 94 Am. Dec. 392, a vendee claimed certain double win-ness for the particular place where it is annexed, its being connected with the general business conducted there, and other facts going to show the intent of the owner to make one thing of the land and chattels to carry out a general purpose, would have more effect upon the question than the mode or permanence of the annexation. It appeared in that case that the chairs had been fastened to the floor, and it is to be inferred that the other property was also in some way attached to the building.

It is unnecessary to pursue this line of cases any further, since we deem the question settled by the great weight of authority in favor of the contention that such materials are not fixtures, and are removable by the mortgagor.

It results from this that the judgment of the Circuit Court must be reversed.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

Samuel E. BYRNE, Jr.,

v.

Jacob P. WERNER et al., Plffs. in Err.

(.....Mich.....)

A mortgage of a lot on which stands a partially completed building will pass cut stone and structural iron prepared for the building and located on the lot mortgaged and that adjoining, if the intention of the parties is that the building shall be speedily completed with the material at hand.

(Moore, Ch. J., and Hooker, J., dissent.)

(December 7, 1904.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Marquette County to review a judgment in dows and blinds as part of the real estate bought from the vendor, who was a sash and door maker. The windows had been fitted to the window casings of the house, but had not been fastened in place when the house was sold. The blinds were made for the house, but were never fitted or put on. The vendor hid this property at the time the premises were sold, and the vendee did not learn of its existence until some time afterwards. The court held that neither the blinds nor the windows passed to the vendee. "The mere fact," says the court, "that the defendant had made some sash, painted them, and set glass in them, intending to use them, at some future time, in the construction of double windows for the house, does not constitute even constructive annexation. In order to make such windows a part of the realty, they must have been so annexed or attached to, or used upon, the building, as to indicate that the owner intended, by such annexation or use, to make them a part of the building." The court was of the opinion that the manner in which the windows had been put in showed that the owner did not intend to make them a part of the building.

In an early New York case it appeared that a builder contracted to build a house and furnish materials for it. As the work progressed plank was worked up on the premises into columns for a piazza. These columns were afterwards removed for convenience to other premises. The contractor also procured for the favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover for the alleged wrongful conversion of certain cut stone and structural iron. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Ball & Ball, for plaintiffs in error:

Samuel E. Byrne, Sr., was estopped by his words and acts from claiming ownership of the material as against Mr. White, after his purchase from Thurber.

Eureka Iron & Steel Works v. Breenahan, 66 Mich. 493, 33 N. W. 834; Thomas v. Watt, 104 Mich. 206, 62 N. W. 345; Rogers v. Robinson, 104 Mich. 329, 62 N. W. 402.

If the plaintiff or his grantor ever had any right of action, it was barred by lapse of time before this suit was commenced.

Scudder v. Anderson, 54 Mich. 122, 19 N. W. 775.

building a number of carved capitals, bases for the columns, and carved window and door caps. Before any of these materials was attached they were levied on under an execution against the builder. The owner of the building claimed and sued to recover the property, but the question was not raised whether it had become part of the real estate by constructive annexation, it seeming to be assumed that it was personal property; the only question being whether title had passed under the terms of the building contract. The court stated that the house standing on the plaintiff's ground became his as fast as the parts added to it became attached so as to become part of the freehold; that the house in question was real property, but that the materials of which it was composed were personal property, and did not pass to the plaintiff until delivery, or until they became affixed to the freehold. The court held under the evidence, therefore, that title was not in plaintiff. Johnson v. Hunt, 11 Wend. 135.

Lumber placed on a homestead lot, and intended to be made part of the homestead dwelling, is liable, in New Hampshire, to seizure under attachment. Until it becomes part of the homestead it is not within the protection of the homestead law. Carkin v. Babbitt, 58 N. H. 579.

But, under the homestead laws of Wisconsin, lath, shingles, and lumber obtained for the purpose of repairing a house occupied as a dwell-

This structural iron and stone became a part of the realty.

Manwaring v. Jenison, 61 Mich. 117, 27 N. W. 899.

The question of fixture or no fixture must depend upon the intention of the parties.

Morrison v. Berry, 42 Mich. 397, 36 Am. Rep. 446, 4 N. W. 731; Wheeler v. Bedell, 40 Mich. 696; Patton v. Moore, 16 W. Va. 428, 37 Am. Rep. 789; McFadden v. Crawford, 36 W. Va. 671, 32 Am. St. Rep. 894, 15 S. E. 408.

The idea that there must be an actual physical annexation before property, originally chattels, can become part of the realty, has in the modern decisions been gradually abandoned, and the intent of the parties is now the real criterion.

Snedeker v. Warring, 12 N. Y. 175; Farrar v. Stackpole, 6 Me. 154, 19 Am. Dec. 201; Voorhis v. Freeman, 2 Watts & S. 116, 37 Am. Dec. 490; Carey v. Bright, 58 Pa. 85; Hill v. Sewald, 53 Pa. 274, 91 Am. Dec. 209; Overton v. Williston, 31 Pa. 155; Pyle v. Pennock, 2 Watts & S. 390, 37 Am. Dec. 517; Covey v. Pittsburg, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. 3 Phila. 173.

Rails placed along the line of a contemplated fence for the purpose and with the intention of being used to build the fence constitute a part of the realty, and pass by conveyance of the land.

Conklin v. Parsons, 1 Chand. (Wis.) 240; Ripley v. Paige, 12 Vt. 353; Noble v. Sylvester, 42 Vt. 146; Palmer v. Forbes, 23 Ill. 301; McLaughlin v. Johnson, 46 Ill. 163.

ing, and actually deposited upon the land, are exempt from seizure under an attachment as personalty, irrespective of the question whether such materials, deposited on the lot, become part of the realty. Krueger v. Pierce, 37 Wis. 269.

d. Fencing materials.

It seems to be settled in Vermont that suitable materials, deposited upon a farm for the purpose and with the intention of building necessary fences, pass by a conveyance of the land as a part of the realty, and are not attachable as personal property. Hackett v. Amsden, 57 Vt. 432.

In an earlier case in the same state it was held that posts and rails on a farm, distributed in piles along the roadside, and intended for immediate fencing of the land, pass with the realty. Ripley v. Paige, 12 Vt. 353.

In Wisconsin this is also held to be the better opinion. The court says that, where rails have been placed along the line of an intended fence, for the purpose of being laid into the fence, though not actually applied to that use, they pass by a deed of the land, there having been a manifest appropriation to the use of the land. Conklin v. Parsons, 2 Pinney (Wis.) 264.

In Illinois, on the contrary, it is held that posts lying on the ground, and intended by the vendor for use in fences on the land, do not

Messrs. Button & Culver, for defendant in error:

The materials were not real estate.

Crippen v. Morrison, 13 Mich. 23; Harris v. Scovel, 85 Mich. 32, 48 N. W. 173; Curtis v. Leasia, 78 Mich. 483, 44 N. W. 500; Palmer v. Forbes, 23 Ill. 301.

Personal property does not become a fixture until actually in some form annexed, or put to some use, beneficial and permanent in its nature in connection with realty.

Johnson v. Mehaffey, 43 Pa. 308, 82 Am. Dec. 568; Woodman v. Pease, 17 N. H. 282; Peck v. Batchelder, 40 Vt. 233, 94 Am. Dec. 392; Carkin v. Babbitt, 58 N. H. 579; Cook v. Whiting, 16 Ill. 480.

The question of estoppel is a mixed one of fact and law, and conclusions from the evidence must be drawn by the jury, and not by the court.

Maxwell v. Bay City Bridge Co. 41 Mich. 468, 2 N. W. 639.

On motion for rehearing.

Messrs. Button & Heffernan, also for defendant in error:

If it was intended to have the materials covered by the mortgage before actual annexation, the better reasoning would require their specific description in the mortgage, as such, because ordinarily they would not be included in the mortgage security until after actual annexation.

Jones, Mortg. 4th ed. § 436.

It is only in cases of uncertainty that pass to the vendee as fixtures. Cook v. Whiting, 16 Ill. 480.

So, in Texas loose cedar pickets on land at the time it was sold do not pass to the vendee, the decision being in flat conflict with the Vermont and Wisconsin cases. The court said: "No matter if the posts had been cut off the land bought by appellants [vendees], the moment they were severed from the soil they became personalty, and did not pass by a deed to the land, although they may have been cut to build a fence on the land." Longino v. Wester (Tex. Civ. App.) 88 S. W. 445.

In Indiana fence stakes, piled on the land and intended for general repairs, do not pass with a deed to the realty. Hinkle v. Hinkle, 69 Ind. 134.

The question whether fencing material passes to a vendee of the land on which it is placed as part of the realty was touched upon in McCarthy v. McCarthy, 20 Can. Law Times, 211. The court, in holding that certain unattached rails did not pass with the land, stated that, while it might be that fence rails, piled along the line of a fence, but not used because the fence was not completed, belong to the freehold, it placed its decision on the ground that, so far as the evidence showed, there was an entire absence of intent to erect them into a fence.

The subject was likewise indirectly alluded to in Wincher v. Shrewsbury, 3 Ill. 283, 35 Am. Dec. 108, a case which holds that fence the subject-matter and surrounding circumstances are ever permitted to be gone into.

17 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 23.

Unless this court can say that, under the testimony, the building materials became an integral part of the real estate, they could not be considered as covered by this mortgage deed.

Ripley v. Paige, 12 Vt. 354.

Carpenter, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff brings the suit to recover for the conversion of certain cut stone and structural iron. The property originally belonged to plaintiff's father, Samuel E. Byrne. Both parties claim to have acquired his title. Plaintiff claims to have acquired it by a bill of sale executed in 1896. It is defendants' claim that in 1887 the property in controversy was transferred by Samuel E. Byrne to Henry C. Thurber, and that they have acquired Thurber's rights. It is clear that defendants have acquired the rights of Thurber, and that, therefore, the validity of their claim depends upon whether Byrne transferred the property to Thurber. The facts respecting the transfer are as follows: In 1887 Byrne conveyed to Thurber by a warranty deed (intended to be a mortgage) lots 4 and 5 of block 17 in the city of Marquette. At that time there was situated upon these lots a partially completed building in the process of erection. There was also situated on the land conveyed and on an adjoining lot the cut stone and structural iron involved in this case, which was intended to be used in the completion of the building. The stone had been cut and dressed for the front of the building. Each piece of the structural iron was of the dimensions provided in the plan of the building, and fit for the place where it was to go. At that time it was intended that the building would be completed. The plan of completing the building was, for some reason, abandoned, and defendants used the stone and iron for another purpose. Did the title to that material pass to Thurber by his deed? The learned trial judge held that it did not. It is urged that the building material had not become a part of the land, and was, therefore, in a legal sense, personalty at the time of the conveyance to Thurber. If this be true, it is not, in my judgment, decisive of this controversy. Though the building material was personalty, it is our duty to declare that it passed with the partially completed building, if the parties so intended, and if that intent may be ascertained from a proper construction of the conveyance of the land upon which said building stood. The question is, then, not whether the building material was in fact personalty, but whether it was intended to transfer it with the conveyance of the partially completed building. And this intent is to be determined by a proper construction of the conveyance; that is (See Norris v. Shoverman, 2 Dougl. [Mich.] 16; Davis v. Belford, 70 Mich. 120, 37 N. W. 919), by applying the language of the conveyance to its subject-matter. No uncertainty results ralls, lying on the ground and cut by a trespasser from timber growing on government land, do not pass with the land; the court stating that fence rails, when not put into a fence or evidently intended to be so used on the land (which could not be inferred if made by a stranger), did not pass with it.

And in Noble v. Sylvester, 42 Vt. 146, the court, in holding that a stone hewn from a quarry, and intended to be used in a tomb elsewhere, did not pass to a vendee of the land from which it was cut, and upon which it was suffered to lie after severance, declared that the question was analogous to that passed upon in the fence rail cases. Said the court: "The stone may be regarded as being governed by the same principles that are applicable to timber, fence rails, and the like, that have been removed from the freehold in fact, but remain upon the premises for the purpose of being used there in the construction of fences, etc.; and, if on the land at the time the premises are conveyed, they will pass by the deed; but if they are there, not for the purpose of being used on the premises, but to be removed elsewhere, then they do not pass by the deed."

e. Fertilizers.

Under the Constitution of Georgia, requiring all property, with specified exceptions, to be taxed, it was held that commercial fertilizers were subject to be taxed, although at the 69 L. R. A.

time it was the purpose of the owner to apply the same to his land, which was also taxed. Joiner v. Adams, 114 Ga. 389, 40 S. E. 281.

On the contrary, it was held in Massachusetts that manure from the barnyard of a homestead, and standing in a pile on the land, is not assets in the hands of an administrator, although not broken up or rotten, and not in fit condition for incorporation into the soil. Fay v. Muzzey, 13 Gray, 53, 74 Am. Dec. 619. But the decision was placed on the ground that manure made in the course of husbandry upon a farm is so attached to and connected with the realty that, in the absence of any express stipulation to the contrary, it passes as appurtenant.

V. Conclusion.

From an examination of the cases, the weight of authority seems to be that things placed on land with the intention of annexing them are not fixtures, where they are never actually attached. Even in Byrne v. Werner, which holds that the building material in question passed by the deed, it will be observed that the question does not turn upon whether the building material was in fact personalty, "but whether it was intended to transfer it with the conveyance of the partially completed building;" which intent the court determined by a construction of the language of the conveyance.

from this rule. Upon the land conveyed to Thurber was an incomplete building in the process of erection. Situated upon that land and upon the adjoining land was building material designed to be used for the completion of the building. It was surely intended that the incomplete building should be transferred to Thurber. It was surely intended that the building would be speedily completed with the building material at hand. And I think it therefore equally certain that it was intended that such material should pass with the conveyance. In my judgment, there is no sound principle of law which compels us to defeat this intention. On the contrary, I maintain that it is our clear legal duty to give it effect. I think, therefore, that the building material became the property of Thurber. This conclusion is sustained by authority.

In Wistow's Case of Gary's Inn (14 Hen. VIII.), cited in 11 Coke, 50b, it was resolved that a millstone temporarily severed from the mill, with the intention that it should be replaced, passed with the conveyance of the mill. "So of doors, windows, rings, etc. The same law of keys, although they are distinct things, yet they shall pass with the house." In Conklin v. Parsons, 1 Chand. (Wis.) 240, it was held that rails placed along the boundary line, "not laid up into a fence, but which had been placed on the land for the purpose of building the fence," passed with the conveyance of the land. In Ripley v. Paige, 12 Vt. 354, there was a controversy as to whether certain rails passed with the conveyance of land from plaintiff to defendant. Defendant offered to prove that when the conveyance was made the rails were distributed upon the farm for the purpose of being there erected into a fence. The court said: "Upon this branch of the case we are inclined to regard the rails, if it was evident from the manner of their distribution upon the land, and other appearances, that they were designed for immediate use in fencing the land, as we should the materials of a fence accidentally fallen down, or of one purposely taken down to be immediately reconstructed, or those of an intended wall distributed in like manner. As fences always pass by a deed of the soil on which they stand if the grantor has an unrestricted right to convey both, so we are disposed to think that such materials for a fence may, in all these cases, as against the grantor, be treated as being within the operation of his deed." In Hackett v. Amsden, 57 Vt. 432, it was held that stone posts, which it seems were deposited on a farm for the purpose and with the intention of building necessary fences, could not be seized and sold as personalty; the court saying: "Whatever the rule may be elsewhere, it seems to be settled in this state that suitable materials, deposited upon a farm for the purpose and with the intention of building necessary fences with them thereon, pass by a conveyance of the land as a part of the realty." In Wadleigh v. Janvrin, 41 N. H. 503, 77 Am. Dec. 780, it was held that certain stanchion timbers, staples, tie chains, and planks, which had been removed from a barn for the purpose of making repairs, passed to plaintiff by a conveyance from defendant of the land upon which the barn stood, notwithstanding the fact that the latter had formed a plan unknown to the former to make changes in the barn and to dispense with their use. The court said: "It was entirely immaterial what purpose the defendant had formed, so long as he had not carried it out. By the conveyance the barn passed to the plaintiff just as it then was, with the portions afterwards carried off by the defendant dis severed from the rest. The plaintiff saw the barn in the process of repair. He had a right to infer, and to act upon the inference, that the dis severed portions constituted an integral portion of the edifice." In Palmer v. Forbes, 23 Ill. 301, it was held that the title to rolling stock and the material provided for the repair of tracks was transferred by a mortgage of the real estate of a railroad company; the court saying: "It is a familiar principle to all that rails hauled onto the land designed to be laid into a fence, or timber for a building, although not yet raised, by lying around loose and in no way attached to the soil, are treated as a part of the realty, and pass with the land as appurtenances." (This decision and reasoning go farther than it is necessary for us to go in the case at bar.) In McLaughlin v. Johnson, 46 Ill. 163, it was held that rails which had once been and which were intended to again be used for a fence passed with the conveyance of the land notwithstanding the fact that at the time of such conveyance they were actually in temporary use on adjoining land. See also Curtis v. Leasia, 78 Mich. 480, 44 N. W. 500. Harris v. Scovel, 85 Mich. 32, 48 N. W. 173, is not inconsistent with these views. There it was held that rails piled on land did not pass with its conveyance. The rails had once formed part of a fence. The grantor had taken down the fence because it was no longer needed, intending to use the rails elsewhere. It is clear that there was no ground upon which the grantee could assert that it was intended that the rails should pass with the land. John- son v. McHaffey, 43 Pa. 308, 82 Am. Dec. 568, relied upon by plaintiff and the learned trial judge, is, in my judgment, clearly distinguishable from the case at bar. In that case it was held that rolls originally purchased to be put in a mill did not pass upon a conveyance of the mill. At the time of the sale these rolls had for nearly three years remained on the property, unused, and in a rough, unfinished state. They were not necessary to the operation of the mill, for the mill had always run without them. This afforded a ground for saying that it was not intended that the rolls should pass to the purchaser of the mill. That ground does not exist in this case, for the building material in question was necessary for the completion of the building. Woodman v. Pease, 17 N. H. 282, cited by plaintiff, is very similar to Johnson v. McHaffey, 43 Pa. 308, 82 Am. Dec. 568, and is likewise distinguishable from the case at bar. It is true that the court, in deciding each of these cases, stated that personalty does not become a part of real estate until actually annexed thereto. If by this it was intended to assert that, notwithstanding the obvious intent of the parties, property originally personalty, will not, unless actually annexed thereto, pass on a conveyance of real estate, the court made a statement not necessary to its decision,—which might have rested upon the intention of the parties concerned,—and which, as already indicated, I cannot approve. Other cases cited by plaintiff are even more easily distinguishable. In Cook v. Whiting, 16 Ill. 480, it was held that the "simple intention" of the vendor, before he sold his farm, to erect posts into a fence and hewed timber into a granary, without having done anything towards those objects more than to haul said posts and timber onto the farm, "is not sufficient to pass the property in said posts and timber." In Peck v. Batchelder, 40 Vt. 233, 94 Am. Dec. 392, the court gave effect to the obvious intention of the parties in deciding that certain property, viz., detached extra blinds and windows, did not pass with the sale of the house. It was held in Carkin v. Babbitt, 58 N. H. 579, where the controversy arose between the owner and an attaching creditor, that lumber designed for the erection of a house was personalty. The facts in that case were very unlike those in the case at bar. The lumber was "neither in form nor position as it was designed to be permanently used." There was nothing "to distinguish it from ordinary lumber suitable for building purposes." Nor could the court apply in that case the principles applicable to a controversy between mortgagor and mortgagee.

60 L. R. A.

I think, therefore, that the defendants were entitled to a verdict, and that the judgment should be reversed, with costs, and a new trial ordered.

Grant and Montgomery, JJ., concur.

Moore, Ch. J., dissenting.

In 1886, Samuel E. Byrne, father of the plaintiff, was the owner of part of lots 4 "and 5 of block 17 in Marquette, and commenced the erection of a building thereon. He had plans and specifications drawn, specifying each piece of structural iron to go into the building, with the size and length of each piece. He ordered a considerable quantity of structural iron, each piece of which was of the dimensions provided in his plans, and fitted for the place where it was to go. After commencing to lay the foundation, he bought some of the structural iron upon the premises and some on an adjoining lot, where it would be most convenient to put into the building. He also purchased some building stone, which was cut and dressed for the front of the building by the masons hired by him, some of which were on the premises and some on the adjoining lot. He continued the work of building until the following year. A considerable quantity of the structural iron was built into the structure and some of the stone was used. After finishing the basement story, the work was suspended, but Mr. Byrne intended to go on with the work, and the iron and stone were left there for that purpose. Mr. Byrne gave Mr. Thurber a warranty deed of the premises April 20, 1887, and no work was done on the building after that time. The deed was intended to operate as a mortgage, and Byrne expected, notwithstanding the deed, to complete the building. Mr. Byrne had, in 1883, mortgaged the premises to one Michael Hagerty to secure the payment of $2,500, which remained unpaid. He also executed mortgages on the property,—one to Campbell & Wilkinson, February 14, 1885, for $1,100, and one to James Dwyer, July 20, 1887, for $1,400. The Thurber title was sold on execution July 13, 1889, for $2,000. Henry C. Thurber, by warranty deed dated April 23, 1889, acknowledged February 4, 1890, conveyed the premises to Peter White for $4,000. After making this purchase from Thurber, Mr. White purchased all these other mortgages and the execution lien. The several deeds and mortgage above enumerated covered the real estate, and made no mention of building material. The structural iron and stone remained on the premises as they were left at the suspension of building operations. April 15, 1902.

Mr. White, by warranty deed, conveyed the premises to the defendants. The deed, when first drawn, included the building material on the premises, for which this suit was brought; but, at the request of the defendants, it was stricken out of the deed, and a separate bill of sale was given for it. Defendants moved the material out of the way, and proceeded to put up a business building on the premises, using therein a small portion of the material involved in this suit, and disposing of the rest. Samuel E. Byrne executed a bill of sale of the said building material to the plaintiff May, 20, 1896. The plaintiff brought an action of trover for this building material, and recovered judgment. A motion for a new trial was made, which was overruled. The case is brought here by writ of error.

In overruling the motion for a new trial the circuit judge filed a written statement, which states so admirably the questions involved that we produce it here:

"(1) The first reason assigned for the motion is that the court erred in refusing to charge the jury as requested by defendants' counsel in the first request. This request related to the subject of fixtures, and was to the effect that the property which was the subject-matter of this suit passed by virtue of the deed from Samuel E. Byrne, Sr., to Thurber. This deed was in the usual form of a deed of lands. There was evidence tending to show that it was intended by the parties thereto to be a mortgage. But as the rule, when applied to mortgages, is no more favorable to the plaintiff than when applied to a deed, it is not very material here. I refused this request at the trial upon a somewhat hasty examination of such authorities as were at hand. A more careful examination of the authorities has confirmed my position at the trial. The evidence was undisputed that Samuel E. Byrne, Sr., had as early as 1886 or 1887 commenced the erection of a building, and had purchased the structural iron and stone in question to go into the building, and that the same had been prepared for the building, and had been delivered upon or near the premises, with the intention to place the same in the structure. My recollection of the evidence is that work on the building had ceased for want of funds at the time of the deed to Thurber, but of this I am not positive. It certainly had ceased before the deed to White. These were articles to be annexed to the land. 'The question as to the necessity of actual annexation also arises as to articles which have not yet been annexed to the land, but have merely been brought on or near the land with the intention of annexing them. Such articles are, by the weight of authority, perhaps to be considered as still personalty, though the contrary has quite frequently been decided.' 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 601, 602, and cases there cited. It seems to me that it cannot be said that this iron and stone formed or constituted a necessary accessory to the enjoyment of the land, which seems to be the rule laid down by some of the courts as the true test where annexation had not actually taken place. Much of the iron in question never went into the building since erected by the defendants, but was exchanged for that more modern and suitable. The old rule seems to have been that there must be physical annexation, but under some circumstances that rule has been relaxed where the article is shown to be a necessary accessory to the enjoyment of the land. The fact that a place was prepared in which to put an article does not necessarily make the article part of the realty. 1d. pp. 608, 610. Notwithstanding the language of our supreme court in the case of Curtis v. Leasia, 78 Mich., at page 483, 44 N. W. 500, I understand that in a case like the one under consideration the question may be said to be an open one in this state.

"Having ruled as I did upon the trial, and finding upon further examination no reason to change the ruling, I feel like adhering to the ruling, and must refuse a new trial upon this ground. Upon this subject I refer to the following case: The reasoning of Lowrie, Ch. J., speaking for the court, in Johnson v. McHaffey, 43 Pa. 308, 82 Am. Dec. 568, is very satisfactory. The action was replevin for two rolls which had been cast for a certain rolling mill. The mill was sold to the plaintiff, who claimed the rolls. The rolls had been sold on execution as the personal property of the grantor. The rolls had been paid for and delivered at the mill, where they remained for about three years, in a rough and unfinished condition, without having been put into the mill. After stating these facts, the court said: 'These rolls were cast for this rolling mill, and paid for and delivered beside it, and lay there two or three years without being turned or finished off or put into the mill, and then the mill was sold by the sheriff. Do the rolls go with the mill to the purchaser? The test question is, Were they elementary parts of the mill at the time of the sale? And as matter of fact it is quite plain that they were not, for the mill had always run without them. No doubt they were intended to be made part of the mill, but we do not see how we can take the intention, without fact, in order to declare what constitutes the mill. If we do, then the sale of a half-built or half-ruined house would include all the materials provided for its completion or repair. A very provident man is quite sure to have on hand materials which he sees will some time be necessary for repair of his works or for supplying deficiencies in them; but his having them with this intention does not make them constituent parts of his works. Thus, he will provide extra saws for a sawmill, or bolting cloth for a flour mill, or extra castings for the running gear, or lumber, nails, screws, and other materials, to make improvements or repairs; but this prudence does not convert personal into real property, so long as the fact remains that they are not yet made constituent elements of the mill or other structure. That fact we can ascertain and define with reasonable certainty; but we can have no measure for the ever-varying degrees of prudent forethought. And, if mere intention could affix such articles to the realty, then a mere change of intention would unfix them, or prevent their becoming affixed, and we should thus be without any rule at all to guide us. Besides, it is rather a contradiction in terms to say at the same time that they are parts of the structure, and are intended to be made so. That these rolls will fit no other mill does not make them part of this one, or prove them so. Furniture for a dwelling house, shelving and drawers for a store, boilers and flywheel for an engine, the frame for an addition to a house, have often this very peculiarity, and great loss would arise if they should not be applied according to the intention with which they were made; yet they cannot be a part of the real estate without a purpose of annexation actually effectuated, though this peculiarity of adoption may, by inference or corroboration, supply the want or the weakness of direct evidence of annexation, whenever this fact can be reasonably said to be left in doubt by the other evidence.

"(2) It will be borne in mind that defendants' requests upon the subject of abandonment were all given. The second reason for the motion is that the jury disregarded the clear weight of evidence and the charge of the court upon this subject. The jury was charged that abandonment is the relinquishment or surrender of rights or property by one person to another; that it includes both the intention to abandon and the external act by which the intention is carried into effect; that to constitute an abandonment there must be the concurrence of the intention to abandon and the actual relinquishment of the property, so that it may be appropriated by the next comer. In view of the fact that Samuel E. Byrne, Sr., had in 1896 made a bill of sale of this property to the plaintiff, and that both the plaintiff and his vendor testified that they never intended to abandon it, I cannot say that the verdict was against the clear weight of the evidence upon this subject.

"(3) Upon the question of adverse possession or the statute of limitations the jury were charged as requested by defendants' counsel. Now for the first time defendants' counsel take the position that 'the uncontradicted evidence of the case showed continued adverse possession of the property by the defendants and their grantor for more than six years prior to the beginning of the suit.' The evidence showed that the lot and real estate, with a partially constructed wall, had been unoccupied for a long term of years before the defendants commenced the erection of their building in 1902. The premises near the sidewalk were in a somewhat dangerous condition, as they were upon a level with the walk, and Mr. White had placed guards there to prevent persons from going upon the wall, and a small candy store had stood there for a short time. I do not think that there was any evidence that Mr. White had done or performed any act that would indicate that he claimed to own the structural iron and stone that lay loosely scattered about, upon, and near the premises covered by his deed. In fact, all of his acts were more consistent with assertion of ownership of the real estate, than with an open, adverse claim of the ownership of this personal property, until he sold the same by bill of sale to the defendants in 1902. So I cannot agree with defendants' counsel that the verdict was even against the weight of the evidence upon this subject.

"(4) The court, upon its own motion, and without request from defendants' counsel, fully charged the jury upon the subject of estoppel. Defendants' counsel claim that the jury disregarded the evidence in the case and the charge of the court, and that defendants were entitled to a verdict upon that ground." In the light of the testimony of Samuel E. Byrne, Sr., it is not fair to say that the evidence upon this subject was undisputed. A question of fact was raised by the testimony of Mr. White and Mr. Byrne, which was for the jury to consider. Mr. White had testified to the representations claimed to have been made by Byrne that all of the material went with the premises, and that relying upon that, he purchased from Mr. Thurber, in the spring of 1889, and that he and Thurber, walked upon the premises, and that he then took possession of this personal property. It appeared by reference to the deed from Thurber that it was executed in Washington, D. C. some time after its date. There is no doubt that this fact may have influenced the jury. It was unexplained by Mr. White. It also appeared that at the time Mr. Byrne, Sr., had a talk with Mr. White about his getting a deed from Thurber, he, Byrne, contemplated finishing the building. Had the building been completed, this material would, in all probability, have gone into it, and the security or value of the property would have been increased. So there was some force in Mr. Byrne's claim in his testimony that, while he did refer to the material as possessing a value, he did not say that it went with the land. I simply refer to this to show that there was here a question of fact for the jury, and that I cannot say, as matter of law, that the defendants were entitled to a verdict upon the ground of estoppel.

It is said the court erred in admitting the testimony of Byrne as to the gross cost of the structural iron. Mr. Byrne had testified that the structural iron cost him $62 a ton; that it had remained about the same price from then until now, and that he did not think over a fourth was affixed to the structure; that he was positive not more than a third was affixed. He was then asked for its gross purchase price, and the judge said that in connection with his other testimony, where he stated he thinks there has been no change, he would, for that reason only, permit the answer. We think this ruling was not error. See Kendrick v. Beard, 90 Mich. 589, 51 N. W. 645; Johnston v. Farmers' F. Ins. Co. 106 Mich. 96, 64 N. W. 5.

It is said the evidence did not warrant a verdict for the plaintiff, and the court erred in submitting the case to the jury.

(1) Samuel E. Byrne, Sr., was estopped by his words and acts from claiming ownership of the materials as against Mr. White after his purchase from Thurber. (2) If the plaintiff, or his grantor, ever had any right of action, it was barred by lapse of time before this suit was commenced. There is nothing in the record to show the judge was requested to take the case from the jury. Upon the question of estoppel the jury was charged: "I first call your attention to this question of estoppel that is claimed here by the defendants in this case. It seems that at one time this property had been deeded by Mr. Byrne, Sr., to Mr. Thurber, of this city, and subsequently Mr. White obtained the interest that Mr. Thurber had by a deed of conveyance made in 1889, as I remember it. The claim of Mr. White here is that before he made the purchase from Mr. Thurber of the land or any of this property that he had certain conversations with Mr. Byrne, Sr., at a time when Mr. Byrne had not yet parted with this property by his bill of sale to his son, and the claim of Mr. White is that at an interview had between him and Mr. Byrne, at which Mr. Byrne desired him (White) to obtain the interest of Mr. Thurber, that Mr. White expressed the belief that the property was not worth the amount he would have to pay Mr. Thurber, together with the mortgages that were upon the property,—referring to the Campbell & Wilkinson mortgage, the Dwyer mortgage, and the Hagerty mortgage; and Mr. White claims before you in his testimony that Mr. Byrne said to him: 'There is a great deal there you don't see, that you don't count. There is material enough to almost finish the building. It all goes with it.' And Mr. White claims that in many talks had with Mr. Byrne before he (White) became interested by purchasing from Mr. Thurber, Mr. Byrne said to him that the property would all pass if he dealt with Thurber, and belonged to the property, and would go into and with the lot or the building. Now, gentlemen, the first question that arises is, Was this statement made by Mr. Byrne to Mr. White? While the court advises you that this personal property, consisting of this structural iron and stone, would not pass by a deed of the realty simply to Mr. Thurber, whether that was a mortgage or a deed, it would not pass by virtue of the instrument, it would have been perfectly competent for Mr. Byrne by an oral arrangement—by a verbal agreement—with Mr. Thurber at that time to have passed over and conveyed to him this personal property. And if, before Mr. White purchased this real estate of Thurber, and took, as he claims, Mr. Thurber's interest in this personal property,—for I understand that it is claimed that accompanying this transaction of the deed from Thurber, he took, by virtue of a verbal arrangement with Thurber, the right to receive this personal property, and claims that it was pointed out to him and delivered to him by Mr. Thurber; and it is for you to weigh this evidence and say whether Mr. White is correct or not; that being his claim,—I say that, if Mr. Byrne gave him to understand by any conversations with him that Mr. Thurber owned not only the real estate, but also owned the personal property there; that it belonged to him, would pass to him (White) if he dealt with Thurber,—then Mr. Byrne is estopped, and his vendee, his son, is estopped from claiming any interest in this property. For a man cannot stand by, or cannot induce another to purchase property in which he claims an interest, if he gives such purchaser to understand that he will get a good title if he deals with somebody else with reference to it. He is estopped from asserting any such claim. If you stand by while I am purchasing a horse of your neighbor, and say that your neighbor owns that horse, and, if I buy him, I will get a good title, and I purchase the horse and pay my money for it, you are estopped—your mouth is closed—from ever afterwards claiming that you owned the horse at that time; because you have by your conduct and language induced me to part with my money, and it is inequitable and unjust for you to make a claim inconsistent with that. The doctrine is a familiar one in the books. When a person by his words or conduct voluntarily causes another to believe in the existence of a certain state of things, and thereby induces him to act upon that belief, so as to change his previous condition, the person inducing such belief will be estopped from afterwards denying the existence of such state of things to the prejudice of the person so acting. In other words, if a person knowingly and voluntarily so conducts himself in relation to his business as to justify persons dealing with him in supposing and believing that a certain state of facts exists, and such person so dealing with him relies upon that inference and belief, the person so conducting himself will not afterwards be permitted to deny that such state of facts did exist, to the prejudice of the person acting upon such belief. You will remember that in the conduct of the trial yesterday, and while Mr. White was upon the stand, the court asked him this question: 'You may state whether the fact that Mr. Byrne, Sr., stated to you that this material was to go with the building, and the other conversations you have referred to, had any influence upon you in purchasing the property.' And you remember that Mr. White claimed and said in answer to that: 'Most decidedly. I wouldn't have touched it—I wouldn't have paid him $4,000—without the complete understanding that all the material there belonged to or went with the building. Mr. Byrne's own argument was that it was ample to cover the $4,000.' I do not wish to emphasize this language by calling your attention to that; more than to call your attention to the point involved. You will weigh the testimony of Mr. Byrne upon the opposite side of the question, in which he denies that he said to Mr. White that it would go with the building, or with the transaction or trade with Thurber. Now, who is right about this, gentleman? If you shall say that Mr. Byrne used this language, it having been 60 L. R. A.

perfectly competent and proper for Mr. Byrne to have conveyed this property by oral arrangement to Mr. Thurber, if you shall say that he did do that, or, even if he didn't do that at all, but gave Mr. White to understand by language that a reasonable man would believe and be induced to act upon, that he had so conveyed it over to him, by a verbal or other arrangement, so that if he (White) did deal with Thurber he obtained the interest in this personal property,—then I say Mr. Byrne is estopped from claiming this property; and his son, who afterwards became the alleged owner of it by virtue of a bill of sale, could take no greater title than his father had; and, if his father had parted with his title to that property, then he could convey no interest in it. So much for this doctrine or claim of estoppel on the part of the defendants." Mr. Byrne denied most emphatically Mr. White's testimony as to Byrne's telling him the title to the iron and stone passed to Thurber by the deed. In Maxwell v. Bay City Bridge Co. 41 Mich. 453, 2 N. W. 639, the court said: "The doctrine of estoppel rests upon a party having directly or indirectly made assertions, promises, or assurances upon which another has acted under such circumstances that he would be seriously prejudiced if the assertions were suffered to be disproved or the promises or assurances to be withdrawn. But as the doctrine, when applied, operates to take away legal rights, it is no more than common justice to require that the facts which are supposed to call for its application shall be unquestionable, and the wrong which is to be prevented shall be undoubted. Fredenburg v. Lyon Lake M. E. Church, 37 Mich. 476; Cronin v. Gore, 38 Mich. 381. Moreover, the question of its application in any case is a mixed question of law and fact, and in cases of jury trial must be submitted to the jury under proper instructions. Now, however clear the facts in support of the estoppel may seem to be, it is always possible that there may be qualifying or overruling facts; and the conclusions from the evidence must be drawn by the jury, not by the court."

In relation to the claim of plaintiff being barred by lapse of time, we think it sufficient to refer to what was said by the learned trial judge in overruling the motion for a new trial.

We now come to the most difficult question in the case; that is, whether, as claimed by defendants, the court erred in the instruction given to the jury that the structural iron and stone did not become a part of the realty, and refusing the request of defendants, counsel on that subject. It must be confessed there is a good deal of conflict in the authorities. They are collated at length in 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed., at pages 601-610, and in the notes thereto. We are impressed with the reasoning of Chief Justice Lowrie in Johnson v. Mehaffey, 43 Pa. 308, 82 Am. Dec. 568, from whose opinion Judge Stone quoted so copiously. There is an expression used in Curtis v. Leasia, by Justice Sherwood, that tends to support the claim of defendants, but it is obiter dictum. The court held in the case that the rails which were claimed to be realty were not realty, but were personal property. See Harris v. Scovel, 85 Mich. 32, 48 N. W. 173. In this case it appears the defendants made new plans for a building, which rendered the structural iron and the dressed stone unfitted for use therein. Was this material up to that time real estate, and from that time on personal property? If so, would the same result have followed had Mr. Byrne changed the plan of the building while he owned the property?

We are inclined to agree with the trial judge as to the weight of authority, and that the judgment should be affirmed.

Hooker, J., concurred with the Chief Justice.

Petition for rehearing denied January 30, 1905.

MARYLAND COURT OF APPEALS.

AMERICAN TOBACCO COMPANY, Appt.,
v.

Jessie May STRICKLING.

(88 Md. 500.)

1. The failure to box or otherwise protect a rapidly revolving upright shaft coming up through the floor in an alley or passageway where an inexperienced girl is required to sweep, and who is not warned of the danger, may be found by the jury to constitute negligence which will render the employer liable for injuries to her when her clothing is caught and wound upon the shaft.
2. Sundays cannot be excluded in computing the time for signing of bills of exception under Code Pub. Loc. Laws, art. 4, § 170, allowing it to be done "at any time within thirty days" after verdict or finding of fact.

(December 20, 1898.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Appeal dismissed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Carroll T. Bond and William L. Marbury, for appellant:

It is not the duty of an employer to provide against all possible injuries to his employees, but only against such as are "likely to occur" in case of his failure to take certain precautions, or, in other words, such as would probably result therefrom.

Bailey, Personal Injuries Relating to Master & Servant, pp. 18, 19, and cases cited.

By thirty days is meant thirty working days, or thirty judicial days.

The right of appeal being a valuable one, itself expressly conferred by statute, and allowed to be exercised at any time within sixty days from the entry of the judgment, any statute operating as a practical forfeiture of that right will be construed as liberally as possible to prevent its working such a forfeiture.

Murphy v. McGuire (Md.) 20 Atl. 726.

In the case at bar three Sundays intervened, so that, under a literal interpretation of this statute, the appellant would have had only twenty-seven, instead of thirty, days in which to do the necessary work, about the most tedious vexatious, and responsible that a trial lawyer is called upon to perform.

A statute will be construed liberally, so far as it reasonably may, to effectuate the suppression of the mischief it is intended to remedy.

State v. Harris, 121 Mo. 445, 26 S. W. 558; McChesney v. People, 145 Ill. 614, 34 N. E. 431.

The statute expressly says that the bill of exceptions "may be signed at any time within thirty days from the rendition of the verdict;" that is to say, on any one of those thirty days. Surely the legislature will not be considered to have intended to au- a Sunday,—to give express legislative recognition to Sunday as "a day appropriate to business of this character." The only construction which can prevent this result, a result certainly not intended by the legislature, is the construction which excludes Sundays—all Sundays—in the computation of the thirty days.

NOTE.—As to the duty of a master to warn his servants of danger, see note to James v. Rapides Lumber Co. 44 L. R. A. 33.

As to exclusion of Sunday in computation of time, see note to Brown v. Valles, 14 L. R. A. 120.

69 L. R. A.

Sunday is not a day for the transaction of judicial business.

Bass v. Irvin, 49 Ga. 436; Neal v. Crew, 12 Ga. 93; Cheeseborough v. Van Ness, 12 Ga. 380; Ecker v. First Nat. Bank, 64 Md. 292, 1 Atl. 849; Blaney v. State, 74 Md. 157, 21 Atl. 547; Shepard v. Hull, 42 Me. 577; Conrow v. Schloss, 55 Pa. 28; Drexel v. Mann, 6 Watts & S. 397, 40 Am. Dec. 573; Marsh v. Hand, 35 Md. 123.

The fact, if fact it were, that the signing of a bill of exceptions on Sunday would not be a void act irrespective of this statute, affords no reason whatever for the presumption that this statute was intended to encourage or promote the doing of such secular work on the Sabbath.

Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Turner, 81 Ky. 599; Lewis v. Schwenn, 15 Mo. App. 342; National Bank v. Williams, 46 Mo. 19; Michie v. Michie, 17 Gratt. 109; Burton v. Chicago, 53 Ill. 87; Carothers v. Wheeler, 1 Or. 194; Meng v. Winkelman, 43 Wis. 41; Neal v. Crew, 12 Ga. 93; Kellogg v. Carrico, 47 Mo. 157; Johnson v. Dorsey, 7 Gill. 269; Leffler v. Armstrong, 4 Iowa, 482, 68 Am. Dec. 672; Marks v. Russell, 40 Pa. 372; Simmonson v. Durfee, 50 Mich. 80, 14 N. W. 706; Comingsby's Case, 8 Mod. 46; Lee v. Carlton, 3 T. R. 642.

The question is, What was the probable intention of the legislature?

Thayer v. Felt, 4 Pick. 354.

The intention of the legislature to exclude Sundays from the thirty days allowed for the signing of bills of exceptions is manifest.

Messrs. Thomas G. Hayes, Daniel B. Chambers and James A. Fechtig, Jr., for appellee:

The appellant owed a duty to the female appellee to provide a reasonably safe place for her to perform the work for which she was employed.

Norman v. Wabash R. Co. 10 C. C. A. 617, 22 U. S. App. 505, 62 Fed. 727; Gowen v. Bush, 22 C. C. A. 196, 40 U. S. App. 349, 76 Fed. 349; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 37 L. ed. 772, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 914.

The vertical shaft in question, under the circumstances and conditions shown in the case at bar, was dangerous machinery, and its danger was hidden and unknown to the female appellee, and to all other persons except those persons experienced in machinery; and it was the duty of the appellant, which it owed to the female appellee, before permitting her to sweep around said shaft, or come in proximity to it, either to have warned her of the hidden danger, or to have guarded it by boxing or otherwise; neither of which things the appellant did.

Pullman's Palace-Car Co. v. Harkins, 5 C. C. A. 328, 17 U. S. App. 22, 55 Fed. 932; Fairbank v. Haentzsch, 73 Ill. 236; Osage City v. Larkin, 40 Kan. 206, 2 L. R. A. 56, 10 Am. St. Rep. 186, 19 Pac. 658; Kinchlow v. Midland Elevator Co. 57 Kan. 375, 46 Pac. 703; Caswell v. Worth, 5 El. & Bl. 849; Doel v. Sheppard, 5 El. & Bl. 856; Bolch v. Smith, 7 Hurlst. & N. 736.

The appellant could or ought to have known, if it did not know, by the exercise of ordinary care, of the hidden danger attendant upon the sweeping by the female appellee in proximity to the shaft in question. The fact is that the appellant had actual notice of the danger of such unguarded shafting.

Wood v. Heiges, 83 Md. 257, 34 Atl. 872; Baltimore v. Whittington, 78 Md. 231, 27 Atl. 984.

General custom or usage to guard, or not to guard, smooth shafting is an immaterial inquiry, and is not admissible in evidence in this case.

Wood v. Heiges, 83 Md. 257, 34 Atl. 872; Reed v. Stockmeyer, 20 C. C. A. 381, 34 U. S. App. 727, 74 Fed. 186; Ryan v. Los Angeles Ice & Cold Storage Co. 112 Cal. 244, 32 L. R. A. 524, 44 Pac. 471; Jones v. Florence Min. Co. 66 Wis. 277, 57 Am. Rep. 269, 28 N. W. 207.

The question under the inquiry as to general usage or customs of others is, What would a reasonably prudent employer do under similar circumstances and conditions?

Bertha Zino Co. v. Martin, 93 Va. 791, 22 S. E. 869; Titus v. Bradford, B. & K. R. Co. 136 Pa. 618, 20 Am. St. Rep. 944, 20 Atl. 517.

The injury which happened to the female appellee was most reasonable and probable under the circumstances and conditions of the case.

Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 469, 24 L. ed. 256; Greenland v. Chaplin, 5 Exch. 248; Ryan v. Los Angeles Ice & Cold Storage Co. 112 Cal. 244, 32 L. R. A. 524, 44 Pac. 471; Lane v. Atlantic Works, 111 Mass. 139.

Where an act is required to be done in any certain number of days after or before a fixed time, Sunday is to be included in computing the number of days when it exceeds seven.

26 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 10.

There is no reason, as might be the case in other statutes, for excluding Sunday, for Sunday, as to the ministerial act of signing a bill of exceptions, is not a dies non.

Blaney v. State, 74 Md. 153, 21 Atl. 547; Marsh v. Hand, 35 Md. 123.

In the computation of statutory time Sunday is always to be reckoned.

Harris, Sunday Laws, §§ 37, 54; Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 115; Cunningham v. Mahan, 112 Mass. 58; Brown v. Johnson, 10 Mees. & W. 331; Ex parte Dodge, 7 Cow. 147; King v. Dordall, 2 Sandf. 131; Neal v. Crew, 12 Ga. 93; Adams v. Dohrmann, 63 Cal. 417.

Though some of the cases hold that where Sunday is the last day it is to be excluded, yet some go so far as to say that, even if it is the last, it should be counted.

Brown v. Vailes, 16 Colo. 462, 14 L. R. A. 120, 27 Pac. 945; Cooley v. Cook, 125 Mass. 406.

A few of the cases, especially those in Massachusetts, draw the distinction between long and short time; holding that, when the period is less than a week, Sunday is not to be counted when an intervening day, but, when longer than a week, it must be counted.

Cunningham v. Mahan, 112 Mass. 58; Caulfield v. Cook, 92 Mich. 626, 52 N. W. 1031.

Generally the cases bear out the contention that Sunday must be computed.

Peacock v. Queen, 4 C. B. N. S. 264; Cressey v. Parks, 75 Me. 387, 46 Am. Rep. 406; Haley v. Young, 134 Mass. 366; English v. Dickey, 128 Ind. 174, 13 L. R. A. 40, 27 N. E. 495; Cattell v. Despatch Pub. Co. 88 Mo. 356; State v. Green, 66 Mo. 631; Franklin v. Holden, 7 R. I. 215; Hanover F. Ins. Co. v. Shrader, 89 Tex. 35, 30 L. R. A. 498, 50 Am. St. Rep. 25, 32 S. W. 872, 33 S. W. 112; Taylor v. Palmer, 31 Cal. 241; Edelhoff v. Horner-Miller Mfg. Co. 86 Md. 595, 39 Atl. 314.

Boyd, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellee, Jessie May Strickling, was employed by the American Tobacco Company, the appellant, in one of its factories in Baltimore, and whilst engaged in her regular work was seriously injured by reason, as she claims, of the negligence of the company. When she first went into the company's employ, in January, 1897, she worked on a sieve,—putting tobacco in a sieve,—but her employment was subsequently changed to sweeping the floors of the factory and she was so engaged in May, 1897, when she was injured. Amongst other places, she was required to sweep, was a room in which there was a smooth, revolving, vertical shaft, which ran from the floor to the ceiling, and which was in an aisle or passageway between the wall and a stationary machine, being about 26 inches from the former and 16 inches from the latter. The shaft is 3 inches in diameter, and at the time of the accident it made about 170 revolutions a minute. It was the duty of the plaintiff to sweep around this shaft as well as other places where the dust collected on the floor, and in doing so on the morning of the accident her apron was caught in some way and drawn around the shaft. She was whirled around, and, violently striking such objects as were in her way, probably the wall and machinery, had her clothing torn from her, and received injuries which confined her in a hospital for nine weeks. The shaft was not boxed, or otherwise protected, and it is not pretended that the plaintiff, who was seventeen years of age and altogether inexperienced in the use of machinery, was ever warned as to any danger from it. She sued the company, and recovered a judgment for $6,000, and, a motion for a new trial having been overruled, an appeal was taken to this court. A motion to dismiss the appeal has been made on the ground that the bill of exceptions was not signed within the time allowed by the statute. That motion must prevail for the reasons hereinafter given; but, as the case was fully argued and we understood counsel to say that a case was pending in which the father of the plaintiff was suing the defendant for loss of services of his daughter as the result of this accident, we will first pass upon the merits of the case.

Cases between master and servant have been so numerous in this state, as well as elsewhere, that it is generally difficult to discuss one of that class without simply repeating what has been already said and announced as the law applicable to them. The precise question whether a master can be held liable for leaving unprotected and unguarded a smooth shaft in a place where one inexperienced in machinery and shafting will be called in the line of her duty, without warning to her, has not been before, this court, but the principles applicable to it have been frequently stated. We are not called upon to discuss some of the questions that frequently arise in cases of this character, as it is not pretended there was any contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff, nor can it be said that the danger was so obvious or apparent to her as in anywise to interfere with her right of recovery. On the contrary, the evidence not only shows that she was inexperienced and knew of no danger lurking in that rapidly revolving shaft, but the appellant bases its defense mainly on the fact that its agents did not, and could not by the use of reasonable care, have known that there was any danger in leaving the shaft unprotected.

In referring to the law of the case, we may very properly begin with the proposition stated in the plaintiff's first prayer, that it was the duty of the defendant to exercise ordinary care to provide a reasonably safe place in which the plaintiff might perform the services which she was employed to perform for the defendant. In the case of Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 37 L. ed. 772, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 914, the Supreme Court of the United States thus announced that principle: "A master employing a servant impliedly engages with him that the place in which he is to work, and the tools or machinery with which he is to work, or by which he is to be surrounded, shall be reasonably safe. It is the master who is to provide the place and the tools and machinery, and when he employs one to enter into his service he impliedly says to him that there is no other danger in the place, the tools, and the machinery than such as is obvious and necessary." It is true, however, and the court below so instructed the jury, that the law does not require persons owning and operating factories containing machinery to guard against every accident that may possibly happen to their employees, but only against such as in the ordinary experience of persons using machinery are known to be likely to occur.

The plaintiff's third prayer is the one that is most objected to. It submitted to the finding of the jury the employment and experience of the plaintiff, the location and construction of the shaft, whether it was dangerous to female employees required to come in close proximity to it, whether the defendant knew, or might have known, by the exercise of ordinary care, of such danger as probable, whether such danger was obvious and apparent to a person ignorant of and inexperienced in the operation of such shafts, whether the plaintiff was warned of its danger, and whether the defendant was guilty of the want of ordinary care in constructing and putting the shaft in motion when the plaintiff was sweeping the room, as well as the question of care on the part of the plaintiff.

It is contended by the appellant that there was nothing which required the defendant to anticipate an accident of this sort as likely to occur from a failure to guard this piece of smooth shaft, and that the defendant neither knew, nor could have known by the exercise of ordinary care, of the hidden danger to the plaintiff or others. But the record, we think, fully justified the court in submitting those questions to the jury. A number of expert witnesses testified, and those on the part of the plaintiff not only said there was danger from leaving a shaft of this kind unprotected, but they gave instances of accidents from coming in contact with shafting, which had happened in their own experience or observation.

G. B. Ahler, who had been a machinist for over twenty years, said a person approaching shafting like this, especially a girl or a woman, is liable to be caught and be wound up by it, and that he always instructed owners of buildings where he erected machinery to box up the shafting. James O. Towson, who had been a machinist since 1875, said: "I consider a vertical shaft to be dangerous if it is not enclosed; and it has always been my custom, when it has been found absolutely necessary to place a vertical shaft, to advise the additional expense of enclosing it." Charles R. Spencer testified to the same effect, and said a vertical shaft was more dangerous than a horizontal one. W. T. Howard, a mechanical engineer, and Benjamin Chambers, a machinist for over thirty years, also spoke of the dangers of such shafting. Mr. Chambers explained very fully and clearly such dangers. He said there was a tendency to create a vacuum about the surface, and that induces the surrounding atmosphere to rush toward the shaft to fill the vacuum created, and thus draw articles of light material around the shaft. In answer to the question about the danger to a female sweeping near it, he said: "The very act of sweeping itself would necessitate a movement, moderately rapid, of her body and of her garments, in passing and sweeping there. It would be moderately rapid, because that would be necessary to an industrious worker, and, on nearing that shaft there would be imminent danger that she would be wrapped about it." Again he said: "All shafts are dangerous; but I regard a vertical shaft, passing up through the floor unprotected, as the most dangerous character of shaft." That witness also said that, "where shafting stands vertically the method is to take some lumber and make about 7 feet high two half barrels, as it were, or two pieces, which, when put together, form a circle, and that is put around the shaft and hooked together, and that can be readily removed for the purpose of oiling, etc."

Thus the witnesses of the plaintiff not only testified as to the danger of such shafting, but their evidence, if accepted by the jury as correct, was sufficient to justify them in believing that the defendant knew, or ought by the exercise of reasonable care to have known, that it was not safe to thus leave it unprotected when the duties of the plaintiff (and possibly other inexperienced persons) required her to come in close proximity to it in the discharge of her duties. The superintendent of the factory, in answer to the question: "Had you ever known of anybody being injured by a smooth piece of shafting of that kind prior to this accident?" replied: "Only from knowledge gleaned from the daily press"—thus admitting that he had knowledge from that public source that accidents did happen as the result of coming in contact with smooth shafting.

Of course it would not be necessary, under all circumstances, to cover shafting. It may be so situated as to be safe, and at least beyond the reach of inexperienced persons; but, when shafting is so easily protected as described by some of the witnesses, and when it is so situated that those inexperienced with its danger may be brought in contact with it in the discharge of their duties, there can be no reason why in a case of this kind the question whether the owner of the factory was guilty of the want of ordinary care, and whether it was an accident likely to occur, should not be submitted to the jury.

In Pullman's Palace-Car Co. v. Harkins, 5 C. C. A. 326, 17 U. S. App. 22, 55 Fed. 932, this very question was considered. The court said: "Revolving shafting, it appears, is attended with peculiar and latent danger. It seizes with fatal result the clothing of any person who unconsciously or incautiously comes in contact with it;" and again it said that the evidence justified the statement of the judge below that "all the witnesses agree in the opinion that shafting when in motion is very dangerous, and that it should be boxed, or covered, or protected in some manner when in a place where persons are liable to come into contact with it." See also Fairbank v. Haentzsch, 73 Ill. 236; Kinchlow v. Midland Elevator Co. 57 Kan. 375, 46 Pac. 703.

Thus, we have in this case not only the fact that an accident did happen by the plaintiff coming in contact with smooth revolving shaft and the evidence of a number of witnesses that such accidents are likely to happen if the shafting is not guarded, and the admission of the superintendent of the factory that he had seen notices of them in the public press; but we find the question has already been before the courts. The prayers, as granted, correctly announce the law, and we will not discuss them further, but would affirm the judgment if it was properly before us, as there was no other exception taken.

The verdict was rendered on the 4th day of April, 1898, and nothing was done in reference to the bill of exceptions until May 5th, 1898, when an order was passed extending the time for signing and filing it. Section 170 of article 4 of the Code of Public Local Laws provides that "bills of exception may be signed in any cause pending in any of said courts at any time within thirty days from the rendition of the verdict of the jury or the findings of the court upon the issues of fact in said cause, but not thereafter unless the time for signing said bill of exception shall have been previously extended by order of court, or by consent of parties," etc. There was no consent of the parties, and the order extending the time of signing was passed after the expiration of thirty days from the rendition of the verdict, if Sundays be included. It is contended, however, that Sundays should be excluded, and that the statute means thirty working or judicial days. But with that contention we cannot agree. If there had been error in the rulings of the court below, it might have seemed a hardship that the appellant should have lost its right of appeal by being one day too late; but neither this court nor the court below can disregard the plain language of the statute, and we have had occasion to speak more than once of the importance and necessity of having bills of exception signed promptly. Westminster v. Shipley, 68 Md. 610, 13 Atl. 365; Palmer v. Hughes, 84 Md. 652, 36 Atl. 431.

"As a general rule, where an act is required to be done in any certain number of days after or before a fixed time, Sunday is to be included in computing the number of days, when it exceeds seven. If it is less than seven, Sunday must be excluded." 26 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 10, and cases cited. Of course that rule will not apply when Sundays are expressly excluded by the statute, or the intention of the legislature to exclude them is manifest. The rule may be said to be somewhat arbitrary, yet it is not without a reason. When the legislature fixes a limitation of time of more than seven days, it knows that the period must necessarily include one or more Sundays, and hence, if it intends to exclude them, it can and should say so; but, when the period of time is less than seven days, it may or may not include a Sunday, depending upon the day of the week it is computed from. It is said in Hanover F. Ins. Co. v. Shrader, 89 Tex. 35, 30 L. R. A. 498, 5 Am. St. Rep. 25, 32 S. W. 872, 33 S. W. 112, "the principle would seem to be that when but a few days are allowed in which to do the act, it is not to be presumed the legislature intended further to abbreviate it, in effect by including a day ordinarily observed as a day of cessation from all ordinary business. For example, where two days are designated it is not reasonable to hold that it was the purpose to include a Sunday when the practical effect of the ruling would be to reduce the time to one day only. But, when weeks are included in the time allowed, the reason does not apply." In State v. Harris, 121 Mo. 445, 26 S. W. 558, cited by the appellant, this distinction is recognized. There it was held that Sunday would be excluded in the computation of the four days within which motions for new trials can be made; but in the same case, where sixty days from August 9th had been allowed within which to sign a bill of exceptions, it was said that October 9th was too late, thus, in effect, holding that Sundays must be included. See also State v. Seaton, 106 Mo. 198, 17 S. W. 169; Cunningham v. Mahan, 112 Mass. 58; Caulfield v. Cook, 92 Mich. 626, 52 N. W. 1031; Hanover F. Ins. Co. v. Schrader, 89 Tex. 35, 30 L. R. A. 498, 59 Am. St. Rep. 25, 32 S. W. 872, 33 S. W. 112.

There are but few exceptions to the general rule laid down above. There are cases which may seem to be, but a careful examination of the most of them will show that, when Sundays are excluded from the computation of time of more than a week, it is because of the language of the statute, or because the days referred to are such as the courts find exclude Sundays. We were cited to the case of Matthews v. State, 92 Ala. 89, 9 So. 740, to show that the constitutional limit of the sessions of the legislature in that state to fifty days excluded Sundays. But we do not understand that to have been the construction that has always been put on our constitutional provision that the general assembly may continue its sessions for a period not longer than ninety days. There are many instances in our statutes where the practice has always been to include Sundays. Take, for example, § 8 of article 66 of the Code, which provides for twenty days' notice of the time, place, and terms of sale under powers of sale contained in mortgages. If Sundays are to be excluded, many sales have been made without legal notice, as it has not been the practice to exclude them. Section 6 of article 5 provides for appeals from orders or decrees of the orphans' courts within thirty days, and so § 7 of that article allows thirty days for appeals under the insolvent laws. In none of those cases has it been the practice, so far as we are aware, to exclude Sundays in the computation of the time fixed by the respective statutes, and other instances might be given.

Nor do we think the language of the statute, "at any time within thirty days," etc., can make any difference. That simply means at any time within the thirty days that the court can act; and whether or not a bill of exceptions can be signed on Sunday is not relevant to the question in this case.

It will not be out of place, and may prevent further trouble, to add that if the thirty days expire on Sunday, it should still be counted, and the next day should not be 69 L. R. A.

allowed, as we can see no valid reason for excluding the last Sunday and including the others. The general rule, subject to but few exceptions, is that statutory time of over seven days cannot be extended because the last day falls on Sunday. 2 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 256; Brown v. Vailes, 16 Colo. 462, 14 L. R. A. 120, 27 Pac. 945; Cooley v. Cook, 125 Mass. 406; Ex parte Dodge, 7 Cow. 147; Johnson v. Meyers, 4 C. C. A. 399, 12 U. S. App. 220, 54 Fed. 417.

As neither the bill of exceptions, nor the order extending the time, was signed within thirty days from the rendition of the verdict, the motion to dismiss the appeal must prevail.

Frank A. BONSAI, Appt.,

v.

George W. YELLOTT et al., Commissioners of Baltimore County, etc.

(.....Md.....)

Appropriations to aid counties in the construction of public roads are not forbidden by a constitutional provision that the general assembly shall not have power to involve the state in the construction of works of internal improvement, nor to grant any aid thereto, which shall involve the faith or credit of the state, nor make any appropriation therefor.

(March 22, 1905.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a decree of the Circuit Court for Baltimore County in favor of defendants in a suit to enjoin the expenditure of public funds for the improvement of highways. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. William S. Bryan, Jr., and Redmond C. Stewart, for appellant:

The language of the prohibition is clear and unequivocal, and includes all internal improvements.

There is nothing in the constitutional debates of 1851 to show that the words "internal improvements" were used in any limited sense.

Bandel v. Isaac, 13 Md. 202.

In construing the Constitution, as in construing every other written paper, we should give the instrument the meaning which the framers of it intended, and not the meaning which we may now think it would have been wiser or better for them to have intended.

Queensberry Case, 1 Blight, 479; Jones v. Smart, 1 T. R. 51.

NOTE.—For other cases in this series as to constitutional provisions against state engaging in works of internal improvement, see Rippe v. Becker, 22 L. R. A. 857; Oren v. Pingree, 46 L. R. A. 407; and State ex rel. Jones v. Froehlich, 58 L. R. A. 757.

Messrs. John J. Donaldson and Osborne I. Yellott, for appellees:

All powers of legislation are taken to exist, except where prohibited, in express terms or by necessary implication, in the Constitution of the state.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 102-109, 200, 201; People ex rel. Wood v. Draper, 15 N. Y. 532; Thorpe v. Rutland & B. R. Co. 27 Vt. 140, 62 Am. Dec. 625; Whittington v. Polk, 1 Harr. & J. 236; Davis v. Helbig, 27 Md. 452, 92 Am. Dec. 646; Dorchester County v. Meekins, 50 Md. 28.

To justify the courts in setting aside enactments of the co-ordinate legislative department of the state government there must be a plain, and not a doubtful, violation of the organic law.

Drennen v. Banks, 80 Md. 310, 30 Atl. 655; Davis v. Helbig, 27 Md. 452, 92 Am. Dec. 646; Dorchester County v. Meekins, 50 Md. 28.

In construing the Constitution the courts must consider the circumstances attending its adoption, and what appear to have been the understanding and purpose of those who adopted it.

Bandel v. Isaac, 13 Md. 202; State v. Mace, 5 Md. 337; Manly v. State, 7 Md. 135; Buckingham v. Davis, 9 Md. 324; Jackson v. State, 87 Md. 191, 39 Atl. 504.

It must be construed, also, with reference to the previous legislation of the state.

Baltimore v. State, 15 Md. 376, 74 Am. Dec. 572; Manly v. State, 7 Md. 135.

In like manner, a contemporaneous and continued construction is of the greatest weight, and should not be shaken except upon the ground of manifest error and urgent necessity.

State v. Mayhew, 2 Gill, 487; Catholic Cathedral Church v. Manning, 72 Md. 116, 19 Atl. 599; Harrison v. State, 22 Md. 468, 85 Am. Dec. 658.

Such powers and duties as local authorities have had in Maryland, from the first settlement till to-day, in dealing with the public roads, including their construction and maintenance, the levy and appropriation of taxes for the purpose, they had solely by delegation from the general assembly.

Hagerstown v. Schner, 37 Md. 180; Baltimore v. State, 15 Md. 376, 74 Am. Dec. 572; Horn v. Baltimore, 30 Md. 218; Groff v. Frederick City, 44 Md. 67; Frederick v. Groshon, 30 Md. 436, 96 Am. Dec. 591; Talbot County v. Queen Anne's County, 50 Md. 245; Pumphrey v. Baltimore, 47 Md. 145, 28 Am. Rep. 446; Daly v. Morgan, 69 Md. 460, 1 L. R. A. 757, 16 Atl. 287; Baltimore v. Reitz, 50 Md. 574.

The taxing power belongs to the legislature, and it will not be held to have been conferred on a municipal corporation except 69 L. R. A.

by express language or necessary implication.

State v. Rowe, 72 Md. 548, 20 Atl. 179.

The general words must be restricted to subjects of the same genus as those specifically named.

Maxwell, Interpretation of Statutes, 55, 297; Roberts v. Gibson, 6 Harr. & J. 116.

Boyd, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellant filed a bill in equity against the appellees, in which he sought to enjoin them from expending any of the public funds under their control for plans and specifications for the construction of any road under the provisions of Acts 1904, p. 388, chap. 225, and from making any other expenditure of such public funds under color of the provisions of that act. The appellant is a resident and taxpayer of Baltimore county, and the appellees are the county commissioners, sitting as the highways commission of said county. The act of 1904 is entitled "An Act for the Improvement of the Public Highways of the State and to Provide the Means Therefor, and to Require the Commission Created by an Act of the General Assembly of 1896, chap. 51, to Perform Certain Additional Duties." By it, it is proposed to furnish state aid for the construction of roads which may be macadamized, or of a telford or other stone, or constructed of gravel or other good material, "in such a manner that the same will be, with reasonable repairs thereto, at all seasons of the year firm, smooth, and convenient for travel." It appropriates the sum of $200,000 annually, or, so much thereof as may be necessary, out of the state treasury, and provides that the state shall pay not exceeding one half of the total cost and expenses of the roads built according to its provisions. The counties are to pay the other half, and no county is to receive a larger share of the amount appropriated than the proportion the public-road mileage of the county bears to the total public-road mileage of all the counties in the state applying, as determined by the commission. Any road constructed under the act is to be thereafter a county road, and the duty of keeping it in regular order devolves upon the county. The commission provided for by the act of 1896, and referred to in this act, is composed of the governor, the comptroller, the president of Johns Hopkins University, and the president of the Maryland Agricultural College, and it has various duties to perform under the provisions of the statute.

The question is whether this act is in conflict with that part of § 34 of article 3 of the Constitution of the state which is as follows: "The credit of the state shall not in any manner be given or loaned to, or in aid of, any individual association or corporation; nor shall the general assembly have the power in any mode to involve the state in the construction of works of internal improvement, nor in granting any aid thereto, which shall involve the faith or credit of the state; nor make any appropriation therefor, except in aid of the construction of works of internal improvements in the counties of St. Mary's, Charles, and Calvert, which have had no direct advantage from such works as have been heretofore aided by the state; and provided that such aid, advances, or appropriations shall not exceed in the aggregate the sum of $500,000." The first provision of this character that was adopted in this state was in § 22 of article 3 of the Constitution of 1851. It was similar to that in the present Constitution, excepting, instead of using the expression "nor in granting any aid thereto, which shall involve the faith or credit of the state," it said, "or in any enterprise which shall involve the faith or credit of the state," and no exception was made in favor of the three counties named. The Constitution of 1864 followed the language of that of 1851.

Inasmuch, then, as the provision in controversy was first introduced in the Constitution of 1851, and was continued in that of 1864, and, with such changes as we have noted, in that of 1867, it will be proper to consider the circumstances under which it was first adopted, the object of its adoption, and the construction that has been placed on it by the legislature, the framers of the several Constitutions, and by the people. Questions of this character cannot be determined by simply ascertaining the etymology of the terms used. Public roads may be, and unquestionably generally are, "internal improvements;" but when the general assembly has been prohibited for more than half a century from in any mode involving the state in "the construction of works of internal improvement, or granting any aid thereto, which will involve the faith or credit of the state, or making any appropriation therefor," the question is not whether that term can include "public roads," but whether it was intended to and did do so, as used by the framers of the Constitution and the people who adopted it. As was said in Jackson v. State, 87 Md. 194, 39 Atl. 505: "The Constitution is not to be construed in a technical manner, but in ascertaining its meaning we are to consider the circumstances attending its adoption, and what appears to have been the understanding of the people when they adopted it;" and we then only announced a rule of interpretation which had been frequently adopted.

69 L. R. A.

It is only by recalling what seems almost like ancient history to us of to-day—that there was a time when the state's credit was seriously affected—that we can appreciate the occasion for such a provision as the one under consideration. Yet we find the same legislature that passed this act recognizing the great public services rendered by a former governor of Maryland in preserving its credit, not long prior to the assembling of what was called "The Maryland Reform Convention to Revise the Constitution." From the debates of that convention and other history of the state, it is well known that it had expended millions of dollars in aiding "works of internal improvement," which in some instances proved to be worthless investments, and in others giving little or no promise of early returns. But they were canals, railroads, possibly turnpikes, and similar internal improvements; and, so far as the records disclose, or we are informed, not one dollar of the state's money had been lost or was in any jeopardy by reason of aid to such "public roads" as we are now concerned in. With the exception of about $20,000, in the aggregate, loaned to three counties by Acts 1774, chap. 21, we have not been cited to any instance where its credit had been involved for the benefit of "public roads," and, indeed, that was whilst Maryland was still a colony. It was said by the appellees, and does not seem to be denied by the appellant, that that act is "the only instance of direct aid from the treasury of the government, provincial or state, to public roads." But be that as it may, certain it is, as clearly shown by the debates of the convention, that the "works of internal improvement" which had been and were then giving people of this state such concern were the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal, the Tidewater Canal, and similar companies in which the state's money had been so largely invested. Such enterprises were being aided not only for the purpose of developing the state, but the legislature had doubtless been made to believe that they would be profitable investments. But the time came when the state could not meet the interest on its debt incurred by reason of these investments, and it was in danger of bankruptcy and repudiation. The legislature passed: "An Act to Sell the State's Interest in the Internal Improvement Companies, and to Pay the Debts of the State" (Acts 1842, 1843, chap. 301). but they could not be sold, for want of purchasers; and finally, after a great struggle, the obligations of the state were met by increased taxation, and its credit re-established. When, then, the constitutional convention of 1851 submitted to the people this provision, it is certain that its members and the people had in mind the character of "internal improvements" which had been so disastrous to the state, and it would seem to be equally clear that they did not refer to the ordinary "public roads," which the public authorities alone construct.

We are not called upon to attempt to give the history of highway legislation in Maryland. An article of much interest is found in volume 3 of "Maryland Geological Survey," and the briefs filed in this case can be studied with profit. It must suffice to say that, with the exception of the National Road, built by the general government from Cumberland westward, and the turnpike and plank roads constructed by private corporations chartered by the state or by individuals, the public roads have been constructed almost, if not altogether, exclusively by the local authorities. We followed that rule of the common law, with others. But, while that is so, it is equally true that no power of taxation or other means of raising revenue for the construction and maintenance of roads is vested in the counties, excepting what the state gives them. "Cities and counties are but local divisions of the state, organized and chartered for the more efficient and economical administration of the government. As such they have no inherent power of taxation. The legislature itself may levy needful taxes to defray the general expenses of such cities or counties, or it may delegate this power to the local authorities. These expenses of a city or county—for example, expenses for . . . the maintenance of the public highways and other like expenses—are public or governmental expenses; and the power of taxation, exercised by the local authorities, to defray such expenses, is a delegated power derived from the legislature." Daly v. Morgan, 69 Md. 467, 1 L. R. A. 757, 16 Atl. 287. Under our present system the county commissioners are the boards in charge of the local affairs of the counties; and, by § 1 of article 7 of the Constitution, "their compensation, powers, and duties shall be such as now or may be hereafter prescribed by law." Under the Code of Public General Laws (art. 25) they have charge of and control over county roads and bridges, have the power to open, alter, or close public roads in their respective counties, and are required to keep them in repair. But the legislature can so change their powers and duties as to the public roads as to place them under the control of another board, as was done in Baltimore county, where they were put in the hands of road commissioners; and the statute was upheld by this court, to the extent of relieving the county commissioners from liability for damages for injuries sustained by reason of a road being out of repair. Baltimore County v. Wilson, 97 Md. 207, 54 Atl. 71, 56 Atl. 596.

Such being the case, it would seem strange if the people did mean by this provision in the Constitution to deprive the legislature of the power to aid in the construction of county roads. It may well be that such assistance by the state as is proposed by this act may be the means of enabling the counties to construct roads of a character that no one county could well undertake. A state commission such as that provided for may be able to introduce a system and methods that the local authorities of one county could not be expected to undertake. Yet, if the contention of the appellant is correct, there not only could not be a commission paid by the state to help the counties in this work, but even one such as this would be unlawful, for, although the act of 1896 which created the commission requires the members to serve without compensation, it provides that they shall be reimbursed for actual expenses incurred, and there are expenses connected with their duties, other than those personal to the members of the commission, which must be met. Indeed, can it be doubted that much of the work already done in connection with the Maryland Geological Survey is in conflict with this provision of the Constitution, if the construction contended for must be placed on it? On page 38 of volume 1 of the reports of that survey attention is called to "the special investigation of road materials." After referring to the fact that perhaps no subject is attracting more attention "of enlightened commonwealths" than the proper construction of roads, and "that, if the money now expended annually by the several states was properly applied, a system of permanently good roads could be gradually constructed in place of the temporary makeshifts now in vogue," the importance of showing to the road commissioners of each county the various rock formations within the state, the most available local materials, questions of transportation of them, etc., that page concludes: "There are few ways in which the Geological Survey can be of more direct service to the state than in giving advice regarding the proper materials for road construction, and it is the intention of the State Geologist to give the subject his careful attention as the work of the survey proceeds." One entire volume (3) of these reports is devoted to this subject, and in other ways the money of the state has been used in aid of these "internal improvements;" but is it to be suggested that the framers of our three Constitutions containing this provision ever dreamt that they were so effectually sealing the doors of our state treasury as to prevent the expenditure of any of its money for such purposes? Every intelligent person in the state, who has given the work of this commission, and the officers and others employed by them, due consideration, must know that the public money has seldom been more advantageously spent for the development and advertisement of the state, and for the instruction of its people in matters that must be of the most practical and permanent benefit. Yet it cannot be doubted that, if the appropriation made by the act of 1904 is in conflict with the Constitution, the expenditure of all money heretofore expended by the officers of the Maryland Geological Survey for the benefit of the highways has likewise been so, for it would be an anomaly to say that the general assembly cannot aid in the actual construction of the public roads, but can aid in finding, developing, and testing the material for such roads, in instructing the county officials how to make roads, etc. Of course, we are aware that it would not justify the expenditure of the money under the act of 1904 to show that other money of the state had been used in connection with public roads, but we refer to this to show how far the contention of the appellant would require us to go, if adopted; and, as we have no doubt of the authority of the officers of the Maryland Geological Survey to give such assistance to the counties as we have referred to, it reflects upon the question now before us.

One way of ascertaining the meaning of a word, term, or expression as used in a Constitution, sanctioned by this and other courts, is to see how it is used in other connections and provisions in the same instrument. The concluding part of this prohibition of the present Constitution throws considerable light on the subject: "Except in aid of the construction of works of internal improvement in the counties of St. Mary's, Charles, and Calvert, which have had no direct advantage from such works as have been heretofore aided by the state." What "works" had been heretofore aided by the state? We have seen that the state had not aided such works as "public roads," but it had aided railroads, canals, etc., such as we have said the framers of the Constitution had in mind. If it was intended to equalize those counties with the others, manifestly it was intended to do so by aiding them in "such works" as the state had aided the others. It did not intend simply to make a donation to those three counties of half a million dollars, but that they should "have such aid, advances, or appropriations" as had been given or made, which had directly benefited the other counties. That such was the legislative construction is shown by the significant fact that at the first session of the legislature it passed "An Act to Aid in Construction of Works of Internal Improvements in St. Mary's, Charles, and Calvert Counties" (Acts 1868, p. 880, chap. 454), in which this provision of the Constitution was referred to; and in the preamble it was stated that "said counties have heretofore received no direct benefit from works heretofore aided by the state." The amount was then apportioned between the three counties, and the state treasurer was authorized to subscribe to the capital stock "of any railroad company now chartered, or which may hereafter be chartered, in said counties respectively;" thus conclusively showing that the members of the legislature who were elected a few months after the Constitution was adopted construed the provision as contended for by the appellees.

Another provision of the Constitution which reflects on the subject is § 54 of the same article (3). That provides that "no county of this state shall contract any debt, or obligation, in the construction of any railroad, canal, or other work of internal improvement, nor give or loan its credit to, or in aid of, any association or corporation, unless authorized by an act of the general assembly," which must be published for two months, and then be approved by a majority of all the members elected to each house of the next general assembly. If the construction urged by the appellant be correct, a county could not incur a debt or obligation to construct a road or build a bridge without first complying with these provisions. It has happened in some portions of the state that a road as originally constructed has been so completely destroyed as to require building a new one for some distance over other lands; and, although bridges are included in the general term "internal improvements," it is not unusual, in some portions of the state, for them to be carried off by floods. If a county meets with such disaster by reason of high waters, such as some of them did in 1877, 1889, and other recent years, although a duty to replace rests upon it, nothing could be done for two or more years; depending upon when the disaster overtook it. Such a construction would be contrary to the practice of most, if not all, of the counties; and it would in some counties ruin many of the inhabitants if they are to be thus cut off from markets and other places they must reach for such length of time. Counties have frequently contracted large obligations in the original construction of roads and bridges without attempting to comply with the provisions of this section. The legislature has, over and over again, passed laws requiring county commissioners to build bridges, and directing the issue of bonds. Sometimes it has authorized the issue of bonds for the purpose of building new roads, and, so far as we are aware, it has never been the practice in such cases to comply with the provisions of § 54 of article 3 of the Constitution, as it was not thought to be necessary, either by the members of the legislature, the governors and attorney generals passing on such acts, the county officials, or by the people at large. It would be unreasonable, therefore, to suppose that the framers of the Constitution, or the people who voted on it, ever intended to give such a construction to the term "works of internal improvement," and, if it was not so intended as to the counties, why was it as to the state? If "works of internal improvement" in § 34 include "public roads" of the character in question, why does not that term have a similar meaning in § 54 of the same article? Yet it has never been so understood, and it would be contrary to all precedents to so construe it.

Still other expressions are to be found in the Constitution of the state showing that the meaning of this term is not such as the appellant urges. In this same section the legislature is forbidden to "use or appropriate the proceeds of the internal improvement companies;" in § 42, art. 3, Const. 1851, it was made the duty of the legislature, as soon as the public debt was paid, "to cause to be transferred to the several counties and the city of Baltimore stock in the internal improvement companies;" in § 3, art. 12, Const. 1867, the board of public works was authorized to exchange the state's interest in the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, and "to sell the state's interest in the other works of internal improvement, whether as a stockholder or a creditor;" and now by that section, as amended in 1891, "to sell the state's interest in all works of internal improvement, whether as a stockholder or creditor." In 1867 the state owned, exclusive of the counties, the national road within its boundaries, and it was undoubtedly a "public highway;" but can it be supposed for a moment that it was a "work of internal improvement," within the meaning intended to be given that term in the Constitution,—either in § 3 of article 12, or in § 34 of article 3? And do not these several provisions of the Constitution show conclusively that the "works of internal improvement" intended were such as the state had been connected with or interested in as "stockholder" or "creditor,"—such as had driven it to the very verge of bankruptcy and repudiation,—and not such as every state government must have, either in its own name, or in the names of its "political agencies, created for the better government of the affairs of the state," which counties are said to be in Queen Anne's County v. Talbot County, 99 Md. 13. 57 Atl. 1.

The learned counsel for the appellees have quoted the titles of many acts of the general assembly passed prior to the adoption of the Constitution of 1851 which strongly indicate the meaning of the term as used by the legislature during the period this state was becoming interested in "internal improvements." They are such as "An Act for the Promotion of Internal Improvements," "A Supplement to the Act Entitled 'An Act for the Promotion of Internal Improvements,'" "An Act to Provide Ways and Means to Meet the Subscriptions on the Part of the State to Works of Internal Improvements," and many others. It will be seen by an examination that in most of them provision was made for subscription by the state to the stock or bonds of railroads or canals, or both, the issue of certificates of stock of the state, and other means to aid these "internal improvements." An examination of these and similar acts cannot fail to strengthen the conviction that the makers of our Constitutions, and the people who by their action made them effective, had in mind such internal improvements as those acts have reference to, and not such as public roads.

It is difficult to do full justice to this subject in an opinion of anything like reasonable length, and we do not desire to unnecessarily prolong this, important as we realize the subject to be. We fully appreciate the importance, and, under some conditions, the necessity, of curbing the tendency to make too free use of the public funds or the credit of the state. This provision in the Constitution is a wise one, and perhaps has at times saved the state from becoming interested, not to say involved, in what might well be deemed questionable enterprises for a state to embark in. Nor have we any doubt that a public highway is an "internal improvement," as, indeed, in a sense, the term may include the statehouse, the court of appeals building, the penitentiary, house of correction, reformatory institutions, hospitals, and the like, including the improvements of the grounds appurtenant thereto, and the roads and ways leading to them; but we are convinced that the term "works of internal improvement," as used in this section of the Constitution, was not intended to, and does not, embrace the "public highways" contemplated by the act of 1904. The occasion for such provision, the discussion of the subject in the convention that first adopted it, the context, the evident meaning of the term in other parts of the Constitutions, the prior, contemporaneous, and subsequent construction of the term, all suggest this as the reasonable and proper meaning to be given to it by the courts. Then, when we add to those considerations the additional one that by the same Constitution which first adopted this provision it was provided that the county commissioners "shall exercise such powers and duties only as the legislature may from time to time prescribe," and by the present one their "powers and duties shall be such as now, or may be hereafter prescribed by law," we are strengthened in our conviction. For, as was well said in appellees' brief, "the establishment, construction, and maintenance of public roads is a primary function of government," and when we remember that a county is but a division of the state, "created and organized for public political purposes connected with the administration of the state government," and that the legislature has, under the power given it by the Constitution, imposed the duty on the county commissioners to raise money with which the public roads can be maintained, it would seem remarkable, if not unjust to the counties, if the legislature was intentionally shorn of the power to give such reasonable aid to the counties towards the construction or improvement of public roads as this act contemplates. The general assembly exercises great power over the counties, and in no respect more than concerning their public roads and bridges, as illustrated in the cases between Queen Anne's County and Talbot County in 50 Md. 245, and 99 Md. 13, 57 Atl. 1, the Baltimore County v. Wilson Case, 97 Md. 207, 54 Atl. 71, 56 Atl. 596, and by the act of 1878, chap. 158, p. 256, by which it required Allegany and Garrett counties to take charge of and keep in repair the national road. Yet, if the appellant's contention is right, it cannot aid these "political divisions of the state, organized with a view to the general policy of the state," as was said of counties in Daly v. Morgan, "although they are constantly subject to legislative control," however desirable for the state at large it may be to do so. It cannot be doubted that, in the absence of some constitutional prohibition, the general assembly has full power to furnish such aid; and when we are called upon to determine whether a recognized and unquestioned power has been taken from a body such as the general assembly, in which it was formerly vested, any doubt on the 60 L. R. A.

subject should be resolved in favor of its continuance, rather than against it,—especially when it concerns a subject in which the state has so much interest as public roads. Rules of interpretation adopted by the courts require them to sustain legislation when it can properly be done, and courts should be inclined to continue the powers formerly vested in the general assembly, unless there be manifested a clear, unquestionable intent to take them from it.

Being of the opinion that Acts 1904, chap. 225, p. 388, is not in conflict with § 34 of article 3 of the Constitution, as the term "works of internal improvements," as therein used, was not intended to apply to such public highways of the state as are constructed by the counties and contemplated by that act, the decree of the lower court so holding will be affirmed.

Decree affirmed; costs to be paid by the appellant.

Mary E. POLK et al., Appts.,
v.

Helen A. LINTHICUM

(.....Md.....)

1. Mere unfriendliness of a cestui que trust toward a trustee is not sufficient ground for the removal of the latter.
2. The removal of the widow as trustee of a fund provided for the benefit of testator's daughter is required, where she elected to take her dower rights in opposition to the will, thereby depleting the trust estate, and destroying a very important part of the scheme of the testator, remarried within a short time, became estranged from the cestui que trust and her cotrustees so that no intercourse could subsist between them, and kept the estate in needless litigation.

(March 23, 1906.)

A PPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Baltimore City refusing to remove a trustee. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. James P. Gorter and H. Arthur Stump, for appellants:

The behavior of Mrs. Linthicum is very much below the standard that the courts of this state exact in the performance of the responsible and delicate duties pertaining to the office of trustee.

Dickerson v. Smith, 17 S. C. 289.

There ought to be peaceful intercourse between the beneficiary and those intrusted with the management of the estate. Where NOTE.—On the question of dissensions between beneficiary and trustee as ground for the latter's removal, see also, in this series, May v. May, 41 L. R. A. 767.

strained relations exist between trustee and cestui que trust, the court has exercised its power, and removed the trustee.

Wilson v. Wilson, 145 Mass. 492, 1 Am. St. Rep. 477, 14 N. E. 521; McPherson v. Cox, 96 U. S. 419, 24 L. ed. 751; Scott v. Rand, 118 Mass. 215; May v. May, 167 U. S. 310, 42 L. ed. 179, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 824.

Strained relationship between the trustees is an additional ground for removal.

May v. May, 167 U. S. 310, 42 L. ed. 179, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 824; Urcdale v. Ettrick, 2 Ch. Cas. 130; Jones v. Stockett, 2 Bland, Ch. 434; Quackenboss v. Southwick, 41 N. Y. 117; Re Bernstein, 3 Redf. 26; Druid Park Heights Co. v. Octtinger, 53 Md. 62.

When Mrs. Linthicum renounced the will, she ceased to be trustee.

Meyer's Estate, 8 Pa. Co. Ct. 374.

Messrs. T. R. Clendinen, Enoch Harlan, and J. Charles Linthicum & Brother, for appellee:

Equity will not exercise its power to take charge of and administer a trust when it is being properly administered by the trustee.

Perry, Tr. § 275; Schouler, Exrs. & Adms. 2d ed. § 33, pp. 45, 46; Massey v. Stout, 4 Del. Ch. 274; Thompson v. Thompson, 2 B. Mon. 175.

A trustee appointed by the grantor of the benefits should not be displaced unless he has violated his trust,—especially when asked for by part only of the beneficiaries.

Berry v. Williamson, 11 B. Mon. 271; Re Newman, 124 Cal. 688, 45 L. R. A. 782, 57 Pac. 686; Kidd v. Bates, 120 Ala. 79, 41 L. R. A. 155, 74 Am. St. Rep. 17, 23 So. 735.

An executor appointed by will cannot be rejected by the court, except where the law has specially so provided.

Smith's Appeal, 61 Conn. 420, 16 L. R. A. 538, 24 Atl. 273; William's Appeal, 73 Pa. 277; Bonner v. Lessley, 61 Miss. 397; Moorman v. Crockett, 90 Va. 198, 17 S. E. 875.

The mere fact of there being a dissention between the cestui que trust and the trustee is not a sufficient ground for removing that trustee from the trust.

Forster v. Davies, 4 DeG. F. & J. 139; Gibbes v. Smith, 2 Rich. Eq. 134; Clark v. Anderson, 10 Bush, 113; Nickels v. Philips, 18 Fla. 735; Keen's Estate, 6 Pa. Co. Ct. 645; Stevenson's Appeal, 68 Pa. 105.

Testator's judgment in appointment will not be interfered with.

Berry v. Williamson, 11 B. Mon. 245; McPherson v. Cox, 96 U. S. 404, 24 L. ed. 746; Smith's Appeal, 61 Conn. 420, 16 L. R. A. 538, 24 Atl. 273; May v. May, 167 U. S. 317, 42 L. ed. 183, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 824.
69 L. R. A.

Page, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from the order of the lower court dismissing the petition of the appellants for the removal of the appellee from the trust created by the last will and testament of the late Gabriel D. Clark. The decedent left, surviving him, a widow (the appellee in this case) and two children by a former wife (a son, Gabriel D. Clark, Jr., and a daughter, Mary, who, with her husband, Lucius C. Polk, are the appellants). By his last will, made in the year 1892, he distributed a large estate, except as to a small portion donated to certain charitable purposes, among the several members of his family. For his wife he made an ample provision. He gave her his residence and contents, and one half of his personal estate, amounting to more than a million and a half of dollars, for her life or widowhood, and one third of the residue of his realty for life. All the residue of his estate, including that portion that might remain after the termination of the estate given to the wife for life or for widowhood, he divided among his son and daughter. The son took his share absolutely, but that of his daughter was given to his widow, his son, and the Mercantile Trust Company of Baltimore, in trust to hold and manage the same, and pay over the income thereof to Mrs. Polk, "into her hands and not into another," for her life, and from her death to his grandson, if he be then living, during his natural life, and then for the benefit of his child or children, until the youngest child shall have reached twenty-one years of age, when the trust is to close, and the property shall vest absolutely in the said children. In the event of his grandson dying without leaving child or descendant, the property is to go to the children of the testator's brother. He died on the 8th December, 1896, and in June, 1898, the court assumed jurisdiction of the trust.

The appellee and the decedent were married in 1883. From the time of the marriage up to his death, it seems not to be questioned that their intercourse was harmonious and agreeable. From the period of Mr. Clark's death, there arose causes of estrangement between the widow and the children, which have brought about much bad feeling, and broken up all the pleasant relations that may have heretofore subsisted between them. We do not deem it necessary, in the view we take of the case, to enter into a discussion of the nature of these causes, nor to make any attempt to determine how far the suspicion and distrust the children seem to entertain for the appellee may be justified by the circumstances as they are disclosed by the record. It will be suf-sufficient to observe that in fact ever since Mr. Clark's death these causes have operated to bring about a most unfortunate state of bad feeling in the family, and to develop differences respecting the conduct of the trust which have kept the estate in constant litigation. The appellee, it is true, has testified that she has never entertained "one moment of ill will against one of them" (meaning Mr. Clark and his sister); and it may be conceded that the appellee has testified with entire candor and honesty. But notwithstanding this, it seems improbable, if not impossible, that, under all the circumstances of the case, she can ever resume with them the kindly and sympathetic relations that existed during the lifetime of the testator, and are so necessary for the successful conduct of a trust like the one under this will. It may not unreasonably be assumed that the testator made selection of his widow not only because of his entire confidence in her judgment and integrity, but also because he knew of her satisfactory relations with Mrs. Polk. He must have sought not only that his daughter's share of his estate should be wisely and honestly controlled, but that her dealings with those managing the trust might be through the medium of the appellee, whose affectionate solicitude for her comfort and welfare would soften to some extent, at least, the burden of having to submit to the will of others. These remarks are not intended as the statement of a sufficient ground for a removal, for the reason that it seems to be well settled that mere unfriendliness of the cestui que trust towards the trustee is not a sufficient ground per se for the removal of the latter. Forster v. Davies, 4 DeG. F. & J. 139; Wilson v. Wilson, 145 Mass. 492, 1 Am. St. Rep. 477, 14 N. E. 521. But these reflections, we think, enable us to approach the consideration of other features of the case in our judgment of more importance. The last will of the testator was made and executed in the year 1892, four years prior to his death. It evinces a solicitude for the welfare of each member of his family, as well as an earnest desire to maintain an absolute equality among his children. He intended, it is true, to guard the share of Mrs. Polk by means of the trust, for reasons of which we are not informed, but which we must assume were inspired by the expectation that it would operate for her benefit. But he bestowed upon each of his children an equal share of the estate. To the widow he was extremely liberal. He gave her a life interest in more than one half of his estate. It included the dwelling and contents, and an income estimated by one of the counsel to amount to more than $50,000 per annum. He seems, therefore, to have regarded the interest and probably the wishes of all the members of his family. At the time he selected his widow as one of the trustees for his daughter, he must have believed that the agreeable relation between her and his children would continue to exist after he was gone. He probably did not anticipate that she would remarry within less than a year and a half after his death, and thereupon would be broken up the home where they had so happily resided, nor that there would spring up so soon estrangements of serious character and far-reaching effect. His object in joining her in the management of the trust could not have been to supply the business skill needed for the successful control of so large an estate, for that was already supplied by the other trustees. What else could have been his motive, but that there might be at his daughter's side a safe, agreeable, and sympathetic medium through which she could convey her wishes respecting the trust estate to those that had it in charge? Her position on the board of trustees seems to be an additional proof of the fact that he intended the trust estate primarily for the benefit only of his daughter, to be enjoyed by her in the most agreeable as well as the most advantageous manner. It is apparent, also, from the face of the will that the scheme of the testator was, after providing liberally for his widow, to so dispose of all his property in such a manner that it should eventually go down in the line of his own blood. The testimony also shows that he was exceedingly solicitous that his dispositions should be acceptable to his wife. He trusted her, talked with her about his will, read it to her, and she promised him to do what he wished her to do. Mr. Snowden, who prepared the will, testified that after the will was executed the appellee "was called into the parlor, and Mr. Clark requested me to read it to her, which I did, very carefully and deliberately, and he asked her if she understood it, and whether she approved of it, to which she replied that she did." Notwithstanding this solemn declaration on her part, she renounced the will, and elected to take in lieu thereof her dower or legal estate. By this act she took out from the operation of the trust a very large amount—probably several hundred thousand of dollars—and diverted it to her own use. We are not now questioning in any manner her right thus to renounce, or what the moral aspect of the act may be, when considered in connection with the statements and promises made by her to her late husband, but we regard it now only as a fact to be considered in connection with other matters in relation to the trust. Moreover, it appears from the record that less than one year and a half after her husband's death she remarried, and ceased not only to be on good terms with her stepchildren, but all intercourse of every kind with his family ceased. It is clear that by these acts she destroyed a very important part of the scheme of the testator. His property has been diverted from the channel in which he desired it to go, and the trust has been depleted to the extent of many thousands of dollars. Moreover, the proof shows that her cotrustee, Mr. Clark, entertains feeling of such a positive character towards her that proper co-operation between them in the business of the trust has become impossible, and also that the beneficiary has become charged with distrust of her, founded upon her dealings with the property of the testator, so that for the future there can no longer be personal relations between them. Finally, whatever amount of blame may or may not attach to the appellee, if any, there can be no doubt her participation in the trust has for many years operated to keep the estate in litigation, at much expense; and it is not unreasonable to expect that, if she remain, there may be other recurring matters that will develop still further litigation for many years longer. In addition to this, we think it is clear that the testator created this trust for the benefit of his daughter, and selected his wife to be one of the trustees, not for her personal advantage, but for that of the cestui que trust. His will ought to and must be respected; but it is not for a moment to be even suspected that he would have appointed anyone for the performance of the duty of trustee for the benefit of his daughter whose first act would be the depletion of the trust by renouncing his will, and thereby diminishing the value of the trust estate, and to that extent destroying his cherished hopes and wishes, and afterwards, having remarried, become so obnoxious to his children that they are unwilling to have dealings with her. These things show a want of fidelity to the wishes of the testator, and render the person so affected unfit to keep the financial prosperity of his daughter in her hands. In addition to this, we think it undoubtedly was Mr. Clark's desire that his daughter should not only receive her income promptly, but that she should be made comfortable in the reception of it as well as in its enjoyment. The mere fact of dissension between the cestui que trust and the trustee is not, it is true, a sufficient ground for the removal of a trustee, because, as was said in Forster v. Davies, 4 DeG. F. & J. 139, a cestui que trust "might at any time raise a quarrel with the trustee, and thereupon come to this court to discharge the trustee and remove him from the trust upon the ground of the impossibility of their acting together." But it is also well settled that an application by a cestui que trust to remove a trustee is addressed to the reasonable discretion of the court, and "requires a careful consideration of all the circumstances, the existing relations, and to some extent the state of feeling between the parties." Scott v. Rand, 118 Mass. 215. And so in May v. May, 167 U. S. 320, 42 L. ed. 184, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 828, the Supreme Court said: "The power to remove a trustee and to substitute another in his place is incidental to its paramount duty to see that trusts are properly executed, and may properly be exercised whenever such a state of mutual ill feeling, growing out of his behavior, exists between the trustees, or between the trustee in question and the beneficiaries, that his continuance in office would be detrimental to the execution of the trust, even if no other reason than that human infirmity would prevent the cotrustee or the beneficiaries from working in harmony with him, and although charges of misconduct against him are either not made out, or are greatly exaggerated." Disbrow v. Disbrow, 46 App. Div. 115, 61 N. Y. Supp. 614, Affirmed in 167 N. Y. 606, 60 N. E. 1110; Wilson v. Wilson, 145 Mass. 490, 1 Am. St. Rep. 477, 14 N. E. 521.

69 L. R. A.

69 L. R. A.

We do not rest our decision in this case upon the mere fact of inharmonious relations between the appellee and Mrs. Polk, or between the appellee and her cotrustee; but we are of opinion that these and other facts stated in the record, and particularly that she has placed herself in a position of hostility to the plans of the decedent, whereby the trust fund has been materially depleted, convince us that she is not a proper person to longer act as a cotrustee of the fund, and should therefore be removed.

Order reversed and cause remanded, that an order may be passed removing the appellee from the trusteeship; the appellee to pay costs in this court and below.

CONNECTICUT SUPREME COURT OF ERRORS.

COLLINSVILLE SAVINGS SOCIETY
v.
BOSTON INSURANCE COMPANY, Appt.

(77 Conn. 676.)

An open mortgage clause attached to a policy of fire insurance, which merely provides that loss, if any, shall be paid to a mortgagee as his interest may appear, does not create any contract relations between the mortgagee and insurer, or give the mortgagee a right to participate in arbitration proceedings to fix the amount of loss; and, therefore, he will be bound by the award, although he was given no opportunity to be heard.

(April 20, 1905.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Hartford County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a fire insurance policy. Reversed in part.

Statement by Prentice, J.:

One Woodruff was the owner of a lot of land in New Hartford, with a building standing thereon. These premises were subject to a mortgage to the plaintiff for $10,000. Woodruff caused the building to be concurrently insured in five companies for the total sum of $9,000. The defendant wrote $2,000 of this amount. The policies were in the form of the Connecticut standard policy, had stamped thereon the so-called reduced rate, or 80 per cent, clause, and bore the indorsement, "Loss, if any, payable to the Collinsville Savings Society as their mortgage interest may appear." The building having been damaged by fire, the defendant and Woodruff made a submission in writing to two appraisers and an umpire in the manner prescribed in the policy. This submission, whose result the policy provided should be final, left to the determination of the appraisers and umpire the two factors from which the defendant's liability could be ascertained by a mathematical calculation, to wit, the "sound value" of the property damaged and the fire damage. It also provided that, in determining the sound value and the loss upon the property insured, the appraisers should "make an estimate of the actual cash cost of replacing or repairing the same, or the actual cash value thereof, at and immediately preceding the time of the fire; and, in case of depreciation of the property from use, age, condition, location, or otherwise, a proper deduction shall be made therefor." The appraisers thereupon made their award, determining therein that the sound value of the property was $17,500, and the fire loss $3,571.94. The sound value was arrived at by estimating the cost of construction of a new building, and deducting therefrom the depreciation arising from the length of time the burned building had been built, and the use to which it had been put. Upon this basis an apportionment was correctly made, and the defendant's liability ascertained to be $510.28. Subsequently, proof of loss having been made by Woodruff, the defendant made out its sight draft for said sum of $510.28, payable to the joint order of Woodruff and the plaintiff, and attached thereto a receipt to be signed by said payees, and to accompany the draft when presented for payment. Woodruff thereupon, with knowledge of the result of the appraisal, indorsed said draft and signed said receipt, which recited that the amount of the draft was received of the defendant in full of all claims and demands for loss and damage by reason of its said policy and the fire in question. The plaintiff, having been presented with certain, at least, of the drafts and receipts made out in settlement of said loss, thereupon notified the defendant that it would not accept the award, and subsequently brought this action. The plaintiff was not a party to said submission, nor did it participate or acquiesce in the same or in the proceedings thereunder. Woodruff has never objected to or complained of the award. On the day upon which the plaintiff notified the defendant, as stated, that it refused to recognize the award, it obtained from Woodruff an assignment in writing of all his right, interest, and claim against the defendant by reason of said loss, and forthwith gave notice thereof to the defendant. The evidence disclosed no suggestion of bad faith on the part of either the defendant or Woodruff. The trial court ruled in favor of the plaintiff's contention that it was not

NOTE.—As to right of mortgagee to be a party to arbitration on a loss under an insurance policy taken out by the mortgagor, but containing an indorsement that the losses, if any, shall be payable to the mortgagee, see, in this series, Bergman v. Commercial Union Assur. Co. 15 L. R. A. 270.

As to effect on rights of mortgagee in policy 69 L. R. A.

payable to him as his interest may appear, of an accord and satisfaction between the insurer and the owner of the premises, see Hathaway v. Orient Ins. Co. 17 L. R. A. 514.

As to rights given generally by attachment of mortgage clause to insurance policy, see note to Phenix Ins. Co. v. Omaha Loan & T. Co. 25 L. R. A. 679.

concluded by said award, and also that the rule adopted by the appraisers for the determination of sound value was not the correct one. It further found that, by reason of a recent depreciation in values in the vicinity, the result reached by the appraisers was too large. It thereupon proceeded, upon independent evidence, to ascertain the market value and fix such ascertained value, to wit, $10,000, as the sound value. The plaintiff made no complaint of the award as to the fire damage, and the court made the same finding in that regard that the appraisers had made. Upon the basis of these conclusions, the court computed the defendant's liability under its policy to be $793.76, for which sum, with interest thereon from August 10, 1903,—making, in the whole, $849.32,—judgment was rendered. The defendant does not contest its liability to pay the amount which results from an apportionment of the loss upon the basis of the award, but stands ready to pay that sum. Other facts not pertinent to the conclusions of this court are not stated.

Mr. Charles E. Gross for appellant.

Mr. Theodore M. Maltbie, for appellee:

The title of the plaintiff to the amount of the loss was given by the policy contract, and vested in the plaintiff when the loss occurred.

Hall v. Fire Asso. 64 N. H. 405, 13 Atl. 648; Beach v. Fairbanks, 52 Conn. 167.

As the title of the plaintiff is coincident with the origin of the claim, the conduct of the insured in reference to the loss and its adjustment, without the knowledge and consent of the plaintiff, could not prejudice the plaintiff's right to recover the full amount of the loss.

Harrington v. Fitchburg Mut. F. Ins. Co. 124 Mass. 126; Hathaway v. Orient Ins. Co. 134 N. Y. 409, 17 L. R. A. 514, 32 N. E. 40; Hall v. Fire Asso. 64 N. H. 405, 13 Atl. 648; Brown v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 5 R. I. 398; Bergman v. Commercial Assur. Co. 92 Ky. 494, 15 L. R. A. 270, 18 S. W. 122; Wilson v. Hakes, 36 Ill. App. 547; Jones, Mortg. § 407.

Prentice, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff concedes that, by the assignment from the property owner of his claim under the policy sued upon, it has not, under the facts of this case, acquired any right which it did not previously have, save the right to maintain in its own name an action against the defendant. That assignment may therefore be disregarded.

If, as the defendant contends, the plaintiff is bound by the award made under the submission entered into by the defendant and the property owner, there is error in this case. The court ruled against this contention, and rendered judgment in favor of the contrary claim of the plaintiff,—that it was not bound by said award. Two reasons are urged in support of the plaintiff's position, to wit: (1) That it was not a party to the submission, and has never acquiesced in or ratified it; and (2) that the appraisers applied an erroneous rule of law in their determination of the sound value of the property insured.

The policy, whose provisions prescribe and define the defendant's liability, is the Connecticut standard policy, having indorsed thereon the so-called reduced rate or 80 per cent clause, and also the following: "Loss, if any, payable to the Collinsville Savings Society as their mortgage interest may appear." Said society is in no other way or place, either specifically or descriptively, mentioned in the policy or its indorsements, save as it is provided in the body of the policy that "if, with the consent of the company, an interest under this policy shall exist in favor of a mortgagee, or of any person or corporation having an interest in the subject of insurance other than the interest of the insured as described herein, the conditions hereinbefore contained shall apply in the manner expressed in such provisions and conditions of insurance relating to such interest as shall be written upon, attached or appended hereto."

The indorsement above recited, designating the payee of any loss, which, for the purposes of distinction, has been called the "open mortgage clause," did not bring the plaintiff and defendant into contractual relations with each other, either directly or through an assignment of the policy; neither did the plaintiff thereby become a person or corporation whose property or property interests were insured under the policy. The contract for indemnity remained one exclusively between the defendant and the property owner. The plaintiff was only a conditional appointee of the latter. As such appointee, it was entitled to receive so much of any sum that might become due under the policy as did not exceed its interest as mortgagee, and nothing more. Such is the accepted rule in this state, and, with few possible exceptions, elsewhere. Woodbury Sav. Bank & Bldg. Asso. v. Charter Oak F. & M. Ins. Co. 29 Conn. 374; Meriden Sav. Bank v. Home Mut. F. Ins. Co. 50 Conn. 396; Franklin Sav. Inst. v. Central Mut. F. Ins. Co. 119 Mass. 240; Baldwin v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 60 N. H. 164; Biddeford Sav. Bank v. Drelling-House Ins. Co. 81 Me. 566, 18 Atl. 298; Magoun v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. 86

Minn. 486, 91 Am. St. Rep. 370, 91 N. W. 5; Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Olcott, 97 Ill. 439; Williamson v. Michigan F. & M. Ins. Co. 86 Wis. 393, 39 Am. St. Rep. 906, 57 N. W. 46; Van Buren v. St. Joseph County Village F. Ins. Co. 28 Mich. 398; Martin v. Franklin F. Ins. Co. 38 N. J. L. 140, 20 Am. Rep. 372; Grosvenor v. Atlantic F. Ins. Co. 17 N. Y. 391; Syndicate Ins. Co. v. Bohn, 27 L. R. A. 614, 12 C. C. A. 531, 27 U. S. App. 564, 65 Fed. 165. It is universally held that a policy so indorsed may become forfeited, and the mortgagee deprived of all protection thereunder, by any act or default of the property owner before loss. Moore v. Hanover F. Ins. Co. 141 N. Y. 219, 36 N. E. 191; Baldwin v. Phenix Ins. Co. 60 N. H. 164.

There is another stipulation appearing in or appended to policies issued to property owners, and designed to protect the interest of mortgagees, which it is important to notice. This has been variously denominated the "mortgagee clause" and the "union mortgage clause." It is embodied in the standard policies in some states, and is frequently used as a rider upon policies in other states. It embraces the provision, in substance, that no act or default of any person other than such mortgagee or his agent, or those claiming under him, shall affect the mortgagee's right of recovery. It has frequently been held that the effect of this clause, whenever it is made a part of or indorsed upon a policy, is to bring the insurer and mortgagee into relations of privity, to convert the mortgagee into a party to the contract of insurance, to give to the mortgagee separate and distinct protection to his interest, to create in him an interest under the policy distinct from that of the property owner, and to, in fact, make him an assured. Hastings v. Westchester F. Ins. Co. 73 N. Y. 141; Magoun v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. 86 Minn. 486, 91 Am. St. Rep. 370, 91 N. W. 5; Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Olcott, 97 Ill. 439; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Omaha Loan & T. Co. 41 Neb. 834, 25 L. R. A. 679, 60 N. W. 133; Ormsby v. Phenix Ins. Co. 5 S. D. 72, 58 N. W. 301; Syndicate Ins. Co. v. Bohn, 27 L. R. A. 614, 12 C. C. A. 531, 27 U. S. App. 564, 65 Fed. 165; Clement, Ins. 33; Elliott, Ins. § 341. This court has never gone to the full length of these decisions, nor need we do so now. In Meriden Sav. Bank v. Home Mut. F. Ins. Co. 50 Conn. 396, was presented a case in which the policy had attached to it the "open mortgage clause;" but the insurer and mortgagee had entered into a collateral agreement by which, in effect, the provisions of the "union mortgage clause" were made applicable to all policies issued or to be issued by the defendant (the insurer), where in the loss had been or might be made payable to the plaintiff as mortgagee, or had been or might be assigned to it. The mortgagee brought suit against the insurance company to recover for a loss, the policy being one bearing the appointee indorsement. The first count was on the policy and indorsement alone; the second, upon the policy, indorsement, and collateral agreement. The defendant demurred to each count. The court, after holding that recovery could not be had upon the first count for want of privity between the parties, decided not only that the agreement created such privity, but also that the mortgagee was thereby "made a party to the contract of insurance." The exigencies of the case required the court to go no further for the overruling of the demurrer to the second count, and so the court said that it would go no further at that time and in that case. It is unnecessary to inquire into the logical consequences of what was then held, since it is quite clear that the plain and explicit provision of the "union mortgage clause," to the effect that the mortgagee's right of recovery under the policy, as the payee thereof, shall not be affected by the act or neglect of any person other than the mortgagee, his agent, or those claiming under him, must suffice to establish for a mortgagee under such conditions a status with respect to the insurance which is not only independent of, but also superior to, that of the property owner. The former's rights are thus expressly set free from the operation of those acts and neglects of the latter which would destroy the latter's insurance or limit the extent of his recovery. The rights of the mortgagee become not merely those of a substitute for the owner. He acquires rights of his own which are subject to no man's control, and which give him independent and distinct protection.
89 L. R. A.

It requires no argument to demonstrate that, under such circumstances, the mortgagee's protection extends, as we have above assumed it to do, to the consequences of all the acts and neglects of the property owner both before and after loss, and that it therefore precludes a submission to appraisers which should be binding upon the mortgagee without his concurrence or ratification. The plaintiff's claim is dependent upon the proposition that, however unlike the essence and character of the two clauses discussed may be, and however much the consequences flowing from the acts and neglects of the insured prior to the occurrence of the loss may differ, according as the one or the other enters into or is indorsed upon the policy, the consequences flowing from acts and neglects subsequent to the loss are the same, regardless of which of the forms is used, so that in either event the mortgagee will not be bound by any adjustment of the loss in which he does not participate or concur. In support of this proposition, six cases are cited. These cases are frequently referred to by legal writers and annotators as supporting the principle propounded by the plaintiff and accepted by the trial court. An examination of them, however, discloses that many, if not most, of them have no pertinence whatever to the proposition in support of which they are so often cited, and that the balance are not of such a character as to strongly commend them as authorities in this jurisdiction, at least.

In Hathaway v. Orient Ins. Co. 134 N. Y. 409, 17 L. R. A. 514, 32 N. E. 40, the right of the mortgagee to participate in the adjustment of the loss was not in question. Both the policy and loss covered a building mortgaged, and machinery therein not mortgaged, save such as had become attached to the realty. What had become so attached was a matter of dispute between the owner and mortgagee. The latter's interest, therefore, in the sum to be paid by the insurance company, was not only a partial, but also an uncertain, one. The company and owner not only adjusted the loss, but also made a division of the amount of the adjustment, which was a single gross sum, between the owner and mortgagee, without consulting the latter. This latter attempt at a distribution of what had been determined upon as the amount due from the insurer, without the participation therein of one who had a vested right in some part of that amount, while suggestive of fraud and collusion, was also in plain violation of the mortgagee's right, and the court so held. What it determined was that the insurer "had no authority to agree with the owner as to the amount of the damages, and determine as between him and the mortgagee what sum was payable to each."

In Wilson v. Hakes, 36 Ill. App. 547, the only question raised related, not to the adjustment, but to the payment of what was in fact paid. The contention successfully made was that a mortgagee, with whom the owner and mortgagor has in the mortgage covenanted to maintain insurance sufficient to secure the indebtedness, has such an equitable right to insurance money due by reason of a loss that the insurer, after notice, cannot pay the owner, except at its own risk. Massachusetts in 1873 adopted a standard form of policy, which embodied as one, of its provisions the "union mortgage clause." Such must have been the policy in the oft-quoted case of Harrington v. Fitchburg Mut. F. Ins. Co. 124 Mass. 126. That case is not, therefore, authority for the doctrine which is credited to it. The report of the case of Hall v. Fire Assn. 64 N. H. 405, 13 Atl. 648, is so meager that it is impossible to gather from it with certainty what the terms of the policy in suit were. A standard policy containing the "union mortgage clause" was adopted by that state prior to June, 1886, and probably in 1885. The case was decided in December, 1887. It is altogether probable, therefore, that the situation there was identical with that in the Massachusetts case. Brown v. Hartford Ins. Co. 5 R. I. 398, was decided upon the proposition that the "open mortgage clause" indorsed upon a policy operated as an assignment of it, by reason of which the mortgagee acquired not only a right of action upon the policy as long as his debt was unpaid, but afterwards. This principle, entirely at variance in its every part with the law of this state, was propounded upon the authority of the superior court decision in Grosvenor v. Atlantic F. Ins. Co. 5 Duer, 517, overruled upon appeal, 17 N. Y. 391, and a dictum in King v. State Mut. F. Ins. Co. 7 Cush. 6, 54 Am. Dec. 683, which was plainly misinterpreted, and thus made to express the reverse of the settled rule in that jurisdiction. Fogg v. Middlesex Mut. F. Ins. Co. 10 Cush. 337; Hale v. Mechanics' Mut. F. Ins. Co. 6 Gray, 169, 66 Am. Dec. 410; Loring v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co. 8 Gray, 28; Franklin Sav. Inst. v. Central Mut. F. Ins. Co. 119 Mass. 240. There remains the Kentucky case of Bergman v. Commercial Assur. Co. 92 Ky. 494, 15 L. R. A. 270, 18 S. W. 122, which rests its decision upon the authority of Brown v. Hartford Ins. Co. 5 R. I. 398; Harrington v. Fitchburg Mut. F. Ins. Co. 124 Mass. 126, and a text-book reference not in point. But whatever may be said of the pertinence of these decisions, we are unable to accept the conclusion said to be supported by them. We find it difficult to harmonize the accepted proposition that a mortgagee, by force of the appointment clause in question, does not become a party to the insurance contract, and is not in privity with the insurer, with the other proposition, that nevertheless he acquires the right to intervene between the only parties having contractual relations, and to exercise the functions which are created by the contract to which he is a stranger, and which are exercised in pursuance of its provisions. It has been suggested that the explanation is that upon the happening of a loss the mortgagee acquires a vested right. True, he does, but what is the right which thus vests? Is it anything more than the right to have the payment made, of his rightful share of it? If more, how and what more, and how does the claimed right to participate in the adjustment under the contract so suddenly arise? It is said that he ought, for his own protection, to have the right. But contract rights are not thus created. The law does not raise up contract rights and relations for the protection of every man who has failed to protect himself.

But it is unprofitable to pursue this line of inquiry further, without first discovering what provisions there may be in the insurance contract into which the defendant entered which determine the rights of the parties in the matter under consideration, since it is clear that, in so far as the contract speaks, whether it be in the way of defining the extent of the defendant's liability for the loss in the abstract, or of prescribing the manner in which that liability in any given case should be measured, ascertained, and reduced to figures, it will be controlling. And it will be no less controlling of the rights of the mortgagee than those of the insurer and owner, since he takes his rights under and subject to the insurance contract. His right to take is limited to the insurer's obligation to pay, as determined by the provisions of the policy. Let us therefore see how far, if at all, the parties to the contract have themselves determined the questions pertinent to the present issue.

No question arises as to the extent of the defendant's liability, abstractly considered. The policy promises indemnity to an amount not exceeding $2,000 for all direct loss or damage by fire, subject, however, to the exceptions named. These exceptions, which include the limitations upon the defendant's liability arising from concurrent insurance and the 80 per cent clause, concerning the effect of which no question arises, need not be considered. The controversy here relates solely to the means of obtaining an expression, in concrete dollars and cents, of the obligation whose statement in the abstract all concur in. Upon this subject the policy, first of all, provides that "the loss or damage shall be ascertained and established" upon a specified basis, and that such ascertainment or estimate shall be made by the insured and the company, or, "if they differ, by appraisers as hereinafter appointed." The subsequent provision for the event of a difference requires the appointment of two appraisers,—one by the insurer and the other by the insured,—and the selection by the appraisers of an umpire. The award thus obtained is made final as to the amount of the loss. The policy, it will thus be seen, could scarcely be more clear and precise in committing and limiting to the insurer and owner not only the power and right of adjustment by agreement, but also the power and right to submit the adjustment to the final decision of third parties, unless it can be said either that the term "insured," as used in this connection, is of itself sufficiently comprehensive to include this mortgagee.

(C) L. R. A.

or that the right of participation is by some other provision so given or to be implied that the term must be construed as including him.

It is easy to understand how a mortgagee, having acquired the status which the "union mortgage clause" gives one, whatever that status, technically regarded, may be, might be fairly entitled to be comprehended within the descriptive term "the insured," and, if not, that the express language of that clause so defines his rights and limits the rights and powers of the property owner that the right to participate in any adjustment of the loss is impliedly accorded him. On the other hand, it is not easy to discover upon what theory it can be reasonably claimed that a person who has not come into contractual relations with the insurer, who has obtained no insurance protection, and who is only an appointee of the owner as respects whatever may become due under the contract of insurance, to which he is a stranger, acquires the right, even by indirection, to assume the title of "the insured." If we look for other provisions which may serve, by way of implication or otherwise, to give him a standing in the adjustment of a loss, we find only that the word "insured," whenever used in the policy, should be construed to include the legal representatives of the insured, and nothing more. It appears, therefore, that the right to participate in an adjustment of a loss under this policy and indorsement has by the parties to the contract been limited to the insurer, the property owner, and his legal representatives.

The plaintiff's second objection to the binding force of the award falls with the first. It having been determined that the owner had full power in the matter of adjustment, whether by agreement or arbitration, and that the mortgagee was not entitled to be a party thereto, it follows that the former had full power to accept the result of a submission, however erroneously arrived at it might have been, and that the latter has no standing to attack it for the cause alleged.

The defendant strenuously complains that it is aggrieved because the court, after setting aside the award as not binding upon these parties, and finding that the determination of sound value therein was made upon an erroneous basis, which, under the peculiar circumstances of the case, gave too large a result, proceeded to accept the appraisal of the fire damage as correctly representing that item, without, as it is said, other evidence upon the subject than the discredited award, and the statement of one of the appraisers that he found the damage as stated therein. The contention is that the court thus found an important fact without competent evidence, and unwillingly gave effect to a part of the award which was not only presumptively influenced by the element of sound value, but also based upon the same considerations of cost of construction which entered into the determination of that item; thus unjustly converting a 20 per cent damage into one of 35 per cent. This claim and others of an incidental character discussed at bar do not, in view of our conclusions above, call for consideration.

The plaintiff was entitled to judgment for the sum of $510.28, the amount of the defendant's liability upon the basis of the award, together with interest on said sum from the time it was payable to the date of judgment, making, in the whole, $549.23, and was entitled to no more.

There is error in so much of the judgment as is in excess of $549.23, and it is set aside as to such excess. There is no error in the balance of the judgment, and the judgment is affirmed for said sum of $549.23.

All concur.

Hester RICHARDS

v.

NEW YORK, NEW HAVEN, & HARTFORD RAILROAD COMPANY, App't.

(77 Conn. 501.)

1. Error in overruling a demurrer is not available to defendant after a voluntary default and hearing in damages thereon, unless the complaint is bad in substance.
2. The wharfage and reclamation rights of the owner of land on a cove leading off from a river are not destroyed or impaired by the construction of an embankment across the mouth of the cove.
3. No recovery can be had by the owner of land on a cove leading off from a river for interference with his right of access from his land to the river by the construction of a railroad track across the mouth of the cove, where the access is not entirely cut off, and because of the limited extent of the cove, and the shallowness of its waters, the right is not essentially impaired.

(January 4, 1905.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for New London County in plaintiff's favor in an action to recover damages for injury to plaintiff's

NOTE.—As to right of owner of upland to access to navigable water, see also, in this series, State ex rel. Denny v. Bridges, 40 L. R. A. 593, and note.

As to right of riparian owner to wharf out, see Madison v. Mayers, 40 L. R. A. 635, and note.

69 L. R. A.

rights as owner of land abutting on navigable water. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Brandegee, Noyes, & Brandegee, for appellant:

The defendant has not interfered with the wharfage right, or any other private right or privilege of the plaintiff.

Ockerhausen v. Tyson, 71 Conn. 38, 40 Atl. 1041.

The principle that riparian proprietors have the right to wharf out to the deep water or channel is applicable only where the body of water upon which they own property has a channel.

The private rights of the plaintiff not being infringed upon, her other damages are damnum absque injuria.

The title to the beds of navigable streams is in the state, and the state, in the absence of action by Congress under its power to regulate commerce, has authority to authorize the construction of bridges and other structures across such streams.

Frost v. Washington County R. Co. 96 Me. 86, 59 L. R. A. 68, 51 Atl. 806; Davidson v. Boston & M. R. Co. 3 Cush. 106; Clark v. Saybrook, 21 Conn. 325; O'Brien v. Norwich & W. R. Co. 17 Conn. 372.

The legislature has the power to authorize a railroad company to build a permanent bridge over navigable waters, and the riparian owners above are not only without remedy, but without a right to a remedy.

Bailey v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. 4 Harr. (Del.) 389, 44 Am. Dec. 593; Homochitto River v. Withers, 29 Miss. 21, 64 Am. Dec. 126; Boston & W. R. Corp. v. Old Colony R. Corp. 12 Cush. 605; Brayton v. Fall River, 113 Mass. 229, 18 Am. Rep. 470; Blakwell v. Old Colony R. Co. 122 Mass. 1; Thayer v. New Bedford R. Co. 125 Mass. 253; Breed v. Lynn, 126 Mass. 367; Pound v. Turck, 95 U. S. 459, 24 L. ed. 525; Gilman v. Philadelphia, 3 Wall. 713, 18 L. ed. 90; Passaic Bridges (Milnor v. New Jersey R. & Transp. Co.) 3 Wall. 782, Appx., and 16 L. ed. 799; Baldwin Am. Railroad Law, pp. 68, 105; Whitehead v. Jessup, 53 Fed. 709.

The complaint in the present case contains no such allegations of special damage.

Harvard College v. Stearns, 15 Gray, 1; Lansing v. Smith, 8 Cow. 146; Brightman v. Fairhaven, 7 Gray, 272.

As the navigation of Clark's cove has only been impaired, the plaintiff has no right of action.

Randolph, Em. Dom. 25; Blood v. Nashua & L. R. Corp. 2 Gray, 137, 61 Am. Dec. 444; Jolly v. Terra Haute Drawbridge Co. 6 McLean, 237, Fed. Cas. No. 7,441.

Even if the weight of the railroad structure has caused the filling up of a small portion of the cove outside the railroad location, the plaintiff cannot recover damages therefor.

Wesson v. Washburn Iron Co. 13 Allen, 101, 90 Am. Dec. 181; Stetson v. Faxon, 19 Pick. 147, 31 Am. Dec. 123; Hatch v. Vermont O. R. Co. 28 Vt. 142.

Messrs. Franklin H. Brown and Donald G. Perkins, for appellee:

The owner of land abutting on a navigable stream has the right of access to and from his land on the water, and a right to fill in flats and wharf out to deep water; and these rights are privileges or franchises attached to the land, and constitute a valuable property right.

East Haven v. Hemingway, 7 Conn. 202; New Haven S. B. Co. v. Sargent, 50 Conn. 206, 47 Am. Rep. 632; Ladies' Seaman's Friend Soc. v. Halstead, 58 Conn. 150, 19 Atl. 658; Prior v. Swartz, 62 Conn. 132, 18 L. R. A. 608, 36 Am. St. Rep. 333, 25 Atl. 398; Lane v. New Haven Harbor, 70 Conn. 695, 40 Atl. 1058; Ockerhausen v. Tyson, 71 Conn. 31, 40 Atl. 1041; New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Long, 72 Conn. 21, 43 Atl. 559; French v. Connecticut River Lumber Co. 145 Mass. 261, 14 N. E. 113; Yates v. Milwaukee, 10 Wall. 497, 19 L. ed. 984; Sullivan Timber Co. v. Mobile, 110 Fed. 193; Carli v. Stillwater Street R. & Transfer Co. 28 Minn. 373, 41 Am. Rep. 290, 10 N. W. 205; Chicago & P. R. Co. v. Stein, 75 Ill. 45; Rook Island & E. I. R. Co. v. Gordon, 184 Ill. 456, 56 N. E. 810; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Chase, 43 Md. 23; Clark v. Peckham, 10 R. I. 35, 14 Am. Rep. 654; Providence Steam Engine Co. v. Providence & S. S. S. Co. 12 R. I. 356, 34 Am. Rep. 652; Rumsey v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 133 N. Y. 79, 15 L. R. A. 618, 28 Am. St. Rep. 600, 30 N. E. 654; Williams v. New York, 105 N. Y. 419, 11 N. E. 829; Re New York, 168 N. Y. 135, 56 L. R. A. 500, 61 N. E. 158; Bucclough v. Metropolitan Board of Works, L. R. 5 H. L. 418; Lyon v. Fishmongers' Co. L. R. 1 App. Cas. 682.

The right to wharf out is usually on a line at right angles with the channel, and the right exists and may be exercised no matter whether deep water is near or far.

New Haven S. B. Co. v. Sargent, 50 Conn. 206, 47 Am. Rep. 632; Morris v. Beardsley, 54 Conn. 341, 8 Atl. 139; Lowndes v. Wicks, 69 Conn. 30, 36 Atl. 1072.

The indentation of the shore of the river at plaintiff's land is just as much a part of the river as a point where the shore is straight.

Gallup v. Tracy, 25 Conn. 16.

An obstruction in a navigable stream is a public nuisance, and any person who suffers a particular injury from a public nuisance can maintain an action therefor.

Burrows v. Pizley, 1 Root. 363, 1 Am. Dec. 56; Frink v. Lawrence, 20 Conn. 120, 50 Am. Dec. 274; Hubbard v. Deming, 21 Conn. 360; Wheeler v. Bedford, 54 Conn. 248, 7 Atl. 22; Cooley, Torts, pp. 732-737.

The mere layout of the railroad, and the approval of the layout over the water in front of plaintiff's land, did not authorize or imply that the railroad company could take and destroy the plaintiff's rights before or without first making compensation, any more than such a layout over upland accomplishes such a result.

Bradley v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 21 Conn. 306; Hooker v. New Haven & N. Co. 15 Conn. 326; Gilpin v. Ansonia, 68 Conn. 79, 35 Atl. 777; 10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law. 2d ed. p. 1137.

But even though the state itself authorized a railroad company to cross navigable waters, it could not do so and thereby take and destroy the property rights of a landowner abutting on the water, until it had first made compensation for the damage; for the state itself cannot take private property for public use without making compensation.

Farist Steel Co. v. Bridgeport, 60 Conn. 283, 13 L. R. A. 590, 22 Atl. 561; Hooker v. New Haven & N. Co. 14 Conn. 152, 36 Am. Dec. 477; Bradley v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 21 Conn. 294.

The rights are analogous to those of a property holder abutting on a highway.

Shively v. Bowlby, 152 U. S. 14, 38 L. ed. 337, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 548; Kane v. New York Elev. R. Co. 125 N. Y. 164, 11 L. R. A. 640, 26 N. E. 278.

Even though a statute authorizing the taking of property makes no provision for compensation, this will not relieve from liability, for the Constitution requires compensation for taking property for a public use.

McKeon v. New Haven, N. H. & H. R. Co. 75 Conn. 343, 61 L. R. A. 730, 53 Atl. 656; Knapp & C. Mfg. Co. v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 76 Conn. 314, 100 Am. St. Rep. 994, 56 Atl. 512.

Torrance, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The complaint alleges, in substance, that the plaintiff is the owner of land having a frontage of several hundred feet on the Thames river, a navigable stream in this state; that the defendant, "wrongfully and against the will and consent of the plaintiff," has built and maintains a permanent embankment in front of said land and between it and said river; and that "the defendant has thereby separated and cut off the plaintiff's said land from said river, and diverted said river so that it no longer flows by plaintiff's said land in its natural course, and has obstructed and destroyed the plaintiff's use of said river as a way of access to her said land, and has obstructed and destroyed the right, which the plaintiff owned as attached to her said land, to wharf out from her said land into deep water in said river for use of the same as a navigable stream, and has obstructed and destroyed the view and prospect of and over said river from the plaintiff's said land." The complaint also alleged damages caused by the upheaval of mud of the river bottom outside of the location of said embankment in consequence of the building of said embankment. The defendant demurred to the complaint, and, after this was overruled, suffered a default, and was heard in damages upon notice, which gave the defendant the right to contest all the allegations of the complaint. The action of the trial court in overruling the demurrer is assigned for error in one of the reasons of appeal.

After a voluntary default and hearing in damages thereon, this reason of appeal is no longer open to the defendant, unless the complaint is bad in substance; and, as this is not the case, the assignment above referred to cannot avail the defendant upon this appeal. Houigan v. Norwich, 77 Conn. 358, 59 Atl. 487.

The other errors assigned relate to the action of the court in overruling certain claims of law, and in rendering judgment for more than nominal damages. The controlling facts in the case are, in substance, the following: The Thames river, a navigable stream, flows in a southerly direction to Long Island sound. Upon its eastern margin, at a point just above Gale's ferry, there is a small pouch shaped indentation known as "Clark's cove." This cove is about 1,600 feet in length north and south, and, near its northerly end, it has an opening or mouth into the river about 450 feet in width. There is no channel in the cove, and it has a mud bottom, with from $1\frac{1}{2}$ to $2\frac{1}{2}$ feet of water thereon at mean low tide. The mean rise and fall of the tide there is 2 feet and 10 inches. The channel of the river is about 800 feet westerly from the mouth of the cove. The land surrounding the cove is owned by divers owners in severalty. The land described in the complaint lies within the cove, and has a frontage of between 450 to 500 feet upon the waters of the cove. Its front line lies opposite the mouth of the cove, and about 200 feet distant easterly therefrom. Two lines drawn at right angles to the channel of the river, one at the north and one at the south side of the cove mouth, 69 L. R. A.

would embrace the frontage above mentioned. There are three dwelling houses on said land. Prior to the doing of the acts complained of there was no obstruction on the waters of the cove or the river between the plaintiff's said land and the channel of the river. The defendant is the lessee of the Norwich & Worcester Railroad Company, and in doing the acts complained of it acted as such lessee and as the agent of said lessor; but it was agreed by the parties upon the trial below that judgment, if in favor of the plaintiff, should properly run against the defendant, and that the defendant should be treated as if it were the owner of said railroad, invested, with reference thereto, with all the power and authority conferred by the legislature upon said lessor. In this view of the case the defendant owns the land fronting on the river immediately north and south of the cove mouth. It has made, and laid its railroad thereon, a solid embankment, 20 feet wide and 10 feet high, across the mouth of said cove, save at the northerly end thereof, where it has left an opening 16 feet wide, but permanently closed at the top with its railroad, between the cove and the river. All this was done by legislative authority and sanction under laws which made no provision for compensation to parties who might be injured by acts done by virtue of such authority. Through the opening aforesaid left at the north end of said roadbed "boats with masts set cannot enter, and it is difficult for small boats to enter, except at low water, on account of the flow of water caused by the tide." The building of said roadbed has forced parts of the bottom of the cove upwards, in places outside of the defendant's location, and these parts are not flowed at low water. It was agreed that the damages to be awarded, if any, should be for the permanent depreciation of the plaintiff's property by reason of the building of the railroad across the mouth of the cove, to be assessed once for all. "It did not appear in evidence that the plaintiff personally ever used said cove, or intended to use it in any way for any purpose." Upon these facts the defendant based certain claims of law made in the court below, which were there overruled. In the view we take of this case, it will be unnecessary to state or consider separately these claims of law with the rulings thereon. With reference to said claims it is enough to say that, except as hereinafter indicated, the court committed no error in overruling them.

The plaintiff's case, as stated in her complaint, proceeds upon the theory that her land fronts upon the Thames river, and not upon Clark's cove, and the case was tried and decided upon that theory. In this there was error. It is undoubtedly true that, so far as the public rights of fishing and navigation and others of like nature are concerned, Clark's cove is a part of the Thames river (Gallup v. Tracy, 25 Conn. 10); but it does not follow from this that for all purposes the cove is to be regarded as a part of the river. It does not follow, for instance, that the riparian owner at the south end of the cove has rights of wharfage, or reclamation, or alluvian in the main river. The situation of his land precludes the existence of any such rights, and this is equally true of other owners of land fronting upon the waters of the cove. They have undoubtedly certain exclusive, yet qualified, rights and privileges in the waters and submerged land adjoining their upland; but they must take their riparian rights as they find them, and they are entitled only to such as the condition of the cove and the situation of their land with respect to the cove will afford. New Haven S. B. Co. v. Sargent, 50 Conn. 199-208, 47 Am. Rep. 632. Among the most important of these rights and privileges in the cove and its waters are (1) the right of access by water to and from their upland, (2) the right to wharf out in front, and (3) the right of reclamation or accretion. Mather v. Chapman, 40 Conn. 382-395, 16 Am. Rep. 46; Ockerhausen v. Tyson, 71 Conn. 31-36, 40 Atl. 1041. Riparian proprietors in the cove have the right to wharf out and to reclaim, but they are rights confined to the cove, and to be exercised therein, and not in the main river, and to be exercised by each subject to the riparian rights of his neighbors and to the rights of the public in the cove and its waters. They also have each the important right of access; that is, the right to go from their land to the river and from the river to their land, through the waters of the cove. This right is distinct from the right of each as a member of the public to navigate the waters of the cove. It is a private right, belonging to each as the owner of land bordering upon waters forming part of a great water highway. However much courts may differ upon the question whether such a right can be destroyed or impaired by the state without compensation to the owner, they all agree that the right of access exists. The following are a few of the many cases recognizing its existence: Lyon v. Fishmongers' Co. L. R. 1 App. Cas. 662; Delaplaine v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 42 Wis. 214, 24 Am. Rep. 386; Brisbane v. St. Paul & S. City R. Co. 23 Minn. 114; Backus v. Detroit, 49 Mich. 69 L. R. A.

110, 43 Am. Rep. 447, 13 N. W. 380; Yates v. Milwaukee, 10 Wall. 497, 19 L. ed. 984; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Illinois, 146 U. S. 445, 36 L. ed. 1039, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 110; Scranton v. Wheeler, 179 U. S. 141, 45 L. ed. 126, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 48. See also the case in the note, 40 L. R. A. 593. Each riparian proprietor in the cove had then at least three important rights, but they all related to the waters of the cove and to the land submerged by said waters, and not to the river proper. It may be said that the situation of the plaintiff's land was such, with reference to the mouth of the cove and the channel of the river, as to give her the right to wharf out to the channel, and also to reclaim submerged land in that part of the river lying westerly of and opposite to her land; but we do not think so. Her rights of wharfing out and of reclamation, like those of her neighbors, were confined to the cove. The existence in her of a right to wharf out and reclaim in the river is entirely inconsistent with, and its exercise might be destructive of, the rights of access belonging to her neighbors. It would give the plaintiff the right, as against her neighbors, to fill up wholly or partially the waters of the cove and its mouth, so as practically to impair or destroy the riparian rights of those neighbors, and especially their right of access. It follows from the fact that her rights of wharfing out and of reclamation were confined to the cove, that these rights were not invaded by the acts of the defendant, and that the court erred in holding that they had been.

As to her right of access, it is clear, upon the facts found, that it has not been destroyed. She can still get from her land to the river, and from that to her land, through the waters of the cove. Nor does the finding show that it has been essentially impaired, taking into account the situation and limited extent of the cove and the shallowness of its waters. Its uses for purposes of navigation have always been, and, in the nature of things, must continue to be, quite insignificant; and if its availability for such purposes has been lessened to some extent, that is a matter of which the plaintiff cannot be heard to complain in this action. It is a public, and not a private, detriment. We think the facts found fail to show that the riparian rights of the plaintiff have been invaded or injured.

There is error. The judgment is set aside, and the cause remanded, in order that nominal damages may be assessed.

All concur.

Amelia P. DE WITT et al.
v.
William L. BISSELL, Appt.

(77 Conn. 530.)

The owner of property bordering on a mill pond cannot enjoin the owner of the dam and water privilege from drawing the water down to its natural level when it becomes necessary for the utilization of the power, although a portion of the bottom of the pond is thereby uncovered and exposed to the sun, rendering it unhealthy and injurious to the abutting owner.

(March 9, 1905.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Litchfield County enjoining him from drawing the water from a mill pond. Reversed.

Statement by Hamersley, J.:

The complaint alleges the following facts: On July 15, 1897, the plaintiff was, and ever since has been, the owner of a piece of land adjoining and bordering upon the east shore of Long pond, on which piece of land is a dwelling house used by the plaintiff as a summer residence. At the outlet of said pond there is a dam, claimed to be owned by the defendant, which maintains the water of said pond at a higher level than its natural level. From July 15th to October 1st in each of the years 1897, 1898, and 1899, and from July 15th to the commencement of this suit on September 18th in the year 1900, the defendant drew off the water of said pond by raising the gate in said dam until a large area of the land which is covered by water when said pond is full was exposed, which exposed condition continued until October 1st in the years 1897, 1898, and 1899, when the defendant permitted said pond to fill up to its usual level as maintained by said dam, and continued in the year 1900 until the commencement of this suit. When the water was thus drawn off, the land thus exposed to the sun produced offensive stenches, unhealthy to the plaintiff and other inmates of said house, rendering said house uninhabitable, and constituting a nuisance. The defendant formerly operated a gristmill, machine shop, and foundry with the water flowing from said pond, NOTE.—As to rights in artificial condition of body of water generally, see note to Pewaukee v. Savoy, 50 L. R. A. 836.

As to right of owner of mill to draw off the water and lower the water in the pond so as to destroy the ice privileges of the owner of land bordering on the pond, see, in this series, Eldemiller Ice Co. v. Guthrie, 28 L. R. A. 581.

As to right of owners of mill on stream flowing from great pond to lower outlet to draw down the water in the pond, see Fernald v. Knox Woolen Co. 7 L. R. A. 459.
60 L. R. A.

which gristmill, etc., stood on a tract of land owned by the defendant below the outlet of said pond; but said mill, machine shop, and foundry have been abandoned, and the defendant has put the water drawn from said pond at the times above mentioned to no beneficial use. The acts of the defendant in creating such nuisance have injuriously affected the health and comfort of the plaintiff and her family, and the value of the plaintiff's said land has been depreciated. The plaintiff has often requested the defendant to cease drawing off the water as aforesaid, but the defendant, notwithstanding such requests, has continued to so draw it off, and the plaintiff is without adequate remedy at law. The prayer for relief asks an injunction restraining the defendant from drawing off the water below the level maintained by said dam when the gate therein is closed from July 15th to October 1st in each year, and $5,000 damages. The defendant's answer, after denying certain paragraphs of the complaint, sets up as a special defense to the plaintiff's cause of action as stated in the complaint the following: "(1) The defendant on the 15th day of July, 1897, was and for more than twenty years prior thereto had been, and still is, the owner of the dam and water privilege at the outlet of said Long pond, and during all of said time was, has been, and still is the owner and user of the water flowing therefrom; and during all of said time has been and still is entitled to the right to raise the water in said pond to the height of said dam, and to draw off and use all the water from said pond that would flow from the same. (2) Any and all acts of the defendant in raising and lowering the water of said Long pond were done in the exercise of his legal right as owner and user, as set forth in paragraph 1 of this defense." The plaintiff, in her reply to the special defense, admitted so much of paragraph 1 as alleged that the defendant was on July 15, 1897, and for more than twenty years prior thereto had been, and still is, the owner of the dam at the outlet of Long pond, and denied the remainder of said paragraph and paragraph 2. The judgment of the court finds for the plaintiff the issues of fact raised by the pleadings, and adjudges that the defendant be perpetually enjoined from drawing off the water of Long pond from July 15th to October 1st in each year, and that the plaintiff recover of the defendant $100 damages.

Messrs. Charles E. Perkins and J. Henry Roraback, for appellant:

Using a mill pond for the uses for which it is made, in the manner which is absolutely necessary for its practical use, is not an unreasonable and unlawful use of it.

Hurlbut v. McKone, 55 Conn. 42, 3 Am. St. Rep. 17, 10 Atl. 164.

A distinction has been made between a case where the injury is the natural and necessary consequence of the exercise of the legal right of the owner to develop the resources of his property, and a case where it is the consequence of his election to devote his land to the establishment of a particular sort of manufacture having no natural connection with the soil or the subjacent strata.

21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 689; Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Sanderson, 113 Pa. 126, 57 Am. Rep. 445, 6 Atl. 453; Robb v. Carnegie Bros. 145 Pa. 324, 14 L. R. A. 329, 27 Am. St. Rep. 694, 22 Atl. 649.

This distinction has sound reason and good sense to sustain it.

Brown & Bros. v. Illius, 27 Conn. 95, 71 Am. Dec. 49; Isbell v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 27 Conn. 412, 71 Am. Dec. 78.

This rule is especially applicable to the case of a person coming to live near the alleged nuisance.

Fay v. Salem & D. Aqueduct Co. 111 Mas. 27; State v. Sunapee Dam Co. 70 N. H. 458, 59 L. R. A. 55, 50 Atl. 108; Bierce v. Sharon Electric Light Co. 73 Conn. 300, 47 Atl. 324.

Where a mill has been erected upon a stream for a long period of time, it gives the owner the right to have the water flow to and from the mill in the manner in which it has been accustomed to flow all the time. The owner is not bound to use the water in the precise manner, or apply it to the same mill.

Saunders v. Newman, 1 Barn. & Ald. 261; Gould, Waters, 3d ed. § 234, p. 464.

Messrs. Hubert Williams and Warner & Landon, for appellees:

Defendant must so use his property as not to injure his neighbor.

Whitney v. Bartholomew, 21 Conn. 218; Grady v. Wolsner, 46 Ala. 381, 7 Am. Rep. 593; Hurlbut v. McKone, 55 Conn. 41, 3 Am. St. Rep. 17, 10 Atl. 164; Kaspar v. Dawson, 71 Conn. 410, 42 Atl. 78.

The question as to whether the acts complained of constitute a nuisance is one of fact to be determined by the trier.

Stowe v. Miles, 39 Conn. 428; Burnham v. Hotchkiss, 14 Conn. 318; Bierce v. Sharon Electric Light Co. 73 Conn. 301, 47 Atl. 324.

Plaintiffs having proved a special and peculiar injury by reason of the defendant, they were entitled to the judgment for damages, and to the injunction granted.

Bigelow v. Hartford Bridge Co. 14 Conn. 565, 36 Am. Dec. 502; Wheeler v. Bedford, 60 L. R. A.

54 Conn. 244, 7 Atl. 22; Kaspar v. Dawson, 71 Conn. 410, 42 Atl. 78; Nolan v. New Britain, 69 Conn. 678, 38 Atl. 703.

Hamersley, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It is alleged by the defendant and admitted by the plaintiff that the defendant is, and for more than twenty years last past has been, the owner of the dam, which is found to have existed for nearly one hundred years, and to have been used by its owners for the purpose of storing water to the full capacity of the dam and drawing off the water thus stored as occasion required. It is also found that during the years mentioned in the complaint the defendant has, from July 15th to October 1st, substantially drawn off all the water stored for use by the dam,—i. e., to the depth of about 4 feet at its gate; that when the water is drawn off to this extent the bottom of the pond at several points is exposed to the sun and air: that one of the portions thus exposed is opposite land owned by the plaintiff, and the exposure of this portion has caused an appreciable injury to the plaintiff's said property, for which injury the defendant is liable. It is not found that drawing off the water to the depth of 2 feet would cause this injury, and it plainly appears that drawing off the water to some extent might not harm the plaintiff. The judgment perpetually enjoins the defendant against any exercise of his admitted right to draw off the water during the periods mentioned, although some exercise of that right can work no injury to the plaintiff, and for this reason the judgment is plainly erroneous.

It appears that the defendant is the owner of a dam and water privilege at the outlet of Long pond, and this property includes the power of storing the water flowing through the land on which the dam stands to the capacity of the dam, and of letting the water flow through its open gates as the owner may desire, and includes that qualified ownership in the water stored which the law recognizes. This property is subject to the rights belonging to other riparian owners as owners of the land and their rights acquired by appropriation or contract, but is in other respects similar to any property held in absolute ownership. It appears that the plaintiff in 1894 purchased a piece of land adjoining and bounded by the shore of Long pond. On this land the plaintiff, shortly after its purchase, built a house for a summer residence. The real substance of the plaintiff's cause of action, as stated in the complaint and determined by the court, is this: The uncovered condition of Long pond in the immediate neighborhood of the plaintiff's house results in the private nuisance described in the complaint, namely, offensive stenches unhealthy to the plaintiff and other inmates of her house, and injuriously affecting the value of her land. This uncovered condition of the pond is caused by the defendant's act in drawing off the water stored by his dam, and the defendant is therefore liable, whether owner of the dam or not, to the plaintiff, for the injury caused by this nuisance. The ultimate conclusion of the court is this: The defendant drew off the water of Long pond, as alleged, and such acts constituted and created a nuisance, and entitled the plaintiff to damages on account of the appreciable injury thereby caused her property. Upon the trial the defendant claimed and asked the court to rule that the law is so that where, in the natural and necessary use of a mill pond, it is necessary in the summer months so to draw down the water as to expose some portions of the bottom of the pond, persons who purchase property and live near the pond after it has been established and used cannot object to such use on the ground that bad odors arise from such use. The court unqualifiedly overruled this claim, and in doing so plainly erred. Bierce v. Sharon Electric Light Co. 73 Conn. 300, 47 Atl. 324; State v. Sunapee Dam Co. 70 N. H. 458, 59 L. R. A. 55, 50 Atl. 108. We think this error was material, and seriously injured the defendant.

The conclusion of the court subjects the defendant's property to diminution or destruction, because its continued existence is inconsistent with the full enjoyment by the plaintiff of her property, and because, when such inconsistency exists between property such as the defendant's (i. e., a dam and water privilege) and property such as the plaintiff's (that is, land in the neighborhood of a mill and water privilege), the former property must be held and enjoyed in subordination to the latter. It is evident that in reaching such a conclusion the law determining the character and incidents of the defendant's property should be accurately understood and correctly applied. The owner of land on both sides and bed of a natural stream of water not navigable may erect a dam to create power to operate mills and machinery. He cannot do this so as to interfere with the right of proprietors of lands below to the natural flow of the water, nor so as to throw back the water upon the lands of those above without their consent; but, subject to these limitations, he may detain the water by a dam so as to create an artificial pond or enlarge a natural one, and use the water thus stored for his own purposes. He may open his gates and use the water a few miles below as well as at the outlet of the dam. He may lease or grant the water to a lower riparian proprietor, and may use the water for any purpose, provided he does not thereby interfere with the rights of other proprietors, either above or below him. Such a dam and water privilege, with its incidental rights, constitutes property favored by the law since earliest times. Holyoke Water-Power Co. v. Lyman, 15 Wall. 500, 21 L. ed. 133; Smith v. Agawam Canal Co. 2 Allen, 356; Whittier v. Cocheo Mfg. Co. 9 N. H. 454, 458, 32 Am. Dec. 382; Nuttall v. Bracewell, L. R. 2 Exch. 1; Miner v. Gilmour, 33 L. T. 98. Not only has such property been always favored by the public policy of this state, but in later years the power of eminent domain has been pushed to its limits in authorizing the acquirement of such property through proceedings for condemnation. Assuming, for the moment, that such property may become, by the mere fact of its existence, the occasion of a private nuisance injurious to the property of neighboring landowners, so as to make its owner liable in damages to such landowners, especially when he is chargeable with malicious or wanton disregard of their interests, it is evident that in determining the question of such liability all the facts and circumstances must be weighed in their relation to the law which establishes a dam and water privilege as property, and defines its incidents. In the present case it is apparent from the action of the court in overruling the defendant's claim of law, as well as from the whole finding, that the law relative to this peculiar property in a dam and water privilege was not duly regarded in drawing the inferences from evidence and from the facts found as well as in reaching the ultimate conclusion. The error complained of indicates that the material conclusions of the court may have been, and probably were, influenced to the detriment of the defendant by an erroneous view of the law, and must therefore be treated as vitiating the whole judgment.

It was suggested in argument that the paragraph in the finding which states that in the year 1900, with his own hands, the defendant opened the gate of the dam, and permitted the water stored to flow out to the same extent and with similar effect upon the plaintiff's property, as in the former years mentioned, for no apparent purpose unless to assert his legal right to draw off the water as against any legal right in the plaintiff to have the water stored to the height of the dam, is sufficient to support at least that part of the judgment which gives the plaintiff damages. It may be doubtful whether, upon the pleadings, the defendant having established his ownership of the dam and water privilege, and that during the years 1897, 1898, and 1899 he had, in pursuance of his legal right, used the water drawn from the dam for operating mills located at a point 2 miles below its outlet and owned by the Sharon Electric Light Company, which paid him for the power, the court could properly render judgment only for the damage that might have been caused by this single act; but, if it had the power, it has not rendered such a judgment. The judgment for damages covers the injury to the plaintiff's property caused by the defendant's drawing off the water from his dam from 1897 to 1900, and it is evident that the erroneous view of the law which influenced the court in drawing inferences from testimony and in reaching the conclusion that the property of the plaintiff was injured and the defendant was liable for this injury affected its conclusion in respect to damage, including any that may have been suffered in the year 1900.

There is error. The judgment of the Superior Court is reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings according to law.

All concur.

Bianca RINCICOTTI, Admrx., etc.,

v.

JOHN J. O'BRIEN CONTRACTING COMPANY, Appt.

(77 Conn. 617.)

1. There is no distinction between the construction of the appliances furnished for the use of a servant and their maintenance, so far as the right of the master is concerned to absolve himself from liability for injuries by furnishing suitable materials to a competent person, to be used for that purpose.
2. The proximate cause of the injury of a servant by the fall of a derrick because of the breaking of a spliced rope is not the failure to insert thimbles into the loops of the splice, but the failure to inspect the rope for the purpose of determining its condition, and to repair it after it has become chafed and worn by use, where there is nothing to show that the splice is not sufficiently strong, without the thimbles, to do the work required of it, but fails because of the wear due to continued use.

NOTE.—As to master's duty to inspect appliances and places of work, including right to delegate such duty, see also note to Walkowski v. Penokee & G. Consol. Mines, 41 L. R. A. 74, 109, and the later cases, in this series, of McGuire v. Bell Teleph. Co. 52 L. R. A. 437; Smith v. Erie R. Co. 59 L. R. A. 302; and Twombly v. Consolidated Electric Light Co. 64 L. R. A. 551.

As to duty to inspect material to be used in bridge, see Lafayette Bridge Co. v. Olsen, 54 L. R. A. 33.
69 L. R. A.

3. The master is bound to make reasonable inspection of appliances used to aid his servants in their work, and he cannot relieve himself from the consequences of his failure to do so by delegating the duty to competent employees.

4. The admission of evidence of the age, at the time of death, of the parents of one killed by accident, for the purpose of showing his expectation of life, although erroneous because of remoteness, is not ground for new trial.

(March 9, 1905.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Fairfield County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of her husband. Affirmed.

Statement by Prentice, J.:

The defendant was engaged in building a stone retaining wall along the Naugatuck river, in Ansonia. One Toole was the superintendent of the work, and had charge thereof and of the men employed upon it. The plaintiff's intestate was a mason so employed, and foreman of the masons. For the prosecution of the work the defendant used a heavy steam-hoisting derrick, having a mast 50 feet in height and a boom 54 feet long, operated by what is known as a "bull wheel." By its use the defendant was enabled to lift the heavy blocks of stone, of which the wall was constructed, from the cars, and swing them into position upon the wall. The derrick rested upon a foundation prepared for it, and was supported in its upright position by twisted wire cables which radiated in various directions from the top of the mast to secure points, where they were fastened. As the construction of the wall progressed so far that the boom would no longer serve at the point where stones were desired to be placed, the derrick was moved and relocated. Work upon the wall had been in process for some time when the intestate received his injuries, and two such relocations had been made. Toole was an expert derrick rigger, and it was a part of his duty, and his duty alone, to take care and charge of the derrick, including its locations, removals, and preparation for use. The masons had no duty in that regard. At the time of the last location of the derrick, which, like the others, was made under Toole's direction, and about one month prior to the accident, it was supported in position by six cables, varying from 186 to 413 feet in length. One of them was 360 feet in length, and extended from the masthead across the river, where it was made fast to a tree. Owing to the distance which this cable had in the former locations of the derrick been required to span, Toole had spliced it. The new conditions necessitated the same extension, and the spliced cable was used, the point of splicing being about 15 or 20 feet from the tree and across the river. The splice was made by doubling back the end of each piece of the cable, inserting one of the loops thus formed into the other, and fastening each, and thus doubled back to the cable by iron clamps of approved design. Interlocked loops were thus made. As the result of the use of the derrick after the splicing, and the constant strain and friction at the points of contact within the loops, these parts of the cable had, before the accident, become chafed and worn, and some of the strands had parted. At the time of the accident the derrick was being used to carry a stone into position. When the stone was in mid air, said cable parted at the worn and weakened part within one of the loops. As the result, the derrick fell, striking the intestate. Toole never at any time inspected the cable to ascertain its condition. In making cable splicings such as have been described, it is customary and prudent to place a device called a "thimble" in each of the loops in such manner as to furnish the bearing in both directions. By the use of the thimbles the cables are prevented from bending as sharply as they otherwise would, the tension is distributed, and the friction and chafing obviated. Added strength and durability are thus obtained. There were suitable thimbles furnished by the defendant in a chest upon or near the premises, which fact was known to Toole.

Messrs. Seymour C. Loomis and Earnest C. Simpson for appellant.

Messrs. John J. Cullinan and Stiles Judson, Jr., for appellee:

The test as to whether one acts as a vice principal or as a fellow servant is the nature of the duties to be performed, and not the grade of employment.

Sullivan v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 62 Conn. 216, 25 Atl. 711; McElligott v. Randolph, 61 Conn. 157, 29 Am. St. Rep. 181, 22 Atl. 1094; Jackson v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. 43 W. Va. 380, 46 L. R. A. 337, 27 S. E. 278, 31 S. E. 258; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 387, 37 L. ed. 781, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 914.

The duty of the master is not discharged by anything short of actual performance.

McElligott v. Randolph, 61 Conn. 157, 29 Am. St. Rep. 181, 22 Atl. 1094.

Until the agent in fact acts up to the limit of the duty of his master to act, the master's duty is not done.

Wilson v. Willimantic Linen Co. 50 Conn. 433, 47 Am. Rep. 653; Laning v. New York 69 L. R. A.

O. R. Co. 49 N. Y. 521, 10 Am. Rep. 417; Hough v. Texas & P. R. Co. 100 U. S. 218, 25 L. ed. 615; Davis v. Central Vermont R. Co. 55 Vt. 84, 45 Am. Rep. 590; Ford v. Fitchburg R. Co. 110 Mass. 260, 14 Am. Rep. 598; Brodeur v. Valley Falls Co. 16 R. I. 450, 17 Atl. 54; Wood, Mast. & S. p. 871.

The servant is not bound to inspect appliances before using them, but assumes the risk only of such defects as are in fact known to him, or are patent and obvious.

Darrigan v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 52 Conn. 299, 52 Am. Rep. 590; Gerrish v. New Haven Ice Co. 63 Conn. 16, 27 Atl. 235; Kelly v. New Haven S. B. Co. 74 Conn. 347, 57 L. R. A. 494, 92 Am. St. Rep. 220, 50 Atl. 871.

The duty of maintaining sound instrumentalities while in use by the servant, which involves the duty of reasonable inspection, is obligatory on the part of the master.

Moore v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 85 Mo. 588; Bailey v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co. 139 N. Y. 302, 34 N. E. 918.

The duty of inspection is affirmative, and must be continuously fulfilled and positively performed.

Brann v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 53 Iowa, 595, 36 Am. Rep. 243, 6 N. W. 5; Chesson v. John L. Roper Lumber Co. 118 N. C. 59, 23 S. E. 925; Ocean S. S. Co. v. Matthews, 86 Ga. 418, 12 S. E. 632; Armour v. Brazeau, 191 Ill. 117, 60 N. E. 904; Comben v. Belleville Stone Co. 59 N. J. L. 226, 36 Atl. 473.

This is a nonassignable duty, and cannot be delegated so as to release the master from responsibility.

Louisville, E. & St. L. Consol. R. Co. v. Utz, 133 Ind. 265, 32 N. E. 881; Babcock v. Old Colony R. Co. 150 Mass. 467, 23 N. E. 325; 1 Labatt, Mast. & S. p. 241; Jackson v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. 43 W. Va. 380, 46 L. R. A. 337, 27 S. E. 278, 31 S. E. 258.

Where the master assumes to furnish his servant a complete instrument or apparatus for the performance of his work, the servant has nothing to do with the question of the original sufficiency of its parts, or of their subsequent preservation, unless a defect is obvious.

Shanny v. Androscoggin Mills. 66 Me. 420; Hough v. Texas & P. R. Co. 100 U. S. 213, 25 L. ed. 612; Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. Kisel, 25 C. C. A. 566, 51 U. S. App. 265, 80 Fed. 470; Eureka Co. v. Bass, 81 Ala. 200, 60 Am. Rep. 152, 8 So. 216; Jager v. California Bridge Co. 104 Cal. 542, 38 Pac. 413; Wells v. Coe, 9 Colo. 159, 11 Pac. 50; Snyder v. Cleeland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 60 Ohio St. 487, 54 N. E. 475; 1 Labatt, Mast. & S. p. 228; 1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 194; McNeil v. The Para. 56 Fed. 241; Duer v. Pittsburg Bridge Co. 198 Pa. 183, 47 Atl.

979; Donnelly v. Booth Bros. & H. I. Granite Co. 90 Me. 111, 37 Atl. 874; McGuigan v. Beatty, 186 Pa. 329, 40 Atl. 490; Bier v. Standard Mfg. Co. 130 Pa. 447, 18 Atl. 637; Baker v. Allegheny Valley R. Co. 95 Pa. 211, 40 Am. Rep. 634; Yaw v. Whitmore, 46 App. Div. 422, 61 N. Y. Supp. 733, Affirmed in 167 N. Y. 605, 60 N. E. 1123; Briddy v. The Persian Monarch, 49 Fed. 609; Ashley Wire Co. v. Mercier, 61 Ill. App. 487; Tangney v. J. B. Wilson & Co. 87 Mich. 455, 49 N. W. 666; Honifus v. Chambersburg Engineering Co. 196 Pa. 47, 46 Atl. 259; Woods v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 108 Mich. 397, 66 N. W. 328; Houston v. Brush, 66 Vt. 332, 29 Atl. 380; Fuller v. Jewett, 80 N. Y. 46, 36 Am. Rep. 575; Brennan v. Berlin Iron Bridge Co. 74 Conn. 389, 50 Atl. 1030.

The intestate, as a stone mason, intent only upon transferring the stones from the car to the wall and there laying them, had nothing to do with the construction, inspection, and repair of the appliances that were being operated.

1 Labatt, Mast. & S. p. 595; Benzing v. Steinway & Sons, 101 N. Y. 547, 5 N. E. 449; 1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 185b; Crowley v. Cutting, 165 Mass. 436, 43 N. E. 197.

The intestate had a right to assume that Toole, as a competent and skilled derrick rigger, had properly secured the derrick, and that it was safe to engage in the work of operating the same.

Buzzell v. Laconia Mfg. Co. 48 Me. 113, 77 Am. Dec. 212; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Archibald, 170 U. S. 665, 42 L. ed. 1188, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 777; Delude v. St. Paul City R. Co. 55 Minn. 63, 56 N. W. 461; Bergin v. Southern New England Teleph. Co. 70 Conn. 65, 39 L. R. A. 192, 38 Atl. 888.

The Massachusetts rule that supplying loose appliances and proper supervision by a competent representative will exempt the master from liability stands alone.

1 Labatt, Mast. & S. 1639; 1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 177; Darrigan v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 52 Conn. 305, 52 Am. Rep. 590.

Prentice, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff's intestate, while acting as the defendant's servant, received injuries, from which he died, by reason of the fall of an instrumentality used in the work upon which he was employed. The injuries were not occasioned by any negligence in the use of the instrumentality. The instrumentality was not one whose construction, preparation, adaptation for use, care, or inspection entered into the performance of the intestate's work or duty, or was it an incident of it. Fraser v. Red River Lumber 69 L. R. A.

Co. 45 Minn. 235, 47 N. W. 785; Burns v. Sennett, 99 Cal. 363, 33 Pac. 916; Robinson v. George F. Blake Mfg. Co. 143 Mass. 528, 10 N. E. 314; Richards v. Hayes, 17 App. Div. 422, 45 N. Y. Supp. 234; Labatt, Mast. & S. § 589. It was a mechanical apparatus furnished by the master to co-operate with and facilitate the intestate and his fellow masons in the work upon which they were engaged. The duty of the defendant as master, under such circumstances and in respect to such an instrumentality, was to use reasonable care to provide one which should be reasonably safe for the work to which it was to be put. McElligott v. Randolph, 61 Conn. 157, 29 Am. St. Rep. 181, 22 Atl. 1094; Gerrish v. New Haven Ice Co. 63 Conn. 16, 27 Atl. 235. This duty was a continuing one, and included that of maintenance. Hough v. Texas & P. R. Co. 100 U. S. 213, 25 L. ed. 612; Shanny v. Androscoggin Mills, 66 Me. 420; Ford v. Fitchburg R. Co. 110 Mass. 240, 14 Am. Rep. 598; Tierney v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 33 Minn. 311, 53 Am. Rep. 35, 23 N. W. 229; Indiana Car Co. v. Parker, 100 Ind. 181; Moore v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 85 Mo. 588; Bailey v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co. 139 N. Y. 302, 34 N. E. 918. The duty of maintenance necessarily involved that of reasonable inspection and repair. Union P. R. Co. v. Daniels, 152 U. S. 684, 38 L. ed. 597, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 756; Tierney v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 33 Minn. 311, 53 Am. Rep. 35, 23 N. W. 229; Armour v. Brazeau, 191 Ill. 117, 60 N. E. 904; Comben v. Belleville Stone Co. 59 N. J. L. 226, 36 Atl. 473; Munch v. Great Northern R. Co. 75 Minn. 61, 77 N. W. 541; Louisville, E. & St. L. Consol. R. Co. v. Utz, 133 Ind. 265, 32 N. E. 881; Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Burnett, 88 Va. 538, 14 S. E. 372.

The defendant says that the cause of the accident was the failure to insert thimbles in the loops made in splicing the cable, and argues therefrom that, as their absence was due to the failure of Toole, the superintendent, to insert them, and as the defendant had provided sufficient thimbles to be used when needed, it had not failed in its duty as master, and the intestate's injuries were the consequence of the negligence of Toole in respect to his service as the intestate's fellow servant. This contention is unsound in both its premise and the conclusions drawn therefrom. It is enough for our present purpose to pursue at length the first of these dual propositions. In thus limiting our discussion, however, we do not wish our silence to imply our assent to the legal principle which, in so far at least as maintenance and repair are concerned, is vigorously urged upon us, to wit, that a master upon whom rests the duty of using reasonable care to provide and maintain for the use of his servants in their work reasonably safe mechanical instrumentalities may perform that duty by furnishing to a fit and competent agent the materials or parts out of or by means of which the instrumentality as a working entity can be either created or maintained, and that for the shortcomings of the agent in his utilization or failure to utilize this material or these parts the master assumes no responsibility. In so far as the defendant's contention assumes that there is a difference, as respects the master's duty, between construction and maintenance, it is without foundation. To whatever extent the contention is carried, it also involves principles which have had the repeated disapproval of this court. The master's duty requires performance. It may be performed in person, or by one delegated to that end. In either event, the thing required must be done. Delegation to a fit and competent agent is not sufficient. Wilson v. Willimantic Linen Co. 50 Conn. 433, 47 Am. Rep. 653; McElligott v. Randolph, 61 Conn. 157, 29 Am. St. Rep. 181, 22 Atl. 1094; Gerrish v. New Haven Ice Co. 63 Conn. 16, 27 Atl. 235.

Let us return now to the defendant's premise that the proximate cause of the injury complained of was the superintendent's failure to place thimbles in the loops of the splice. It is doubtless true that, had thimbles been inserted in making the splice, the cables would not by use have become so worn and defective at the points of tension that they would have parted when they did. To this extent the failure to insert the thimbles was without doubt the cause—but the remote one—of the accident. The proximate cause, however, was the worn and defective condition into which the cables had been suffered to lapse by being used for a considerable period of time without such repair or replacement as was necessary, in view of the way in which the splice was made, to maintain the requisite condition of strength. The cable as spliced was not able to stand as great a strain as one spliced with thimbles, but it does not appear that without them it was not originally sufficiently strong to do the work required of it. Its original strength became dissipated as the consequence of wear and tear and a failure in the duty of maintenance. The worn and weakened condition which resulted may not have been known to the defendant or its superintendent, and apparently was not, as it is found that no inspection was made. But that is of no legal consequence, since it is found that it was so apparent that an inspection would have revealed it. In other words, the failure which was the true proximate cause of the parting of the cable, and thus of the intestate's injuries, was one in the master's duty of reasonable inspection. The manner of the splice was known. For Toole made it; the consequences thereon of wear were palpable, and therefore such as the defendant and Toole were bound to anticipate. The duty of inspection was one to be exercised in the light of these conditions. The facts, therefore, disclose a clear failure on the part of the defendant, as master, in the performance of its duty towards the intestate.

If it be suggested that the cable was, by the manner of the splice, inherently weak and thus defective, the master is not thereby exonerated. In that event, his failure in the duty of using reasonable care to provide reasonably safe instrumentalities only assumes a slightly different aspect; but it is the same duty. The duty of the master is the same in its essence whether it, in a given case, assumes the immediate form of original provision, maintenance, or inspection as an incident of maintenance. All are involved in the general duty of provision, which, as we have seen is a continuing one and an unchanging one.

Three rulings upon the admission of evidence are assigned as erroneous. Only one is pursued in the brief. The intestate's widow being upon the stand, the court permitted the plaintiff to ask her the age of his parents at their death, as bearing upon his health and constitution. Her reply was seventy-eight and seventy years, respectively. Rulings of this character, where the vice, if any, in the evidence offered, is remoteness, can seldom be of sufficient consequence to warrant the granting of a new trial. Much must be left to the discretion of the court. State v. Kelly, 77 Conn. 266, 58 Atl. 705. This ruling furnishes no exception to the general rule.

None of the corrections which the defendant claims should be made in the finding assumes any importance, in view of our conclusions.

There is no error.

All concur.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

Re ESTATE OF Thomas Mifflin JONES, Jr., Deceased.

(211 Pa. 364.)

1. The procuring, by the legatee, of an absolute divorce subsequent to the execution of the will, does not cause the lapse of a legacy which testator creates for his "wife" by name.
2. The granting of an absolute divorce does not revoke by implication a legacy in the will of the husband in favor of the wife.

(Mitchell, Ch. J., dissents.)

(April 10, 1905.)

NOTE.—Effect of divorce to revoke gift by will.

- I. Introductory, 940.
- II. When status mentioned in will controls.
 - a. In general, 940.
 - b. When legatee is mentioned by name, 941.
- III. Effect of lapse of time between divorce and testator's death, 942.
- IV. Effect of property settlement, 943.

I. Introductory.

From the few decisions upon this question in England and in this country, it is plain that the courts, while taking into consideration all relevant circumstances tending to throw light upon the testator's intention, refrain as a rule from interfering with the right of a divorced legatee to take under a will executed prior to the granting of the divorce, unless from the language of the will it is, in the court's opinion, obviously testator's intention that the gift shall not go to a legatee occupying the changed relation resulting from a divorce, or unless, from some other circumstance, the court is irresistibly convinced that not to decree an implied revocation in regard to the divorced legatee on account of the divorce would be to allow something entirely contrary to the testator's desire and intention. Under such circumstances only is the doctrine of implied revocation applied.

This, it seems, is the proper course, for, if a testator had notice of divorce proceedings affecting a legatee, and thereafter made no change in his will regarding him or her when there was sufficient time and opportunity in which to do so, the presumption is strong that his will expressed his wishes and intentions, and any interference by the courts, except under the circumstances above indicated, would be an unwarranted and unjustifiable extension of the doctrine of implied revocation.

II. When status mentioned in will controls.

a. In general.

While there is strong ground for the presumption that if, after a divorce, there was opportunity and time in which a testator might have changed his will in regard to the divorced legatee, and omitted to do so, he did not care to make any change, on the other 60 L. R. A.

A PPEAL by the Fidelity Title & Trust Company, guardian of Thomas M. Jones, 3d, from a decree of the Orphans' Court of Allegheny County dismissing exceptions to the allowance of a claim to a legacy under the will of Thomas Mifflin Jones, Jr., deceased. Affirmed.

The amount for distribution was in the neighborhood of $600,000. A claim to share in this under the will of the testator was presented by his former wife.

Miller, J., the auditing judge, after setting out the stipulation as to the facts, continued as follows:

"The question presented is new. Careful hand, there is the possibility that he might have labored under the supposition that the changed status of the legatee, resulting from the divorce, would of itself revoke his gift. When, however, the legatee is specifically named, although also referred to as "husband" or "wife," the testator would hardly, in so important a matter, be justified in resting upon his belief that his gift had been revoked by virtue of the divorce proceedings alone, when he could so easily, if he had desired, have made changes which, without question, would set forth his intentions; and the application by the courts of the doctrine of implied revocation would, under such circumstances, seem to be unwarranted. Re JONES and the similar earlier decisions (II., b) show that the courts have proceeded upon the above principle.

But if the legatee is not mentioned by name in the will, or even, if so mentioned, is further described as "widow," or otherwise referred to in such a way that the status of marriage is, so far as can be judged from the language of the will itself, intended to exist as a condition of the gift, then there is a greater possibility that the testator might have omitted to act, under the supposition that the divorce of itself operated to revoke his gift; and under such circumstances the courts have, in a few instances, applied the doctrine of implied revocation.

Thus, a will providing that, in case the wife of testatrix's son should survive him, an annual payment should be made to her during her widowhood, was construed to mean that the wife must occupy that status or condition at the time of the son's death so as to become his widow, in order to benefit under the will; and, therefore, that a decree of divorce operated to defeat her rights therein. Bell v. Smalley, 45 N. J. Eq. 478, 18 Atl. 70.

The bequest of an annuity to a wife by name, "so long as she should continue my widow and unmarried," was held to be rendered inoperative by a decree subsequently obtained by her rendering the marriage null ab initio, on the ground that the status of widowhood was a condition of inception and a measure of the duration of the gift. Boddington v. Clairat, L. R. 25 Ch. Div. 683, following the lower court decision reported in L. R. 22 Ch. Div. 597, 48 L. T. N. S. 110.

But the decisions right at this point are not harmonious. Thus, where a will provided research shows no adjudication by the supreme court of this state under the same conditions.

"Counsel for the guardian contend that, owing to the changed relations of the testator after his will was made, and the decree of divorce was entered against him, absolutely severing and making null and void the marriage relationship, that the law implies a revocation of his will as to this bequest; that the presumption is that he could not have intended the disposition of his property, made before his relations with his then wife were changed, to still continue after the relations by decree of absolute divorce were severed; that the bequest of one third of his estate was not to Mary Brown Jones as an individual only, but to Mary Brown Jones, his wife; that the bequest so made to her was by reason of the marriage relation.

"The contention of counsel for the claimant is that, as to the identification of the beneficiary, the will speaks from its date when the claimant was testator's wife; that the word 'wife' identifies the beneficiary, but does not imply any condition; that the divorce did not render the legacy either void or lapsed; and that the lapse of time between the date of divorce and testator's death—about twenty months—without changing the will is conclusive of his fixed intention to confer upon her the benefit given by the will. Implied revocation of wills is an ingrafted heritage from the common law. When the conditions after the

for the payment of an income to a son, or, in case of his death his wife surviving him, to "the widow" of the son so long as she should so remain, it was held that the words, "his wife" and "his widow" referred to the woman who occupied that relation at the time the will was made, notwithstanding they were subsequently divorced and the son married another, who survived him. Davis v. Kerr, 3 App. Div. 322, 38 N. Y. Supp. 887.

Somewhat similarly, under a will devising property in trust to a daughter, and after her death "in trust for any husband with whom she might intermarry, if he should survive her," one who had married the daughter, obtained a divorce from her, and subsequently remarried, was held entitled to take under the will, since he fulfilled all the words of the bequest, there being no expression of any intention upon the part of the testator that he must be her husband at the date of death in order to take Bullmore v. Wynter, L. R. 22 Ch. Div. 619, 48 L. T. N. S. 309. This case, however, was disapproved in Hitchins v. Morrisson, L. R. 40 Ch. Div. 30, which held that, under a will bequeathing a share of testator's residuary personal estate in trust for his son and after his death in trust to pay the income thereof for life to any wife of the son, a wife from whom the son had obtained an absolute divorce cannot claim a life interest, although the son died without having remarried, since the life interest was to commence at the death of the son, and she was not at that moment in the status and position of a wife.

b. When legatee is mentioned by name.

If, however, the testator, in making the bequest, mentions by name the husband or wife who is the legatee of the gift, besides referring to him or her as "husband" or "wife," it seems justifiable, from the decisions as they stand, together with RE JONES, to lay down as a rule that, under such circumstances, the fact of a subsequent divorce will not affect the legatee's right to benefit under the will, since the words "wife" or "husband" will be regarded as falsa demonstratio, and not words implying a condition that the legatee must occupy that relation in order to receive the gift. This conclusion has been reached in a number of decisions.

Thus, a legacy willed to his wife by name, L. R. A.

by a testator, was upheld, although she subsequently obtained a decree declaring the marriage null. This decision was upon the ground that the gift of the legacy to her qua wife was only a falsa demonstratio, the description of wife being merely to point out the individual. Boddington v. Clariat, L. R. 25 Ch. Div. 685, following the lower court decision reported in L. R. 22 Ch. Div. 597.

So where, by a will, testator bequeathed an annuity to his son and son's wife jointly, and, in case his son should die leaving "Eliza, his wife, him surviving," to her as long as she should continue unmarried, the fact that the son obtained an absolute divorce from his wife was held not to prevent her from receiving the annuity bequeathed in the will so long as she remained unmarried, since she was the person clearly described and designated therein. Knox v. Wells, 48 L. T. N. S. 653, 31 Week. Rep. 559.

And where a will provided for the payment of an income to testator's nephew by name, and "Rebecca, his wife," a subsequent divorce will not operate so as to effect the wife's right to benefit under the will, since she is distinctly named therein, and the words "his wife" are to be taken as mere words of description. Bullock v. Zillely, 1 N. J. Eq. 489.

And so, a bequest of the income of a certain sum to be paid to the husband of the testator's daughter if he should survive her, the will mentioning him by name, remains a valid and subsistent trust although the husband and wife were divorced. The court says: "We may conjecture, but we cannot be certain, that the inducing cause of the provision for Thomas Waller was that he was the husband of the testator's daughter. The relationship, however, could not have been the sole motive, since the gift is to the individual by name, and not to him simply as husband." Mellon's Estate, 28 W. N. C. 120.

And similarly, where a testator bequeathed money in trust for his son, and, in case of the latter's death, that the trust be continued for the use and benefit of the son's wife, naming her; and where, during the testator's lifetime, the son and wife were divorced upon the wife's application,—such divorce does not operate to prevent her from receiving the benefit of the trust so provided for by will. Sharpe's Estate, 15 W. N. C. 419. The fact that the wife was mentioned in the will by name, and making of the will produce a change in the testator's previous obligations and duties there may arise a reasonable presumption of a change of intention in his mind. 4 Kent, Com. 54. The doctrine is stated and adopted in Young's Appeal, 39 Pa. 115, 80 Am. Dec. 513, as follows: 'If the testator's circumstances be so altered that new moral testamentary duties have accrued to him subsequently to the date of the will, such as may be presumed to produce a change of intention, this will amount to an implied revocation. . . . This principle gives the fundamental reason of all the positive rules of law we have on this subject. . . . The positive rules are given sometimes by statute and sometimes by judicial decision.' But the fact in this case involved an antenuptial settlement and the subsequent birth of issue after date of the will. The revocation of the will under the facts does not apply here. Lansing v. Haynes, 95 Mich. 16, 35 Am. St. Rep. 545, 54 N. W. 699, is the leading case apparently sustaining the guardian's contention, and is worthy of extended notice. The parties were married in 1864. The wife obtained an absolute decree of divorce in 1889. The husband died in 1891. They executed mutual wills in 1881, identical in language, each devising all their property to the other. She, by agreement, became custodian of both wills until the divorce, when she destroyed hers, and she retained his, which action was unknown to him. In 1889, pending the divorce suit, she and he made a division of his property, he conveying to her certain real estate, she releasing her interest in the remainder to him. At the same time an agreement was executed by them in which he conveyed to her certain personal property. She released him from all demand of every sort, agreeing to pay her own expenses in the divorce proceedings, it being stated in the above-recited agreement that it and the deeds recited were intended as a property settlement between them. After his death she probated his will, and under it claimed the husband's estate. Her claim was denied, the court saying, inter alia: "The natural presumption arising from these changed relations is the reasonable one, and the one which in law implies a revocation. . . . To hold the will unrevoked under these circumstances would be repugnant to that common sense and reason upon which law is based." The foregoing is one of the few adjudicated cases involving the effects of a divorce upon the precise point at issue; but it differs from this, that there had been a settlement of the property rights of the parties; the court, after commenting on the effect of divorce and change of relation, saying: 'It is not, in my judgment, the

was the only person answering to that description at the date of the will, was one of the reasons which appealed to the court in coming to the above conclusion. It is said: "The person intended by testator was his daughter-in-law, Ada, and to add the word 'wife' was merely to still more particularly identify her. It was to designate the person, and not to imply a condition, viz., that she must be the wife of the son at the time the bequest to her took effect. She was his wife at the date of the gift to her, and that is all that is necessary."

So, in Charlton v. Miller, 27 Ohio St. 298, 22 Am. Rep. 307, on the same day, but prior to their marriage, the prospective husband made a will giving to his intended wife by name a certain sum. She subsequently abandoned him, whereupon he obtained a divorce. The bequest to the wife was upheld, partly upon the ground that it was absolute and unconditional in its terms, and was not conditioned upon her survivorship as his widow.

But if the legatee is referred to as "widow," although also by name, that seems to be regarded as a designation by the testator of the status which the legatee must occupy in order to receive the gift. Thus, in one case where the bequest was to the wife by name "so long as she shall continue my widow and unmarried," a decree obtained by her rendering the marriage void ab initio was held to prevent her from receiving the gift on the ground that the status of widowhood was a condition of the inception and measure of the duration of the gift. Boddington v. Charlrat, L. R. 25 Ch. Div. 685, following the lower 69 L. R. A.

court decision reported in L. R. 22 Ch. Div. 597.

III. Effect of lapse of time between divorce and testator's death.

The fact that, after the granting of the divorce with the knowledge of the testator, he had ample time before his death to change his will in regard to the legatee affected by the divorce, is a circumstance which is justly regarded as of great weight in support of the conclusion that he desired the provisions carried out which were embodied in his will at the time of his death.

A husband bequeathed to his wife a specified sum payable annually in lieu of dower. The following year he obtained a divorce from her, and died five years thereafter. In holding that the gift to the wife was not revoked by the divorce granted, the court declared that coverture could not be said to have been the sole motive or inducement to the will, since, after that was taken away, it still remained true that the legatee had been the testator's wife, and was the mother of his children; and, adding to this the further facts which existed in the case, that the testator was possessed of a large estate, the provision for the wife being comparatively a mere pittance, and that he lived nearly five years after the divorce, making no change in his will, the conclusion was declared well-nigh irresistible that he did not intend to deprive his former wife of the provision he had made for her. Card v. Alexander, 48 Conn. 492, 40 Am. Rep. 187.

natural presumption that, after the testator had settled with her, had conveyed to her a good share of his property, and they by agreement had terminated all their property as well as their marital relations, the will executed nearly ten years before should remain in force and operate upon his death as a conveyance of the remainder of his property to her to the exclusion of his heirs.'

"Our statutes provide for the revocation of wills—as to real estate by some other will or codicil in writing, or other writing declaring the same, by burning, canceling, obliterating, or destroying the same; as to personal estate in the same manner, except, in addition, by a nuncupative will, made under the same circumstances, committed to writing in the lifetime of the testator, so read to and allowed by him; and by the marriage, subsequent to the making of a will, of a man leaving a widow and child or widow or child or children; and by the subsequent marriage of a single woman who had made her will. The statutes are silent as to the revocation of wills in any other manner. The language that 'no will shall be revoked,' except as therein provided, indicates a strong implication that any other revocation is prohibited. In Walker v. Hall, 34 Pa. 483, the court, after declaring the well-recognized rules of revocation, continues: 'It is clear, therefore, that all our rules in such cases are statutory ones, established by the legislature, by which the common law has been either repealed or altered or enforced by positive legislative sanction, and therefore not open to the doctrine of implied presumption.' In Heise v. Heise, 31 Pa. 246, is said: 'Yet, under the 13th section, that which was once a perfect will must ever remain such unless repealed, altered, or destroyed in some one of the modes designated in the act. Those modes are exclusive of all others.' So, also, Dixon's Appeal, 55 Pa. 424. There is no doubt that as to the beneficiary intended this will speaks from its date. 2 Jarman, Wills, p. 320; Gardner, Wills, p. 432; Anshutz v. Miller, 81 Pa. 212. This person was Mary Brown Jones. The words 'my wife,' prefixed to the name, do not imply any condition. Theobald, Wills, p. 210. Testator did not stipulate that she should continue to be his wife while he lived, and his widow upon his death, as a condition precedent. The name will prevail if there is a person fully answering to it, even though there be a description and no one answers to it. 'The mere fact that a gift is made to a named legatee in a certain character, as, for instance, to my wife A, does not avoid the legacy, if the legatee does not happen to fill the character.' Theobald, Wills, p. 214. In Bullock v.

The fact that the will might easily have been expressly revoked, and that, on the contrary, the testator made no change in it for nearly five years after he was abandoned by his wife before he obtained a divorce from her, and more than four years after the divorce before his death, was regarded by the court as a strong reason in support of this conclusion upholding the bequest made in the will to the wife before the divorce was granted. Charlton v. Miller, 27 Ohio St. 298, 22 Am. Rep. 307.

So, the fact that testator survived the divorce some time, and died without making any alteration in his will, was one of the reasons which led the court to uphold the legacy in Sharpe's Estate, 15 W. N. C. 419.

IV. Effect of property settlement.

A settlement of property rights, made between the parties at the time of the divorce proceedings, is a circumstance which, in one instance at least, was deemed a strong element in favor of the implied revocation of the will.

Thus, the facts showed that a husband and wife while living together executed mutual wills identical in language, he devising all his property to her and she devising all her property to him. She took possession of both wills, and preserved them until a decree of divorce was rendered in her favor, after which she destroyed her will. At the time of the divorce proceedings a property settlement was had by which the husband conveyed to the wife personality and realty, in consideration of which she released him from all demands of every nature. In holding that the husband's will was revoked by implication of law on account of the changed relations of the parties, the court bases its conclusion largely upon the ground that the property settlement raised the natural presumption that the husband intended to make no further provision for his wife. It is said: "To hold the will unrevoked under these circumstances would be repugnant to that common sense and reason upon which law is based. I do not think the common law is so unbending as to lead to this result. . . . The natural presumption arising from these changed relations is the reasonable one, and the one which in law implies a revocation. The question is not to be controlled by a possible presumption, but by the reasonable presumption. The possibility, therefore, that the deceased might have desired that the remainder of his property should go to his divorced wife, cannot be considered in determining the question of an implied revocation in this case. Such disposition of his property would be unusual and contrary to common experience." Lansing v. Haynes, 95 Mich. 16, 35 Am. St. Rep. 545, 54 N. W. 699.

But in Baacke v. Baacke, 50 Neb. 18, 69 N. W. 303, the subsequent granting of a divorce to the wife of a testator, and the settlement of her property rights, it is declared, will not work a revocation of the will; whether it would revoke the will as to the wife's legacy is expressly not determined, since the question was not at issue.

M. M. M.

Zilley, 1 N. J. Eq. 489, testator directed interest to be paid to Thomas Bullock and Rebecca, his wife. They were divorced after testator died. Held, the word 'wife' was descriptive, designating the person, and that Rebecca took under the will. Judge Penrose, in Mellon's Estate, 28 W. N. C. 120: We may conjecture, but we cannot be certain, that the inducing cause of the provision for this claimant was that she was testator's wife. We do know she is the individual in testator's mind when the will was executed. The case of Charlton v. Miller, 27 Ohio St. 298, 22 Am. Rep. 307, arose under the provisions of testator's will bequeathing to 'my intended wife, Elizabeth Jennings, the sum of one thousand dollars, to be paid to her by my executors one year after my decease.' The execution of the will was followed by the marriage of testator with the legatee. Eight months thereafter she deserted him. Five years later he obtained a divorce on the ground of such desertion, and he died five years after the divorce. Held, in awarding the legacy to the claimant, that, 'undoubtedly the contemplated marriage of the parties and a desire to make a provision for the plaintiff as his wife were prompting causes of the will, but whether these were the only motives . . . we cannot tell. . . . To defeat the bequest we must then not only add to the will conditions that are neither expressed nor necessarily implied therein, but must rebut the presumption against any intended revocation of the will arising from the testator's acquiescence therein for nearly five years after he was abandoned by his wife before he obtained a divorce.' In Sharpe's Estate, 15 W. N. C. 419, testator created a trust for his son, he to receive the interest during life, and, in case of his death, for the use and benefit of his wife, Ada, and child, or children, in the same manner until the children attained lawful age, when the corpus was to be divided equally between the wife, Ada, and children, and in case of no surviving children the half part of the corpus to the son's wife, Ada, the other half to testator's surviving children. The will was dated October 5, 1871, at which time the testator was living with his son and the son's wife, Ada. On October 19, 1872, in the lifetime of the testator, upon the application of the wife, they were divorced a vinculo, having no children. The son was remarried, and died leaving a widow, Emma, and child. The divorced wife, Ada, remarried, and was living with her second husband at the time of the adjudication. The auditing judge, Hanna, P. J., awarded one half the corpus to the legatee, Ada, holding that the effect of the divorce was immaterial, referring to Burton v. Sturgeon, 69 L. R. A.

34 L. T. N. S. 706; Fitzgerald v. Chapman, 33 L. T. N. S. 587; Bullmore v. Wynter, 49 L. T. N. S. 309; the court further stating that, the testator survived the divorce making no alteration in his will, that the divorce did not convert the legacy into a lapsed or void legacy. The court, by Judge Penrose, affirmed the adjudication on an additional and different theory, but it did not disturb the conclusions stated by the auditing judge. In the recent case of Broirn v. Ancient Order of U. W. 208 Pa. 101, 57 Atl. 176, the facts, as stated in the opinion, are: John P. Brown, in October, 1877, became a member of a subordinate lodge of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and had a benefit certificate insuring his life in the sum of $2,000, payable at his death to Mattie Brown, his wife. In 1893 she obtained an absolute divorce from him, and in the same year he married Annie Z. Whaley. He died December 22, 1901, leaving to survive his widow, Annie Z. Brown, with one child: three children of his first wife, Mattie Brown, the beneficiary, who also survived, and who had possession of the benefit certificate. No change was made in the beneficiary. The decedent had contributed toward the support of his divorced wife and her children until his death. The judgment in favor of the divorced wife, the beneficiary named, was sustained. True, the facts are somewhat different, and the adjudication of the rights of the parties in passing upon the charter and laws of this beneficial organization are not similar to the questions raised under this will: still this similarity does exist: At the time she was made beneficiary she was his wife. She was within the class recognized by the laws of the society. At the time of his death she was not his wife. The divorce severed their relations. Brown could have changed his beneficiary. That he did not had its weight in the decision of the court, Mr. Justice Mestrezat saying: 'It is manifest . . . that John P. Brown intended that his first wife should continue to be the beneficiary . . . after they had been separated by the divorce proceedings. . . . The divorce was granted eight years before his death. Yet he allowed these years to go by without a surrender of the policy and a change of the beneficiary, or without disclosing any desire to make such change. . . . Under the circumstances it is evident that he never intended or desired to exercise his power of appointment, and thereby deprive his first wife of the benefit of the policy issued by the defendant company.'

"The contention that the divorce absolutely severed the marriage relations is correct. If this claim were based on that relation alone, it would be summarily dismissed.

But it arises from an entirely different cause. Its basis is the deliberate, mature act of the testator, made when the end of the marriage relation had begun; an act that he continued to ratify during the months that the divorce proceedings were pending, in every step of which he had notice, which act he continually reaffirmed during the long period after the divorce, ending only with his death. It does not follow that, because the divorce made these parties as strangers to each other, so far as their marital rights were concerned, that therefore the testator's deliberate act in making his devise, which did not necessarily depend on the marriage relation, a void or lapsed devise. The facts here do not bring this case within the rule that the law works a revocation where the changed relations raise a reasonable presumption of a change of intention in the testator's mind. To strike down his expressed intention, and substitute therefor a presumption of his change of intention, would lead to a result unwarranted in principle or precedent. Why the testator did not alter his will cannot be known. He had almost two years in which to change it. Although divorced, the devisee was not a stranger to him or to his blood. She was the mother of his only child. Both remained unmarried to his death. Her subsequent marriage did not, so far as the record shows, enter into any consideration, and is immaterial. There was no change or alteration in his estate when the will took effect. The principal object of his bounty, his only son, who takes the remainder (by far the greater portion) of his estate, still continued as the chief object of care. His will, made after the separation, taking effect at his death, is presumptive legal evidence that he was satisfied, and so intended the disposition of his property. He could, after the divorce, have made a new will with the same devise to the same person or any other devise to any other person: that he did not do so is persuasive that he intended the devise to Mary Brown Jones, his former wife, the mother of the child born to them both, to remain in effect. In Schouler on Wills, § 427, it is said: 'In short, revocation of a particular will by mere inference of law or presumption is limited to a very few instances in our modern practice; while, on the other hand, changes in the condition of the testator's affairs or through the mortal chances to which both he and his beneficiaries are exposed may work out a very different settlement and distribution of his estate after his death from what the will purported to arrange. Modern legislation itself repudiates in England and many of our states the whole theory of a presumed intention to 60 L. R. A.

revoke on the ground of an alteration in circumstances, and what is left of that theory aside from such statutes it would be very difficult to say.' To hold, under the facts in this case, that the divorce revoked this bequest, would not be in accordance with statutory regulation, and would be extending the doctrine of an implied revocation beyond any authoritative adjudication, and would be contrary to the express and implied intention of the testator."

Exceptions to this ruling were dismissed by the Orphans' Court, Hawkins, P. J., filing the following dissenting opinion:

"If Mr. Jones had died intestate, it must be conceded that this claimant would have had no standing here. Her right to claim in distribution would have depended on the continuance of the marital relation, and that had been terminated by her act as completely as though she had died before Mr. Jones. The law gave her the option of qualified or absolute divorce, and, having chosen the latter, she would voluntarily have relinquished her whole interest in his estate. The statute of divorce prescribes that, upon the dissolution of marriage, 'all and every the duties, rights, and claims accruing to either of the parties at any time theretofore in pursuance of said marriage shall cease and determine,' and to this extent is part of the law of distribution. And why not apply this broad principle to wills? Because, says counsel, there can be no implied revocation without statutory prescription; and divorce is not prescribed. But it is fully established that change of circumstances raises a presumption of change of intention, and works a revocation of a will; and this presumption is said to be so strong that it may not be rebutted by parol evidence, on the ground that this would be productive of the evils which were intended to be averted by the statute of fraud. Marshall v. Marshall, 11 Pa. 430. There are subordinate reasons everywhere, said the court in Young's Appeal, 39 Pa. 115, 80 Am. Dec. 513, varying the rule according to the laws of descent. The positive rules are given sometimes by statute and sometimes by judicial decision; and the most positive of them are sometimes changed merely incidentally by a change in the laws of descent. For the law does not do or require vain things. It has accordingly been held again and again that testator's sale of a thing specifically given is an implied revocation pro tanto, notwithstanding the absence of statutory prescription. 1 Wms. Exrs. 242. So, it was held in Carey's Appeal, 75 Pa. 201, that revocation may be implied from change of domicile. No one can doubt that refusal to accept a legacy will work revocation pro tanto. Re Bryce, 194 Pa. 135, 44 Atl. 1076. And so in Lee's Estate, 207 Pa. 218, 56 Atl. 425, it was held that a decree of divorce implied the revocation of a coverture trust upon the ground that 'the law has severed the matrimonial bond as effectually as death could have done.' If this claimant had died before Mr. Jones, there can be no doubt that the gift must have failed, for she would not have been within the statute of lapse; and divorce is the equivalent of death. If divorce be the equivalent of death in such will (Flory v. Becker, 2 Pa. St. 470, 45 Am. Dec. 610), it must be so in every will in which marital rights are involved. Implied revocations, said Chancellor Kent (4 Com. 521), 'are founded upon the reasonable presumption of an alteration of the testator's mind arising from circumstances since the making of the will, producing a change in his previous obligations and duties. . . . There is not, perhaps, any code of civilized jurisprudence in which this doctrine of implied revocation does not exist, and apply when the occurrence of new social relations and moral duties raises a necessary presumption of a change of intention in the testator.' It is immaterial, said the court in Young's Appeal, 39 Pa. 115, 80 Am. Dec. 513, whether this principle of the common law 'was derived from the Roman law or from our human instincts of justice; certainly it is now a legitimate element of our common law, and we would not have received it but for those instincts. The Romans received it before us because they were before us, and because they, too, were human.' It seems clear, therefore, that there may be implied revocation of wills outside of statutory prescription.

'The pivotal question, then, is whether or not the change of conditions since the making of this will produced such a change in testator's previous moral obligations and duties as raises a reasonable presumption of alteration of his mind, and implies revocation of the bequest which he had made to his wife? If the gift was made because of the existence of the marital relation, divorce would certainly take away the reason for it; and without the reason which inspired, the legatee could have no equity to claim it. It is immaterial whether her husband made a will or not; for, her application having been a voluntary and absolute renunciation of 'all and every the duties, rights, and claims accruing . . . in pursuance of the marriage,' she took the risk, and should abide the consequence. It is safe to assume that the gift would not have been made if the beneficiary had not stood in the relation of wife. It may be that Mr. Jones's misconduct was so gross as to justify his wife leaving him, and that under the spur of remorse he made the will as a peace offering. But it would be asking too much of human nature to expect the husband to make such a gift in anticipation of his wife's application for divorce and remarriage. 'The natural presumption arising from these changed relations,' said the court in Lansing v. Haynes, 95 Mich. 16, 35 Am. St. Rep. 545, 54 N. W. 609, 'is the reasonable one, and the one which in law implies a revocation. The question is not to be controlled by a possible presumption, but by the reasonable presumption. The possibility, therefore, that the deceased might have desired that the remainder of his property should go to his divorced wife, cannot be considered in determining the question of an implied revocation in this case. Such disposition of his property would be unusual, and contrary to common experience,' and the grounds of divorce may be such as to make her claim 'repugnant to that common sense and reason upon which the law is based.'

'There is obviously an essential difference between a gift to 'my wife, Mary Brown Jones,' and a gift to 'Mary Brown Jones,' without more. Irrespective of technical rules, no one would hesitate to infer that the first was descriptive of the marital relation, and imported on its face that the gift was made because of that relation; and that the latter was descriptive of the individual, and imported an absolute gift. The difference of description would imply difference in purpose. So there is a material difference between a gift to a testator's wife and a gift to the wife of another in this: That the former necessarily implies recognition of a marital duty, and is therefore dependent on its continued existence; while the latter implies no more than a purpose of identification of the object of bounty. The question in this case is not who was intended to take, —for Mr. Jones cannot be supposed to have had in contemplation a future wife,—but the character in which this legatee was intended to take, whether because of her marital relation to testator or simply as an individual. If given because of the marital relation, as the description imports, she can take it in no other character than as widow. It is suggested that to produce this effect an express condition of continuance of the marriage relation must have been attached to the gift: but there is no apparent reason why an implied condition should not be just as effective; and the form of this gift implies continuance. Not only does the description of the legatee import on its face a conditional gift, but the quantity of the gift implies that testator had in view the intestate law, and therefore marital right, as the reason. There is a well-settled principle that a widow will be presumed to take under the intestate law, rather than under her husband's will, where her interest is the same in either event. Davison's Appeal, 95 Pa. 394. The statute furnishes the general rule of distribution, and the will is simply declarative, and therefore no election is necessary; and, conversely, the testator must be presumed to have given in the same right in which this interest is taken by his widow, and therefore because of relationship to his widow as such. While it is said that this estate consisted in part of realty, the natural inference is that the gift of 'one third' of the estate, which consisted largely of personality, was suggested by the intestate law, and that consequently Mr. Jones had in view his wife's marital right under that law as distinguished from her individual right. It was also upon this principle of implied conformity to the intestate law that bequests to a mother and her children gave the mother but a life estate (Hague v. Hague, 161 Pa. 643, 41 Am. St. Rep. 900, 29 Atl. 261); and a legacy by a father to a child is understood as a portion, because it is a provision by a parent for his child (Miner v. Atherton, 35 Pa. 528). And it is upon a similar principle that a legacy is considered to have been given in satisfaction of a debt, rather than as an independent gift, where there is identity in amount. An intent to give because of the marital relation is therefore apparent.

"What Mr. Jones did or failed to do after the divorce was granted has nothing to do with the question involved here. If the divorce worked a revocation, it could not be republished in any manner other than that prescribed by the statute of wills. Many wills have been revoked pro tanto by implication—as, for example, in case of ademption—without a suggestion that testator was required to make it effectual by a written modification of his will. The case of Brown v. Ancient Order of U. W. 208 Pa. 101, 57 Atl. 176, is clearly distinguishable from this in that it was based upon a contract whose terms made change of beneficiary dependent on the act of the assured. Why Mr. Jones did not do what he was not required to do, the evidence fails to show. He may not have been in a condition after the divorce to have taken action, or he may have been advised or thought it unnecessary; but, in any event, he owed no duty to this claimant. It may be conceded that there are English cases inconsistent with this view,—some of them arising on marriage articles, and some on wills; but the cases even there were not harmonious. Vice Chancellor Malins said of Boreham v. Bignall, 8 Hare, 131, the leading case, that the court evidently thought, from the peculiar language used, that there was an intention to benefit the particular wife of his nephew, 60 L. R. A.

then living, and that the court might well have come to a different conclusion. In Garratt v. Niblock, 1 Russ. & M. 629, it was held that by the expression 'my beloved wife' testator must have meant a particular wife; and so in Re Bryan, 2 Sim. N. S. 103, the language of the gift was held to point out a particular husband. Re Lyne, L. R. 8 Eq. 65. On the other hand, where there was a devise to testator's nephew for life, with remainder to the nephew's wife for life, with remainder to children of his nephew by said wife, it was held to extend to the nephew's second wife. Peppin v. Bickford, 3 Ves. Jr. 570. In a somewhat similar case Vice Chancellor Malins reached the same conclusion. Attention is called to the fact that Sir George Jessel, master of the rolls in a subsequent case disapproved of this decision; but he was noted for his disregard of precedent, and his dictum might not stand against the ruling of a court of superior jurisdiction. Two cases were also cited on behalf of claimant from supreme court reports in this country against implied revocation by divorce; but an examination of these cases will show that they are not applicable here. In the first (Bullock v. Zille, 1 N. J. Eq. 489) the bequest was not to the testator's wife, but to his son, 'Thomas Bullock, and Rebecca, his wife,' and the decision was rested upon four grounds suggested by the peculiar language of the will as showing testamentary intent to make an absolute gift. No authorities were cited. In the other case (Charlton v. Miller, 27 Ohio St. 298, 22 Am. Rep. 307) the bequest was made in contemplation of marriage, and the court very properly held that it did not depend on marriage, and could not, therefore, be lost by divorce. Even those cases which deny implied revocation by divorce concede that a slight indication of a different intent will prevail, and are therefore distinguishable from the present case on this ground. On the other hand, the case of Lansing v. Haynes, 95 Mich. 16, 35 Am. St. Rep. 545, 54 N. W. 699, cited for the estate, is a strong authority in support of the doctrine of implied revocation by divorce. Mr. Lansing and wife executed mutual wills of their respective estates, and were afterward divorced. Pending the suit in divorce they entered into an agreement of division and release of their property, but no reference was made therein to their wills; and on Mr. Lansing's death an issue was raised of implied revocation on Mrs. Lansing's presentation of the will. In a very able opinion by Mr. Justice Grant the court held that, because of the absence of any reference to the will, the agreement did not amount to an express revocation under their statute, but that an implied revocation arose from the divorce. 'By the decree of divorce in this case,' said the court, 'the parties became strangers to each other, and neither owed to the other any obligation or duty thereafter. There was therefore a complete change in these relations;' and the case fell within the principle laid down by Chancellor Kent, as above quoted. No Pennsylvania supreme court decision has been found in conflict with this view. The case of Brown v. Ancient Order of U. W. 208 Pa. 101, 57 Atl. 176, cited on behalf of claimant, is, as already suggested, distinguishable from this by the fact that the right of the beneficiary had been fixed by contract, subject to a new designation on the part of the assured, which was never made, whereas revocation here arose by implication of law, and there was no republication as prescribed by statute. The case may, therefore, to use the language of the court in Lansing v. Haynes, 95 Mich. 16, 35 Am. St. Rep. 545, 54 N. W. 699, be decided on the 'common sense and reason upon which the law is based.'

"None of the judges who deny implied revocation by divorce attempts to reconcile his position with the common-law doctrine of implied revocation of will from change of circumstances, and logically they are irreconcilable, for there can be no change of circumstance more radical than that produced by divorce. If ademption will imply revocation, much more should this. A husband, as such, may show the greatest generosity in testamentary disposition; but it is not in human nature to give to her who has held his domestic faults up to public gaze as a means of dissolving marriage. Who would for a moment believe that, if Mr. Jones were living to-day, he would give Mrs. Speer 'one third' of his estate? To ask is to answer the question. Independence, of the personal question, consideration for his son's interest would have a deterrent effect. The divorce caused such change in circumstances that his son became presumptively the sole object of testamentary obligation. And, on the other hand, it is impossible to understand how, in view of Mrs. Speer's renunciation, she can consistently claim what, without the existence of the marital relation, would never have been given. She has no equity to recognition.

"For these reasons I would disallow this claim."

Messrs. Watson & Freeman, George C. Wilson, and William D. Evans, for appellant:

There is no difference in principle whether the marriage is destroyed by death or by the sentence of the law.

Flory v. Becker, 2 Pa. St. 470, 45 Am. 69 L. R. A.

Dec. 610; Lee's Estate, 207 Pa. 218, 56 Atl. 425; Miltimore v. Miltimore, 40 Pa. 156.

The language of the will itself, and the circumstances surrounding the testator when the will was made, show that the testator intended this gift to his wife in her character or relationship as such, and not otherwise.

A legatee must answer the description and character contained in the will.

2 Wms. Exrs. *1089.

The will speaks from the death of the testator.

Act June 4, 1879, P. L. 88, § 1; 2 Wms. Exrs. *1089; Anshutz v. Miller, 81 Pa. 212; Bell v. Smalley, 45 N. J. Eq. 478, 18 Atl. 70; Hitchins v. Morrisson, L. R. 40 Ch. Div. 30; Seibert's Appeal, 18 W. N. C. 276, 6 Atl. 105.

The bequest to Mary Brown Jones has been revoked by implication by reason of the changed relations produced by her obtaining a divorce from the testator since the making of the will.

Lansing v. Haynes, 95 Mich. 16, 35 Am. St. Rep. 545, 54 N. W. 699.

Messrs. Seymour, Patterson, & Siebeneck, for appellee:

After final separation, a husband made bequest to "my wife Mary." Afterward they were divorced. He survived the decree by twenty months, but made no change in the will. These facts indicate that he intended the will to stand.

Irish v. Smith, 8 Serg. & R. 580, 11 Am. Dec. 648; Brown v. Ancient Order of U. W. 208 Pa. 101, 57 Atl. 176; Padelford's Estate, 190 Pa. 48, 42 Atl. 381; Charlton v. Miller, 27 Ohio St. 298, 22 Am. Rep. 307.

The word "wife," standing before the word "Mary," is intended to identify her from other "Mary Joneses," and not to imply a condition that she must remain his wife.

Williams v. Neff, 52 Pa. 336; Hardy v. Smith, 136 Mass. 328; Anshutz v. Miller, 81 Pa. 212; Morse v. Mason, 11 Allen, 36; Schult v. Moll, 132 N. Y. 122, 43 N. Y. S. R. 484, 30 N. E. 377; Bullock v. Zilley, 1 N. J. Eq. 489; Johnson v. Johnson, 1 Tenn. Ch. 621.

The term "wife" relates to the wife at the date of the will.

Garratt v. Niblack, 1 Russ. & M. 629; 2 Jarman, Wills, 1876 ed. *380; Re Bryan, 2 Sim. N. S. 103; Franks v. Brooker, 27 Beav. 635; Bullock v. Bennett, 7 De. G. M. & G. 283; Violet v. Brookman, 26 L. J. Ch. N. S. 308; Anshutz v. Miller, 81 Pa. 212; Fitzgerald v. Chapman, 33 L. T. N. S. 587; Babcock v. Smith, 22 Pick. 61; Bullmore v. Wynter, 48 L. T. N. S. 309; Mellon's Estate, 28 W. N. C. 120; Sharpe's Estate, 15 W. N. C. 419.

The divorce did not affect the gift.

Charlton v. Miller, 27 Ohio St. 298, 22 Am. Rep. 307; Brown v. Ancient Order of U. W. 208 Pa. 101, 57 Atl. 176; Fitzgerald v. Chapman, 33 L. T. N. S. 587; Babcock v. Smith, 22 Pick. 61; Bullmore v. Wynter, 48 L. T. N. S. 300; Mellon's Estate, 28 W. N. C. 120; Sharpe's Estate, 15 W. N. C. 419; Cara v. Alexander, 48 Conn. 492, 40 Am. Rep. 187; Boddington v. Clairat, 48 L. T. N. S. 110; McKnight v. Read, 1 Whart. 222; Dilley v. Matthews, 8 L. T. N. S. 762; Steele v. Thompson, 14 Serg. & R. 88.

To raise implied revocation, new moral duties must accrue after date of will,—only such being marriage and birth of issue.

Young's Appeal, 39 Pa. 115, 80 Am. Dec. 513; Marston v. Roe, 8 Ad. & El. 14; 4 Kent, Com. 521.

The statute limits such revocation to either marriage or birth of issue pro tanto, and excludes any other change.

Coates v. Hughes, 3 Binney, 498; Clingan v. Mitchellree, 31 Pa. 33; Heise v. Heise, 31 Pa. 246; Walker v. Hall, 34 Pa. 483; Dixon's Appeal, 55 Pa. 424; McCulloch's Appeal, 113 Pa. 247, 6 Atl. 253.

The word "wife" merely identifies the beneficiary with particularity, and does not imply any condition.

Theobald, Wills, 1881, 2d ed. p. 210; Standen v. Standen, 2 Ves. Jr. 589; Re Blackman, 16 Beav. 377; Doe ex dem. Gains v. Rouse, 5 C. B. 422; Re Ingle, L. R. 11 Eq. 578; Re Petts, 27 Beav. 576; Giles v. Giles, 1 Keen, 685; Boreham v. Bignall, 8 Hare, 131; Re Burrow, 10 L. T. N. S. 184; Re Cahn, 3 Redf. 31; Rishton v. Cobb, 9 Sim. 615; Morse v. Mason, 11 Allen, 36; Hardy v. Smith, 136 Mass. 328; Johnson v. Johnson, 1 Tenn. Ch. 621; Schult v. Moll, 132 N. Y. 122, 43 N. Y. S. R. 484, 30 N. E. 377; Bullock v. Zilley, 1 N. J. Eq. 489; Williams v. Neff, 52 Pa. 326; Bain v. Lescher, 11 Sim. 397.

Potter, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The questions presented by this appeal, stated by the appellant, are: (1) Does a legacy in these words: "one third to my wife, Mary Brown Jones," lapse when the wife, subsequent to the date of the will, at her own instance, obtains a divorce a vinculo matrimonii? (2) Is a bequest "to my wife, Mary Brown Jones," revoked by implication by reason of absolute divorce? We take up these questions in order.

What is there in the facts of this case to support the claim that the legacy has lapsed? The person named as legatee did not die in the lifetime of the testator, nor did any other event occur in the lifetime of the testator, which, under the language of the will, would render the testamentary gift inoperative. The donee survived the testator, and is alive, and has both capacity and willingness to take under the will. But it is suggested in the argument that, while not physically dead, the donee, by her own act in obtaining the decree of divorce, ended the marital relation as absolutely as death would have done. This consequence did follow the divorce, in so far as the duties, rights, and claims accruing to her by reason of the marriage are concerned. With respect to the determination of these rights, and these alone, is divorce the equivalent of death. The decree in divorce took away only what the law gave to her when the marriage was contracted. This was the right to support, and to dower in his estate if she survived him. After the entry of the decree the testator was no longer bound to provide for her, and she had no further claim upon his estate. What the law gave, it took away; nothing more. The beneficiary is not here claiming anything which accrued to her in pursuance of her marriage. She is here only as a legatee, and is asking for that only which the testator gave to her of his free grace, and as a matter of bounty. That which he gave to her in his will was his own to give or to withhold, as he saw fit. A bequest needs no consideration to support it. As a legatee she stands upon the same footing as any other individual, and her relation to the testator has nothing to do with the case, unless he chose to make it an element in the bestowal of the gift. Did he do so? The provision in the will is as follows: "I direct that my funeral expenses and all debts be promptly paid, and that my estate be divided as follows: One third to my wife, Mary Brown Jones, and the balance to my son, Thomas Miffin Jones." The will was dated April 24, 1899, and Mary Brown Jones was then the wife of the testator. On February 6, 1900, the said Mary Brown Jones began proceedings in divorce, and the decree was granted to her on September 19, 1900. Thomas M. Jones, Jr., the testator, lived about one year and eight months after the divorce was granted, and died on May 17, 1902. Mary Brown Jones did not remarry during the lifetime of the said Thomas M. Jones, Jr., but she did marry about six months after his death. It will be noticed that the gift was to "my wife, Mary Brown Jones," without any conditions or limitations. The testator gives the one third of his estate to a particular person, naming her, and further identifying her by the statement that she is his wife. That is in substance what he says. He make no stipulation that she shall remain his wife, or be such at the time of his death. We are clear that such use of the word "wife" as is here made, is descriptive only, and does not imply any continuing condition.

"The mere fact that a gift is made to a named legatee in a certain character—as, for instance, to my wife, A—does not avoid the legacy if the legatee does not happen to fill the character." Theobald, Wills, 5th ed. p. 247. In Bullock v. Zilley, 1 N. J. Eq. 489, the words "his wife," as applied to complainant, were held to be mere words of description of the individual, and not as defining the capacity in which she was to benefit. In Mellon's Estate, 28 W. N. C. 120, where the beneficiary was named as "T. W., the husband of my said daughter," the word "husband" was held to be a description of the person, and not of the character in which he was to take. The reasoning of Judge Penrose fits accurately this case. He said: "We may conjecture, but we cannot be certain, that the inducing cause of the provision for Thomas Waller was that he was the husband of the testator's daughter. The relationship, however, could not have been the sole motive, since the gift is to the individual by name, and not to him simply as husband; nor is there, as in Bell v. Smalley, 45 N. J. Eq. 478, 18 Atl. 70, the evidence of intention afforded by a restriction of the bounty to the time during which the beneficiary remains unmarried. We have no right to say, therefore, that the gift was subject to the condition that the donee should at the time it took effect, be the husband of the daughter." In Brown v. Ancient Order of U. W. 208 Pa. 101, 57 Atl. 176, where a certificate was payable at the death of John Brown to his wife, Mattie Brown, we held that it was for the individual, Mattie Brown, without regard to the fact of her continuing to be the wife of the member, and subsequent divorce did not forfeit her right. The husband there had the power to change the beneficiary at any time, and we held that the fact that he did not do so during a period of eight years between the divorce and his death made evident his intention not to deprive his first wife of the benefit of the policy. "Where a man retains a revocable instrument with full opportunity of revoking it, and does not revoke it, there is a strong presumption that he wishes it to stand." Tilghman, Ch. J., in Irish v. Smith, 8 Serg. & R. 573, 11 A. n. Dec. 648.

We are clear that the will indicates that the testator intended the gift for the individual, Mary Brown Jones, who was at that time his wife, and identified by him as such. We think the bequest is unrestricted, and that the words "my wife" are, as we said above, only descriptive, and do not import a condition that the beneficiary shall remain his wife. Nor do we doubt that, as 69 L. R. A.

to the object of the legacy, the will speaks from its date. Anshutz v. Miller, 81 Pa. 212. "Prima facie a gift to the wife of A, who had a wife living at the date of the will, goes to that wife, and no other. . . . If there is anything on the face of the will to show that an existing person is referred to, the case is clear." Theobald, Wills, 249.

Nor is there anything in the act of June 4, 1879 (P. L. 88), to the contrary. Under the requirements of that act it is "with reference to any real or personal estate embraced in it" that every will shall speak as of the testator's death. In Robeno v. Marlatt, 136 Pa. 35, 20 Atl. 512, the court below said, on page 37: "It is claimed, however, that the act of June 4, 1879, bars their [after-born children] right. This act has received judicial construction, the results of which are that as to the condition of the donees the will speaks as of the date; as to the subjects of the testamentary disposition, the will is construed as of the death; as to the objects,—that is, the persons who are to take under it,—and their condition, the will speaks as of its date; as to the testator's condition, it is to be considered as of its date. The act is restricted in its effect to the real and personal property passing under it." And this statement was affirmed by this court.

But, turning to the second question presented here, it is elaborately argued that, as matter of law, the bequest to Mary Brown Jones was impliedly revoked by reason of the divorce. No authority has been cited in support of the proposition that divorce in itself is sufficient to work a revocation of a will, and we are not aware that any exists. The only case which has been cited by counsel as sustaining this position is Lansing v. Haynes, 95 Mich. 16, 35 Am. St. Rep. 545. 54 N. W. 699. But examination shows that the Michigan statute allows the court to determine whether the subsequent changes in the condition or circumstances of the testator are sufficient to work an implied revocation of the will. And the decision in that case rested also upon the fact that pending the divorce proceeding there was a settlement of the property rights of the parties. A division of the real estate was made, each deeding to the other. An agreement was also made by which the husband conveyed to the wife certain personal property, and she agreed to release him from all demands of every kind or nature. The agreement stated that it and the deeds executed by them were intended as a property settlement between them. This was a practical satisfaction of the bequest, and amounted to an ademption. As we read this decision, it was controlled by the fact of the settlement of property rights between the parties, and not by the divorce itself. At common law the doctrine of implied revocation of a will from change of circumstances did not include divorce. In fact, the instances were few under the common law in which an alteration of circumstances was held sufficient to justify an implied revocation. Both at common law and under the statutes of most of the states, it is only certain definite changes in the condition or family relations of the testator which impliedly revoke a will executed before such changes. The great weight of authority is that no changes beyond the few which have been many times specifically enumerated and recognized as sufficient for the purpose can have this effect. Page, Wills, § 280. A will may be so easily revoked by the testator in his lifetime that the courts have been slow in permitting changes in circumstances to do by implication what the testator may so readily do for himself. In Wogan v. Small, 11 Serg. & R. 141, Tilghman, Ch. J., said: "There is one case, and only one, in which it has hitherto been thought proper to decide that the revocation of a will might be implied from an alteration of circumstances, and that is, where the testator married and had a child subsequently to the making of his will; but both circumstances must concur. . . . The danger of this principle of implied revocation is very great, and that is the reason why, although very strong cases of hardship have occurred, the judges have never ventured to advance beyond that one step which they have taken. We have the less reason to resort to implied revocations as our legislation have provided for the case of subsequent marriage or children by the act of April 19, 1794 [3 Smith's Laws, p. 143]. . . . Once establish the judicial habit of examining the situation of a man's fortune or family and revoking his will because he has made an absurd or an inhuman disposition of his property, or because we may suppose he was ignorant of the state of his affairs or of the law, and no man's will is safe." These words were weighty then; they should be equally so now.

The opening sentences in Marshall v. Marshall, 11 Pa. 430, are obiter dicta, for there was no occasion in that case to consider the question of what was sufficient to justify an implied revocation of a will. That subject was not before the court. The testator in that case, after devising one tract of land to one son and another tract of land to another son, subsequently sold the first tract. It was urged that this would work a revocation of the whole will. But the court decided that the sale affected only the devise of the tract in question, and the residue of the will remained in full force. It was a case of ademption, which applies only to the subject-matter of testamentary disposition. When the subject-matter bequeathed is sold, or disposed of, it is thereby completely extinguished, and nothing remains to which the words of the will can apply. The principle of ademption is entirely distinct from that of an implied revocation of the terms of the will. Ademption has to do with the subject-matter of the bequests, while the doctrine of implied revocation is founded upon a presumed neglect of duty upon the part of the testator, or upon a change in his family relations. Ademption involves action upon the part of the testator the doing of some act with regard to the subject-matter which interferes with the operation of the words of the will. That is, he anticipates the gift there made by bestowing it during his lifetime upon the legatee, or disposes of the subject-matter in some way which puts it out of the question to follow his directions as set forth in the will. Nothing of that kind has been done in the present case. The testator has not interfered with his estate in any way inconsistent with the terms of his will.

The statutory rules in Pennsylvania as to the revocation of wills are reviewed by Read, J., in Walker v. Hall, 34 Pa. 483, and on page 487 he says: "We have in reality substituted for the common-law rule one of our own, depending entirely upon our statutory enactments;" and he concludes with the statement that our rules are not open to the doctrine of implied presumption. In Young's Appeal, 39 Pa. 115, 80 Am. Dec. 513, the court held that the testamentary paper was executed under a special power, and not under the statute of wills. Whatever is there said as to a change in circumstances which create new moral duties amounting to implied revocation is obiter dicta in so far as it goes beyond the conditions enumerated in the statutory enactments. The decision was that the will was revoked by the birth of a son to testatrix after the making of the will. While it was the disposition of an equitable estate, yet it followed the principle of the statute.

We are by no means singular in holding to the doctrine that the changed condition of the testator must be within the conditions named in the statutes, for this view prevails largely in other states. For instance, in Re Comassi, 107 Cal. 1, 28 L. R. A. 414, 40 Pac. 15, it is said: "In order to determine whether a will has been properly executed or revoked, or whether, after its execution, there has been such a change in the status or personal relations of the testator as in law will effect its revocation, we have only to determine whether, in the one case, there has been a compliance with the requirements of the statute, or, in the other case, whether the changed condition of the testator is within the condition named in the statute. . . . [Cites Code.] The effect of these provisions is to do away with the doctrine of implied revocation, which was for so many years a subject of controversy in the English courts, and which in many of the states of this country is still permitted under a clause in their statutes, authorizing a revocation to be 'implied by law for subsequent changes in the condition . . . of the testator.'" And in Davis v. Fogle, 124 Ind. 41, 7 L. R. A. 485, 23 N. E. 860: "It is manifestly true no act, thing, or deed will revoke a will once duly executed, unless it comes within the provisions of the statute providing for the revocation of wills." In Noyes v. Southworth, 55 Mich. 173, 54 Am. Rep. 350, 20 N. W. 891, the court says: "There is no sound reason that we can perceive why, in the absence of statutes, implied revocations should be extended." And in Schouler on Wills, § 427, it is said: "In short, revocation of a particular will by mere inference of law or presumption is limited to a very few instances in our modern practice. . . . Modern legislation itself repudiates in England and some of our states the whole theory of a presumed intention to revoke on the ground of an alteration in circumstances, and what is left of that theory aside from such statutes it would be very difficult to say." A case much like the present is Card v. Alexander, 48 Conn. 492, 40 Am. Rep. 187. There the bequest was to "my wife Amelia." A year and a half after the execution of the will the testator obtained a divorce from his wife for her misconduct, and four years afterwards died, without changing his will. It was held that the bequest was not to be regarded as conditioned upon the wife continuing to be such until his death, and that the divorce did not, as matter of law, impliedly revoke the will. The circumstances of the divorce in that case spoke more strongly against the claimant than here. In the present case it was the misconduct of the testator which caused the divorce.

We can see nothing in the facts of this case which would justify any extension of the doctrine of implied revocation. The reason which lies behind the doctrine as defined both in the common law and by the statutes is that some obvious injustice may be prevented; that some moral duty, which has been overlooked, it is presumed, by the testator, may be discharged. What would be the result of holding in this case that the change in circumstances worked a revocation? Only this: the whole estate of testator would go to his son, to the entire exclusion therefrom of his former wife and the mother of his child. Can it be said that the obtaining by the wife of a divorce by reason of the misconduct of the testator entailed upon him any moral duty to destroy the provision which he had made in his will for the woman who was for years his faithful wife, in order to pile up far more than a competency for their child? The only inference which can be drawn from the record in this case is that the testator, and he alone, was responsible for the rupture of the marital ties. It may well be, then, that by the provision in his will he intended to make some reparation for the sorrow and distress he brought upon his wife. To impute to him such intention would be more kind than to presume, as is urged in the argument, that he was filled with resentment, and became possessed by an ignoble purpose which he failed to carry out. He must have known that he could change or destroy his will at any time; yet he did not do so. We agree with the conclusions reached and stated by the auditing judge in his careful and able opinion, that "to hold under the facts in this case that the divorce revoked this bequest would not be in accordance with statutory regulations, and would be extending the doctrine of an implied revocation beyond any authoritative adjudication, and would be contrary to the express and implied intention of the testator."

The specifications of error are overruled. The decree of the orphans' court is affirmed and this appeal is dismissed, at the cost of the appellant.

Mitchell, Ch. J., dissenting:

I would reverse this judgment for the reasons so ably set forth in the opinion of Judge Hawkins.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

Ellen DOYLE

v.

Sarah Elizabeth ANDIS et al., Appts.

(....Iowa....)

1. A fee simple is vested in the first taker under the rule in Shelley's Case by a conveyance to one "during his natural life, and then to his heirs."
2. The rule in Shelley's Case is part of the common law of Iowa.

(Sherwin, Ch. J., and Weaver, J., dissent.)

(January 20, 1905.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the District Court for Tama County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to quiet title to certain real estate. Affirmed. The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Willett & Willett and Marsh & Cook, for appellants:

The same rule of construction and interpretation of the rule in Shelley's Case should be applied to deeds of conveyances of real estate that is now applied to questions arising under the construction and interpretation of wills, by this court; and the rule is not "applicable to the habits and conditions of our society, and in harmony with the genius, spirit, and objects of our institutions."

All that is necessary to get without the rule, and convey to children or kinsmen, is to add to words applicable to those persons, who, in the natural course of events, will become heirs, a designation broader or narrower than express an estate tail or in fee, say children, sons, etc.

Andrew, Am. Law, pp. 1013, 1014; 4 Kent Com. 218.

The rule in "Shelley's Case" has never been in force in Iowa.

Hill v. Smith, Morris (Iowa) 79; Wagner v. Bissell, 3 Iowa, 409; Pearson v. International Distillery, 72 Iowa, 357, 34 N. W. 1.

Messrs. Struble & Stiger, for appellee: The words used make a case which comes within the rule in Shelley's Case.

Pierson v. Lane, 60 Iowa, 61, 14 N. W. 90; 4 Kent, Com. 225.

The rule is in force in this state.

NOTE.—For other cases in this series as to the rule in Shelley's Case, see Fowler v. Black, 11 L. R. A. 670, and note; Vanollinder v. Carpenter, 2 L. R. A. 455, and note; Re Browning, 3 L. R. A. 209; Starnes v. Hill, 22 L. R. A. 598; McIlhinny v. McIlhinny, 24 L. R. A. 489; Gralinger v. Gralinger, 36 L. R. A. 186; Wool v. Fleetwood, 67 L. R. A. 444, and Brown v. Brown, 67 L. R. A. 629.

60 L. R. A.

The rule in Shelley's Case is a part of the common law, and, as part of the common law, is in force in every state in which the common law has been adopted.

Tiedeman, Real Prop. p. 425; 2 Washb. Real Prop. pp. 596–607; Trumbull v. Trumbull, 149 Mass. 200, 4 L. R. A. 117, 21 N. E. 366; Polk v. Faris, 9 Yerg. 209, 30 Am. Dec. 407.

The laws of this state back to the beginning of the territory recognize and assume that the common law is in force in this state.

O'Ferrall v. Simplot, 4 Iowa, 399; Baker v. Scott, 62 Ill. 86; Polk v. Faris, 9 Yerg. 209, 30 Am. Dec. 400; 2 Bl. Com. 114.

The feudal system was one which favored entailments and suspensions of the right of alienation. Its effect was the perpetual holding by certain families of the landed estates.

This attempt of the common people and the law makers was bitterly opposed by the nobles who succeeded in having passed the law known as "the statute de donis conditionalibus," 13 Edw. 1. chap. 1.

This was a law by which, when an estate was granted to a man and to certain heirs, the estate became vested in the heirs and the grantee could not alienate it.

Later the rule in Shelley's Case came in vogue, and superseded the statute de donis conditionalibus, and removed the restraint placed upon the grantee by casting on him the entire estate when property was granted to him and his heirs.

The statute de donis conditionalibus is not in force in Iowa as part of the common law.

Pierson v. Lane, 60 Iowa, 60, 14 N. W. 90.

Since the rule in Shelley's Case stands in contradistinction to the statute de donis conditionalibus by force of sound logic, the rule in Shelley's Case is in harmony with the spirit of our institutions, and applicable to the habits and conditions of our society.

Baker v. Scott, 62 Ill. 96.

The rule is based upon public policy and commercial convenience, sufficiently broad and deep to cause it to survive, for a period of five hundred years, the rage of legislative innovation and all the changes and fluctuations of the most eventful era of the world, and still to challenge the willing obedience and enlightened support of the most learned and able minds of Great Britain and the United States. It is a rule or canon of property which, so far from being at war with the genius of our institutions or with the liberal and commercial spirit of the age, which, alike, abhor the locking up and the rendering inalienable real estate and other property, seems to be in perfect harmony with both.

Polk v. Farris, 9 Yerg. 209, 30 Am. Dec. 406; Wescott v. Binford, 104 Iowa, 651, 65 Am. St. Rep. 530, 74 N. W. 18.

Unless the rule has been abrogated by statute, it must be in force as a part of the common law. It has too long received the recognition of the courts of England and of this country to be disregarded.

Brislain v. Wilson, 63 Ill. 175; Tiedeman, Real Prop. 425; 2 Washb. Real Prop. p. 596.

The rule is one of property, and not of construction.

McIlhinny v. McIlhinny, 137 Ind. 411, 24 L. R. A. 489, 45 Am. St. Rep. 192, 37 N. E. 147; Fowler v. Black, 136 Ill. 363, 11 L. R. A. 670, 26 N. E. 596; Baker v. Scott, 62 Ill. 87.

The law has attached to the words a fixed and definite meaning; and, when a grantor uses words to which the law has attached a particular meaning, he is conclusively presumed to have used those words with intent to give them their legal effect.

Trumbull v. Trumbull, 149 Mass. 202, 4 L. R. A. 117, 21 N. E. 366; Leathers v. Gray, 96 N. C. 548, 2 S. E. 455; Hileman v. Bouslaugh, 13 Pa. 344. 53 Am. Dec. 474.

If once it is conceded that the word was used in its strict legal sense, nothing can avert the operation of the rule.

Allen v. Craft, 109 Ind. 476, 58 Am. Rep. 425, 9 N. E. 919; Sykes v. People, 127 Ill. 117, 2 L. R. A. 461, 19 N. E. 705.

Ladd, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In the year 1862 Robert P. Andis conveyed the land in controversy to Samuel S. Andis "during his natural life and then to his heirs." Subsequently the grantee named transferred the land by warranty deed to another, under whom the plaintiff, through mesue conveyances, holds title. Samuel S. Andis died in 1899 and the defendants are his heirs at law. To the petition, stating the foregoing facts and asking that title be quieted in plaintiff, a general demurrer was interposed, and submitted to the court on the theory that, while the language of the deed to Samuel S. Andis brings it within the rule in Shelley's Case, that rule does not obtain in this state. It was overruled.

Many definitions of that rule have been given. That adopted by Chancellor Kent is generally regarded as both accurate and comprehensive: "When a person takes an estate of freehold, legally or equitably, under a deed, will, or other writing, and in the same instrument there is a limitation by way of remainder, either with or without the interposition of another estate, of an interest of the same legal or equitable quality, to his heirs or heirs of his body, as a class of persons, to take in succession, from generation to generation, the limitation to the heirs entitles the ancestor to the whole estate." Preston, Estates, 263. Analyzing this definition somewhat, it appears that (1) there must be an estate of freehold in the first taker; (2) the estate in freehold and in remainder must be created by the same instrument; (3) these estates must be of the same nature, both legal or both equitable; (4) the word "heirs," or other words equivalent in meaning, is essential to the limitation over in order to create an estate in fee simple; and (5) the limitation must be to the heirs of him who first takes the freehold. The estate for life, created in the first donee, must be limited precisely as it would descend at law, in order to vest the fee. Little difficulty has been experienced in determining the sufficiency of the estate of the ancestor. It may be for the life of the devisee or grantee, or of another person, or for the joint lives of several persons, and may be absolute or determinable on contingency, and may arise by express devise or necessary implication of law. 2 Jarman, Wills, 1181.

The trouble has arisen in ascertaining whether the words employed in the instrument in disposing of the remainder are words of limitation (that is, measuring the duration and defining the extent of the estate of the taker of the freehold), or words of purchase (that is, pointing out and designating the objects of the conveyance or gift of the remainder to whom it passes directly from the grantor or deviser). Mr. Hays, in his famous essay on the "Construction of Limitations to Heirs," adds another division, that of words descriptive of individuals, and then explains the three: "First, as words of limitation, their office is to measure the duration and mark out the devolution of the ancestor's estate. Thus, if land be given to A and the heirs of his body, the word 'heirs' is a word of limitation, because it is merely subservient to the purpose of ascertaining the force and direction in point of transmission of a gift made originally to A, who, as the sole object and motive of bounty, first attracted and absorbed the entire quantity of an estate not otherwise destined to benefit his heirs than as, in the way of the law, they were included in himself. Secondly, as words of purchase, they at once indicate the objects and limit the scope of the gift. Thus, if land be given to the heirs of the body of A, the word 'heirs' is a word of purchase, because the heirs are themselves the original objects of the gift; yet the word 'heirs' is not satisfied by the person or persons first answering the description of heirs or coheirs, but is of equal capacity with the same word used as a word of limitation. So, if land be given to A for life, with remainder to the heirs of his body, the intention is manifest to use the word 'heirs' as a word of purchase, and not of limitation. In order to determine whether the word 'heirs' is meant to be a word of limitation or of purchase, according to the above exposition of those terms, we have only to ask whether it is adjoined as an incident to a gift made to the ancestor, or used as the substantive term of an independent disposition. Where the ancestor is dead, or no estate is given to him, or an estate is by other words expressly limited to him (as in the case put at the close of the preceding paragraph), the word 'heirs' must always be designed to confer a distinct benefit on persons sustaining that character, and consequently to operate as a word of purchase. It is obvious that this cannot be the point on which learning and ingenuity have exhausted their powers, although, from the language of the disputants, the subject of contention would appear to be whether the word 'heirs' was to be construed a word of limitation or of purchase. Thirdly, the words in question, when used as descriptive of individuals, are wholly deprived of their natural energy, and sink down to the level of 'children,' etc., . . . in which predicament no greater potency can be attributed to them than belongs to the terms with which they are now associated. They ascertain the objects, but in ascertaining the objects their force is entirely spent. The nature and extent of the estate to be taken must be sought for in the context, or, if that be wanting or be silent, in the implication of law. They cannot be more operative than the terms which they represent, and whose operation, as we have already seen, is simply to describe a class of individuals."

Mr. Hargrave, said to be the most lucid expounder of the rule, has discriminated clearly between conditions when the rule ought and ought not to be applied: When it is once settled that the donor or testator has used words of inheritance according to their legal import, has employed them intentionally to compromise the whole line of heirs to the tenant for life, and has really made him the terminus or ancestor by reference to whom the succession is to be regulated, then it will appear that, being considered according to those rules of policy from which it originated, it is perfectly immaterial whether the testator (or donor) meant to avoid the rule or not, and that to apply it, and to declare the words of inheritance to be words of limitation, vesting the inheritance in the tenant for life, as the ancestor and terminus to the heirs, is a mere matter of course. But, on the other hand, if the words of inheritance were not used in their full and proper sense, so as to include the whole inheritable blood, and make the tenant for life the ancestor or terminus for the heirs, but the testator intended to use the word "heirs" in a limited, restrictive, untechnical sense, and to point at such individual person as should be the heir, etc., of the tenant for life at his decease, and give a distinct estate of freehold to such single heir, and to make his or her estate of freehold the ground work for a succession of heirs, and constitute him or her the ancestor terminus and stock for the succession to take its course from,—in every one of these cases the premises are wanting upon which only the rule in Shelley's Case interposes its authority, and that rule becomes quite extraneous matter. So, then, in order to ascertain, in every case, whether or not the rule is applicable, the inquiry simply is, In what sense did the testator or donor use the words? If in the former sense, the rule always applies, notwithstanding a positive declaration that it shall not. If in the latter sense, the rule is as invariably foreign to the case, the remainder is contingent until the death of the tenant for life, and the party named as heir takes by purchase. 1 Hargrave, Law Tracts, 575, 577.

Enough has been said to recall the nature and operation of the rule. Even this much has seemed unnecessary, in view of its commanding place in the law of real property. No rule of the common law has undergone the exhaustive investigation, thorough discussion, and severe criticism to which the rule in Shelley's Case has been subjected; and yet it has survived nearly six hundred years of controversy in England, and has been generally accepted by the courts of this country as a part of that rich inheritance of common law upon which our jurisprudence is founded. No one now pretends to fix the date of its origin. The conditions for which it was intended to operate as a remedy are mere matters of conjecture. Some have thought that it was devised in feudal times to give the lord his profits of tenure (either wardship or relief) upon the descent to the heirs, of which he would be deprived were the remainder to pass to the heirs as purchasers; but Sir William Blackstone in Perrin v. Blake, 4 Burr. 2579, 10 English Ruling Cases, 689, declares, that of this he has never met with a single trace in any feudal writer and then adds: "There is hardly an ancient rule of real property but what has in it more or less of a feudal tincture. The common-law maxim of descent, the conveyancing by livery of seisin, the whole doctrine of copyholds, and a hundred other instances that might be given, are plainly the offspring of the feudal system; but, whatever their parentage was, they are now adopted by the common law of England, incorporated into its body, and so interwoven with its policy that no court of justice in this kingdom has either the power or (I trust) the inclination to disturb them." In the same opinion he expressed the belief that the rule was first established to obviate the mischief of too frequently putting the inheritance in abeyance or suspense, and that it was founded somewhat upon "a desire to facilitate the alienation of land, and to throw it into the track of commerce, one generation sooner, by vesting the inheritance in the ancestor, than if he continued as a tenant for life and the heir was declared a purchaser." Mr. Hargrave, in his celebrated Tracts, suggests still another reason: That the rule in Shelley's Case is a part of an ancient policy of the law to guard against the creation of estates of inheritance with qualities, incidents, and restrictions foreign in their nature, and to preserve the marked distinction between the acquisition of a title by descent and by purchase, and to prevent the former from being stripped of its proper incidents and disguised with the qualities of the latter, whereby the estate would become a compound of descent and purchase,—an amphibious species of inheritance or freehold, with unlimited succession to the heirs without the properties of inheritance. Hargrave, Law Tracts, 489, 551.

Certain it is that the power of alienation and that of vested estates were favored doctrines of the common law, and as such were promoted by the rule in Shelley's Case. If of feudal origin, its purpose must have been to defeat in part the feudal policy that every grantee or devisee should take his estate per forma doni, the terms of which were to be construed stricti juris, in conformity with the idea of the ancient Roman law, contained in the Twelve Tables, by which a man, in conveying an estate to another, created all his rights by the terms of the conveyance. All estates were regarded, under the feudal system, as mere gifts or concessions on the part of the lords or barons to their vassals, and in the centuries it held sway, and as a result of this policy, many of the tenures became extremely burdensome, combining, as has been well said, the strangest comminglings of liberty and oppression to be found in any age. In irrepressible conflict with these conditions was the common law, favoring the fullest investigation and ample in its elasticity to devise a remedy for every wrong. In the 60 L. R. A.

necessities of those times, for a principle which would unfetter these estates and defeat the indeterminate tenures, the rule in Shelley's Case may have originated. It was applied as early as A. D. 1325, in a case cited in Perrin v. Blake, and Lord Coke, in the margin of his Commentaries on Littleton, refers to numerous decisions in the Year Books of Edward III., which, in the words of Blackstone, "do most explicitly warrant the doctrine extracted from them by that great and learned judge." Though the principle had long been recognized, it appears not to have attracted general attention until A. D. 1590, when definitely stated by Lord Coke in the case from which its name is derived. 1 Coke, 93b. The discussion then became "so vehement and so protracted," according to the celebrated requiem of Chancellor Kent, "as to rouse the specter of haughty Elizabeth." The agitation then seems to have subsided somewhat for nearly one hundred years, when it was again awakened in 1770 by Perrin v. Blake. That case arose in Jamaica, and was brought before the Privy Council of England at a time when Lord Mansfield was the only law lord who attended. He deemed the question involved of too great importance to be decided by his single opinion, and a feigned case was prepared and submitted to the King's bench. After being twice argued three of the judges, including Mansfield, agreeing that the case was within the rule in Shelley's Case, were for repudiating it, while one, Yates, was for applying it. A fierce controversy arose. Pamphlets were written assailing and in defense of Lord Mansfield, one of those in his behalf evoking a bitter reply from Mr. Fearne, author of the great work on Contingent Remainders, and Junius, in his envenomed letters, accused him of attempting to subvert the laws of England. It is said by Lord Campbell in the "Lives of the Chief Justices" that the bar of the entire Kingdom was divided into factions for several years, known as "Shelleyites" and "Anti-Shelleyites." An appeal was taken to the Exchequer Chamber, where, after being several times argued, seven of the justices, including Sir William Blackstone, sustained and applied the rule, and one, Chief Justice De Grey, concurred in the views of Lord Mansfield. That decision was followed by Jesson v. Doc, 2 Bligh, 1, 10 English Ruling Cases, 714, decided shortly afterwards, which has since been regarded as confirming the rule as a part of the laws of England, though in Roddy v. Fitzgerald, 6 H. L. Cas. 823, determined as late as 1858, there were several dissenting opinions. In Jordan v. Adams, 9 C. B. N. S. 483, it was severely criticised by Justice

Cockburn, but adhered to as a rule of property.

We have briefly referred to the history of the rule as tending to answer the contention now urged that it ought to be rejected as likely to result in defeating the intention of the testator or grantor, and be cause not in harmony with the spirit of our institutions. These questions were settled in England long after the period of the special usefulness of the rule in curtailment of the wrongs of feudal tenures, or its alleged application for the protection of the lords and barons in their profits, had passed away. Undoubtedly the doctrine of stare decisis played an important part, but in the decisions and numerous pamphlets the merits were thoroughly discussed. Throughout the long controversy the argument most persistently urged was that it was out of harmony with the spirit of the laws of England, in that it tended to defeat the manifest intention of the instrument to which applied. If anything in the habits of our people or in the genius of our institutions essentially differentiates their situation from that of the English people in the time of Perrin v. Blake, Jesson v. Doe, or Roddy v. Fitzgerald in respect to this rule, it has not been called to our attention. Undoubtedly there are differences which bear somewhat upon the consequences of its application, but it may be safely asserted that there are none which have enlarged or re-enforced the objections in principle then pressed with such learning and skill. Will anyone contend that it is not the policy of the law now, as in the days of Coke and Blackstone, to favor unfettered inheritances, the free alienation of property, and its subjection according to equitable liability to the debts of ancestors? Is it not still the policy of the law that inheritances shall vest rather than be held in abeyance? Do we not yet favor those incidents of estates in fee, that the widow be accorded her dower and the husband his curtesy? Is there a single reason for rejecting the rule now and in this state that was not pressed by the great lawyers and jurists when it was finally imbedded in English jurisprudence as a part of the common law? We have discovered none. To the claim that it operated to defeat the intention, Blackstone responded in Perrin v. Blake that "the misapprehension of a testator in thinking the remainders were contingent when they were not so cannot alter a rule of law. . . . The result of the whole matter is that, the testator having declared his intent that his son shall not alien his land, he to that extent gives his son an estate to which the law has annexed the power of alienation, an estate to himself for life, with remainder to the heirs of his body. Now, what is a court of justice to conclude from hence? Not that a tenant in tail, thus circumstanced, shall be barred of the power of alienation. This is contrary to fundamental principles. Not that the devise shall take a different estate from what the legal signification of the words imports. This, without other explanatory words, is contrary to all rules of construction. But plainly and simply this,—that the testator has mistaken the law, and imagined that a tenant for life, with first interposed estate, and then a remainder to the heirs of his body, could not sell or dispose of this interest." Fearne, in his work on Contingent Remainders, declared that, "when a case arises fulfilling the requirements for the application of the rule, it is not against the intention of the testator. It is only applicable when the intention of the testator has been discerned by the ordinary canons of descent." In Jesson v. Doe, Lord Redesdale said: "That the general intent should overrule the particular [as has been stated by Lord Eldon] is not the most accurate expression of the principle of decision. The rule is that technical words shall have their legal effect unless from subsequent inconsistent words it is very clear that the testator meant otherwise." Lord Thurlow, in Jones v. Morgan, 1 Bro. Ch. 220, observed that, if the donor meant that every other person who should be heir should take, he meant, what the law would not suffer him to do, to make the heir take as purchaser.

69 L. R. A.

The same thought has been well expressed by Mr. Justice Elliott in the recent case of Allen v. Craft, 109 Ind. 476, 58 Am. Rep. 425, 9 N. E. 919: "It has seemed to many that there is a conflict between the rule declaring that the intention of the testator must govern and the rule in Shelley's Case: but this appearance of conflict fades away when it is brought clearly to mind that, when the word 'heirs' is used as a word of limitation, it is treated as conclusively expressing the intention of the testator. Where it appears that the word was so used, the law inexorably fixes the force and meaning of the instrument." See Leathers v. Gray, 96 N. C. 548, 2 S. E. 455. Even were it to be conceded that the intention is often defeated by the application of the rule, it is to be said that this is in harmony with the policy of the law, which forbids the testator to make a will, or grantor a deed, that will invest the first taker with a freehold and his heirs as purchaser with an estate in fee simple by way of a contingent remainder: and, if such an estate is attempted, the law will defeat it, be the intention ever so plainly expressed. As said in Walker v. Vincent, 19 Pa. 369, the court correctly says: "The law does not pretend to carry out the intention of the testator in all cases; for many testators show a very clear intention to shackle the estates granted by them to a degree that is totally incompatible with any real enjoyment of them, and which the law does not allow. Hence, many of the rules of law are designed to control and frustrate the most manifest intent. The great merit of the rule in Shelley's Case is that it frustrates, and is intended to frustrate, unreasonable restrictions on titles; for, when an estate is declared to be a fee simple or fee tail, it is at once made subject to a limitation in its proper form, no matter how clear may be the testator's intention to the contrary." The oppositions to the rule have been based largely on sentiment, and few, if any, cases of actual hardship will be found in the books. Planting themselves on the premises that its operation worked the defeat of the real intention of the grantor or testator, as expressed in the conveyance or will, its detractors have assailed it with vituperation and invective, forgetting that numerous other rules of real-estate law, accepted without question, have precisely the same effect, and that the intention, to be effective, must be consistent with the rules of law. A man cannot by will create a perpetuity, nor could he put a freehold in abeyance at the common law, nor can he limit a fee with a fee, nor make a chattel descend to heirs, no matter how clearly his intention to do so be expressed. See Carr v. Porter, 1 McCord, Eq. 60.

It is denounced as an anachronism handed down from the feudal ages, but this criticism applies as well to many of the most cherished principles of the common law. Again it is said that men ignorant of the rule may, in preparing wills or deeds, unintentionally employ language which will compel its application. Such persons are quite as likely to overlook the forms prescribed for the execution of such instruments, and thereby defeat the purposes of the testator or grantor, and yet no one has demanded that the statutes prescribing these shall be repealed. So, too, language is often incorporated in a will, possibly in ignorance of the accepted canons of construction, which this court has deemed itself bound to follow, notwithstanding the protests that the testator must have intended otherwise. Law v. Douglass, 107 Iowa, 606, 78 N. W. 212; Hambel v. Hambel, 109 Iowa, 459, 80 N. W. 528; Meyer v. Weiler, 121 Iowa, 51, 95 N. W. 254. If courts have entertained contradictory views on the applicability of the rule, the same may be said of many others. That a principle is difficult of application has never been regarded as furnishing a sound reason for rejecting it entirely. As an illustration, see 69 L. R. A.

Archer v. Jacobs, 125 Iowa, 467, 101 N. W. 195. Other rules might have proved quite as satisfactory as those of the common law, and equally as well or better adapted to the administration of justice. It may be that the oncoming years will demonstrate much of our system to have been crude and imperfect. But the duty of this court is to administer law as found, and, even though it be confident of possessing the wisdom essential to successfully reform and improve many of its rules, the Constitution has conferred the authority so to do upon another branch of government. It is true the common law was adopted only in so far "as applicable to the habits and conditions of our society, and in harmony with the genius, spirit, and objects of our institutions." This does not mean that every rule must be subjected to the peculiar test, whether it is better suited than some other to our situation, but whether differences between conditions here and in England render it inapplicable. Thus, in Wagner v. Bissell, 3 Iowa, 396, the common-law rule requiring every man to keep his cattle within his close, which was necessary in a thickly settled country, was declared in 1856 not to obtain here as against a universal custom to allow cattle to roam at large over the unsettled prairies. And in Pierson v. Lane, 60 Iowa, 60, 14 N. W. 90, the statute de donis was denounced as inimicable to the genius and spirit of our institutions, in that its object "was to place restraints upon alienation and create perpetuities for the purpose of maintaining a landed aristocracy." It ran counter to the policy of our government, and for that reason was rejected. The reverse must be true of the rule in Shelley's Case; for its object, as said in Kiene v. Gmehle, 85 Iowa, 312, 52 N. W. 232, was "to prevent the tying up of estates in land, so as to withhold them from alienation for long periods of time." As remarked before, if there is anything in our situation which renders this rule less appropriate to our situation than it was to that of the English people at the time of the severance of the two countries, we have been unable to discover it. Merely the existence of an aristocracy there is not alone enough; otherwise, the common law in its entirety must be rejected. In Hilcman v. Bouslaugh, 13 Pa. 344, 53 Am. Dec. 474, Chief Justice Gibson protested that "the rule in Shelley's Case ill deserves the epithets bestowed on it in the argument. Though of feudal origin, it is not a relic of barbarism, or a part of the rubbish of the Dark Ages. It is a part of a system; an artificial one, it is true, but still a system, and a complete one. The use of it while fiefs were predominant was to secure the fruits of the tenure, by preventing the ancestor from passing the estate to the heir as a purchaser through a chasm in the descent, disencumbered of the burdens incident to it as an inheritance; but Mr. Hargrave, Mr. Justice Blackstone, Mr. Fearn, Chief Baron Gilbert, Lord Chancellor Parker, and Lord Mansfield ascribe it to the concomitant objects of more or less value at this day, among them the unfettering of estates, by vesting the inheritance in the ancestor, and making it alienable a generation sooner than it otherwise would be. However that may be, it happily falls in with the current of our policy. By turning a limitation for life, with remainder to heirs of the body, into an estate tail, it is the handmaid, not only of Taltarum's Case, but of our statute barring entails by a deed acknowledged in court; and, where the limitation is to heirs general, it cuts off what would otherwise be a contingent remainder, destructible only by a common recovery. In a masterly disquisition on the principles of expounding dispositions of real estate, Mr. Hayes, who has sounded the profoundest depths of the subject, is by no means clear that the rule ought to be abolished even by the legislature; and Mr. Hargrave shows in one of his Tracts that to ingraft purchase on descent would produce an amphibious species of inheritance, and confound a settled distinction in the law of estates. It is admitted that the rule subverts a particular intention in perhaps every instance; for, as was said in Roe ex dem. Thong v. Bedford, 4 Maule & S. 363, it is proof even against an express declaration that the heirs shall take as purchasers. But it is an intention which the law cannot indulge consistently with the testator's general plan, and which is necessarily subordinate to it. It is an intention to create an inalienable estate tail in the first donee, and to invert the rule of interpretation, by making the general intention subservient to the particular one. A donor is no more competent to make tenancy for life a source of inheritable succession than he is competent to create a perpetuity or a new canon of descent. The rule is too intimately connected with the doctrine of estates to be separated from it without breaking the ligaments of property." And in Polk v. Paris, 9 Yerg. 209, 30 Am. Dec. 400, Mr. Justice Reese, for the supreme court of Tennessee, declared that "whatever may have been the origin of the rule, or how well soever it may seem adapted to attain the selfish objects or gratify the grasping cupidity of the feudal lord, it happens to have been obviously based also upon principles of public policies and commercial convenience sufficiently broad and deep to cause it to survive for the period of near five-hundred years the rage of legislative innovation and all changes and fluctuations of the most eventful era of the world, and still to challenge the willing obedience and enlightened support of the most learned and able minds of Great Britain and the United States. It is a rule or canon of property, which, so far from being at war with the genius of our institutions or with the liberal and commercial spirit of the age, which alike abhor the locking up and rendering inalienable real estate and other property, seems to be in perfect harmony with both. It is owing, perhaps, to this circumstance that the rule—a Gothic column found among the remains of feudalism—has been preserved in all its strength to aid in sustaining the fabric in the modern social system."

That the evils thereof are more imaginary than real is apparent from the fact that this court has up to the present time avoided the necessity of saying whether it should be recognized as a part of the common law of this state. It was first mentioned in Zuver v. Lyons, 40 Iowa, 510, and held not to apply, for that the ancestor had taken a trust estate and the heirs the legal estate, and the two could not unite in an estate of inheritance. In Hanna v. Hawes, 45 Iowa, 437, the rule was held not to be "applicable because the testator did not vest the legal estate in Mrs. Little with a limitation over to the heirs of her body." The conveyance was by an executor, and was subject to restrictions in the will that at her death the property was "to go to the heirs of her body, and, if none, to be divided equally between the surviving children of her mother." Manifestly by "heirs of her body" was meant her children as such, and not heirs generally. In Slemmer v. Crampton, 50 Iowa, 303, the devise was to Maria A. Avery, "to be used, occupied, and enjoyed by her after she becomes of the age of legal majority, during her natural life only; . . . and it is my further will that after the death of my daughter Maria said lands and lot shall go to the heirs of her body free and clear of all liens and encumbrances thereon." The rule was held not to apply, for that the testator "intended the heirs to be the root of a . . . new descent, and the denomination of heirs of the body was merely descriptive of the persons who were intended to take." As even the use and enjoyment did not pass in præsentia upon testator's death, much may be said in support of the construction that the devise was directly to the "heirs of her body" as a class. See De Vaughn v. Hutchinson, 165 U. S. 566, 41 L. ed. 827, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 461; Horne v. Lyeth, 4 Harr. & J. 435. While the rule was invoked in Pierson v. Lane, 60 Iowa, 60, 14 N. W. 90, the court held that it had no application where the first taker took the fee simple as a fee tail, as in that case. The conveyance was "to Minerva Pierson and the heirs of her body begotten by her present husband, George W. Pierson." This was held to be a conditional fee, not affected by the statute de donis, which was declared to be inimicable to the genius and policy of our institutions and to have been converted into a fee absolute by the birth of the requisite heirs. The remark in Broliar v. Marquis, 80 Iowa, 49, 45 N. W. 395, that the rule was applied in the above case, was evidently inadvertent. In Kiene v. Gmehle, 85 Iowa, 312, 52 N. W. 232, the devise to Emilie, daughter of the testator, was of a life estate, with the remainder over to her children. True, it was "to descend and vest in such heirs of her body begotten, in fee simple." The condition, however, was annexed that, if she die without heirs of her body begotten, the estate was to "descend and vest in equal parts to the heirs at law of said testators," and the case was ruled by Hanna v. Hawcs, 45 Iowa, 437. The opinion is somewhat inconsistent, for that in one portion it apparently treats the rule as one of construction, and in another as emphatically declared it a rule of property. The latter seems to have been the final conclusion, as the writer, in stating the reasons of the rule, observed: "It is to prevent the tying up of estates in land, so as to withhold them from alienation for long periods of time. If the intention of the donor or deviser is within the provision of this statute or the rule in Shelley's Case, it is not sanctioned by the law, and will not be given effect; but, if otherwise, it will." Again quoting approvingly from Hileman v. Bouslaugh, 13 Pa. 351, 53 Am. Dec. 474, "the ascertainment is left to the ordinary rules of construction peculiar to wills; but, when the intention thus ascertained is found to be within the rule, there is but one way. It admits not of exceptions." As it has been regarded as a rule of property for more than five hundred years, a contrary view ought not to be imputed to the writer of the opinion. The rather should the criticism of authorities holding the rule "independent of the intention of the donor or deviser" as "not sanctioned by reason of the current of adjudicated cases" be thought to refer to animadversions of the rule as not being in harmony with the intention; for that, when language within the rule is employed, it is conclusively presumed to express the donor's or grantor's intention. The devise construed in Zuritz v. Preston, 96 Iowa, 52, 64 N. W. 668, was, after the first taker, "to go and be equally divided between his lawful heirs and next of kin," and manifestly, because of such division, was not within the rule. In 69 L. R. A.

Wescott v. Binford, 104 Iowa, 645, 65 Am. St. Rep. 530, 74 N. W. 18, the devise was to Hannah Wescott for life, and upon her death the property was to be divided between testator's three children; William Edwin Westcott taking the east third of the lot "during the term of their natural lives," but without power to convey "for a longer period than during their natural lives, respectively." At death their respective portions were to descend to their heirs, respectively, said heirs to have absolute title to their respective portions. The authorities were reviewed, and the conclusion reached that "it cannot be said that they show that it has been adopted or should be enforced in this state," and, later, that "we do not find it necessary to determine whether the rule in Shelley's Case is in force in this state, but hold that, if it be in force, it cannot defeat the intent of a testator as expressed by the language of his will." The conclusion that the language of the will did not bring it within the rule in Shelley's Case is undoubtedly correct, but might well have been put on another ground. See Brown v. Brown, 125 Iowa, 218, 67 L. R. A. 629, 101 N. W. 81; Meyers v. Anderson, 1 Strobb. Eq. 344, 47 Am. Dec. 537; McIntyre v. McIntyre, 16 S. C. 290. This case is authority, then, on two propositions only: (1) That the rule had never been recognized as in force in this state; and (2) that the language of the will did not bring it within the rule. The court did not undertake to pass upon the question now before us, and it may be regarded as res integra.

In the courts of last resort of twenty-five states the rule in Shelley's Case has been adjudged a part of the common law and enforceable as such. See article in 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 639 et seq. In but one has it been declared merely a rule of construction. Smith v. Hastings, 29 Vt. 240. Mistakes of this character in other states have been corrected by subsequent decisions. Maine was severed from Massachusetts after the abolition of the rule, and for this reason it does not obtain in the former state. In but one, Kentucky, has it been held to be out of harmony with the institutions of this country. Turman v. White, 14 B. Mon. 560. The very fact that it has been abolished in whole or in part in twenty-seven states is strong confirmation that it was thought not to have been so inconsistent with the conditions existing as not to have been adopted as a part of the common law. For centuries it has been recognized as a rule of property, and ought not now to be swept away. As stated in Horne v. Lyeth, 4 Harr. & J. 432: "To disregard rules of interpretation sanctioned by a succession of ages and by the decisions of the most enlightened judges, under pretense that the reason of the rule no longer exists or that the rule itself is unreasonable, would not only prostrate the great landmarks of property, but would introduce a latitude of construction boundless in its range and pernicious in its consequences."

Affirmed.

Weaver, J., dissenting:

For the reasons herein stated, I cannot concur in the foregoing opinion:

1. The rule in Shelley's Case has never been recognized or enforced in this state. As the opinion concedes this to be true, and that the citation which has sometimes been made of Pierson v. Lane, 60 Iowa, 60, 14 N. W. 90, and one or two other cases as sustaining the rule is in error, I need take no time to demonstrate the correctness of this proposition.

2. It has been expressly condemned and repudiated by this court. To make this clear beyond cavil let us first illustrate the substance and effect of the rule in its practical operation. In a vast majority of cases it is applied to a will or conveyance of land in which the owner attempts to give or devise a life estate to a named beneficiary, with a remainder in fee to the heirs of such life tenant. Under such state of facts the rule in Shelley's Case steps in to say that the remainder given to the heirs must be defeated, and that he who was given a life estate only shall be vested with the entire fee. Bearing this distinctive feature of the rule in mind, a brief reference to our decisions will demonstrate the correctness of my assertion that we have again and again distinctly denied its force as a rule of property in this state. In Slemmer v. Crampton, 50 Iowa, 302, we held that a devise of lands to A during her natural life only, and after her death to her heirs, should be construed to mean just what it said, and that A took nothing more than the life estate, which it was clearly intended she should have. This holding was in clear disregard of the rule in Shelley's Case according to every approved ancient statement of its effect. 1 Preston, Estates, 363; 2 Washb. Real Prop. 6th ed. § 1613; Hileman v. Bouslaugh, 13 Pa. 351, 53 Am. Dec. 475; Roe ex dem. Thong v. Bedford, 4 Maule & S. 363. In Kiene v. Gmehle, 85 Iowa, 312, 52 N. W. 232, we have another and more emphatic ruling in the same direction. There the devise of lands was to Emilie Mack for life, and at her death to descend to her heirs in fee simple. This made a clear case for the application of the rule if it was to be recognized in this state, and the claimants under Mrs. Mack insisted upon its benefit; 40 L. R. A.

but we said that, if Shelley's Case was to be recognized as an authority at all, it would be treated as a rule of construction only, and that, where the intent to pass merely a life estate to the first taker is clear, it must prevail. In this connection we spoke as follows of the general principle, which has never been repudiated by this court until the accomplishment of that result by the majority opinion in the present case: "Courts may not give effect to any other result than that intended. To do so would be to make a will for the testator. Neither may they defeat the intention when it is lawful. There are some respectable authorities that hold that the rule in Shelley's Case is independent of the intention of the donor or devisor; that it is absolute and imperative. Such application of the rule is not sanctioned by reason or the current of adjudicated cases in this country." Again in Zavitz v. Preston, 96 Iowa, 52, 64 N. W. 668, we said: "Whether the rule in Shelley's Case is in force in this state we need not determine. It certainly cannot be invoked to defeat the intent of the testator." So, too, in Wescott v. Binford 104 Iowa, 645, 65 Am. St. Rep. 530, 74 N. W. 18, we carefully reviewed all our previous cases bearing on the rule, and announced the conclusion that it cannot be said of them that it has been adopted or should be enforced in this state. We further said that to give the word "heirs" a technical meaning, and thus frustrate the intention of the testator by giving the first taker a fee, instead of a life estate, is not "in harmony with the best rules of interpretation, nor with the weight of authority, nor to be founded in reason, nor to be demanded by anything in the letter or spirit of the laws of this state or the condition and policy of its people and their institutions. The conditions which the rule was designed to meet do not exist here, and to hold that it applies to the will under consideration would be to go counter to the rules of interpretation which this court has always applied to wills, to overrule in effect many cases which we have decided, and to some of which we have referred, and to establish a rule which has been so unjust in its operation as to be abandoned or modified by nearly all of the states in which it was once in force." The opinion also combats the idea that the rule is one of property, and not of interpretation, and cites our cases to show that such doctrine is not favored in this state.

3. Save in a limited sense, the common law of England, by virtue of which alone the rule in Shelley's Case ever had being, has never been adopted in Iowa. In many and perhaps most, of the states of the Union statutes were early enacted adopting the entire system of the common law as of the date of the first settlement of this country or of the date when we attained national independence. It has been necessary, therefore, for such states, in order to get rid of the rule in Shelley's Case and other debris from past ages and primitive conditions, to effect such purpose by statute. Iowa has never attempted any legislative adoption of the common law, and this court has steadily held that only so much of that system will be here recognized and enforced as is suitable to the habits and conditions of our society and in harmony with the genius and objects of our institutions. Wagner v. Bissell, 3 Iowa, 396; Ex parte Holman, 28 Iowa, 88, 4 Am. Rep. 159; Pierson v. Lane, 60 Iowa, 60, 14 N. W. 90. Brought to this test, the rule in Shelley's Case must be condemned. In design and in practical effect it is wholly at variance with the spirit which pervades our Constitution, laws, and accepted social theories. I confess to some degree of surprise to find the majority twice repeating the suggestion that there is nothing "in the spirit or genius of our institutions which essentially differentiates them" from those of the English people at the time of our separation from the mother country. If such be the case, then the Revolutionary fathers should be called down from their pedestals and relegated to the list of conspirators against human rights. English institutions of that day were founded upon and permeated by the idea, not yet extinct, that a lauded aristocracy is an essential order of society, to the preservation of which Parliament and the courts were pledged; and the rule in Shelley's Case was unquestionably one of the devices conceived and framed as a means to that end. It served to prevent the subdivision and distribution of lands, and to cement their concentration in the hands of the few. The inability of the majority to discover any difference between such institutions and those of a people where the multiplication of landowners is believed to be essential to the general welfare does not appear to have troubled the Supreme Court of the United States, which says that in England the rule in Shelley's Case "is in accordance with the established law of descent, the general sentiment of the people, their public policy, and the spirit of their institutions. It helps to conserve the power and splendor of the ruling classes by keeping property in the line of descent which the rule prescribes. Our policy is equality of descent and distribution. Such is the sentiment of our people, and such is the spirit of our institutions." Daniel v. Whartenby, 17 Wall. 630, 21 L. ed. 661.

If this opinion of the highest court of our land is correct, and it cannot be successfully denied, then Iowa's "ruling classes" will have occasion to felicitate themselves on the opportunity which we now give them to keep their lands "in the line of descent" and prevent undue encouragement of the plebeian classes to become independent proprietors. The easy facility with which in this case we are overturning our former decisions and abandoning principles which have long been well settled makes reference to the precedents of no avail; but I cannot refrain from saying that, while adopting and applying many of the cardinal principles of the common law of real property, we have hitherto refused to recognize the binding force of many rules invented by the English courts and lawyers to maintain the ascendancy of the great proprietors. As a marked instance of this we may recall the entailment of lands at common law.—a scheme by which the title was passed to a grantee or devisee and to the heirs of his body in direct line of descent, failing which at any time, no matter how far in the future, the title reverted to the grantee. This device was just as firmly ingrafted upon English law as was the rule in Shelley's Case. The one is no more foreign to our institutions than the other. The states which adopted the common law by act of the legislature bound themselves to both, and in most cases have since abolished both. Iowa has never abolished either by statute, and, if one is to be recognized, then for equally good (or bad) reasons we should give force to the other. Yet in Pierson v. Lane, 60 Iowa, 60, 14 N. W. 90, we found that the entailment of land titles is inconsistent with the theory upon which society is here founded and refused to give it effect. So we might proceed to enumerate an almost endless list of rules and so-called principles pertaining to real property and titles which no court thinks of enforcing, although no attempt has been made at their formal abolition. It has long been our boast that the common law is a ceaseless evolution, adapting itself to the changing conditions of successive generations. "It is not an unchangeable code, like that of the Medes and Persians, but a system that has grown up with the growth of civilization, and is capable of being molded to meet the wants of society in every stage of its progress." Herter v. Mullen, 159 N. Y. 34, 44 L. R. A. 703, 70 Am. St. Rep. 517, 53 N. E. 700. In Mentzer v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 93 Iowa, 757, 28 L. R. A. 72, 57 Am. St. Rep. 294, 62 N. W. 1, we adopted this sentiment, and added: "Should it [the common law] ever fail to be adjustable to the new conditions, which age and experience bring, then its usefulness is over, and a new social compact must be entered into."

60 L. R. A.

If the truth there so eloquently and convincingly stated is now to be ignored, and our sanction given to the resurrection in all its ancient vigor of a rule which we have said was "designed to meet conditions which do not here exist," and is "so unjust in its practical operation" as to lead to its general abandonment, the tributes we have paid to the progressive character of the law should be frankly withdrawn, and the terms of the new social compact have our serious consideration.

4. The rule has been abolished or become obsolete in a great majority of the states of the Union, and, in voluntarily adopting it at this late day, we put ourselves out of harmony with the law as it exists in sister jurisdictions. Of the forty-five states, twenty-seven have abolished the rule by statute, although in seven of them the abolition is held to apply to wills, and not to deeds. In several of the new states the question of its existence has never been raised, and no statute abolishing it has been passed; the states evidently being satisfied that the rule is already extinct without the aid of legislative action. This decision will bring to their attention the important truth that some forms of evil may go into "desuetude" for an indefinite length of time without becoming "innocuous." In Vermont, not included in the foregoing classification, it has never been allowed as rule of property. Smith v. Hastings, 29 Vt. 240; Blake v. Stone, 27 Vt. 475. The principal states in which the courts have notably recognized the rule are Pennsylvania, Maryland, Indiana, and Illinois, and in at least two of these it has been greatly encroached upon by decisions which have sought to relieve it of some of its admittedly harsh features. McIlhinny v. Mollhinny, 137 Ind. 411, 24 L. R. A. 489, 45 Am. St. Rep. 186, 37 N. E. 147; Ridgeway v. Lanphear, 99 Ind. 253; Belslay v. Engel, 107 Ill. 182. Elliott, J., of the Indiana court thus indicated his view of the rule: "Whatever reasons may have once existed for it in England have even there long since ceased, and no good reason is perceived for its incorporation into the legal policy of this country." Siceloff v. Redman, 20 Ind. 251. Mr. Freeman says that questions respecting the rule possess "more of historic interest than practical value." Note to Polk v. Faris, 30 Am. Dec. 400. The rule itself comes from an age of which Blackstone says: "Its ingenuity perplexed all theology with the subtlety of scholastic learning and bewildered philosophy with its mazes of metaphysical jargon." The same singular tendency was manifested in the law of tenures, and there was built up a system of real-estate law filled with nice distinctions and refined reasoning, the 69 L. R. A.

great body of which is at this time of as little living interest as are those ancient disputations concerning the number of angels which can comfortably stand upon the point of a needle. Most of these mystifying, doubt-breeding characteristics of English land tenures have disappeared with the darkness of the age in which they had their birth. Chancellor Kent's celebrated "requiem," of which the opinion speaks, was inspired by his discovery that even at that early date the rule in Shelley's Case had ceased to exist, and he calls his flowery eulogy upon its ancient defenders a "humble monument to departed learning." Does it not border upon sacrilege for us, who should be foremost in showing honor to the great chancellor, to remove the monument which he so reverently erected and exhume that departed learning which he then laid to rest? The inquiry which the majority make, whether the "unfettering" of estates and the vesting of inheritances are not still the policy of the law, is wholly irrelevant to the question before us. When the law underliakes to say to the donor that his gift of a life estate to A, with remainder to his heirs, shall be defeated and distorted into a gift to A of the entire fee, but that a life estate to A, with remainder to B or to the children of B, will be respected and enforced, it is transparent folly to pretend that the result in the first instance is to be justified upon the assumption of some deep underlying purpose to hasten the "unfettering of estates." If a deed or will be obscure or ambiguous, and there is a manifest uncertainty whether the estate given was intended as a life estate or fee, then the supposed policy to which the inquiry refers may lead the court to decide in favor of the latter construction; but where there is no ambiguity there is no policy of the law which inclines the courts to disregard or defeat a clearly expressed intention.

5. The spirit of our laws and great body of our adjudicated cases sustain the proposition that the first duty of the court is to ascertain the intent of the donor, and, if that intent be lawful, to enforce it. Now, a landowner has an undoubted perfect legal right to give the property to A for life and to heirs of A, the remainder in fee; and this is true, even where the rule in Shelley's Case prevails, providing only he makes use of a choice of words which avoids the technical pitfalls which that rule spreads in his path. Why, then, in this one instance, should a lawful intent, clearly expressed, be selected for defeat, when in all others we feel religiously bound to effectuate it? In all the infinite variety of litigation arising from matters of contract and upon the construction of written instruments through which title to property is traced (save, only, as this rule creates an unnatural exception), the intent of the parties to the writing is the one aim of judicial inquiry. To that end we have said, so repeatedly that citations are unnecessary, the entire writing will be considered, each part in light of all the others, and the words will be given their popular meaning or their technical signification according as it may appear they were intended to be understood. The rule in Shelley's Case strikes at the foundation of this principle and foists upon the writing an interpretation wholly foreign to the maker's purpose. That such is the case is not seriously denied by the majority. They say, however, that, while it does serve to defeat the "particular intent" of the donor, it gives force to his "general intent." Just what that phrase means as here applied I am wholly unable to comprehend. The donor expresses his intent to give to A a life estate in certain property, and after his death to the heirs of A in fee. The "particular" intent is plain enough. It is not open to any doubt. What hidden "general" intent can be extracted from this provision, the accomplishment of which makes it necessary to destroy the remainder given to the heirs and give the fee to him from whom it was expressly withheld? Indeed, upon this point the majority opinion yields all that the most strenuous opponent of the rule may claim when it says that by its application "the words in question are wholly deprived of their natural energy." This sonorous euphemism, when duly studied, will be seen to mean simply this: That the rule is designed not only to defeat the expressed intent, but to impose upon the words of the donor a meaning utterly foreign to such intent. In other words, it not only defeats the will or deed made by the property owner, but proceeds to make for him another will or deed which never had the assent of his mind. Such a proposition is not to be defended as a matter of principle, nor should any court give effect thereto, unless required by statute or by undoubted controlling precedent, neither of which overruling circumstances confront us in this case. The following from the report adopted by the State Bar Association of Pennsylvania, an organization which counts among its members many great lawyers and a state where practical experience has demonstrated the effect of the rule, is worthy of much consideration. The State Bar Association of Pennsylvania by a large majority indorsed a movement for the abolition of the rule, saying: "That this rule always defeats the real intention of the grantor or testator is freely admitted by everyone. Of what avail are the canons of construction? The words may plainly show the intent, but they no longer have weight. It matters not what hardships are inflicted, what injustice is done, or how it may frustrate the plans of the testator. This relic of barbarism is in supreme control, and its power will continue until abridged by legislation. So long as this imperious rule is permitted to hold sway, there will be uncertainty as to the effect of grants and devises on this line, and the result must be contention in the courts to ascertain whether the intention of the testator falls under the guillotine of that rule. Feudal tenures have long since been abolished. We know them not in Pennsylvania, and why should we continue in force a rule which, as now enforced, every judge and every court admits is antagonistic to and destructive of the idea of allowing the owner free will in the disposition of his property." Report Pa. State Bar Asso. 1898, p. 32.

6. Though the rule claims origin so far back that its history cannot be precisely traced, and has been the object of indiscriminate, if not idolatrous, adulation upon part of its defenders, and although the cases in which the courts have struggled with it are numbered by the thousands, it is still so obscure in its statement and so difficult of apprehension that it has been and must be, wherever it prevails, a more fruitful source of strife and litigation than any other one question affecting land titles. No clearer or more learned statement of the nature of the rule has been or can be made than is contained in the majority opinion; and when I say it constitutes a labyrinthine puzzle, in which the whole profession may enter and no two lawyers find the same exit, it casts no reflection upon those who formulated the statement, but simply demonstrates the inherent weakness and uncertainty of the proposition which they attempt to defend. The most skilful of the captive brickmakers in Egypt could not make bricks without straw, and the most expert legal dialectician who undertakes to clothe the rule in Shelley's Case with the varnish of plausibility finds himself confronted with a poverty of material compared with which the destitution of the oppressed Israelites was a wasteful abundance. If, then, in such case, they who enter the lists of apologists betake themselves to the thick mists of black-letter learning, it is not so much from choice as from the necessities of the position they have assumed. In that uncertainty is found one of the most persuasive reasons why this state, thus for happily free from the perplexities which inevitably follow recognition of the rule, should not be subjected to its influence. The definitions of the principle by courts and law writers are numerous, varying only in the degree of obscurity in which they are clouded. The centuries of its history have been insufficient for its advocates to find common ground on which to stand in its practical application, and the lawyer who sets out to discover the "weight of authority" upon many of its phases soon finds himself lost in an impenetrable forest of varying precedents and discordant opinions.

A few years since a young lawyer, seeking "more light" upon the subject, addressed a request to the American Law Review, then edited by Seymour D. Thompson and Leonard A. Jones, both eminent law writers, asking for "a good, plain, common sense, easy-to-be-understood definition of the rule" in Shelley's Case, and received answer as follows: "Not having the capacity to understand the rule in Shelley's Case, or to acquire an understanding of it by any degree of diligence within the limits of a lifetime, we find ourselves unable to comply with the modest request of our esteemed correspondent." [27 Am. L. Rev. 622.] Lord Macnaghten says, in Van Grutten v. Foxwell, [1897] A. C. 668, that learned writers on the subject are not agreed as to the mode in which the rule operates. Sir Edward Sugden despairingly declares that "no man can reconcile the decisions." Montgomery v. Montgomery, 3 Jones & L. 47. In Perrin v. Blake, Mr. Justice Blackstone spoke of the rule as being flexible, and left some room for construction in accord with the manifest intent of the testator. After his death Lord Macnaghten (Van Grutten v. Foxwell) and Lord Thurlow (3 Jur. Ex. 363) were at much pains to explain that Blackstone did not really mean what he said, and that the rule is as inflexible and unyielding as the law of gravitation. 9 Wash. L. Rep. 258, says that from the date of the ingraftment of the rule upon the common law "it has been the source of perplexity to the courts, and of endless annoyance to the bar, as well as absolute wrong to the testator and heirs, has perverted, changed, and abrogated the intention of donors, and thereby proved a Pandora's box of legal troubles and the destruction of the peace of families and the consumer of their estates." In Pennsylvania the rule has been adhered to from the early history of the state, and there, if anywhere, we should look for the law to be settled. An experienced lawyer of that state, writing in 36 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 239, tabulates not less than 100 cases involving the rule, decided by the supreme court of Pennsylvania, in which the same words "heirs," "heirs of the body," "issue," "children," and other similar forms of expression have been construed with such variant and contradictory results that he justly declares that before a member of the profession undertakes to draw a deed or will giving the first taker an estate for life with remainder to his issue, heirs, or children (a perfectly legal method of conveying or transmitting title, if one is fortunate enough to select the right form of words, he should "stop, look, and ponder, for the beaten path is treacherous." After reviewing the cases, he comes to the very just conclusion that, even after the lawyer has given to the preparation of such instrument the best thought of which he is capable, his confidence in its being construed according to its intent must rest solely on the dubious hope that the court will follow one line of its decisions rather than the other. This condition is typical of the state of the case law of every jurisdiction where the rule has been applied, and it fully justifies the same lawyer's summing up: "A rule of law may be gray with age, and therefore venerable; but it may also be gray with mildew." Mr. Fearne, in his preface to his great work on Contingent Remainders, says that "one of the greatest judges who ever lived tells us that such is the number and character of the decisions on the rule in Shelley's Case and its kindred topics that the mind is overwhelmed by their multitude and the subtlety of the distinctions between them." Judge Lyman P. Trumbull, of national fame as a lawyer and statesman, says the rule in Shelley's Case "has contributed more than all other causes combined to defeat the wishes and purposes of persons who have attempted to dispose of their estates by will," and characterizes it as "a rule coming down from the Dark Ages and promulgated by some judge in the case of one Shelley, declaring that the word 'heirs' in a will or deed was, in certain cases, a word of limitation, and not of purchase, whatever that means. Where and for what purpose this rule was promulgated nobody exactly knows, and its meaning nobody except one learned in blackletter law understands, and it is doubtful if he does. To the common mind the rule is nonsense." 27 Am. Law Rev. 321.

Let us note some of the intricacies in which the subject has become involved. While, according to the letter of the rule, a gift to A, with remainder to his heirs, will vest A with the entire estate, and give the heirs nothing, and yet it is held that, if the word "heirs" is found to have been used as the equivalent or synonym of "children," the donor's intent will prevail, and A will take a life estate only. Shimer v. Mann, 99 Ind. 190, 50 Am. Rep. 82; Criswell's Appeal, 41 Pa. 288. So, too, it has often been held that a remainder over to the "child," or "children," or "issue," of the life tenant, will not enlarge the life tenancy into a fee. Chambers v. Payne, 59 N. C.

(6 Jones, Eq.) 276. But let us beware. This avenue of escape is also beset with thorns. If, upon reading the instrument, the court thinks that you used the word "child," "children," or "issue" as the equivalent or synonym of "heirs," then the rule steps in to destroy the life estate you attempted to create, and gives the entire title to a person you did not intend should have it. 2 Flintoff, Real Prop. 128; Robinson v. Robinson, 1 Burr. 38; Doe ex dem. Jones v. Davies, 4 Barn. & Ad. 43; Lees v. Mosley, 1 Younge & C. Exch. 589; Roddy v. Fitzgerald, 6 H. L. Cas. 823; Simpers v. Simpers, 15 Md. 160. So it has been held that if to the limitation to "heirs" there be added the words "share and share alike," or other similar expressions, the rule may be avoided. Mills v. Thore, 95 N. C. 362; 2 Minor, Inst. 404; Shreve v. Shreve, 43 Md. 382; Taylor v. Cleary, 29 Gratt. 453; Burges v. Thompson, 13 R. I. 712. Exactly the opposite conclusion has been reached by many other authorities. DeVaughn v. Hutchinson, 165 U. S. 566, 41 L. ed. 827, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 461; Doe ex dem. Cock v. Cooper, 1 East, 229; Jesson v. Doe, 2 Bligh, 1; Grimes v. Shirk, 169 Pa. 83, 32 Atl. 113. A devise to husband and wife for life, with remainder to their heirs, falls within the rule. McFeely v. Moore, 5 Ohio, 465, 24 Am. Dec. 314; Auman v. Auman, 21 Pa. 343. A devise to a husband for life, with remainder to his heirs by his present wife, falls without rule. Den ex dem. Creswick v. Hobson, 2 W. Bl. 695; Vernon v. Wright, 7 H. L. Cas. 35.

Indeed, without threading this maze any further,—and we have here scarcely entered its border,—we may say that about the only method by which the donor can give a life estate to another, with a remainder to the heirs of the donee, and feel reasonably sure that his purpose will not be judicially thwarted, is to create the life estate and the remainder by separate instruments; and this method is probably not open to one who wishes to pass the estate by will, instead of by deed. 1 Fearn, Contingent Remainders, 71; 1 Preston, Estates, 309; Moore v. Parker, 1 Ld. Raym. 37; Coape v. Arnold, 31 Eng. L. & Eq. 133; 2 Washb. Real Prop. 6th ed. § 1605. It is but little short of the ludicrous to find that this rule, to which its adherents have for ages invited attention as the product of profound wisdom and as an indispensable safeguard of property rights and promoter of wise public policy, is, when reduced to its lowest terms, a simple declaration that you shall not by a single written instrument do that which you may lawfully and effectually accomplish by two. Every one of the five distinctions by which the rule is surrounded—and I have mentioned but a 69 L. R. A.

mere fraction of them—is an open door to untold litigation. There is not another doctrine connected with the law of real estate which has been productive of so much strife, not another which the courts have involved in such obscurity and uncertainty, and not another of which it can be so truly said that its application is invariably a triumph of injustice.

7. The final argument of every apologist for that rule is that it is intended to prevent the tying up of estates, and is therefore in accord with the general policy of our laws.

A little reflection will reveal the fallacy of the argument. It is not the policy of our laws to restrict, invalidate, or discourage the creation of life estates. On the contrary, we have by express statute provided, not only that the property owner may suspend the power of sale for the lifetime of a person in being, but for twenty-one years thereafter. Neither has it ever been the policy of the common law to discourage or destroy life estates for the purpose of "removing clogs" upon the alienability of lands. During all the years since the rule in Shelley's Case came into being, the right to create life estates in almost every conceivable method (save only the one form at which that rule is aimed) has been recognized, upheld, and enforced by the courts with unvarying regularity. Thus it happens that, while forbidding the donor to give a life estate to A, with a remainder to A's heirs, he has been at perfect liberty to give a life estate to A, with remainder to the heirs of A's wife, or to the heirs of A's mother-in-law, or to the heirs of an entire stranger. The same common law permitted the piling of one life estate upon another in the most puzzling confusion. It created life estates for the benefit of the surviving wife, and husband, and for the tenant in tail after the possibility of issue has ceased. It construed every deed which omitted the magic word "heirs" as conveying a mere life estate. It upheld the entailment of estates and the law of primogeniture, and all the other elaborate and multifarious devices by which the alienability of lands was held in check and the estates of great families preserved, even at the expense of their creditors. In view of this history, the faith which can discover in the rule in Shelley's Case a benevolent design to facilitate transfers of title comes clearly within St. Paul's definition: "The substance of things hoped for; the evidence of things not seen." Even in England, with all its conservative adherence to the traditions of the law, the lawyers are ceasing to deceive themselves by this sort of sophistry. In a recent [1871] paper read before the Juridical Society of London, Sir George Bowyer says: "The celebrated rule in Shelley's Case, which has caused so much discussion, is based on feudal reasons which are now obsolete." 3 Juridical Society Papers, 543. So, also, in most states in which the rule still prevails, the courts no longer assert such defense of the rule, but candidly admit it has no foundation in the present order of things. As an instance, the Indiana court says there "was not much reason for its [the rule] at the time of its adoption, and none at all under the existing system of tenures and conveyances." Ridgeway v. Lanphear, 99 Ind. 253. If the creation of life estates be inimical to the welfare or prosperity of the people, it is within the power of the legislature to regulate or prohibit them. It has not done so, and the court is not constituted the guardian of the people, with power to enact rules of property which the law-making power does not see fit to adopt. On the contrary, the creation of a fee, the enjoyment of which is postponed to the termination of a life estate, being within the conceded power of the landowner, the court should feel in duty and in conscience bound to protect its exercise, and not go out of its way to recall a disused and discredited principle to defeat it.

8. It is the just and appropriate tendency of the laws of this country to promote simplicity of contract and the easy creation and transfer of titles to property, and to ignore the merely technical, wherever it is necessary to attain the ends of substantial justice. In England conveyancing is, or has been, largely the work of skilled men constituting a learned profession, and under such circumstances it is perhaps a fair presumption that technical words are intended to have a technical effect. In this country, and especially in the western states, the great majority of deeds and wills are drawn or executed by others than lawyers or men having expert knowledge of conveyancing. Justices of the peace, notaries, bank clerks, and sometimes clergymen and physicians, prepare these instruments for their patrons and neighbors. The inherent ineradicable vice by which the rule in Shelley's Case is differentiated from all our hitherto accepted rules of law is that it gives to words a meaning and effect diametrically opposed to their universally accepted meaning among the people, including people of education and experience who use and understand the English language, and thus creates a snare by which the average person, learned and unlearned, finds it impossible to express his intent, no matter how lucidly it be stated, with any certainty that it will be respected by the courts. The average grantor and most of the scribes never heard of Shelley's Case. They have all heard the word "heirs," and know what it means in ordinary parlance, but have yet to discover that none but a veteran lawyer can write that word in a deed or will without danger of defeating the intention which to the ordinary mind has been expressed with the utmost clearness. For a well-to-do person to desire to give a life estate in land to a child, with a remainder over to the offspring of such child, is a matter of everyday occurrence in almost every neighborhood. He has both the legal and moral right to thus fence against the weakness or misfortune of the child, and at the same time preserve the inheritance for the grandchildren. The statute which gives voice to the public policy of the state expressly permits him to suspend the absolute power of controlling and conveying the property for the period of a life in being and twenty-one years thereafter. Code, § 2901. His object is a laudable one, and, if carried into effect, tends to the public benefit, in that it insures the objects of his bounty against becoming public charges. Now, let us note the experience of the farmer or business man, who goes, as he is quite sure to do, to a nonprofessional conveyancer and asks to have prepared an instrument which shall secure certain property to his son for life, and after the son's death to his children or heirs absolutely. The conveyancer, rashly believing that, if he draws an instrument which states exactly what the father wishes to do, the law will uphold and enforce the clearly expressed intention, writes: "Know all men by these presents, that I, A B, in consideration of the love and affection I bear to my son, C D, hereby grant and convey to the said C D the following described lands, . . . to have and hold for and during the term of his natural life, and after the death of my said son to his heirs in fee simple." The father, having executed this instrument and put the son in possession, fondly supposes that his benevolent purpose is now assured. But, if the rule in Shelley's Case is still the law of his jurisdiction, he may awake the next day to see that land seized and sold for the son's debt, or to see the son himself squander the entire inheritance in the nearest bucket shop or upon a horse race. Too late he goes with his troubles to a lawyer, who, after dusting his Kent's Commentaries and making sure that he correctly remembers the rule, tells his client there is no hope. "It is true," he says, "you intended to give your son a simple life estate in the land, and it is equally true you stated that intention in so many plain English words; but unfortunately you gave the remainder after his death to his 'heirs.' If, instead of this word, you had said 'children,' or 'wife and children,' or had described these persons by their individual names or had made the heirs of a stranger, instead of your son, the objects of your bounty, the property might have been saved; but you failed to understand that it is sometimes a legal mistake to clearly express a legal intention. Of course, these 'children' will be 'heirs' of your son if they survive him, and you supposed the terms to be convertible, but nemo est hæres viventis. Having used that fatal word, the fact that every person of common sense and intelligence understands that you did not mean to give this land to your son absolutely, the fact that you had the unquestioned legal right to give him a life estate only, and the fact that you have expressed that intention with all the clearness and exactness of which our mother tongue is capable, all these things count as nothing, and the inheritance you designed for your helpless grandchildren must go to swell the list of offerings upon the altar of Shelley's Case." If he is so constituted that the hall-mark of the Dark Ages is a sufficient passport to his confidence, he will find food for comfort in learning that he has simply come in collision with "a Gothic column found among the remains of feudalism," and in any event he will have cause to congratulate himself upon the narrow escape from the grave responsibility of "producing an amphibious species of inheritance."

The disposition which this man sought to make of his property was natural, commendable, and lawful. Why should the court make it unnecessarily difficult, and construct or adopt artificial and oppressive rules to thwart the purpose of the donor? If the rule in Shelley's Case had never existed, and it was now proposed for the first time, every court and lawyer in the United States would respond with a prompt and emphatic protest against a plan so inconsistent with the spirit of our civilization and so abhorrent to the principles of reason and justice. As this state has never been subject to its influence, we should be no less prompt and earnest in denying it a place in our legal system. The suggestion made by the majority that few instances are likely to arise requiring this court to apply the rule adds nothing to the argument. Few demands have hitherto been made for the enforcement of the rule in Shelley's Case, simply because the great body of the profession has taken this court at its word that such rule is not recognized as the law of Iowa. Now that we have announced otherwise, it requires no prophet's vision to foresee the rapid increase in such litigation. Of the further suggestion that there are other rules and principles of real-estate law coming from feudal times which are admittedly in force, though having no apparent justification in modern conditions, I have only to say that, conceding this to be true, I am still unable to admit the soundness of the logic 69 L. R. A.

which justifies the adoption of an admittedly vicious rule by showing that we are already burdened with others equally bad.

In my opinion the judgment of the district court should be reversed.

Sherwin, Ch. J.: I concur in the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Weaver.

Petition for rehearing overruled.

WISCONSIN LUMBER COMPANY
v.
GREENE & WESTERN TELEPHONE COMPANY, Appt.

CITIZENS' NATIONAL BANK
v.
SAME, Appt.

SECURITY BANK
v.
SAME, Appt.

(.....Iowa.....)

1. A judgment will not be reversed because it was tested by what was called a motion to strike, instead of by demurrer, although the practice is improper, where the motion has been treated by the parties as in effect a demurrer.
2. The right to move to strike paragraphs of answer is not waived by filing demurrers, where, after the demurrers are filed, the petition is amended, and the answer is then amended to meet the new matter in the petition.
3. A corporation cannot accept stock subscriptions secured by its officers, and repudiate the promise to take back the stock under certain circumstances.
4. A corporation has power to make valid contracts for the repurchase of its own stock in the absence of charter restrictions.
5. A corporation cannot refuse to perform its contract to allow subscribers to stock free passes, or to repurchase the stock at the price paid, on the ground that it is contrary to public policy.
6. A corporation cannot refuse to carry out its contract to repurchase the stock of certain subscribers upon certain contingencies on the ground that other stockholders were not given the same right to return their stock; at least where there is no

NOTE.—As to power of corporation to deal in its own stock generally, see note to Hall v. Henderson, 61 L. R. A. 621.

As to estoppel of corporation to set up plea of ultra vires, see First Nat. Bank v. Guardian Trust Co. 70 L. R. A.—, and cases in footnote thereto.

showing of any prejudice to the other stockholders.

7. That a written tender is not kept good as required by statute will not defeat a judgment directing the repurchase of stock according to contract, if the shares were produced in court at the trial, and filed with the clerk.

(December 13, 1904.)

APPEALS by defendant from judgments of the District Court for Cerro Gordo County in favor of plaintiffs in actions brought to recover the value of certain shares of stock which defendant had agreed to repurchase from plaintiffs. Affirmed.

Statement by Deemer, Ch. J.:

Actions to recover the par value of certain shares of stock in the defendant company, pursuant to a contract whereby the defendant promised and agreed that, in the event it sold any of its connections, franchises, or business in the state of Minnesota, it would repurchase of the plaintiffs and pay the par value of any shares of stock in the company owned and held by them. The three actions are based on identical contracts and arrangements, and are the same, except as to parties and the number of shares held by them. The defendant filed answers in each case, to which the plaintiffs separately filed motions to strike and demurrers. The motions were each sustained, and, defendant electing to stand upon its answers, judgment was rendered against it in each case as prayed. Defendant appeals.

Messrs. Cliggett, Rule, & Keeler and J. J. Clark, for appellant:

The demurrer waived the right to file the motion.

White Oak v. Oskaloosa, 44 Iowa, 512; 1 Boone, Code Pl. § 249; New York Ice Co. v. Northwestern Ins. Co. 21 How. Pr. 234, 12 Abb. Pr. 74; Russell v. Chambers, 31 Minn. 54, 16 N. W. 458; Smith v. Countryman, 30 N. Y. 655.

The motion to strike out the answer was an improper method of testing the sufficiency of the matters of defense presented.

Clark v. Cress, 20 Iowa, 50; Evans v. Robbins, 29 Iowa, 472; Hall v. Harris, 61 Iowa, 500, 13 N. W. 665, 16 N. W. 535; Walker v. Pumphrey, 82 Iowa, 487, 48 N. W. 928; State ex rel. McDonald v. DeKruif, 72 Iowa, 488, 34 N. W. 607; Irvine v. Yeager, 74 Iowa, 174, 37 N. W. 136; Wattels v. Minchen, 93 Iowa, 517, 61 N. W. 915; Van Sickle v. Keith, 88 Iowa, 9, 55 N. W. 42; Rhoadebeck v. Blair Town Lot & Land Co. 62 Iowa, 370, 17 N. W. 582; Bowman v. Chicago, St. P. & K. O. R. Co. 69 L. R. A.

86 Iowa, 490, 53 N. W. 327; Gjerstadengen v. Hartzell, 8 N. D. 424, 79 N. W. 872; Hurd v. Ladner, 110 Iowa, 263, 81 N. W. 470; Childs v. Griswold, 15 Iowa, 438; Wade v. Bridges, 24 Ark. 569; Pacific Factor Co. v. Adler, 98 Cal. 271, 25 Am. St. Rep. 106, 27 Pac. 36; Aitken v. Clark, 15 Abb. Pr. 319; Davis v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 108 Ala. 660, 18 So. 687; Wilson v. Marks, 18 Fla. 322; Orne v. Cook, 31 Ill. 238; State ex rel. Nave v. Newlin, 69 Ind. 108; Burk v. Taylor, 103 Ind. 399, 3 N. E. 129; Savage v. Chalkiss, 4 Kan. 319; Armstead v. Neptune, 56 Kan. 750, 44 Pac. 998; Littlejohn v. Greeley, 13 Abb. Pr. 311, 22 How. Pr. 345; Smith v. American Turquoise Co. 77 Hun, 192, 28 N. Y. Supp. 329; Mason v. Dutcher, 24 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 345, 33 N. Y. Supp. 689; 1 Boone, Code Pl. § 256; Finch v. Finch, 10 Ohio St. 501; State use of Wyandot County v. Harper, 6 Ohio St. 607, 67 Am. Dec. 363; Walter v. Fowler, 85 N. Y. 621; McCammack v. McCammack, 80 Ind. 387; Jackson v. Lebar, 53 Cal. 257.

Without bringing stock into court for defendant, written tender was of no avail.

Code, § 3061; Johnson v. Triggs, 4 G. Greene, 97; Freeman v. Fleming, 5 Iowa, 460; Mohn v. Stoner, 11 Iowa, 30, 14 Iowa, 115; Warrington v. Pollard, 24 Iowa, 281, 95 Am. Dec. 727; Shugart v. Pattee, 37 Iowa, 422.

The agreements for free passes and to repurchase the stock were fraudulent and void as to the company, other stockholders, and creditors, against good public policy, and void; and defendant had a right to make such defense.

2 Clark & M. Priv. Corp. § 397; Melvin v. Lamar Ins. Co. 80 Ill. 446, 22 Am. Rep. 199; White Mountains R. Co. v. Eastman, 34 N. H. 124; Blodgett v. Morrill, 20 Vt. 509; Robinson v. Pittsburgh & C. R. Co. 32 Pa. 334, 72 Am. Dec. 792; Downie v. White, 12 Wis. 176, 78 Am. Dec. 731; Upton v. Tribilcock, 91 U. S. 45, 23 L. ed. 203; Brigham v. Mead, 10 Allen, 245; Buffalo & N. Y. City R. Co. v. Dudley, 14 N. Y. 336; Seymour v. Sturges, 26 N. Y. 134; Sawyer v. Hoag, 17 Wall. 610, 21 L. ed. 731; Tuckerman v. Brown, 33 N. Y. 297; 88 Am. Dec. 386; Ogilvie v. Knox Ins. Co. 22 How. 380, 16 L. ed. 349; Osgood v. Laytin, 3 Keyes, 521; Connecticut & P. Rivers R. Co. v. Bailey, 24 Vt. 465, 58 Am. Dec. 181; Marshall Foundry Co. v. Killian, 99 N. C. 501, 6 Am. St. Rep. 539, 6 S. E. 680.

On petition for rehearing.

A motion to strike out cannot legally be made to perform the office of a demurrer.

Burk v. Taylor, 103 Ind. 399, 3 N. E. 129; Gjerstadengen v. Hartzell, 8 N. D.

424, 79 N. W. 874; Pacific Factor Co. v. Adler, 90 Cal. 110, 25 Am. St. Rep. 106, 27 Pac. 36; Wattels v. Minchen, 93 Iowa, 519, 61 N. W. 915; Irwin v. Yeager, 74 Iowa, 177, 37 N. W. 136; State ex rel. McDonald v. De Kruif, 72 Iowa, 489, 34 N. W. 607; Walker v. Pumphrey, 82 Iowa, 491, 48 N. W. 928.

Mr. A. A. Adams for appellee.

Deemer, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The cases were not tried together, nor were they submitted in this court as one; but, as the questions arising are common to each case, they will be disposed of in one opinion.

Each of the plaintiffs purchased and paid for certain shares of stock in the defendant telephone company, upon the express agreement that each should receive for every share of stock one stockholder's pass, good over all the lines and free exchanges of the defendant, as and for a dividend on each share. It was further stipulated that in the event plaintiffs ceased using these passes, or assigned or transferred any of their stock, the plaintiffs or their assignees should thereupon and thereafter be entitled to dividends on their stock, the same as any other shareholder. As a part of the same transaction, it was expressly agreed by the defendant company that, in the event it sold, assigned, or transferred any of its connections, franchises, or business in the state of Minnesota, it would, upon demand, repurchase, from plaintiffs, at the par value thereof, any of the shares of stock then held by them; and plaintiffs, on their part, agreed to accept in payment therefor the par value aforesaid. These contracts were each made in the name of the defendant company, under its corporate seal, by its secretary and president. It is alleged in the petitions that the defendant sold its Minnesota lines, connections, franchises and business to one Averill, or to the United Telephone & Telegraph Company; and it is also alleged that from and after August 21, 1901, the transferee of this Minnesota business refused to recognize plaintiffs' passes, and denies them the right to use the lines and free exchange connections purchased by it. Plaintiffs thereupon demanded of defendant that it repurchase the stock as agreed, and tendered the same to it. Defendant refused to repurchase, and thereupon these actions were commenced to recover the agreed par value, with interest, according to the terms of the contracts.

The answers, which are identical, are long, and made up of many divisions and paragraphs. We shall not set them out in extenso, but content ourselves with stating the substance thereof, in connection with the claims now made by the defendant regarding the sufficiency thereof.

Aside from a point of practice which we shall hereafter note, defendant's contentions are (1) that the agreements to repurchase and for free passes were unauthorized by the defendant, and that its officers who made the agreements had no authority to do so; (2) that there was no consideration for the agreements to repurchase; and (3) that, as there were a number of other persons who held stock in the defendant company, who had no right to free passes, and no such agreements for repurchase, and who purchased their stock without notice or knowledge of the agreements with plaintiffs, and as these agreements operated to diminish the value of the earnings and the assets of the company, to the prejudice of these other stockholders and the creditors of the company, said promises of free passes and of repurchase were an undue and unjust discrimination in the plaintiffs' favor, to the prejudice of other stockholders and the general public, and therefore void as against public policy. The second matter of defense was withdrawn by the defendant, and it elected to rely upon the first and third. After the submission of the demurrer, plaintiffs filed amendments to their petitions, to meet the second point made by the defendant, and to this defendant filed a general denial as a part of its answers. Thereupon plaintiffs filed motions to strike the first and third divisions of the answers, because they contained irrelevant and immaterial matter, did not state any defensive or issuable facts, and for the further reason that these divisions each showed completed transactions of which the defendant had had the benefit, and that it was now estopped from repudiating the same. The motions to strike were sustained, but no specific rulings seem to have been made upon the demurrers. The practice point made by the defendant is that the plaintiffs waive their right to file motions by demurring to the answers, and that a motion to strike is an improper method of testing the sufficiency of matters pleaded in defense. Conceding the correctness of both propositions,—and that they are technically correct none will deny,—still this court has never been very insistent upon technical accuracy in the use of names given to such pleadings as are here involved. Chase v. Kaynor, 78 Iowa, 449, 43 N. W. 269; Seiffert & W. Lumber Co. v. Hartwell, 94 Iowa, 576, 58 Am. St. Rep. 413, 63 N. W. 333; Rhodabeck v. Blair

Town Lot & Land Co. 62 Iowa, 368, 17 N. W. 582. As to the alleged waiver by the filing of the demurrers, it appears that, after the demurrers had been submitted, plaintiffs filed amendments to their petitions, and to these defendant filed amendments to its answers. This being true, the right to move was not waived. But, even if it were, plaintiffs had the right to amend these demurrers, which is practically what they did in filing what they denominated motions to strike. No motion was filed to strike these motions, and no objection seems to have been taken at the time to the manner in which the questions were sought to be raised. The motions were treated by all parties as, in effect, amendments to the demurrers, in so far as they related to divisions 1 and 3 of the answer; and, while undoubtedly misnamed, this will not constitute reversible error. See authorities hitherto cited.

2. The first divisions of the answers pleaded want of authority in the officers of the corporation to execute the contracts referred to and relied upon in the petitions, and want of power or legal authority to make the same. There is no denial of the execution of the contracts by the president and secretary in the name of the corporation and under its corporate seal, and this must be taken as a conceded fact: but it is claimed that the answers raise an issue as to the authority and power of the agents and of the corporation to make such contracts. We take it that the pleader intended to raise two questions thereby: First, want of authority in fact; and, second, want of legal power in law.

As to the first proposition, it clearly appears, from the implied color which the answers must give in order that the defense may be considered at all, that these officers did in fact make the contracts as alleged in the petition, under the seal of the corporation, and that the defendant corporation has had and enjoyed the benefits of such contracts. This being true, the corporation cannot accept and ratify the contracts in so far as they were beneficial to it, and repudiate them in so far as they imposed any liability on its part. It accepted plaintiffs' money on the strength of these contracts, and cannot, while retaining the same, be heard to say that its officers had no authority to make the contracts under which it was received. This is horn-book law, and we need only cite in its support Field v. Eastern Bldg. & L. Asso. 117 Iowa, 185, 90 N. W. 717; Moore v. First Ruthven Circuit M. E. Church, 117 Iowa, 33, 90 N. W. 492; Melledge v. Boston Iron Co. 5 Cush. 158, 51 Am. Dec. 59; Philadel- phia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Howard, 13 How. 307, 14 L. ed. 157. The contract being under the seal of the corporation, and the signature of the corporation and its officers being undenied, it will, of course, be presumed not only that the contract was in fact executed, but that its officers had power to make it. Blackshire v. Iowa Homestead Co. 39 Iowa, 625. This point as to actual authority or adoption by ratification assumes, of course, that the contracts were such as the officers might have been authorized to perform.

The next proposition, as to legal power or authority, raises incidentally the question of ultra vires; that is to say, defendant pleaded want of legal authority in its officers to make the contract in question. As pleaded in the answer, this is largely a legal conclusion of the pleader, and might well be disregarded upon this ground; but, treating the point as properly raised, we have this state of facts: There is no showing as to the charter rights of the defendant; that is, there is nothing appearing therein which expressly prohibits the making of such contracts as are here involved. We have to deal, then, with its implied powers. The contracts made between the parties provide for two things: First, the payment of what is in the nature of guaranteed dividends; and, second, the repurchase of the stock by the corporation under certain conditions. With the first we now have nothing to do, as plaintiffs are not asking for dividends or their equivalent, nor are they in any manner relying upon that provision of the contracts. In so far as this record shows, they have received all the dividends to which they are entitled. At any rate, they are not asking for any here. They seek in these actions to enforce the agreements as to the repurchase of their stock. This agreement is entirely distinct from the agreement to pay dividends. In this connection it is entirely immaterial whether they received any of the promised dividends or not, or as to whether or not that part of the agreement is of any validity. The contracts for dividends and for repurchase of the stock are divisible in so far as the point now under consideration is concerned; that is to say, want of legal power to make the contracts to repurchase the stock. As to that point, it is well settled in this jurisdiction that, in the absence of charter restrictions, a corporation has power to make valid contracts for the repurchase of its own stock. Iowa Lumber Co. v. Foster, 49 Iowa, 25, 31 Am. Rep. 140; West v. Averill Grocery Co. 109 Iowa, 488, 80 N. W. 555; Rollins v. Shaver Wagon & Carriage Co. 80 Iowa, 390, 20 Am. St. Rep. 427, 45 N. W. 1037. See also

City Bank v. Bruce, 17 N. Y. 510; Johnson County v. Thayer, 94 U. S. 631, 24 L. ed. 133. So that, in so far as legal power and authority is concerned, the first division of the answers tenders no defense.

3. The second division of the answers, pleading want of consideration, was withdrawn, and to it we give no further attention. *

4. In the third division the point is made not only that the officers had no authority, but that the entire scheme was and is ultra vires, contrary to public policy, and void. It is claimed that the agreement to repurchase the stock at par, and to pay dividends in passes, constitutes a fraud upon, and an unjust discrimination in favor of these plaintiffs against, the other stockholders, and that such contracts were beyond the power of the corporation. This defense, as will be noticed, is made by the corporation itself, which has received all of the benefits of the transaction on its part. The agreement for free passes and to pay dividends is out of the case, save as it may bear on the question of fraud in the transaction, for, as already stated, that part of the contract has, so far as this case is concerned, been fully executed, and is functus officio. But it is contended that the agreement to repurchase, which is as yet executory in character, cannot be enforced, for that, if it be recognized and sustained, it may and will diminish the earnings and assets of the company, to the prejudice of other stockholders and creditors. This is, in our judgment, the only debatable question in the case. There is no claim of any actual fraud in the transaction, and no suggestion of any secrecy with reference to the agreement. Moreover, there is no statement either in pleadings or argument that the stock is not worth what the defendant agreed to repurchase it for. Reliance is placed solely on statements to the effect that the other stockholders had no such privileges or agreements, and that said agreements to repurchase diminished the value of the earnings and the assets of the company, to the prejudice of other stockholders and creditors. It goes without saying that the enforcement of these contracts will take the amount paid for the repurchase of the stock out of the earnings and assets of the company. But this is true in every case where a corporation is permitted to repurchase its own stock. However, its stockholders' liability is reduced by that amount, and, in the absence of fraud or a plea of insolvency on the part of the corporation, we do not see how either the stockholders or creditors are prejudiced, unless it appears that the corporation agreed to pay more for the stock than it was worth. No claim of this kind is made in the defendant's answer, save by way of a general statement of a legal conclusion that the earnings and assets will be diminished, to the prejudice of defendant's stockholders and creditors. No facts are pleaded, however, which will justify any such inference. No actual fraud or secrecy is pleaded, but it is argued that such a transaction is contrary to public policy. The cases differ in many respects from most of those cited by counsel for the defendant company. In most of them the subscriber for stock was endeavoring to escape liability on his contract by reason of a contract or an understanding that he was not to be liable thereon, or that his liability was contingent or for only a part of the amount of the subscription price. This case involves no such question. Here the defendant corporation is endeavoring to escape liability on a contract for repurchase, of which it had the full benefit, because of some actual or implied fraud, or because the contract is void as being against public policy. We fail to see that any question of public policy is involved. A corporation may guarantee dividends upon its stock if it is so minded. To hold otherwise would be to set aside many contracts of the kind, which no one heretofore has thought of questioning. The free use of its lines was given as and for dividends, and the plaintiffs had the right at any time to renounce that part of the agreement and to accept regular dividends. It is not contrary to public policy for a corporation to repurchase its own stock. This has many times been held, not only by this court, but in other jurisdictions as well. Of course, fraud will defeat any contract; but no actual fraud is pleaded, nor is there any attempt to plead facts from which fraud might be inferred. At best, there is a mere suggestion or inference of fraud, but no sufficient facts are pleaded from which such inference may legitimately be drawn. There is, as we have said, no showing that the corporation is insolvent, and no attempt to plead or show that the stock is not worth what defendant agreed to give for it. True, other stockholders were not given the rights accorded to these plaintiffs, but this in itself is no reason for not enforcing the contracts against the corporation itself, for there is no showing of any prejudice to other stockholders. It may be that their stock is worth more than par. As to this, we are not advised. But in the absence of direct averment we cannot presume any thing in defendant's favor in order to defeat these contracts, that it may escape from what appear on their face to be valid obligations. Having received the benefits of these contracts, it does not lie in defendant's mouth to plead the invalidity thereof because ultra vires. Field v. Eastern Bldg. & L. Asso. 117 Iowa, 185, 90 N. W. 717. See also Fremont Carriage Mfg. Co. v. Thomson, 65 Neb. 370, 91 N. W. 378; Watts v. Equitable Mut. Life Asso. 111 Iowa, 90, 82 N. W. 441. The defendant is not a mutual company: it is purely a stock concern; and we know of no reason of public policy or of sound morals which inhibits it from making such contracts as are here sought to be enforced, in the absence of some showing of fraud or mala fides. The public has no interest in such matters. Perhaps a case might be made where other stockholders or creditors could intervene, or in which creditors could enforce some liability against the plaintiffs, or object to the enforcement of the contracts, but no such questions are presented by this record. Plaintiffs paid full value for their stock when they purchased it, and were induced to purchase through the promises and agreements of the defendant, its officers and agents. To now allow the defendants to repudiate its agreements would be offering a premium upon wrongdoing. The plea of ultra vires is not looked upon with favor, and, when a corporation has received the benefits growing out of a contract, such contract will be enforced against it, unless it be entered into through fraud, or there be persuasive considerations of public policy involved. Neither of these appears in the defendant's answer. As fully sustaining our conclusions on this point, see Field v. Eastern Bldg. & L. Asso. 117 Iowa, 185, 90 N. W. 717; Wright v. Pipe Line Co. 101 Pa. 204, 47 Am. Rep. 701; Chester Glass Co. v. Dewey, 16 Mass. 94, 8 Am. Dec. 128; Manchester & L. R. Co. v. Concord R. Corp. 66 N. H. 100, 9 L. R. A. 689, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 319, 49 Am. St. Rep. 582, 20 Atl. 383; Union Nat. Bank v. Matthews, 98 U. S. 621, 25 L. ed.

188. In order to recover in this case, plaintiffs are not required to rely upon an illegal contract. The agreement to repurchase the stock was neither ultra vires, illegal, nor immoral. There was no actual fraud, and no facts are stated from which fraud may legitimately be inferred. Stockholders may, in equity, sometimes set aside ultra vires acts done by a corporation, which the corporation itself may not take advantage of. New Orleans, M. & T. R. Co. v. Ellerman, 105 U. S. 166, 26 L. ed. 1015; 4 Thomp. Corp. §§ 4483 et seq. But in such cases it must be shown that the conduct of the officers or directors works a substantial injury. However, speculation on this point is unnecessary, for the questions are not here at issue. We reach the conclusion that the third division of the answer presents no defense.

5. Lastly, it is argued that the court erred in rendering judgments against the defendant for the reason that the plaintiffs did not tender and bring their shares of stock into court at the time the judgments were rendered. This point does not seem to have been made in the lower court, and, of course, cannot be taken advantage of here. But we find that plaintiffs did make a written tender; that they, in their petitions, renewed these tenders, but the defendant refused to receive the stock back; and that on the trial plaintiffs produced the shares of stock in court, and filed them with the clerk. These facts are sufficient to justify the judgment, although the first written tender was not kept good as required by statute (Code, § 3061). Williams v. Triplett, 3 Iowa, 518.

There is no prejudicial error in the records, and the judgments are each and all affirmed.

Petition for rehearing overruled.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, EIGHTH CIRCUIT.

DAVIS CALYX DRILL COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.

Annie L. MALLORY et al., Exrs., etc., of Smith H. Mallory, Deceased.

(137 Fed. 332.)

*1. An implied warranty that an article will be fit for a particular purpose may be inferred from a contract to make or furnish it to accomplish that specific purpose, because the accomplishment of the purpose is the essence of this contract.

*Headnotes by SANB RN, Circuit Judge.

2. But no implied warranty of such fitness arises out of a contract to make or supply a described and definite article, although the vendor knows that the vendee is purchasing it to accomplish the specific purpose, because the essence of this contract is the delivery of the specific article, and not the accomplishment of the purpose.

NOTE.—As to implied warranty of fitness of property bought for special purpose, see also, in this series, note to McQuaid v. Ross, 22 L. R. A. 187, and the later cases of Bierman v. City 49 L. R. A.

Mills Co. 37 L. R. A. 799; Gardner v. Winter, 63 L. R. A. 647; and Rollins Engine Co. v. Eastern Forge Co. 68 L. R. A. 441.

3. A vendee contracted with a manufacturer, in writing, to buy and pay for one class F3 drill made by the latter, and described in its catalogue, and certain other specific machinery and tools, for an agreed price. Before this contract was made, the vendee informed the vendor that he wanted the drill and machinery to bore holes through certain described strata in land in the county of Lucas, in the state of Iowa, and the manufacturer assured him that its class F3 drill would do this work as rapidly and economically as a diamond drill. But the written contract was silent upon this subject. The vendee relied upon this assurance of the manufacturer, and made the contract. Held, there was no implied warranty that the drill and its machinery would be suitable to bore holes through the specific described strata in Lucas county, Iowa.

4. When the written agreement of the parties is complete in itself, the conclusive legal presumption is that it embodies the entire engagement of the parties, and the manner and extent of their obligations, and parol evidence of other terms relating to the same subject-matter is inadmissible to extend, modify, or contradict it.

5. An implied warranty of the fitness of a machine to do a particular work does not include a warranty that it will do the work as rapidly or economically as some other specified machine. Such a covenant can be introduced by express contract only, and parol evidence of it is excluded by a written contract of sale which is silent on the subject.

(Phillips, District Judge, dissents.)

(April 11, 1905.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Iowa to review a judgment in favor of defendants in an action brought to recover the contract price of certain machinery sold and delivered to defendants' testator. Reversed.

Statement by Sanborn, Circuit Judge:

On June 25, 1902, the Davis Calyx Drill Company, a corporation, made a written contract with S. H. Mallory to furnish him free on board the cars at Tarrytown, in the state of New York, one class F3 drill, which is described in its catalogue; and certain specific machinery, tools, and articles, for which Mallory promised to pay $2,450. Mallory has since died, and the defendants are the executrices of his will. The Calyx company made and delivered the drill, the machinery, and the articles according to the contract, and this is an action to recover their purchase price. Two defenses were interposed,—fraudulent misrepresentation and the breach of an implied warranty by the plaintiff. The court withdrew the former defense, and submitted the latter to the jury. There was evidence which had a tendency to establish these facts: The plaintiff was a corporation engaged in the manufacture of drills and other machinery at Tarrytown, in the state of New York. Mallory was engaged in prospecting for coal and lands in Lucas county, in the state of Iowa, and William Haven was his agent. Haven had used a diamond drill for this purpose prior to June, 1902, but he objected to it because it would frequently fail to produce any core for the reason that the coal was soft, and the diameter of the core was only 1 inch. He was desirous of obtaining a drill which would produce a larger core. He heard of the Davis Calyx drill, procured one of the plaintiff's catalogues, went to Tarrytown, and saw one of the plaintiff's drills in operation with a shot bit; but he could not form any opinion upon the question whether or not it was fit to work in the strata in earth in Lucas county, in the state of Iowa. The drill was provided with a cutter and a shot bit, and these were exchanged in the operation to accommodate the drill to the hardness of the material through which it was to pass. Haven met the secretary and the general manager of the plaintiff. He described to them the strata through which a drill must pass in boring holes upon the land of Mr. Mallory, and explained to them that he desired to get a machine which would produce a larger core than a diamond drill, and would operate as economically and rapidly. They told him that their machine was just the drill he wanted. They showed him pieces of stone through which it had passed, and stated to him that it would sink 25 or 30 feet per day; that it would operate as economically and as rapidly as a diamond drill, and would get a larger core. Thereupon Haven made the contract in suit on behalf of his principal, Mallory, in reliance upon these representations, and upon the judgment of the officers of the plaintiff, expressed in this way. The plaintiff furnished the drill and all the other specific machinery, tools, and articles, described in the contract, and furnished an expert to set up and operate the drill. But the machine would not work satisfactorily. It would sink only 8 or 10 feet per day on the average, while a diamond drill would bore into the same ground at the rate of 25 feet per day. The plaintiff claimed that these facts evidenced an implied warranty that the drill would be fit and suitable to bore holes through the strata in Lucas county, Iowa, underneath his land, as rapidly and economically as a diamond drill. All the testimony relative to this alleged warranty was received over the objections of the plaintiff, and was contradicted by testimony which it produced. The court instructed the jury, in effect, that if Haven correctly described to the secretary and general manager of the plaintiff the strata through which the drill was to be sunk under the land of Mallory, and if the secretary and general manager knew where the drill was to be used, and stated that it would do as much work there, and do it as economically, as a diamond drill, then the plaintiff had made an implied warranty that the drill would work in this way, and that, if it did not do so, the defendants had a right to rescind the contract, to return the drill, and to recover the expenses which they or their decedent had incurred in their attempt to operate it. The plaintiff excepted to this portion of the charge, and to the introduction of the evidence relative to the alleged warranty, and there was a verdict for the defendants.

Argued before Sanborn, Circuit Judge, and Philips and Riner, District Judges.

Messrs. Joseph C. Mitchell and Francis M. Hunter, for plaintiff in error:

Where there is a written contract of sale, complete in itself, which contains no warranty, and no fraud, accident, or mistake is alleged, it is not competent for the purchaser, by allegation and proof, to show a parol warranty of the quality of the property. If the writing amounts to a contract of sale, and contains no warranty, parol evidence is not admissible to add a warranty thereto.

Mast v. Pearce, 58 Iowa, 579, 43 Am. Rep. 125, 8 N. W. 632, 12 N. W. 597; Seitz v. Brewers' Refrigerating Mach. Co. 141 U. S. 510, 35 L. ed. 837, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 46; De Witt v. Berry, 134 U. S. 306, 33 L. ed. 896, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 536; Warbasse v. Card, 74 Iowa, 306, 37 N. W. 383, Brintnall v. Briggs, 87 Iowa, 538, 54 N. W. 531.

Where "the article ordered was to be of a particular design or pattern, well defined and understood between the parties, and the article made and delivered in pursuance of the contract conforms to the pattern or model, there is no warranty implied further than that it should be of good workmanship and material."

Cosgrove v. Bennett, 32 Minn. 371, 20 N. W. 359; Milwaukee Boiler Co. v. Duncan, 87 Wis. 120, 41 Am. St. Rep. 33, 58 N. W. 232; Grand Ave. Hotel Co. v. Wharton, 24 C. C. A. 441, 49 U. S. App. 108, 79 Fed. 43; Goulds v. Brophy, 42 Minn. 109, 6 L. R. A. 392, 43 N. W. 834; Wheaton Roller-Mill Co. v. John T. Noye Mfg. Co. 66 Minn. 156, 68 N. W. 854; Cunningham v. Hall, 4 Allen, 268; Wisconsin Red Pressed-Brick Co. v. Hood, 54 Minn. 543, 56 N. W. 165; White v. Adams, 77 Iowa, 285, 42 N. W. 199; Fairbanks, M. & Co. v. Baskett, 98 Mo. App. 53, 71 S. W. 1113; McCray Refrigerator & Cold Storage Co. v. Woods, 99 Mich. 269, 41 Am. St. Rep. 599, 58 N. W. 320.
69 L. R. A.

Messrs. Theodore M. Stuart and Washington I. Babb, for defendants in error:

Where an article, especially an article of machinery, is unknown to the purchaser,—that is, he has not sufficient information concerning such article, or its capacity, or manner of operation to form an opinion or judgment as to whether or not it will or can be made to work satisfactorily or with reasonable rapidity and economy at a certain place and in certain kinds and character of materials, wherein he desires and expects to use it,—and, before contracting for the purchase of such article from the manufacturers, he fully informs such manufacturer of the locality where he desires and expects to use it, and also of the kind and character of materials in which he expects to use it and, with full knowledge of such facts, the manufacturer states that his said machine will operate in such locality and materials with reasonable rapidity and economy; and the purchaser, relying upon the judgment of the manufacturer, contracts with him to manufacture and furnish him with such machine,—then, and in such case, and under such circumstances, an implied warranty arises on the part of such seller that the machine to be furnished can and will operate in said locality and in said materials as represented by him, or with reasonable rapidity and economy.

Kellogg Bridge Co. v. Hamilton, 110 U. S. 108, 28 L. ed. 86, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 537; Grand Ave. Hotel Co. v. Wharton, 24 C. C. A. 441, 49 U. S. App. 108, 79 Fed. 43; Parsons Band Cutter & Self Feeder Co. v. Mallinger, 122 Iowa, 703, 98 N. W. 580; Alpha Checkcrauer Co. v. Bradley, 105 Iowa, 537, 75 N. W. 369; Blackmore v. Fairbanks, M. & Co. 79 Iowa, 289, 44 N. W. 548; Timken Carriage Co. v. Smith, 123 Iowa, 554, 99 N. W. 183; Burnett v. Hensley, 118 Iowa, 578, 92 N. W. 678; Latham v. Shipley, 86 Iowa, 543, 53 N. W. 342; Eversole, Enc. Iowa Law, § 981; Benjamin, Sales, § 1002, note 40; Merriam v. Field, 24 Wis. 640; Leopold v. Van Kirk, 27 Wis. 152; Roe v. Bachelder, 41 Wis. 360; Wilcox v. Owens, 64 Ga. 601; Lanz v. Wachs, 50 Ill. App. 262; Kennebrew v. Southern Automatic Electric Shock Mach. Co. 106 Ala. 377, 17 So. 545; Zimmerman v. Druecker, 15 Ind. App. 512, 44 N. E. 557; Lee v. J. B. Sickles Saddlery Co. 38 Mo. App. 201; Omaha Coal, Coke & Lime Co. v. Fay, 37 Neb. 68, 55 N. W. 211; Overton v. Phelan, 2 Head, 445; Brenton v. Davis, 8 Blackf. 318, 44 Am. Dec. 769; Rodgers v. Niles, 11 Ohio St. 53, 78 Am. Dec. 290; Southern Brass & Iron Co. v. Exeter Machine Works, 109 Tenn. 67, 70 S. W. 614; Ottawa Bottle & Flint-Glass Co. v. Gunther, 31 Fed. 208; Fox v. Stockton Combined Harvester & Agri.

Works, 83 Cal. 333, 23 Pac. 295; Rogers v. Hanson, 35 Iowa, 286; McClung v. Kelley, 21 Iowa, 508; Jones v. Just, L. R. 3 Q. B. 197; Brown v. Edgington, 2 Mann. & G. 279; Pease v. Sabin, 38 Vt. 432, 91 Am. Dec. 364; Port Carbon Iron Co. v. Groves, 68 Pa. 149; Geltu v. Rountree, 2 Pinney (Wis.) 379, 54 Am. Dec. 138; Walton v. Cody, 1 Wis. 420; Creasy v. Gray, 88 Mo. App. 454; McCormick Harrestring Mach. Co. v. Nicholson, 17 Pa. Super. Ct. 188; William Anson Wood Mower & Reaper Co. v. Thayer, 50 Hun, 516, 3 N. Y. Supp. 465; McClamrock v. Flint, 101 Ind. 278; Woodle v. Whitney, 23 Wis. 55, 99 Am. Dec. 102.

Sanborn, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

An implied warranty that an article will be fit for a particular purpose may be inferred from a contract to make or supply it to accomplish that purpose, because the accomplishment of the purpose is the essence of the undertaking. But no such warranty arises out of a contract to make or supply a specific, described, or definite article, although the manufacturer or dealer knows that the vendee buys it to accomplish a specific purpose, because the essence of this contract is the furnishing of the specific article, and not the accomplishment of the purpose. In other words, a warranty that a machine, tool, or article sold is fit and suitable to accomplish a particular purpose or to do a specific work may be implied when the manufacturer or dealer knows the purpose or work to be effected, and the purchase of the machine, tool, or article is in reality an employment of the vendor to do the work by making or furnishing a machine, tool, or article, to effect it. Kellogg Bridge Co. v. Hamilton, 110 U. S. 108, 116, 28 L. ed. 86, 89, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 537; Breen v. Moran, 51 Minn. 525, 53 N. W. 755; Leopold v. Van Kirk, 27 Wis. 152, 156; Brenton v. Davis, 8 Blackf. 318, 44 Am. Dec. 769; Omaha Coal, Coke, & Lime Co. v. Fay, 37 Neb. 68, 75, 55 N. W. 211; Lee v. J. B. Sickles Saddlery Co. 38 Mo. App. 201, 205; Rodgers v. Niles, 11 Ohio St. 53, 57, 78 Am. Dec. 290; White v. Adams, 77 Iowa, 295, 297, 42 N. W. 199.

But no implied warranty that a machine, tool, or article is suitable to accomplish a particular purpose or to do a specific work arises where the vendor orders of the manufacturer, or purchases of the dealer, a specific, described, or definite machine, tool, or article, although the vendor knows the purpose or work which the purchaser intends to accomplish with it, and assures him that it will effect it. Such an assurance is but the expression of an opinion, when it is followed by a written contract, complete in itself, which is silent upon the subject. The extent of the implied warranty in such a case is that the machine, tool, or article shall correspond with the description or exemplar, and that it shall be suitable to perform the ordinary work which the described machine is made to do. Seitz v. Brewers' Refrigerating Mach. Co. 141 U. S. 510, 518, 519, 35 L. ed. 837, 840, 841, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 46; Keates v. Cadogan, 2 Eng. L. & Eq. 320, 10 C. B. 591; Grand Ave. Hotel Co. v. Wharton, 24 C. C. A. 441, 443, 49 U. S. App. 108, 79 Fed. 43, 45; Morris v. Bradley Fertilizer Co. 12 C. C. A. 34, 35, 28 U. S. App. 87, 64 Fed. 55, 56; Leake, Contr. 4th ed. 261, 262; 1 Parsons, Contr. 586, 587; Union Selling Co. v. Jones, 63 C. C. A. 224, 227, 229, 128 Fed. 672, 675, 677; McCray Refrigerating & Cold Storage Co. v. Woods, 99 Mich. 269, 41 Am. St. Rep. 599, 58 N. W. 320; Cosgrove v. Bennett, 32 Minn. 371, 20 N. W. 360; Goulds v. Brophy, 42 Minn. 109, 6 L. R. A. 392, 43 N. W. 834; Wisconsin Red Pressed-Brick Co. v. Hood, 54 Minn. 545, 56 N. W. 165; Fairbanks, M. & Co. v. Baskett, 98 Mo. App. 53, 71 S. W. 1113; Wheaton Roller-Mill Co. v. John T. Noye Mfg. Co. 66 Minn. 156, 68 N. W. 854; Milwaukee Boiler Co. v. Duncan, 87 Wis. 120, 41 Am. St. Rep. 33, 58 N. W. 232; J. I. Case Plow Works v. Niles & S. Co. 90 Wis. 590, 63 N. W. 1013; Deming v. Foster, 42 N. H. 165, 175; Morse v. Union Stock Yard Co. 21 Or. 289, 14 L. R. A. 157, 28 Pac. 2; Dushane v. Benedict, 120 U. S. 630, 647, 30 L. ed. 810, 814, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 696; Carleton v. Jenks, 26 C. C. A. 265, 47 U. S. App. 734, 80 Fed. 937; Alpha Checkrouer Co. v. Bradley, 105 Iowa, 537, 546, 75 N. W. 369; Latham v. Shipley, 86 Iowa, 543, 53 N. W. 342; Blackmore v. Fairbanks, M. & Co. 79 Iowa, 289, 44 N. W. 548; Parsons Band Cutter & Self Feeder Co. v. Mallinger, 122 Iowa, 703, 98 N. W. 580.

If the purchaser, Mallory, or his agent, Haven, had described the strata through which he desired to drive the drill, and had ordered the Calyx company to make or to select and furnish to him a drill that would bore the desired holes through these strata as rapidly and economically as a diamond drill, for an agreed price, and the plaintiff had accepted the order, an implied warranty would have arisen that the drill to be furnished under that contract would do the work as speedily and cheaply as a diamond drill. But an accepted order to make and deliver a specific, described drill, which the vendor is engaged in making, has no such effect, although the manufacturer knows the use for which the vendee desires to obtain it. The reason for this rule is conclusive and unanswerable. When a manufacturer or dealer agrees to make or furnish an article that will accomplish a particular purpose, the accomplishment of the purpose is the substance of his undertaking, and he is free to make or to supply any article that will do the work required. If he furnishes an article that will accomplish this purpose, he performs his contract, although the article he supplies may differ widely from that contemplated by the purchaser when he made the agreement to buy. On the other hand, when the manufacturer or dealer contracts to make or to deliver a specific and definitely described article, to enable the vendor to accomplish a known purpose, the essential part of his obligation is the delivery of the identical article described in the contract; and the delivery of a different article, although it may better accomplish the desired result, is not a performance of his agreement, and does not entitle him to recover the purchase price. The furnishing of the article described, and that alone, whether that article is fit for the known purpose to which the vendee intends to apply it or not, constitutes a compliance with the contract by the vendor, and entitles him to secure its fruits. The familiar illustration of this distinction by Maule, J., in Keates v. Cadogan, 2 Eng. L. & Eq. 320, 10 C. B. 591, is still the most felicitous: "If a man says to another, 'Sell me a horse fit to carry me,' and the other sells a horse which he knows to be unfit to ride, he may be liable for the consequences; but if a man says, 'Sell me that gray horse to ride,' and the other sells it, knowing that the former will not be able to ride it, that would not make him liable."

In Kellogg Bridge Co. v. Hamilton, 110 U. S. 108, 116, 28 L. ed. 86, 89, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 537, the bridge company had erected a portion of the false work requisite for the construction of a bridge across the Maumee river. Hamilton made a contract with the company to purchase the false work, the foundation of which was concealed by the river, and to complete the bridge. While he was engaged in the performance of this contract, the false work gave way, by reason of defects in its construction, and precipitated the iron upon it into the river. The Supreme Court held that the bridge company impliedly warranted that the work which it sold to Hamilton was suitable to construct the bridge upon because it built this false work, and had sold it to Hamilton to accomplish that specific purpose.

But in Seitz v. Brewers' Refrigerating Mach. Co. 141 U. S. 510, 512, 519, 35 L. ed. 837, 838, 841, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 46, the refrigerating company had been informed before it made its agreement that Seitz was cooling his brewery with ice, that he wanted to dispense with the use of ice, that no machine would be of any value to him unless it would enable him to accomplish this result, and that such a machine must continuously cool 150,000 cubic feet of air to a temperature of 40° Fahrenheit. Thereupon the refrigerating company assured Seitz that its machine would accomplish this result, and, in reliance upon this statement, he entered into a written contract with the company to the effect that the latter should supply and put in operation in his brewery a No. 2 size refrigerating machine, as constructed by it, for the sum of $9,450. The company made and put such a machine in his brewery, but it did not work satisfactorily, and it was incapable of cooling 150,000 cubic feet of air to 40° Fahrenheit. The Supreme Court held that this case fell under the rule that "where a known, described, and definite article is ordered of a manufacturer, although it is stated by the purchaser to be required for a particular purpose, still, if the known, described, and definite thing be actually supplied, there is no warranty that it shall answer the particular purpose intended by the buyer;" and that there was neither an expressed nor an implied warranty that the ice machine would do the work for which the manufacturer knew that it was purchased, or that it would cool 150,000 cubic feet of atmosphere to 40° Fahrenheit or to any other temperature. This decision indicates the unavoidable conclusion in the case at bar. It also answers the contention of counsel that this case is not governed by the rule that there is no implied warranty of fitness where a known, definite, and described thing is purchased, because Mallory and Haven were not familiar with, and had had no experience in the operation of, the class F3 drill which they purchased. It is not the familiarity of the purchaser with the character and work of the machine ordered, but the identity of the thing described in the contract, which brings the latter within the rule. Seitz was probably ignorant of the character and of the operation of the No. 2 size refrigerating machine which he bought, and he relied upon the assurance of the vendor that it would cool his brewery as he desired. But the machine which he ordered was identified by the description in his contract, and that description made it a known, described, and definite thing. So in the case at bar the description in the accepted order which Haven made of the class F3 drill perfectly identified it,—made it a known, described, and definite thing, within the meaning of this rule, and brought the contract clearly under its operation.

In Grand Ave. Hotel Co. v. Wharton, 24 C. C. A. 441, 443, 49 U. S. App. 108, 79 Fed. 43, 45, the vendee ordered two boilers for use in its hotel. The vendor knew the use to which the vendee intended to put the articles, and knew that it must necessarily use the muddy water of the Missouri river in order to operate them. The boilers were furnished, but they would not operate with the water of the Missouri river. This court held that there was no implied warranty that they would do so, and sustained the judgment for their purchase price.

In Milwaukee Boiler Co. v. Duncan, 87 Wis. 120, 41 Am. St. Rep. 33, 58 N. W. 232, the purchaser informed the manufacturer before he made his order that he required a boiler that would produce 130 pounds steam, working pressure, and thereupon the latter offered to furnish a described boiler, and he accepted the offer. The boiler specified was furnished, but it failed to produce 130 pounds steam, working pressure, or to do the work for which the manufacturer knew the purchaser ordered it. The supreme court of Wisconsin decided that there was no implied warranty that it would accomplish the particular purpose for which it was bought, and said: "The distinction seems to be between the manufacture or supply of an article to satisfy a required purpose, and the manufacture or supply of a specified, described, and defined article, as in this case."

In Goulds v. Brophy, 42 Minn. 109, 112, 6 L. R. A. 392, 43 N. W. 834, the vendee ordered from the catalogue of the manufacturer an auger outfit to bore wells. The vendor furnished the outfit, but it was not suitable to bore the wells which the vendee desired to sink. The supreme court of Minnesota held that there was no implied warranty that it would do so, and said: "There was an implied warranty—or, more correctly speaking, condition of the contract—that it should conform to the description, and be of good material and workmanship according to that description, but none that it would answer the purpose described or supposed."

There are many authorities to the same effect, but it would be a work of supererogation to review them. The contract of the Calyx Drill Company in this case was expressed in writing. It was that it would make and deliver to the purchaser, Mallory, one class F3 drill, and certain other machines and articles, which were definitely specified in the contract. When it supplied these articles, it performed its agreement, whether they were suitable to perform the specific work of boring holes in the land controlled by the vendee in Lucas county, Iowa, or not. There is no averment or proof that they were not fit to accomplish the general purpose for which they were made,—to bore holes in the earth under ordinary circumstances. The contract of the Calyx Drill Company was not that it would make and deliver a drill which would sink holes in the ground of the vendee in Lucas county as rapidly and economically as a diamond drill; and, if it had made and delivered a drill which would have done this, it would have been required, if the testimony of the defendants is true, to have furnished a different drill and different machinery from that described in its contract, and in so doing it would have failed to perform it.

The reception of the evidence and the charge of the court upon this subject were erroneous (1) because there was no implied warranty that the drill and machinery would be fit to bore holes through the specific strata in the earth in Lucas county; and (2) because, if there had been such a warranty, it would not have included a covenant that the machinery would sink them as rapidly and economically as a diamond drill. Such a covenant could be imported into the contract only by an express agreement, and such an agreement was excluded by the fact that the contract is in writing, and by the rule that, where the written contract of the parties is complete in itself, the conclusive legal presumption is that it embodies the entire engagement of the parties, and the manner and extent of their obligations, so that parol evidence of other terms is inadmissible to extend, modify, or contradict it. Green v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 35 C. C. A. 68, 71, 92 Fed. 873, 877; McKinley v. Williams, 20 C. C. A. 312, 319, 36 U. S. App. 749, 74 Fed. 94, 101; Wilson v. New United States Cattle Ranch Co. 20 C. C. A. 244, 249, 36 U. S. App. 634, 73 Fed. 994, 999; Union Selling Co. v. Jones, 63 C. C. A. 224, 227, 128 Fed. 672, 675.

The judgment is accordingly reversed, and the case is remanded to the court below, with instructions to grant a new trial.

Phillips, District Judge, dissenting:

I am unable to concur in the foregoing opinion. I make no question of the correctness of the general rule laid down, that, where a known and definite article is ordered of a manufacturer, although it be stated by the purchaser that it is required for a particular purpose, yet, if the known described thing be accordingly supplied, there is no warranty that it will answer the particular purpose desired by the purchaser. This for the obvious reason that the vendor undertakes by the terms of the express contract to furnish only the articles both parties have designated, and therefore the contract is performed by the vendor when the article delivered corresponds with the thing described and called for. Such was the case in Scitz v. Brewers' Refrigerating Mach. Co. 141 U. S. 510, 35 L. ed. 837, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 46. In that case the parties entered into a written contract, whereby the vendor agreed to supply the vendee with a No. 2 size refrigerating machine, "as constructed by the said party of the first part." The answer in that case simply alleged that the plaintiff represented that the machine was capable of cooling certain rooms in the brewery, but the machine, when set up and operated, was not so capable, and failed to perform the work for which, upon the representations of the plaintiff, the machine had been contracted for; that the defendant contracted upon the faith of the guaranty by the plaintiff that it would cool certain rooms. The representation was that it had the capacity of cooling a space of 150,000 cubic feet of air to a temperature sufficiently low for the purpose of brewing or manufacturing beer. The evidence tended to show that, prior to the execution of the contract, plaintiff's agent had represented that the machine would cool 150,000 cubic feet of 40° Fahrenheit; that the defendant had been cooling his brewery with ice, and wished the machine to cool it to about the same extent. The evidence further showed that, perhaps before the machine was accepted, the defendant wrote to the plaintiff, and requested a guaranty from it that the machine would accomplish this result, which was refused, notwithstanding which the defendant used the machine. It was of this state of the case that the court said that the machine purchased was specifically designated in the contract, and that: "the only implication in regard to it was that it would perform the work the described machine was made to do; and it is not contended that there was any failure in such performance. This is not the case of an alleged defect in the process of manufacture known to the vendor, but not to the purchaser, nor of presumptive and justifiable reliance by the buyer on the judgment of the vendor rather than his own, but of a purchase of a specific article, manufactured for a particular use, and fit, proper, and efficacious for that use, but in respect to the operation of which, in producing a desired result under particular circumstances, the buyer found himself disappointed." Further on the court said: "The alleged antecedent representations as to whether the machine possessed sufficient refrigerating power to cool this brewery were no more than expressions of opinion, confessedly honestly entertained, and dependent upon other elements than the machine itself, concerning which plaintiff in error could form an opinion as well as defendant; and the conduct of plaintiff in error in demanding, two days after the contract was executed, a written guaranty that the machine company would cool his building to 3½° Reaumur (or 40° Fahrenheit), and keep it at that all the time, and in acquiescing in the company's refusal to give the guaranty for reasons stated, and in thereupon afterwards ordering the company to go on with the work, . . . seems to us to justify no other conclusion than that reached by the verdict."

I respectfully submit that that case is not this. Here the vendee was engaged in prospecting for coal in given localities in the state of Iowa. Because of the peculiar geological formation of the earth to be bored through to reach the coal deposit, the diamond drill, customarily employed in such operations, proved to be ineffective and inadequate. Chancing to see a prospectus issued by the plaintiff manufacturer in the state of New York, commending its drills, Mallory sent his agent on to New York to interview the manufacturer. This agent informed the representative of the manufacturer fully as to the trouble Mallory encountered in using the diamond drill,—that, the coal being soft, the defendant would not get any core at all, or it would be so small that he could not judge the quality of the coal, and that what was desired was to procure a drill that would produce a larger core. This agent went to Tarrytown, where the plaintiff's machine shops were located, but it had no drills manufactured and set up so they could be seen. The agent went with plaintiff's representative to another place, and saw one of plaintiff's drills operated with a shot bit attachment, working a short distance only from the surface. He did not see it working with a "cutter," as represented. The agent could not form an opinion as to whether that drill was fitted for operating and working in the desired locality in Iowa. He told the plaintiff the general geological formation of the several coal veins, and the difficulty of getting through the different varieties,—some very hard and some very soft material. Plaintiff's agent then represented how his machine would work,—that it would go through the character of strata and geological formation in the territory where Mallory was operating; that it would work all right, operate cheaply, producing a large core instead of a small one,—and thereupon Mallory's agent closed the contract. In this case, therefore, there was an article—a machine—not in esse. It was to be manufactured to answer a purpose made known to the manufacturer, which purpose the manufacturer said his machine would accomplish. Whether or not it could do so could not possibly be known to the purchaser until the machine was put in actual operation in the field in Iowa. The vendor knew that the machine it was to manufacture would not meet the purpose of the vendee unless it could be successfully operated in the earth to be bored into through such strata to overcome the defects of the diamond drill. It was sold to accomplish this very object. Thereupon the agent of the vendor turned to his desk, and, in the form of a letter or proposition, stated, not as in the contract in the Seitz Case, 141 U. S. 510, 35 L. ed. 837, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 46, that the company agreed to furnish a machine "as constructed by the party of the first part," but "we propose to furnish you one Class F3 drill," with certain equipments, which proposition Mallory's agent instantly accepted at the bottom of the submitted letter.

If it is to be established as law that such method of concluding such transactions precludes the vendee from asserting an implied warranty that the machine to be manufactured is suitable to the use for which the manufacturer is advised the purchaser is buying it, it does seem to me that the doctrine of implied warranty can afford no protection to the confiding purchaser against the smart secretary of the manufacturer.

The case of Grand Ave. Hotel Co. v. Wharton, 24 C. C. A. 441, 49 U. S. App. 108, 79 Fed. 43, when read with regard to the particular facts of that case, and the qualifying language of Judge Lochren, furnishes little support to the majority opinion. There was a written contract in that case, whereby the defendant agreed to furnish and deliver to plaintiff, on the cars at Philadelphia, two certain described safety boilers, of 150 horse power each, and the services of a man to put them up, for a given sum, to be paid for as specified; the contract containing specifications of the material and the construction of the boilers in their parts. The defense interposed was that the vendor knew that the boilers were to be used in the Midland hotel at Kansas City, and that the water to be used in operating them was supplied from the Missouri river. The contention was that the company should have taken notice of the quality of that water, as to the amount of sand it contained in solution, which rendered the use of the boilers largely ineffective. Aside from the fact that there was nothing in the evidence to show any knowledge on the part of the vendor as to the peculiar properties of the water of the Missouri river as affecting the use of the boilers, there was present in the case the affirmative fact that the hotel had in prior use similar boilers. So that the purchaser not only had its own engineer run and operate the boiler, but it had a special knowledge of the quality and properties of the Missouri river water. While there was present in the case knowledge on the part of the vendor that Missouri river water was to be used in operating the boilers, it could not be said that the vendee had any right to rely upon the fact that the vendor knew the use to which the boilers were to be put. It was of this character of case that evidence was excluded tending to show the knowledge of the plaintiff as the basis of invoking an implied warranty. It can therefore better be understood why the learned judge, while stating in the first paragraph of the opinion that, "where a manufacturer contracts to supply an article which he manufactures to be applied to a particular use, of which he is advised, so that the buyer necessarily trusts to the judgment and skill of the manufacturer, there is an implied warranty that the article shall be reasonably fit for the use to which it is to be applied," he then said: "But when a known, described, and definite article is ordered of a manufacturer, although it be stated by the purchaser to be required for a particular use, yet, if the known, described, and definite thing be actually supplied, there is no implied warranty that it shall answer the particular purpose intended by the buyer. . . . Here the purchaser contracted for a definite, well known kind of boiler; its president having then a boiler of the same kind in use." From which it is apparent that the ruling was based upon the proposition that the buyer in that case was bargaining for a specific article known to him.

Mr. Justice Harlan, in Kellogg Bridge Co. v. Hamilton, 110 U. S. 108, 28 L. ed. 86, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 537, cited in the foregoing opinion, discussing the applicability of the doctrine of implied warranty, summed up the rules as follows: "According to the principles of decided cases, and upon clear grounds of justice, the fundamental inquiry must always be whether, under the circumstances of the particular case, the buyer had the right to rely, and necessarily relied, on the judgment of the seller, and not upon his own. In ordinary sales the buyer has an opportunity of inspecting the article sold, and, the seller not being the maker, and therefore having no special or technical knowledge of the mode in which it was made, the parties stand upon the grounds of substantial equality. If there be, in fact, in the particular case, any inequality, it is such that the law cannot, or ought not to attempt to, provide against. Consequently the buyer in such cases—the seller giving no express warranty and making no representations tending to mislead—is holden to have purchased entirely on his own judgment. But, when the seller is the maker or manufacturer of the thing sold, the fair presumption is that he understood the process of its manufacture, and was cognizant of any latent defect caused by such process, and against which reasonable diligence might have guarded. This presumption is justified in part by the fact that the manufacturer or maker by his occupation holds himself out as competent to make articles reasonably adapted to the purposes for which such or similar articles are designed. When, therefore, the buyer has no opportunity to inspect the article, or when, from the situation, inspection is impracticable or useless, it is unreasonable to suppose that he bought on his own judgment, or that he did not rely on the judgment of the seller as to latent defects of which the latter, if he used due care, must have been informed during the process of manufacture. If the buyer relied, and, under the circumstances, had reason to rely, on the judgment of the seller, who was the manufacturer or maker of the article, the law implies a warranty that it is reasonably fit for the use for which it was designed; the seller at the time being informed of the purpose to devote it to that use. . . . In the cases of sales by manufacturers of their own articles for particular purposes, communicated to them at the time, the argument was uniformly pressed that, as the buyer could have required an express warranty, none should be implied. But plainly such an argument impeaches the whole doctrine of implied warranty, for there can be no case of a sale of personal property in which the buyer may not, if he chooses, insist on an express warranty against latent defects.”

In that case there was a written contract as to what the parties were to do in completing the bridge, in connection with the work already done by the bridge company. There was no express warranty about the character of the work the bridge company had already done. But the bridge company knew that Hamilton was to use the structure for a particular purpose. Its internal construction and adaptability were known to the bridge company, but presumptively could be known to Hamilton only after using it. Of this situation the learned judge said: “The buyer did not, because, in the nature of things, he could not, rely on his own judgment: and, in view of the circumstances of the case and the relations of the parties, he must be deemed to have relied on the judgment of the company, which alone of the parties to the contract had or could have knowledge of the manner in which the work had been done. The law therefore implies a warranty that this false work was reasonably suitable for such use as was contemplated by both parties. It was constructed for a particular purpose, and was sold to accomplish that purpose; and it is intrinsically just that the company, which held itself out as possessing the requisite skill to do work of that kind, and therefore as having special knowledge of its own workmanship, should be held to indemnify its vendee against latent defects arising from the mode of construction, and which the latter, as the company well knew, could not by any inspection discover for himself.”

In Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 157 U. S. 94, 39 L. ed. 632, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 503, the contract for the building of the cars by the Pullman company was in writing, containing specifications as to the thing to be made and shipped,—as much so as in the case at bar. Notwithstanding the fact that the contract provided for an inspection of the cars after completion, by the purchaser's expert engineer, before they were delivered, it was contended by the vendee, when sued for the purchase money, that there was an inherent defect in the brakes furnished for the cars, not discoverable by inspection, and that there was an implied warranty of such latent defects in the cars. As the Pullman company was advised that the cars to be manufactured were to be operated on a particular line of road, with peculiar, acute curves, requiring brakes especially adapted thereto, it was held that there was an implied warranty on the part of the manufacturer that the brakes constructed by it as a part of the machinery would meet the requirements of the purchaser. Inasmuch as the defendant had accepted the cars, and the only defect was the insufficiency of the brakes, which the vendee had the means of supplying, it was ruled that it could recoup for the difference which it would cost to equip the cars with such obtainable brakes.

The utility of the machinery furnished by the plaintiff company in this case consisted entirely in the adaptability of the drill bit to accomplish the required boring in the peculiar strata formation where Mallory was exploring for coal. While the plaintiff submitted in writing an itemized specification of the equipment to be furnished by it, and the cost thereof, and Mallory agreed by the acceptance to pay the sum specified, it was practically contemporaneous with the information given the manufacturer by the purchaser as to the particular use to which it was to be applied, and with the knowledge that, unless it accomplished the desired work, it would be practically useless to the purchaser. It does seem to me, therefore, that if there can be a case where the law writes into the executory contract, where the manufacturer undertakes to manufacture a machine with full knowledge of the purpose for which it is bought, a warranty that it is fit for the specified use, and when the manufacturer knows that the vendee is relying upon the manufacturer's superior knowledge of the fitness of the machine, this is clearly a proper case for the application of this wholesome rule of law.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

Ben B. COTANT

v.

BOONE SUBURBAN RAILWAY COMPANY, Appt.

(125 Iowa, 46.)

1. A railway company which expressly or by implication invites its passengers to use a stile over a wire fence in leaving its grounds is bound to use at least ordinary care in seeing that it is fit for the purpose intended, although the stile was not erected by it, and the defective part is not on its property, but where it has no right to go to make inspection or repairs.
2. Damages for future suffering because of a negligent injury may be allowed where plaintiff is still suffering at the time of trial, and experts testify that the injury will probably be permanent.
3. The questions of the provision of a reasonably safe and accessible exit from a railroad terminal, and of the negligence of a passenger injured by attempting to use a stile over a wire fence for that purpose, are for the jury, where the evidence shows that there was an opening through the fence 40 rods away, and another 400 or 500 feet away, not in sight, which might have been closed on the day of the accident.
4. Passengers have a right to assume that means of egress from the carrier's terminal grounds are reasonably safe.
5. A carrier cannot delegate to another the duty of seeing that the means of egress from its terminal grounds are reasonably safe.

(April 6, 1904.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Boone County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. W. W. Goodykoontz and Dowell & Parrish, for appellant:

The street railway company did not erect the stile; had not assumed control thereof; it had no right to enter on the grounds of the North Western Railway Company, either to inspect, repair, or rebuild the stile; and it therefore owed the plaintiff no duty to inspect, repair, or rebuild it.

3 Thomp. Neg. § 3352; Veeder v. Little Falls, 100 N. Y. 343, 3 N. E. 306; Quimby v. Boston & M. R. Co. 69 Me. 340; Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Dessommes (Tex.) 15 S. W. 806.

Messrs. C. T. Cotant and Gamoe & Hollingsworth, for appellee:

Plaintiff was not required to take more than a casual observation of the stile before attempting to cross it. He would be justified in assuming defendant had done its part.

Pennsylvania Co. v. Marion, 123 Ind. 415, 7 L. R. A. 687, 18 Am. St. Rep. 330, 23 N. E. 973; Lucas v. Pennsylvania Co. 120 Ind. 205, 16 Am. St. Rep. 323, 21 N. E. 972.

The conduct of defendant placed plaintiff in the position in which he was, and what would amount to ordinary care on plaintiff's part would be negligence when viewed from the standpoint of defendant.

Hall v. Murdock, 114 Mich. 233, 72 N. W. 150.

Plaintiff would not be compelled to forego the use of the stile, even though there were some apparent dangers in its use, if he exercised care commensurate with the added danger.

Pennsylvania Co. v. Marion, 123 Ind. 415, 7 L. R. A. 687, 18 Am. St. Rep. 330, 23 N. E. 973.

Where a person is injured, without neglect on his part, by a defect in a way or passageway over which he has been induced to pass, for a lawful purpose, by an invitation, express or implied, he can recover damages for the injury sustained, against the party so inviting, or being in fault for the defect.

NOTE.—As to duty of carrier to provide safe means at entrance to and exit from its stations, see also, in this series, Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Trautwein, 7 L. R. A. 435.

As to measure of care which a carrier must exercise to keep its platforms and approaches safe, see note to Johns v. Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. 20 L. R. A. 520.

As to duty to maintain safe approaches beyond its premises, see note to Skottowe v. Oregon Short Line & U. N. R. Co. 16 L. R. A. 393, Tobin v. Portland, S. & P. R. Co. 59 Me. 183, 8 Am. Rep. 415; Carleton v. Franconia Iron & Steel Co. 99 Mass. 216; Skottowe v. Oregon Short Line & U. N. R. Co. 22 Or. 430, 16 L. R. A. 593, 30 Pac. 222; Corrigan v. Elsinger, 81 Minn. 42, 83 N. W. 492; Breeze v. Powers, 80 Mich. 172, 45 N. W. 130; Stewart v. Cincinnati, W. & M. R. Co. 89 Mich. 315, 17 L. R. A. 539, 50 N. W. 852; Burnett v. Burlington & M. R. Co. 16 Neb. 332, 20 N. W. 280; Lillstrom v. Northern P. R. Co. 53 Minn. 464, 20 L. R. A. 587, 55 N. W. 624; Emery v. Minneapolis Industrial Exposition, 56 Minn. 460, 57 N. W. 1132.

Deemer, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Defendant owns and operates an electric railway from the city of Boone to the Des Moines river, near what is known as the "High Bridge" of the Chicago & Northwestern Railway, and on the 4th day of July, 1901, was carrying passengers over the said line for hire. The west or river end of this railway ran for some distance parallel to, and immediately north of, the right of way of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad Company, and the rights of way of the two companies were separated by a wire fence. Just prior to the 4th day of July, 1901, one Spraker who owned some land south of the steam railway right of way, which he used as pleasure ground, constructed a stile over this wire fence, which was made by placing two ladders, each 8 or 10 feet in length, and 14 or 16 inches in width, in such a position as that two ends met over and above the fence, while the other ends were set in the earth on either side thereof. Boards running parallel with the sides of the ladders were nailed thereon, and strips or cleats at short intervals were fastened to these boards. There were no railings or hand-rails, and no lateral supports. Plaintiff took one of defendant's trains in the city of Boone, rode out to the western terminal at or near the Des Moines river, alighted from the car, and, seeing this stile, which was near where the train stopped, attempted to pass over it, and, as he started to descend from the top, caught his foot in such a way as that he was thrown to the ground, and received the injuries of which he complains. He said on the witness stand that as he took the second step down, and placed the weight on his foot, something broke or turned with him causing him to lose his balance and to fall to the ground; that his foot was caught and held, so that his head and shoulders struck the ground. The alleged grounds of negligence are that "the said stile was without railing or means of lateral support, and that the defendant, its agents or servants, so carelessly and negligently constructed, appropriated, maintained, and used said unsafe and dangerous ladder and stile, and so negligently and carelessly failed, refused, and neglected to assist plaintiff at any time or in any manner in getting over said ladders or stile or barbed-wire fence, in departing from the defendant's said grounds, and so failed, refused, and neglected to provide safe means of egress and ingress from or to said grounds, as to cause each and all of the damages set out in the petition; that said stile or ladder was so defectively constructed of light and defective timber as to break and give way, and thus throw plaintiff to the ground and break his leg, causing the injury complained of." Defendant denied any negligence on its part, and pleaded contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff. Many points are relied upon for a reversal, the more important of which we shall consider in the order presented by appellant's counsel in their brief.

The first proposition made by them is that, as defendant did not erect the stile, had not assumed control thereof, and had no right to enter upon the land of the steam railway, either to inspect or to repair it, it owed plaintiff no duty with respect thereto, and cannot be charged with negligence either in the construction or maintenance of this device. The trial court gave the following, among other instructions: "You are instructed that, after completing its road, defendant was under no obligations to build or erect a stile or stairs over the fence from the right of way leading over and into the right of way of the Chicago & Northwestern Railway; but, if you find from the evidence that said stile in question was constructed partly on defendant's grounds and partly on the grounds of the Chicago & Northwestern Railway Company, and that the same was used by the passengers from defendant's cars as the usual means of egress from said grounds, and such fact was known to defendant, and defendant permitted the same, and there was no other reasonable or safe way of egress from said grounds, then the fact that said stile was partially upon the grounds of the Chicago & Northwestern Railway Company would not relieve defendant of the obligation to exercise ordinary care in keeping said stile in a reasonably safe condition, if it allowed the same to remain and be used as the only reasonable means of egress from its grounds." From the statement already made, it will be observed that the accident occurred on that part of the stile which was over and upon the right of way of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, and it is contended that defendant's responsibility ceased when the passenger passed upon the grounds of another carrier; that, at most, it was under no other duty to the plaintiff than to warn him of danger of which it had notice or knowledge, and that its liability is no greater than if the stile had been erected jointly by the steam railway company and the defendant. The defendant did not erect the stile, and there is no evidence that the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad Company had anything to do with it. Little need be said in support of the proposition that this stile was a dangerous contrivance. The jury so found, and we have no doubt of the correctness of its finding. But defendant strenuously insists that, as it had no right to enter upon the grounds of the other company to repair the device, it cannot be held liable for any injury that may have resulted from the use thereof. Ordinarily this proposition is true, but it must be remembered that this contrivance, while partly on or over the land of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad Company, was a single, complete device, and formed a continuous passageway over the fence; and, if defendant invited its passengers to use it, either expressly or by implication, it was bound to at least ordinary care in seeing that it was fit for the purpose intended. That it had no right to go upon the grounds of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad Company to make inspection or repairs is not controlling. Its passengers were not bound to ascertain at their peril what part of this stile was on the premises owned by another company, and what right defendant had to use it. Defendant undoubtedly had the right to make arrangements with this other company for the construction of a stile, and for permission to its passengers to cross its right of way; and, having invited the traveling public to use the device, it will not be permitted to say that it had no right to erect part of the contrivance upon grounds of another company. It will not do to say that the traveling public must inquire in such cases as to the right the carrier had to pass upon the grounds of another company to make repairs. This contrivance was used by defendant's passengers alone. It was not built to accommodate the steam railway or its passengers. The use made of the railway right of way was permissive only. That company had no interest in the device, did not profit therefrom in any way, and was not using it for the benefit of its patrons. It did not owe the plaintiff or the defendant company any duty whatever with reference to this stile, and the plaintiff was not going upon its grounds for the purpose of taking its trains, or for any other purpose than simply to cross them. In so doing, he was nothing more than a licensee, and the steam railway company was under no obligation to look after his safety in coming upon its premises. The use made of the stile was for the joint benefit of the defendant company and the owner of the pleasure grounds. The jury was justified in finding that the defendant company knew that it was being used by its passengers, and that it was in a dangerous condition. It was also justified in finding, on account of its position and the manner in which the defendant stopped its trains and operated its road, that there was an implied invitation to its passengers to use the device in going to the High Bridge and to the picnic grounds of Spraker, the man who constructed the stile. Had the contrivance been constructed by the defendant and the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad Company jointly for the use of the passengers of either line, both would undoubtedly have been liable for an injury received by a passenger. The rule seems to be "that the depot and connected grounds, visited by coming and going passengers, should be fitted up with a careful regard to their comfort and safety. The approaches, the tracks around, the platforms and places for entering and leaving the cars, the passages to the cars, every spot likely to be visited by passengers seeking the depot, waiting at it for trains or departing, should be made safe, and kept so." Bishop, Noncontract Law, § 1086. See also Lucas v. Pennsylvania Co. 120 Ind. 205, 16 Am. St. Rep. 323, 21 N. E. 972, and cases cited. Here there was no liability on the part of the steam railway company, but the situation was such as to make it natural for a person alighting from defendant's train as plaintiff did, intending to go to the bridge or to the pleasure grounds, to use the stile in passing over the fence. Defendant was bound to know that persons alighting from its trains would likely use this device in passing to their destination, and it was its duty to use at least ordinary care in seeing that it was properly constructed and in good repair. The following cases lend support to our conclusions on this point: Cross v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 69 Mich. 363, 13 Am. St. Rep. 399, 37 N. W. 361; Collins v. Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co. 80 Mich. 390, 45 N. W. 178; East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Watson, 94 Ala. 634, 10 So. 228; Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Trautwein, 52 N. J. L. 169, 7 L. R. A. 435, 19 Am. St. Rep. 442, 19 Atl. 178.

69 L. R. A.

2. The defendant asked an instruction to the effect that, if the jury found the injury was due to a defective step or board in the stile, it would not be liable, unless it knew, or in the exercise of ordinary care should have known, of this defective condition. This thought was embodied in one of the instructions given by the trial court, and defendant has no cause of complaint.

3. Instruction 10, which reads as follows, is complained of: "If you find from the evidence that the stile in question was constructed partly upon the ground of defendant company, and that the same was ordinarily and generally used by those who were passengers on defendant company's cars as a means of egress from said grounds, where the railway of defendant terminated, and that there was no other reasonable means of egress from said grounds, and that said defendant company knew that said stile was so used by passengers upon its cars in leaving said grounds, and that it permitted them to do so; and you further find that said stile, by reason of its narrowness, or by reason of the fact that there was no railing thereon or by reason of the fact that said stile was constructed of light and defective lumber, if such you find the fact to be, was not such means of egress from said grounds as an ordinary person would provide under similar circumstances,—you will be justified in finding the defendant guilty of negligence, as charged. If, however, you find that the said stile was such as an ordinary person would employ under similar circumstances as a means of egress from said grounds, then there would be no negligence upon the part of defendant." The criticism is that there was no evidence upon which to base it. Suffice it to say that we find in the record ample testimony to justify the instruction.

4. Instruction 19, relating to the measure of damages, is also challenged. It reads as follows: "If you find him entitled to recover, he should be allowed a fair and reasonable compensation for his injuries. In estimating his damage, no precise rule can be given for the amount to be allowed, as they are not in their nature susceptible of exact money valuation. You are to use your own sense and judgment, and be guided by the evidence, in allowing him such sum as will reasonably compensate him. In making up this amount, you should award, as may appear from the evidence, the reasonable value of the time lost because of the injury, the amount he has paid for medical attendance and nursing, and fair compensation for the bodily pain and suffering caused by the said injury; and if you further find that plaintiff's injuries are permanent, and will, to some extent, disable him in the future, and cause him pain and suffering hereafter, you should also allow him such further sum as, paid now in advance, will reasonably compensate him for such future disability, pain, and suffering as the evidence shows it is reasonably probable will result to him in the future from such injuries." The first point made with reference to this is that there is no testimony on which to base an allowance for future disability. The evidence clearly shows that plaintiff was suffering from his injuries at the time of trial, and the experts testified that his injury would probably be permanent. Plaintiff testified that he was earning $50 per month before the injury, and had not been able to earn more than $10 since. This was sufficient to take the case to the jury. Smith v. Sioux City, 119 Iowa, 50, 93 N. W. 81; Winter v. Central Iowa R. Co. 80 Iowa, 443, 45 N. W. 737; Ashley v. Sioux City (Iowa) 93 N. W. 303. Next it is argued that the instruction runs counter to the rules announced in Fry v. Dubuque & S. W. R. Co. 45 Iowa, 416, and Laird v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 100 Iowa, 336, 69 N. W. 414. A reading of these cases will sufficiently demonstrate the incorrectness of this proposition. Abstractly considered, the instruction has support in Bailey v. Centerville, 108 Iowa, 20, 78 N. W. 831; Miller v. Boone County, 95 Iowa, 5, 63 N. W. 352; Smith v. Sioux City, 119 Iowa, 50, 93 N. W. 81.

69 L. R. A.

5. Lastly it is argued that the verdict is contrary to the instructions. The principal contention here is that there was another means of egress from the defendant's grounds, whereby plaintiff could have reached his destination with safety. There was testimony to the effect that there was an opening in a barbed-wire fence 40 rods away, but it was not a place which afforded a reasonable means of egress from defendants terminal. Another opening in the fence, 400 or 500 feet away, was spoken of by one witness, but it was not in sight, and the witness said that it may have been closed on the day of the accident. It was clearly a question for the jury to say whether or not there was another reasonably safe, and accessible place of exit from the grounds where the railway terminated, and as to whether or not plaintiff was negligent in not taking it.

In conclusion, we may say that the case was submitted to the jury on two theories: One, that the stile, by reason of its narrowness, or for want of railings, or because it was constructed of light or defective materials, was not such means of egress as an ordinarily prudent person would provide, in which event defendant might be found guilty of negligence; and the other, that the injury was due to a defective board in said stile, in which event defendant would not be guilty of negligence, unless it knew, or in the exercise of reasonable care should have known, of its defective condition. The latter theory, was bottomed on the thought that the stile itself was not dangerous, save as it had a defective board. What we have said in the first division of this opinion has reference to this last contention. On the other proposition, defendant was liable for the defective condition of the stile, although it was erected by a stranger. Defendant had full knowledge of the construction of the stile, and impliedly invited its passengers to use it. Under such circumstances, its liability is the same as if it had itself set up and maintained the device. See cases hitherto cited and McDonald v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 26 Iowa, 124, 95 Am. Dec. 114; Beard v. Connecticut & P. Rivers R. Co. 48 Vt. 101; Gilmore v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 154 Pa. 375, 25 Atl. 774; Watson v. Ozanna Land Co. 92 Ala. 320, 8 So. 770. This rule is bottomed on the proposition that the duty of a carrier of passengers does not end when the passenger has alighted from its cars. It must also provide reasonably safe means of access in and from its stations or terminals for the use of its passengers, and the passengers have a right to assume that the means of egress provided are reasonably safe. This duty it cannot delegate to another so as to relieve itself from responsibility. See cases hitherto cited. Defendant's contention that it is not liable because the stile was erected by a stranger is unsound in principle, and not sustained by authority. When it invited its passengers to use this stile, it, in effect, represented that it was reasonably safe for the purposes intended; and, when injury occurred by reason of its unsafe or faulty construction, it should not be allowed to shield itself behind another, and to say that it did not know of its defective construction. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Glenk, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 599, 30 S. W. 278, and cases cited.

The instructions were even more favorable to the defendant than it was entitled to. We are not to be understood as approving all of them. Suffice it to say that defendant was in no manner prejudiced either by those given, or by the refusal of the court to give those asked by it. Our observations in the second paragraph of this opinion must be construed with reference to these suggestions.

There is no prejudicial error in the record, and the judgment must be, and is, affirmed.

Bishop, J., took no part.

Petition for rehearing overruled.

TEXAS SUPREME COURT.

James W. SWAYNE et al., Plffs. in Err.,
v.
LONE ACRE OIL COMPANY.

(.....Tex.....)

1. The life estates created by statute, giving a surviving husband or wife one-third interest for life in the real estate of the other, are subject to the incidents of common-law life estates, although they are not the same as the common-law estates; and the life tenant is therefore impeachable for waste.
2. One entitled to an undivided life estate under a statute giving a surviving husband or wife a one-third interest in the real estate of the other cannot demand absolutely any part of the production of oil wells subsequently opened upon the property by the remainder-men, but is entitled only to the income upon one third of the oil produced.

(April 27, 1905.)

NOTE.—As to right of dower in mines, see, in this series, Seager v. McCabe, 16 L. R. A. 247, and note.

As to rights of life tenants generally in oil in place, see, in this series, Koen v. Bartlett, 69 L. R. A.

ERROR to the Court of Civil Appeals for the First Supreme Judicial District to review a judgment modifying a judgment of the District Court for Jefferson County in plaintiffs' favor in an action brought to establish an interest in petroleum produced from land in which plaintiffs claimed an undivided interest. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Amos L. Beaty, W. D. Gordon, and E. C. McLean, for plaintiffs in error:

The widow's estate is not confined to the surface of the land, but includes the minerals beneath; and the case must be adjudged accordingly.

Tex. Rev. Stat. art. 1689; Benavides v. Hunt, 79 Tex. 383, 15 S. W. 396; Koen v. Bartlett, 41 W. Va. 559, 31 L. R. A. 128, 56 Am. St. Rep. 884, 23 S. E. 664; Seager v. McCabe, 92 Mich. 186, 16 L. R. A. 247, 52 N. W. 299; Blakley v. Marshall, 174 Pa.

31 L. R. A. 128; Williamson v. Jones, 25 L. R. A. 222, with note as to nature of property in mineral oil and gas, also 38 L. R. A. 694; Marshall v. Mellon, 35 L. R. A. 816, and Wilson v. Hughes, 39 L. R. A. 292.

425, 34 Atl. 564; Wilson v. Youst (Wilson v. Hughes) 43 W. Va. 826, 39 L. R. A. 292, 28 S. E. 781; MacSwinney, Mines, 32; Tiedeman, Real Prop. 2; Co. Litt. 4a; 1 Washb. Real Prop. 3; 2 Bl. Com. 16-18, 144; Lewis v. Branthwaite, 2 Barn & Ad. 437.

Since the life estate comes by inheritance, and vests solely by operation of law, the widow, though having only a life estate, might drill for oil without being guilty of waste, and is consequently entitled to her proportion of the oil produced, less the expenses of producing and marketing.

Tex. Rev. Stat. art. 1689; Higgins Oil & Fuel Co. v. Snow, 51 C. C. A. 267, 113 Fed. 439; Seager v. McCabe, 92 Mich. 186, 16 L. R. A. 247, 52 N. W. 299; Branbridge, Mining, 55; 4 Wait, Act. & Def. 424.

The remainder-man having drilled wells and devoted the land to mining purposes, the widow is entitled to her proportion of the proceeds of the oil, after deducting the expenses of producing and marketing, regardless of whether she would have been allowed to sink wells and extract oil.

Higgins Oil & Fuel Co. v. Snow, 51 C. C. A. 267, 113 Fed. 439; Koen v. Bartlett, 41 W. Va. 559, 31 L. R. A. 128, 56 Am. St. Rep. 884, 23 S. E. 664; Gillum v. St. Louis, A. & T. R. Co. 5 Tex. Civ. App. 338, 23 S. W. 717; Lenfers v. Henke, 73 Ill. 405, 24 Am. Rep. 263; Priddy v. Griffith, 150 Ill. 560, 41 Am. St. Rep. 397, 37 N. E. 999; Allen v. McCoy, 8 Ohio, 418.

The life estate cast by the Texas statute does not carry the inherent restrictions as to use that hedge about conventional life estates or dower and curtesy, and is not impeachable for waste.

In conventional life estates, if the grantor did not prohibit the grantee, or life tenant, the latter was not punishable for waste prior to the statutes of Marlbridge and Gloucester.

28 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 891; 2 Bl. Com. 123.

It is in every instance a conventional "life estate" to which the doctrine of waste has been applied.

Blakley v. Marshall, 174 Pa. 425, 34 Atl. 564; Wilson v. Youst (Wilson v. Hughes) 43 W. Va. 826, 39 L. R. A. 292, 28 S. E. 781; Marshall v. Mellon, 179 Pa. 371, 35 L. R. A. 816, 57 Am. St. Rep. 601, 36 Atl. 201.

There was at common law "a life estate of the legal kind, as contradistinguished from conventional."

2 Bl. Com. p. 125.

A tenant for life without impeachment for waste, and a tenant in tail after possibility of issue extinct, seem to stand upon 69 L. R. A.

precisely the same footing in regard to all questions of waste.

Atty. Gen. ex rel. Churchill v. Marlborough, 3 Madd. 539; Smythe v. Smythe, 2 Swanst. 251; Bridges v. Stephens, 2 Swanst. 157, note; Coffin v. Coffin, Jac. 72; 4 Kent, Com. 12th ed. 78, note b.

The legal life estate in question under our statute—a freehold estate of inheritance,—does not "necessarily" imply impeachment for waste.

The congress of Texas did not adopt the common law of England as a rule of property. The common law was adopted only as a rule of decision.

Considering that the Republic up to that time had been under the civil law, where an estate of this character was under no restrictions as to use, but where the usufructuary had a right to seek for and open every kind of mine (1 Domat, Civil Law, 843; 2 Domat, Civil Law, 945, 968), is it not reasonable that congress intended to fix the time or duration in which the estate could be enjoyed, rather than to hedge about with limitations the use thereof inherent in certain estates of this character at common law?

Cartwright v. Hollis, 5 Tex. 164; Thompson v. Duncan, 1 Tex. 489; Bradley v. McCrabb, Dallam (Tex.) 508; Campbell v. Everts, 47 Tex. 102; Klein v. Gehrung, 25 Tex. Supp. 238, 78 Am. Dec. 565; 3 Kent, Com. 448; 2 Bl. Com. p. 403; Howard v. North, 5 Tex. 298, 51 Am. Dec. 769.

The widow's estate is equal to the children's in all of its uses.

McGowan v. Bailey, 179 Pa. 470, 36 Atl. 325; Marshall v. Mellon, 179 Pa. 371, 35 L. R. A. 816, 57 Am. St. Rep. 601, 36 Atl. 201; Blakley v. Marshall, 174 Pa. 425, 34 Atl. 564; Wilson v. Youst (Wilson v. Hughes) 43 W. Va. 826, 39 L. R. A. 292, 28 S. E. 781; Lunn v. Oslin, 96 Tenn. 28, 33 S. W. 561; Owen v. Hyde, 6 Yerg. 334, 27 Am. Dec. 467; Gaines v. Green Pond Iron Min. Co. 33 N. J. Eq. 612; Sayers v. Hoskinson, 110 Pa. 473, 1 Atl. 308; Snyder, Mines, § 941.

When the remainder-man, as such and as cotenant, entered upon the land before partition and without the joinder of the life tenant, and drilled oil wells, and devoted the hitherto unused land to mining purposes, thereby destroying all other possible uses, mining thereby became a lawful mode of use, and the proceeds, when severed and sold, became a product of the land, and the accounting is due on a basis of profit, and not corpus.

Gillum v. St. Louis, A. & T. R. Co. 5 Tex. Civ. App. 338, 23 S. W. 717; Koen v. Bartlett, 41 W. Va. 559, 31 L. R. A. 128, 56 Am. St. Rep. 884, 23 S. E. 664; Seager v. Mc

Cabe, 92 Mich. 186, 16 L. R. A. 247, 52 N. W. 299; Donahue, Petroleum & Gas, chap. 4, § 3.

Messrs. Smith, Crawford, & Sonfield, for defendant in error:

The common law was adopted as the rule of property in Texas in 1840, and has been in force ever since, and was in force in 1848, when the statute casting an estate for life on the surviving husband or wife was enacted. Therefore, the estate conferred by the statute not being further defined than "an estate for life," the character of the estate was such as had been fixed and construed by the common law.

Hartley's Digest, art. 127; Black, Constr. & Interpretation of Laws p. 130; McCool v. Smith, 1 Black, 467, 17 L. ed. 220 United States v. Jones, 3 Wash. C. C. 209, Fed. Cas. No. 15,494; United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Asso. 24 L. R. A. 73, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 443, 7 C. C. A. 58, 19 U. S. App. 36, 58 Fed. 58; Kircher v. Murray, 8 C. C. A. 448, 23 U. S. App. 214, 60 Fed. 50; Boone v. Hulsey, 71 Tex. 189, 9 S. W. 531; Babb v. Carroll, 21 Tex. 771.

Where the statute confers upon the surviving wife "an estate for life in one third of the lands of her deceased husband," such estate is no greater than that of a life tenant at common law.

Carroll v. Carroll, 20 Tex. 744; Hendrix v. McBeth, 61 Ind. 473, 28 Am. Rep. 680; Tiedeman, Real Prop. § 72; 1 Washb. Real Prop. 4th ed. p. 139.

A tenant for life has only the right to full enjoyment and use of the land and all its temporary profits during his estate therein. He is entitled to none but temporary profits, and is prohibited from doing anything with the land which would constitute waste.

2 Bl. Com. p. 122; Tiedeman, Real Prop. § 72; Ft. Worth & N. O. R. Co. v. Pearce, 75 Tex. 281, 12 S. W. 864; Cook v. Caswell, 81 Tex. 678, 17 S. W. 385; Barnsdall v. Boley, 119 Fed. 195.

Waste is an unlawful act or omission of duty which results in permanent injury to the inheritance, and any act which does damage to the reversioner, and is not one of the ordinary uses to which the land is put, is waste.

Tiedeman, Real Prop. §§ 72, 73.

Oil is a mineral; oil in situ is a part of the land,—the inheritance.

Bryan, Petroleum & Natural Gas, p. 21; Brown v. Spilman, 155 U. S. 669, 39 L. ed. 305, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 245; Gerkins v. Kentucky Salt Co. 100 Ky. 734, 66 Am. St. Rep. 370, 39 S. W. 444; People's Gas Co. v. Tyner, 131 Ind. 277, 16 L. R. A. 443, 31 Am. St. Rep. 436, 31 N. E. 59; Williamson v. Jones, 43 W. Va. 562, 38 L. R. A. 694, 64 69 L. R. A.

Am. St. Rep. 891, 27 S. E. 410; Marshall v. Mellon, 179 Pa. 371, 35 L. R. A. 816, 57 Am. St. Rep. 601, 36 Atl. 201; Wilson v. Youst (Wilson v. Hughes) 43 W. Va. 826, 39 L. R. A. 292, 28 S. E. 781.

A tenant for life has no ownership or interest in minerals underlying the land, unless at the time that the life estate is cast, or prior thereto, mines have been opened on the land.

Marshall v. Mellon, 179 Pa. 371, 35 L. R. A. 816, 57 Am. St. Rep. 601, 36 Atl. 201; Blakley v. Marshall, 174 Pa. 425, 34 Atl. 564; Stoughton v. Leigh, 1 Taunt. 402; Coates v. Cheever, 1 Cow. 460; Williamson v. Jones, 43 W. Va. 562, 38 L. R. A. 694, 64 Am. St. Rep. 891, 27 S. E. 410; Westmoreland Coal Co.'s Appeal, 85 Pa. 344; Gaines v. Green Pond Iron Min. Co. 33 N. J. Eq. 603; Reed v. Reed, 16 N. J. Eq. 248; Hendrix v. McBeth, 61 Ind. 473, 28 Am. Rep. 680; Billings v. Taylor, 10 Pick. 460, 20 Am. Dec. 533; Gerkins v. Kentucky Salt Co. 100 Ky. 734, 66 Am. St. Rep. 370, 39 S. W. 444; Tiedeman, Real Prop. §§ 73-75; Donahue, Petroleum & Gas, p. 41, § 1; Higgins Oil & Fuel Co. v. Snow, 51 C. C. A. 267, 113 Fed. 438; Barnsdall v. Boley, 119 Fed. 195; Bond v. Godsey, 99 Va. 564, 39 S. E. 215; Maher v. Maher, 73 Vt. 243, 50 Atl. 1063; Neel v. Neel, 19 Pa. 323; Franklin Coal Co. v. McMillan, 49 Md. 549, 33 Am. Rep. 280; Moore v. Rollins, 45 Me. 493; Griffin v. Fellows, 81* Pa. 114; 4 Kent, Com. p. 41.

The life tenant's possession and right where no mines have been opened when the life estate is cast are only in the surface.

Benavides v. Hunt, 79 Tex. 390, 15 S. W. 396; Ames v. Ames, 160 Ill. 599, 43 N. E. 592; Caldwell v. Fulton, 31 Pa. 475, 72 Am. Dec. 760; Caldwell v. Copeland, 37 Pa. 427, 78 Am. Dec. 436.

If plaintiffs, holders of the life estate of Mrs. Snow, are entitled to any share in the oil or other minerals, such right is limited to interest on the investment of the net proceeds of one eighteenth of the oil produced.

Blakley v. Marshall, 174 Pa. 425, 34 Atl. 564; Lenfers v. Henke, 73 Ill. 405, 24 Am. Rep. 266; Dickin v. Hamer, 1 Drew. & S. 284; Wilson v. Youst (Wilson v. Hughes) 43 W. Va. 826, 39 L. R. A. 292, 28 S. E. 781.

Messrs. Greer, Greer, Nall, & Parker and Crane, Greer, & Wharton also for defendant in error:

Where a statute is enacted, using a well-understood, common-law, technical phrase, the statute will be construed as using the phrase in its technical sense, and with the same meaning it had at common law.

Cayce v. Curtis, Dallam (Tex.) 404;

Williams v. State, 12 Tex. App. 395; Monroe v. State, 23 Tex. 210; Powell v. State, 17 Tex. App. 351; Black, Constr. & Interpretation of Laws, p. 130; Laird v. Briggs, L. R. 19 Ch. Div. 22; Adams v. Turrentine, 30 N. C. (8 Ired. L.) 147; McCool v. Smith, 1 Black, 467, 17 L. ed. 220; United States v. Jones, 3 Wash. C. C. 209, Fed. Cas. No. 15,494; United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Asso. 24 L. R. A. 73, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 443, 7 C. C. A. 58, 19 U. S. App. 36, 58 Fed. 58; State v. Phelps, 24 La. Ann. 493; State v. Whitener, 93 N. C. 590.

Gaines, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action of trespass to try title, and was brought by the plaintiffs in error to recover of the defendant in error an estate for the life of Annie E. Snow in an undivided one eighteenth interest in a small parcel of the John A. Veatch survey, and also to recover a like proportion of the net value of certain petroleum which had been extracted from the land. The plaintiffs recovered in the trial court to the full extent of their claim. Upon appeal the court of civil appeals affirmed the judgment as to the land, but reversed and modified it as to the recovery for the oil. The case was tried by the court upon an agreed statement of facts, together with a written stipulation, signed by the attorneys for both parties, as to the judgment to be rendered, according to the determination of certain questions of law affecting the respective rights of the plaintiffs and the defendant.

We will state the facts necessary to a decision of the case: and this as briefly as practicable. It appears from the agreed statement that one Andrew A. Veatch inherited from his father a sixth undivided interest in the Veatch survey of 3,400 acres in Jefferson county, of which his father was the original grantee; that upon the death of Andrew, in 1871, his interest descended to his surviving widow, Annie E., and their two children,—that is to say, one third to each of the children in fee, and a life estate in the other third to the widow, with remainder to the children; that she subsequently intermarried with Henry A. Snow; and that by purchase the plaintiffs are the owners of her interest. It also appears that the defendant is the owner of the entire tract in controversy save the life estate which descended to Mrs. Veatch, the widow of Andrew A. Veatch. The entire Veatch survey was unoccupied and unclosed at the death of Andrew Veatch, but was adapted to agricultural and pastoral purposes. No oil wells had been or were being bored upon it at that time. Oil, however, was discovered upon it in 1891, 60 L. R. A.

and the part in controversy is now very valuable for the oil which it is producing.

The stipulation of the parties as to the judgment to be rendered is as follows:

"(1) Upon the foregoing statement of facts judgments shall be rendered by the court on the issue of title as to the land described in plaintiffs' petition. (2) In case it is held by the court that the plaintiffs have no interest in the land, then, of course, judgment shall be rendered that the plaintiffs take nothing by their suit, and pay the costs thereof. (3) In case it shall be held by the court that they are entitled to an estate for the life of said Annie E. Snow in one eighteenth of the land in controversy without any interest in the oil or its proceeds, then the plaintiffs must get their quantum of land from the Gladys City Oil, Gas, & Manufacturing Company, and judgment shall be rendered that the plaintiffs take nothing by their suit, and pay the costs thereof. Likewise, if it shall be held that the plaintiffs must take their quantum of the land out of the land owned now by the Gladys City Oil, Gas, & Manufacturing Company, or out of that sold by it subsequent to the sale to the defendant. (4) If it shall be held by the court that they are entitled to an estate for the life of said Annie E. Snow in one eighteenth of the land in controversy, and in substance or effect that they are entitled to have one eighteenth of the net proceeds of the oil that has been extracted and marketed after deducting all expenses of producing and marketing invested or put at interest, and to receive only the interest thereon during her life, the corpus of the fund at her death to belong to the remainder-men, then judgment shall be rendered for the plaintiffs against the defendant for such life estate, and for the value of their interest in the proceeds of oil taken and marketed, to wit, $300. (5) If it shall be held by the court that they are entitled to an estate for the life of the said Annie E. Snow in one eighteenth of the land in controversy, and also to one eighteenth of the net proceeds of the oil extracted and marketed, after deducting all expenses of producing and marketing, judgment shall in that event be rendered for the plaintiffs against the defendant for such life estate and for their one eighteenth of the net proceeds of the oil marketed, amounting to $500."

The trial court and the court of civil appeals both held that the plaintiffs in error were entitled to a third interest for life in the land in controversy, and that holding is not questioned by either party. The real question in the case is, What are the rights of the plaintiffs in error as life tenants in the oil under the land? The trial court held that the plaintiffs in error were entitled not only to a one-eighteenth interest for life in the land, but "also to one eighteenth of the net proceeds of the oil extracted and marketed, after deducting expenses of producing and marketing," and gave judgment as under the fifth paragraph of the stipulation. The court of civil appeals, however, affirmed the hypothesis contained in the fourth paragraph, and gave judgment under the stipulation in accordance therewith, namely, for one-eighteenth interest in the land for the life of Mrs. Snow, and for $300.

Our statute of descent and distribution declares that, "where any person having title to any estate of inheritance, real, personal, or mixed, shall die intestate as to such estate, and shall have a surviving husband or wife, the estate of such intestate shall descend and pass as follows: 1. If the deceased have a child or children, or their descendants, the surviving husband or wife shall take one third of the personal estate, and the balance of such personal estate shall go to the child or children of the deceased and their descendants. The surviving husband or wife shall also be entitled to an estate for life, in one third of the land of the intestate, with remainder to the child or children of the intestate and their descendants." Rev. Stat. 1895, art. 1689. The question is, What under this provision, are the rights of the life tenant in the oil underlying the land when no attempt had been made to extract it at the time of the descent cast? It is strenuously insisted on behalf of plaintiffs in error that the common-law rules as to the incidents of life estates do not apply to this statute. But we do not concur in the proposition. The statute of January 20, 1840, entitled "An Act to Adopt the Common Law," etc., reads as follows: "The common law of England (so far as it is not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of this state) shall, together with such Constitution and laws, be the rule of decision, and shall continue in force until altered or repealed by the legislature." Rev. Stat. 1895, art. 3258. Since the passage of that act, which has ever since remained the law, and is now incorporated in our Revised Statutes as article 3258, probably few cases have been decided in this court in which the rules of the common law have not been expressly or impliedly applied in the determination of one or more of the questions involved. In some instances it may be that the law as announced by the English courts has not been followed; not for the reason, however, that this court felt at liberty to depart from the rule of the common law, but because the decision or decisions were not regarded of such authority as to fix the rule. So in other instances rules established in England were not regarded as of controlling authority in this state, for the reason that it was thought that the conditions here were so different from those existing in England that, if the conditions in that country had been the same as in this, the ruling there would have been different. At all events, since the adoption of the common law the courts of this state have adhered to the decisions of the English courts with as much strictness as the courts of the other states who have the common law, not by adoption, but by inheritance, so to speak. In order to illustrate the strictness in which we have adhered to the common law, we need refer only to the "rule in Shelley's Case,"—a rule which has been expressly repealed by a majority of the states of this Union in which the common law prevails, perhaps in every one in which the matter has been of sufficient importance to call the attention of its legislature to it; a rule founded upon the peculiar policy of the real-estate laws of England, and one by reason of its extreme technicality well calculated to thwart the clear intention of devisors and grantors of real estate. Yet our courts, ever since the decision in Hancock v. Butler, 21 Tex. 804, have followed the rule without question, because it was a rule of the common law; the only question discussed being whether the rule was applicable to the case in hand. We conclude, therefore, that we may safely assume that since the adoption of the act of January 20, 1840, the common law is as much the rule of decision in this state as in those states in which it was the law from the beginning of their political existence.

But it is also insisted that, since there was no such life estate created by the operation of the common law as the life estate provided for under our statute of descent and distribution, the common-law rule does not apply to the estate in question. It is true that the life estates which were devolved upon the husband and the wife respectively under the common law were the tenancy by the curtesy on part of the husband and in dower on part of the wife. The husband, when he became a tenant by the curtesy, had a life estate in all the land of the wife. The dower had to be assigned by the heir before the estate of the widow became fixed to her third. But it does not follow that because the life estate provided by our statute has no exact exemplar in the common law the quality and incidents of life estates at common law do not appertain to it. At common law there were two classes of life estates: First, conventional life estates or those which were created by contract; and, second, those which came into existence by operation of law. The former were not impeachable for waste unless expressly made so by the conveyance. The reason assigned for this rule is that it is presumed that, if the grantor intended to limit the enjoyment of the estate, he would have expressed his intention in the deed. As to the second class of life estates, on the other hand, they are, as a general rule, impeachable for waste; that is to say, the tenant for life cannot use the property for any purpose which would result in an injury to the inheritance, save those only to which it had been devoted at the time the life estate came into existence. The rights of a tenant of an estate tail after possibility of issue extinct may be an exception to the general rule. As is said by Mr. Cruise: "He is punishable for waste, because he continues in by virtue of the livery upon the estate tail; and, having once had the power of committing waste, he shall not be deprived of it by the act of God." 1 Greenleaf's Cruise, Real Prop. p. 143. On the other hand, speaking of waste Mr. Washburn says: "This restriction existed at common law in respect to estates in possession of tenants in dower and curtesy, because, as these were created by the law itself, it was thought that the law was bound to protect the reversioner or remainder-man from being thereby injured. But where the estate of the tenant was created by act of the parties it was held, that, if the grantor or lessor failed to protect the estate by stipulations in his deed or lease, the law was not bound to supply the omission." 1 Washb. Real Prop. p. 146. The reason for excepting the tenant in tail after possibility of issue extinct from the general rule applicable to life tenants whose estates have been created by operation of law seems rather technical, and does not apply to the life estates provided for in our statutes. On the other hand, the reason for holding the tenant by the curtesy or in dower impeachable for waste does so apply. and with equal force. We conclude, therefore, that it was the intention of the legislature, in enacting the statute in question, to make the estate therein provided for subject to impeachment for waste.

It is too well settled to require a citation of authority that, while it is not waste for a tenant by the curtesy or a tenant in dower to work an open mine, it is waste to open a new mine; in other words, the tenant of a life estate punishable for waste has no right to remove the minerals, when the land had not been devoted to mining purposes before the creation of his estate. Oil, before its extraction, is a mineral, and is a part of the land, and, in so far as the question under discussion is concerned, is to be considered like iron, coal, lead, or other solid mineral substances. Such authorities as we have been able to find sustain our view of the effect of our statute. In reference to the descent of real estate where the husband or wife dies, leaving children, the statute of Pennsylvania is the same as that of Texas; that is to say, the surviving spouse takes a third interest for life in the land or lands of the deceased. In the case of the Westmoreland Coal Co.'s Appeal, 85 Pa. 344, the coal company, who claimed under a woman who had inherited a third interest for life in the land from a deceased husband, was guilty of waste in opening mines upon a parcel of land upon which none had been opened at the death of the husband. In the case of Franklin Coal Co. v. McMillan, 49 Md. 549, 33 Am. Rep. 280, a life estate in the land had been devised to a Mrs. McMillan, with the remainder to her children. She conveyed her right in the land to the coal company. Prior to the death of the testator the coal had been mined for domestic uses, but had never been mined for market. In the suit by the children against the coal company for damages for waste in mining the coal it was held they were entitled to recover. A like rule was made in the case of Gaines v. Green Pond Iron Min. Co. 32 N. J. Eq. 86. There it was ruled that the mining company who held the title of a life tenant was liable for waste in mining the land. Presumably the life tenant acquired her estate by operation of law, but that matter does not clearly appear from a report of the case. That case upon appeal was reversed by the court of errors and appeals of New Jersey, but upon another point. 33 N. J. Eq. 603. The ruling of the chancellor upon the question whether the life tenant was impeachable for waste was neither questioned nor decided. In the case of Seager v. McCabe, 92 Mich. 186, 16 L. R. A. 247, 52 N. W. 299, are found expressions not in accordance with our views. But it seems to us that they were not called for in the decision of that case. The statute of Michigan gives to the wife the "use during her natural life of one third of the lands whereof her husband was seised" during marriage. The opinion in the case cited shows that the land in controversy was valueless for agricultural or lumbering purposes. It contained a bed of iron ore, and that was practically the only use of which it was susceptible. It seems to us that under the Michigan statute it was not difficult to reach the conclusion that the widow, under the circumstances, was entitled to mine the ore, without reference to any rule of the common law. But in no aspect of this case do we think that the plaintiffs in error have cause of complaint of the judgment of the court of civil appeals. The right of the life tenant is to the use, and not to the corpus, of the estate; and where his title is in an undivided interest, and not in the whole of the land, and a sale is ordered for partition, his right in the proceeds is not a part proportionate to the undivided interest in which he has the life estate, but to the interest on that part as long as the life estate may continue to exist. In speaking on this subject in reference to the remainder-men, Chief Justice Marshall, in Herbert v. Wren, 7 Cranch, 380, 3 L. ed. 378, says: "They have a right to insist that, instead of a sum in gross, one third of the purchase money shall be set apart, and the interest thereof paid annually to the tenant in dower during her life." The rule thus stated is followed in North Carolina. Ex parte Winstead, 92 N. C. 703. The same principle is announced in Alabama. McQueen v. Turner, 91 Ala. 273, 8 So. 863; Kelly v. Deegan, 111 Ala. 152, 20 So. 378. As to securing the life tenant in the use of the part of the proceeds in which he has an interest the North Carolina court follows the rule indicated by the remarks of Chief Justice Marshall above quoted. The Alabama court, however, permits that part to be paid to him upon his executing a properly secured refunding bond conditioned to pay the principal to the remainder-man upon the termination of his estate. In the case of Clift v. Clift, 72 Tex. 144, 10 S. W. 338. Mrs. Clift had a one-sixth interest for her life in a town lot, and this court adjudged that the property should be sold, and that from the proceeds "there should be paid to Mrs. Clift a sum equal to a one-sixth interest for life in the proceeds of the land proper." Since the proceeds of the sale must be money, and the value of the use of the money is determined by the interest upon it, it follows that this recognizes the same right in the life tenant which was announced in the cases before cited, but lays down a different rule for securing that right. As to this last matter the rule announced by this court may be questionable, but, so far as we can now see, and so far as the writer of this opinion can recollect, that point was not mooted in that case.

Since we hold that the plaintiffs were not entitled absolutely to any part of the oil—that is to say, to the corpus of one-eighteenth interest—it follows that under the stipulation as to the judgment to be rendered the judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals should be affirmed, and it is accordingly so ordered.

Petition for rehearing overruled June 22, 1905.

END OF CASES IN BOOK 69.

RÉSUMÉ OF THE DECISIONS PUBLISHED IN THIS BOOK.

SHOWING the Changes, Progress, and Development of the Law during the First Quarter of the Judicial Year Beginning with October 1, 1905. Classified as Follows:

- I. PUBLIC, OFFICIAL, AND STATUTORY MATTERS.
- II. CONTRACTUAL AND COMMERCIAL RELATIONS.
- III. CORPORATIONS AND ASSOCIATIONS.
- IV. DOMESTIC RELATIONS.
- V. TRUST RELATIONS.
- VI. TORTS; NEGLIGENCE; INJURIES.
- VII. PROPERTY RIGHTS; DEEDS; FIXTURES; WILLS.
- VIII. CIVIL REMEDIES; RULES AND PRINCIPLES.
- IX. CRIMINAL LAW AND PRACTICE.

I. PUBLIC, OFFICIAL, AND STATUTORY MATTERS.

Eminent domain.

See also Parks.

The right of a municipality to compensation for the value of sewer and water pipes owned by it, and laid under streets which are taken by the Federal government, under its power of eminent domain, for an entirely different use, is sustained. (C. C. A. 1st C.) 723.

The power to separate the right to fish in an inland lake, in New Jersey, from the ownership of the lake, and take it under the power of eminent domain for the benefit of the public, is denied. (N. J. Err. & App.) 768.

A farmer who supports his family from the products of the farm, and for many years has sold his surplus in a neighboring town, is held to have an established business within the meaning of a statute authorizing the construction of a water-supply reservoir upon the site of the town, and providing compensation for any established business thereby destroyed, although he has no regular route or customers, or anything in the nature of good will. (Mass.) 599.

Bankruptcy.

A claim for unaccrued rents is held not to be a fixed liability, which may be proved in bankruptcy proceedings. (C. C. A. 8th C.) 719.

That a full discharge of individual liability of one partner on a firm debt may be had in bankruptcy proceedings concerning that partner only, is decided. (Minn.) 771.

Internal improvements.

Appropriations to aid counties in the construction of public roads are held not to be forbidden by a constitutional provision that the general assembly shall not have power to involve the state in the construction of public works. (Ill.) 69 L. R. A.

tion of works of internal improvement, nor to grant any aid thereto which shall involve the faith or credit of the state, nor make any appropriation therefor. (Md.) 914.

Taxes.

A statute making all the property of corporations engaged in maritime commerce or navigation taxable only at the place designated in their charters as their general office for business is held to violate a constitutional provision requiring a uniform rate of taxation. (Mich.) 431.

The right of the legislature to provide for the valuation and assessment of the property of railway companies by one assessing body, and for ascertaining the value of the whole of such property of any one railway corporation subject to taxation in the state as a unit, or as an entirety, and to distribute the value as thus found over the main line or track of such railway company, and to the different taxing districts, municipalities, etc., on a mileage basis, is sustained. (Neb.) 447.

Schools.

Offering a prayer at the beginning of school each day, which does not represent any peculiar view or dogma of any sect or denomination, is held not to bring a public school within a provision of the Constitution that no portion of any fund or tax raised for educational purposes shall be used in aid of any sectarian or denominational school. (Ky.) 592.

Receivers.

A receiver of a Federal court in charge of a railroad company, who, by statute, is required to manage and operate the property according to the requirements of the valid laws of the state in which it is situated, in the same manner as the owner thereof would be bound to do, is held to be subject to any rule prescribed by the state, imposing on railroad corporations a liability for the negligence of employees having superior authority over other employees. (C. C. A. 6th C.) 705.

Attorneys.

A license to practise law is held to be properly revoked, where it is secured by fraudulent concealment of the fact that the plaintiff has recently been convicted of embezzling funds from a client in another state, although he has been pardoned for the crime. (Ill.) 701.

Expelling member of legislature.

The power of the court to supervise the exercise, by the legislature, of its constitutional power to expel a member, is denied. (Cal.) 556.

Parks.

The power of the legislature to authorize a municipal corporation to condemn, for park purposes and boulevards, land near to, but outside of, its corporate limits, is sustained. (Tenn.) 750.

Forbidding the use of land near a park or park way for advertising purposes is held to amount to a taking of it for public use, for which compensation must be made. (Mass.) 817.

Public improvements; assessments.

A statute providing for the cleaning of drainage ditches, and the assessment of the costs thereof according to benefits upon the parties along its line who were assessed for the cost of its original construction, is held not to take private property for public use without compensation. (Ohio) 805.

Vested right to damages.

The statutory right to have damages for land, the fee of which is taken for a public use, assessed and paid in money, is held to be a substantial right which, after the proceedings have progressed so far that the fee has passed, cannot be impaired by the passage of a statute authorizing the abandonment of the land, and directing that the fee shall revert in the former owner, and that fact be considered in reduction of the damages. (Mass.) 314.

Wrongful arrest; officer's liability.

The mayor and chief of police of a city are held to be liable in damages in case they arrest motormen of street cars to abate a nuisance caused by the operation of the cars, when the trolley wire is in such poor condition as to be liable to fall, when the object can be effected by merely cutting the wires, or removing the controllers from the cars. (Mich.) 350.

69 L. R. A.

Requiring license of doctor.

An ophthalmologist, who prefixes to his name the letters "Dr." on his sign, and on notices in which he undertakes to correct certain diseased conditions by the fitting of glasses to the eyes, is held to come within the terms of a statute providing that, when a person shall append the title "Dr.," in a medical sense, to his name, he shall be regarded as practising medicine, within the meaning of a statute which requires a license as a condition precedent to doing so. (S. D.) 504.

Storage of oils.

An ordinance prohibiting the storage of refined and other explosive oils within the corporate limits is held not to be unreasonable. (La.) 276.

Numbering automobiles.

Power to require the registering and numbering of automobiles is held to be conferred upon a city council by charter authority to control, prescribe, and regulate the manner in which the streets shall be used and enjoyed. (Mich.) 345.

Use of voting machines.

A statute permitting the use of a voting machine is held not to contravene a constitutional requirement that all votes at elections shall be given by ballot. (Mich.) 184.

Employers' liability act.

The employers' liability act, changing the law as to the defense in case of negligence of fellow servants of corporations, is held to be constitutional. (Ind.) 875.

A corporation operating a "logging railroad," not as a common carrier, but exclusively for its own private business, is held to be subject to the provisions of a statute making railroad corporations liable for injuries to servants caused by the negligence of fellow servants. (Minn.) 887.

Building and loan associations; usury.

A statute giving building and loan associations the right to assess and collect from members and depositors such dues, fines, interest, and premium on loans made, or other assessments, as may be provided for in the Constitution and by-laws; and which provides that such dues, fines, etc., shall not be deemed usury, although in excess of the legal rate of interest,—is held to be valid. (Ohio) 415.

Surety bonds.

A statute requiring all bonds given for the faithful performance of official or fiduciary duties, or the faithful keeping, applying, or accounting for funds or property, to be executed by a surety company, is held to be unconstitutional. (Ohio) 427.

Destroying county.

The power of the legislature to destroy or abolish counties recognized by the Constitution as organized and existing at the date of its adoption is denied. (Idaho) 220.

II. CONTRACTUAL AND COMMERCIAL RELATIONS.

A covenant by a purchaser of the business and effects of a corporation, the sale of which is intended to terminate its existence, to indemnify it from and against the contracts and engagements to which the vendor appears to be now liable, and also all claims and demands on account of the same contracts and engagements, is held not to cover a claim by the president-manager of the corporation to salary for the time subsequently accruing, where it was founded merely on the fact that he had been elected president, and there was no contract that the services and salary should continue for any specified time. (Mass.) 821.

Upon the termination, by the insolvency of a corporation, of an executory contract with it, necessitating, in its execution, work, labor, and the expenditure of money for materials, machinery, etc., it is held that the contractor is entitled to compensation for services rendered by him in pursuance of the contract until the date of its termination, and to reimbursement for his actual and necessary outlay and expenses, subject to a deduction of all sums paid him by the corporation, and of the value of materials, machinery, etc., on hand. (W. Va.) 124.

Banks.

Payment, by a savings bank, of a forged check bearing a signature similar to that of the depositor, to one who presents the depositor's pass book, there being nothing to arouse the suspicion of the teller, or to put him upon inquiry, as to the genuineness of the check, is held not to make the bank liable in a suit by the depositor to recover the money so paid, where a rule of the bank provides that payment to a person presenting a pass book shall be good and valid, unless the pass book has been lost and notice in writing given to the bank before such payment is made. (Ga.) 341.

A depositor in a savings bank is held not to be estopped to hold the bank responsible in case it negligently pays the deposit to an unauthorized person, by the fact that he, also, is negligent in the care which he takes of his bank book. (Conn.) 329.

Failure of the officers of a savings bank to make a physical comparison of the signature on a draft presented with the depositor's bank book with his signature on file is held to render it liable for paying out money on a forged draft, in the absence of some unusual and pertinent excuse which will justify such failure. (N. Y.) 317.
69 L. R. A.

Bills and notes.

See also Limitation of Actions, infra, VIII.

That a note for the payment of which a married woman becomes surety is made payable in a state where such contract is invalid, is held not to defeat her liability, although the suit is brought in that state, if the contract was valid at her domicile, where it was executed. (Ind.) 870.

A sound reason, inhering in the same transaction from which a promissory note springs, why the holder ought not, in equity and good conscience, to recover its face value, is held to be a good, equitable defense to it, although the defense constitutes neither an offset, a counterclaim, nor an affirmative cause of action against the holder of the note. (C. C. A. 8th C.) 232.

Carriers.

The checking of baggage to destination upon a through ticket to transport the passenger over roads of initial and connecting carriers is held to render the initial carrier liable for its loss on a connecting line. (Ark.) 65.

A carrier who negligently delays a shipment is held to be liable for the damages, where, because of such delay, the goods are overtaken in transit and damaged by an act of God, even though the act of God could not reasonably have been anticipated. (Minn.) 509.

A rule of the state railroad commission that carriers shall afford to all persons equal facilities in the transportation and delivery of freight is held not to prohibit discrimination against commodities, but simply discrimination against shippers. (Ga.) 119.

A railroad company which expressly, or by implication, invites its passengers to use a stile over a wire fence in leaving its grounds, is held to be bound to use at least ordinary care in seeing that it is fit for the purpose intended, although the stile was not erected by it, and the defective part is not on its property, but on property where it has no right to go to make inspection or repairs. (Iowa) 982.

The right of a steamship company to a limitation of its liability for loss of passengers and baggage through the sinking of its vessel is denied where the crew could not understand the language of its officers, and were not drilled in the launching of the boats, because of which the loss occurred. (C. C. A. 9th C.) 71.

RÉSUMÉ OF DECISIONS.
(CORPORATIONS AND ASSOCIATIONS.)

That livery-stable keepers are not within the rule that common carriers of passengers are bound to exercise extraordinary care for the safety of their passengers is decided. (Conn.) 561.

Insurance.

An open mortgage clause attached to a policy of fire insurance, which merely provides that loss, if any, shall be paid to the mortgagee as his interest may appear, is held not to create any contract relations between the mortgagee and insurer, or to give the mortgagee a right to participate in arbitration proceedings to fix the amount of loss; and that, therefore, he will be bound by the award, although he was given no opportunity to be heard. (Conn.) 924.

A niece of a former wife of a man is held not to be a relative of his child by a subsequent one, within the meaning of a statute permitting certificates of mutual benefit societies to be taken in favor of relatives. (Iowa) 174.

A provision of a life insurance policy that suit shall be brought on it within a period less than that fixed by the statute of limitations is held to be void as against public policy. (Ky.) 264.

An agent authorized to issue policies is held to bind the company by all waivers, representations, or other acts within the scope or requirements of his business, unless the insured has notice of the limitation of his power. (La.) 278.

Landlord and tenant.

That a tenant cannot be relieved from forfeiture of his term because of breach of his covenant to pay taxes after the premises have been sold because of his default, is held, since he can no longer perform his covenant, or make compensation for the breach, so as to entitle him to equitable relief. (Mass.) 867.

Vendor and purchaser.

The right to enforce payment of the money under a contract to purchase real estate, which stipulates that the property shall be clear of all encumbrances, is denied where the title has not been accepted, and there is an existing right on the part of the municipality to open a platted street over the property, which will destroy the buildings without making compensation for them. (Tenn.) 790.

Factors.

A commission merchant to whom grain is consigned to be sold on commission, who purchases such grain after close of business hours at the highest price of the day upon the board of trade, and subsequently resells it at an advance, is held to be bound to account to the consignor for the profit thus made. (Minn.) 667.

Sale; implied warranty.

That no implied warranty of fitness of an article for a particular purpose arises out of a contract to make or supply a described and definite article, is declared, although the vendor knows that the vendee is purchasing it to accomplish a specific purpose, because the essence of this contract is the delivery of the specific article, and not the accomplishment of the purpose. (C. C. A. 8th C.) 973.

Liability of bidder at judicial sale.

A court order annulling a judicial sale, and directing a resale of the property, without accepting the bid, or directing any proceedings against the bidder, or any confirmation of the sale, is held to relieve him from all liability upon his bid. (Ky.) 33.

III. CORPORATIONS AND ASSOCIATIONS.

Corporations.

See also supra, II.

The power of a corporation to make valid contracts for the repurchase of its own stock in the absence of charter restrictions, is sustained in a recent Iowa case. (Iowa) 968.

Benevolent societies.

An election to treat the original contract as still in force, upon notification of reduction in the amounts of certificates in a 69 L. R. A.

mutual benefit society, adhered to for two years and five months, is held not to be subject to change, so as to permit a certificate holder to treat the contract as rescinded, and sue for assessments paid. (C. C. A. 3d C.) 803.

Religious societies.

A creditor of a religious corporation is held to have no right of action against the individual members of it as such. (Iowa) 255.

IV. DOMESTIC RELATIONS.

As to contracts of married woman, see also supra, II., Bills and Notes.

Marriage.

The marriage of a ward, valid where made, in a sister state, is held necessarily to be regarded as valid at his domicile, although it would not have been so had it been solemnized there, because of statutory limitation of his right to contract. (R. I.) 493.

Liability for support of insane wife.

The liability of a husband for the support of his wife at an asylum for the insane, to which she has been removed by due process of law, is denied in the absence of a statute expressly imposing such liability. (Wis.) 829.

Partnership between husband and wife.

A woman whose husband is carrying on a partnership business with her money under an agreement that she shall receive all of his share of the profits of the business is held to be liable to account to him for the amount for which he rendered himself liable on account of the purchase of a machine by him and his partner for use in the business, although she had given him special instructions not to purchase the machine, if it was in fact necessary or proper for the conduct of the business. (Ga.) 87.

Conveyance by husband to wife.

A conveyance of land from husband to wife in the usual form, for a valuable consideration, though without words disclosing an intent to do so, is held to vest in her a separate estate which she may transfer without his joinder or consent. (Tenn.) 353.

A man is deprived of his curtesy interest in land by conveying it to his wife to her sole, separate, and exclusive use, free and discharged from all his control and liabilities. (Tenn.) 370.

Estoppel of married woman.

A married woman who, with her husband, enters into an oral contract for the sale of their homestead, under which the purchaser takes possession, and pays the purchase price, and makes valuable improvements, all of which is done with the full knowledge and consent of the wife, is held to be estopped to set up the invalidity of the contract in defense of an action to compel specific performance thereof. (Idaho) 584.

V. TRUST RELATIONS.

Removal of trustee.

The removal of the widow as trustee of a fund provided for the benefit of testator's daughter is held proper where she elected to take her dower rights in opposition to the will, thereby depleting the trust estate and destroying a very important part of the scheme of the testator, remarried within a short time, became estranged from the cestui que trust and her cotrustees, so that no intercourse could subsist between them, and kept the estate in needless litigation. (Md.) 920.

VI. TORTS; NEGLIGENCE; INJURIES.

Imputed negligence.

The owner of a wagon, seated beside the driver, whom he employs, is held to be chargeable with the driver's negligence in attempting to cross a street-car track in front of an approaching car, which is in plain view. (Mo.) 389.

Negligence of a locomotive engineer, which results in a collision, is held not to be imputable to the conductor in charge of his train, so as to prevent a recovery for injuries thereby caused to the latter, where the conductor could not have controlled the action of the engineer at the time of the accident, or have prevented its occurrence. (Ark.) 217.

Last clear chance.

The doctrine of last clear chance is held not to be applicable in an admiralty case. (C. C. A. 1st C.) 293.

Nuisance.

The characteristic noises and odors issuing from a chicken house and yard, which are maintained in a cleanly manner, and cared for so as not injuriously to affect the health of any normal person in the neighborhood, are held not to be a nuisance, although they may make neighboring property uncomfortable as a residence for invalids. (Mass.) 820.

A fair occupying 75 or 80 feet in width and 4 blocks in length of an important business street in a city, and consisting of numerous tents inclosing shows and exhibitions, in front of which are stationed men blowing horns and talking through megaphones, together with various other stands, booths, Ferris wheels, merry-go-rounds, etc., which is permitted by the authorities to be maintained on the street for a week, is held to be a public nuisance. (Ga.) 564.

Injury to servant.

The failure to box, or otherwise protect, a rapidly revolving upright shaft coming up through the floor in an alley or passageway where an inexperienced girl is required to sweep, who is not warned of the danger, is held to be properly found by the jury to constitute negligence which will render the employer liable for injuries to her when her clothing is caught and wound upon the shaft. (Md.) 909.

The liability of a master to a servant for injuries caused by negligence of a foreman in directing work is denied where the master has otherwise performed his duty. (Ind.) 163.

A railroad engineer who obeys, although reluctantly, an order to take his train through a mountainous region on its regular trip, at a time of heavy rains, when land slides are anticipated, is held to assume the risk of such slides, and to have no right to hold the company responsible in case his train is carried from the track by a slide which comes upon it so suddenly that there is no time to escape, and the danger of which was not observed by a track inspector who had passed the spot just before the train reached there. (C. C. A. 8th C.) 757.

That the conductor of a passenger train cannot be regarded as in a separate department of service from a brakeman of a freight train so as to render the railroad company liable for injury to the latter by his negligence, is decided. (Tenn.) 746.

Mere knowledge of an employee of a contractor for the setting of the stone work of a building, of a custom that the scaffolding shall be furnished by the brick contractors, is held not to amount to a waiver of his right to hold his employer responsible for the safety of a scaffold furnished for him to work upon. (Ill.) 697.

The proximate cause of the injury of a servant by the fall of a derrick because of the breaking of a spliced rope is held not to be the failure to insert thimbles into the loops of the splice, but the failure to inspect the rope for the purpose of determining its condition, and to repair it after it has become chafed and worn by use, where there is nothing to show that the splice is not sufficiently strong, without the thimbles, to do the work required of it, and it fails because of the wear due to continued use. (Conn.) 936.

The liability of an employer to an employee for injuries caused by negligence in the handling of a boiler upon the premises by a coemployee, an engineer who is conceded to have been competent, is denied. (Pa.) 792.
69 L. R. A.

Injury to guest at inn.

That an innkeeper is not liable for an injury inflicted upon a guest in his hotel, by a servant who was not at the time of the injury acting within the apparent or actual scope of his employment, is declared. (C. C. A. 8th C.) 653.

A trespass committed upon a guest in a hotel by a servant of the proprietor, whether actively engaged in the discharge of his duties at the time or not, is held to be a breach of the implied undertaking that the guest shall be treated with due consideration for his comfort and safety, for which the proprietor is liable in damages. (Neb.) 642.

Blocking stairway.

The occupant of the lower floors of a building, who blocks the stairway leading from the upper floor to the ground, so that a tenant of such floor, in seeking to escape a fire, is compelled to drop a considerable distance to reach the ground, is held to be liable for the injury resulting to him therefrom. (Pa.) 800.

Runaway team.

The proximate cause of the runaway of a team harnessed to a wagon loaded with about a ton's weight, which a farmer had left standing in the street hitched to a hitching rail in front of a store while he was engaged in unloading his wagon, and which became frightened because a boy in turning over the hitching rail, struck the nose of one of them with his foot, causing them to break the halter and run away, is held to be the striking of the horse by the boy. (Kan.) 246.

Injury to traveler on sidewalk.

The liability of a municipal corporation for injuries to a traveler upon a sidewalk through the fall of a billboard insecurely placed by an abutting owner upon his own property near the edge of the street is denied. (Mich.) 618.

A horse block or stepping stone of ordinary size, placed at the edge of the sidewalk to facilitate access to and egress from carriages in the street, is held not to be an obstruction of the walk, so as to render the municipality liable for injuries caused by a traveler falling over it. (App. D. C.) 83.

Owners of property in possession of tenants are held not to be bound to keep watch to see that ice dangerous to travel does not form on the walks in front of it, which are properly constructed and in proper repair, where their negligent construction of their buildings does not contribute to its formation. (Pa.) 488.

Injury to person on street railway track.

Failure to anticipate the presence of a man on his hands and knees on the track in front of an electric car on a dark night, and to run the car so as to provide for that contingency, is held not to be negligence on the part of the motorman. (R. I.) 188.

Failure to look and listen at railroad crossing.

Failure to look and listen before crossing a street-car track at a public crossing is held not to be negligence per se, as matter of law. (Me.) 300.

Failure to sound warning at trestle.

The duty to sound warnings when trains approach a trestle over a highway is held to depend upon the dangerous character of the place, which is a question for the determination of the jury. (Tenn.) 662.

Failure to care for person injured.

Failure of the employees operating a car and engine by which a trespasser on the railway track is struck and injured without fault of the employees, to take charge of the wounded man and give him care and attention, is held not to be a violation of a legal duty for which the company is liable. (Kan.) 513.

Violation of right of privacy.

The publication of the picture of a person without his consent, as part of an advertisement, for the purpose of exploiting the publisher's business, is held to be a violation of the right of privacy of the person whose picture is reproduced, and to entitle him to recover without proof of special damages. (Ga.) 101.

Conspiracy.

A combination of two or more persons to injure one in his trade by inducing his employees to break their contract with him, or to decline longer to continue in his employment, is held to be actionable if it results in damage. (Ga.) 90.

Duty to connect property with drain.

The owners of improved property located adjacent to an adequate sewer or drainage system in a city are held to be bound to connect therewith the water gutters and spouts upon their buildings, and not to permit the rain water to collect and discharge at a point in a public alley, where, by reason of the volume and force thus attained, it enters adjoining premises, provided such connection with the drainage system can be reasonably made. (Minn.) 621.

VII. PROPERTY RIGHTS; DEEDS; FIXTURES; WILLS.

Shelley's Case.

A fee simple is vested in the first taker, under the rule in Shelley's Case, by a conveyance to one "during his natural life, and then to his heirs." (Iowa) 953.

Price quotations.

A property right in price quotations gathered by a board of trade is held not to be destroyed by the fact that a large percentage of the business done under its auspices consists of gambling transactions or that the news is susceptible of bad as well as good uses. (C. C. A. 7th C.) 59.

Mines; surface support.

The leaving of surface supports is held not to be within a provision in a sale by the owner of coal in place of the vein, which is held subject to the duty of supporting the surface, by which he undertakes to indemnify the purchaser for any damage which may result to the surface "by reason of the skilful and careful mining and taking away of the coal;" the words being held to refer solely to the manner of working the vein. (Pa.) 637.

Easement or license.

Permission to use a stairway erected on the outside of a building for ingress and egress to and from the second story of another building, in consideration that the owners of the latter building will permit the owner of the other one to erect a porch on a 5-foot strip of a vacant lot adjoining the back end of his building, is held not to amount to the grant of an easement, but to constitute a license only, revocable by the licensor. (Idaho) 568.

Life tenants' interest in oil wells.

One entitled to an undivided life estate under a statute giving a surviving husband or wife a one-third interest in real estate of the other is held to have no right to demand absolutely any part of the production of oil wells subsequently opened upon the property by the remainder-men, but to be entitled only to the income upon one third of the oil produced. (Tex.) 986.

Life tenants' right to dividends.

Cash dividends upon corporate stock are held to belong to the life tenants, notwithstanding they were derived from the sale of permanent property in which profits had been invested. (Conn.) 76.

Waters.

The wharfage and reclamation rights of the owner of land on a cove leading off from a river are held not to be destroyed or impaired by the construction of an embankment across the mouth of the cove. (Conn.) 929.

The owner of property bordering on a mill pond is held to have no right to enjoin the owner of the dam and water privilege from drawing the water down to its natural level, when it becomes necessary for the utilization of the power, although a portion of the bottom of the pond is thereby uncovered and exposed to the sun, rendering it unhealthful and injurious to the abutting owner. (Conn.) 933.

Surface waters which, by natural drainage, collect in a natural basin and depression upon the premises of a dominant tenement, and escape therefrom only by percolation or evaporation, forming thereby a lake or pond, permanent in its character, are held to lose the character of surface waters when so collected, so that they may not, by artificial means, other than that incident to the cultivation of the soil, be drained to the damage of a servient tenement without liability for such acts. (Okla.) 460.

Trees.

The right to recover punitive damages for the cutting of trees upon a sidewalk for the accommodation of electric-light wires, in entire disregard of the rights of the abutting owner, and against his protest, is sustained. (N. C.) 631.

Deeds.

A deed without power of revocation, from a parent who is incapacitated physically and weak mentally, to his daughter who has for some time had the care of him, made without the benefit of competent and independent advice, is held to be properly set aside by equity. (N. J. Err. & App.) 393.

It is held that a deed absolute on its face cannot be delivered to the grantee therein named to be held by him in escrow; and that such a delivery will operate as absolute and freed from all parol conditions, vesting the title at once. (Idaho) 572.

Fixtures.

The mere finishing material, such as doors, mantels, casings, etc., which have been purchased for an unfinished building and placed therein, but not affixed thereto is held not to pass by a sale of the real property under a mortgage foreclosure, where it is not mentioned or deemed a part of the sale. (Tenn.) 892.

A mortgage of a lot on which stands a partially completed building is held to pass cut stone and structural iron prepared for the building and located on the lot mortgaged and that adjoining, if the intention of the parties is that the building shall be speedily completed with the material at hand. (Mich.) 900.

Wills.

The granting of an absolute divorce is held not to revoke, by implication, a legacy in the will of the husband in favor of the wife. (Pa.) 940.

Where the body of a will is written on horizontal lines on several pages of foolscap paper, so that all its items and provisions are in consecutive order to the end of the last page, under which the testator's signature appears, but there is also written in the margin of the last page, to the left of, and separated from, the body of the instrument, a dispositive clause extending lengthwise of the page from near the bottom to near the top, and in no manner connected with the body of the instrument by any words or marks to indicate where the marginal matter is to be read in relation to the other provisions; and it is established by testimony that the marginal matter was written after all the other provisions, at the request of the testator, and before he attached his signature under the body of the will,—it is held that the will is not signed at its end, as required by statute, and is invalid for that reason. (Ohio) 422.

VIII. CIVIL REMEDIES; RULES AND PRINCIPLES.

A subcontractor is held to be entitled to pursue simultaneously a proceeding to enforce his mechanic's lien against the property and an action against the contractor for the amount due him, in which he attaches funds due the contractor from the property owner. (R. I.) 497.

Bill of review; limitations.

The right to file a bill of review after the lapse of the statutory period for an appeal is denied, except in case of new, or 69 L. R. A.

newly discovered, matter. (N. J. Err. & App.) 397.

Limitation of actions.

Giving a note for interest upon a larger note already barred by the statute of limitations, which does not in any way refer to the earlier note, is held not to revive it under a statute providing that causes of action founded on contract are revived by an admission in writing, signed by the party to be charged, that the debt is unpaid, or by a like new promise to pay the same. (Iowa.) 260.

Under a mortgage securing a series of notes due at intervals of one year, and providing that nonpayment of any one of them, together with nonpayment of taxes, should mature the entire debt, it is held that the statute of limitations commences to run at the date of default upon the first note and taxes. (Kan.) 250.

Specific performance.

That the statute of frauds is satisfied, and specific performance of a contract may be decreed, is held where a signed, but undelivered, lease, taken in connection with a previously signed memorandum in writing of an oral agreement for a lease, shows a complete agreement on the terms of the lease. (N. J. Err. & App.) 394.

Replevin.

That replevin lies for growing strawberry plants, although they are attached to the soil, is declared since they are fruits of industry, and must be treated as chattels. (Ark.) 827.

The rule that one is adverse possession, under color of title, of a tract of land, is entitled to maintain replevin for logs cut thereon by one claiming to be the true owner, regardless of the true location of the ultimate title to the land, is held to apply where the spot from which the logs were cut is annexed to the actual possession of a portion of the tract because within the boundaries of the paper title. (Tenn.) 732.

A plaintiff in replevin is held to have no right to claim salvage for rescuing the replevied property after it had sunk while in his possession, since it was his legal duty to care for and preserve it. (C. C. A. 6th C.) 283.

Accord and satisfaction.

The payment of less than is due is held to discharge the debt, when an agreement to that effect is fully executed, and the discharge is evidenced by a written receipt for the lesser sum in full satisfaction of the greater one. (Ark.) 823.

Judgment.

That no interest in real estate located in another state can be vested in a complainant in a divorce proceeding by a decree which purports to deal directly with the title to the estate, is decided. (Ill.) 673.

Res judicata.

A decree denying the right of a corporation to have bonds secured by mortgage on its property surrendered by a pledgee who was seeking to foreclose its lien on the bonds against the pledgeor, on the ground that the bonds had been wrongfully put upon the market, and had never been rightfully negotiated, is held to be no bar to a subsequent suit against the corporation to foreclose the mortgage by which they are secured, since the latter question could not have been determined in the former action. (Or.) 480.
69 L. R. A.

That a party pleading a judgment as an estoppel must sustain the plea by showing that the particular matter in controversy was actually determined in the former litigation, in accordance with his contention, is declared where it appears from the record introduced in support of the plea that several issues were involved in such litigation, and the verdict and judgment do not clearly show that this particular issue was then decided. (Ga.) 483.

A decree of a probate court having jurisdiction, assigning the residue of the estate of a deceased person, is held to be conclusive upon all persons interested in the estate, whether then in being or not. (Minn.) 785.

Exemptions.

The exemption from execution of the proceeds of insurance policies is held not to be limited to claims against the insured but to extend to those against the beneficiary, under a statute providing that all moneys, benefits, privileges, or immunities growing out of life insurance are exempt from execution. (Cal.) 67.

Set-off.

In an action against the maker and indorser of a promissory note, joined in the same suit, it is held that the indorser may set off an individual claim against plaintiff growing out of the transaction which gave rise to the execution of the note. (Ga.) 97.

Injunction.

A judgment of a justice of the peace, rendered within less than the time prescribed by statute after service of summons, is held not to be so far void that its execution can be enjoined. (S. D.) 499.

Equity.

That equity will not prevent a forfeiture of an estate for breach of a condition subsequent is held where the performance of the condition was made of the very essence of the contract, and the damages for the breach cannot be measured in money, while the failure to perform was not caused by mistake, nor the result of mere negligence. (Wis.) 833.

Pleading.

Where a complaint is indefinite and uncertain because the pleader has confused the element of ordinary negligence with gross negligence, and the attention of the trial court is called thereto, it is held that the court should compel the plaintiff to proceed upon one theory or the other, or to give such permissible construction to the pleadings as to confine plaintiff's claim to one species of wrongdoing. (Wis.) 601.

Evidence.

If the memoranda of inspection of engines prepared by the men in charge of that work, and filed in the office of the railroad company, have been lost, and the facts with regard to the inspection forgotten by them, it is held that such facts may be proved by the introduction in evidence of a transcript of such memoranda, entered by the proper clerk in a book kept for that purpose, accompanied by his testimony, and that of the inspectors, showing that inspections were made and properly entered in the book. (Or.) 475.

Parol evidence to show that one who signed a memorandum for the sale of goods necessary to satisfy the statute of frauds acted as agent for the one who is seeking to enforce the contract, so as to permit him to maintain the action, is held to be admissible. (N. H.) 629.

Damages.

The measure of damages for false and fraudulent representations by which a party had been induced to exchange real property for stock in a corporation, but who had affirmed the contract after discovering the deceit, is held to be, in the absence of a claim for special or exemplary damages, the difference in the value between what was received or parted with, as the case may be, and what would have been received or parted with had the representations been true. (N. D.) 409.

Mere disappointment and regret are held not to be included in the rule allowing damages for mental anguish upon failure of a telegraph company promptly to deliver a death message. (N. C.) 403.

The rental value of the premises during the possession of the vendee is held to be properly deducted from his recovery for breach of a covenant of seisin, which is made by an outstanding contingent remainder, where his deed gave him at least a life estate, and the life tenancy has continued so as to preclude the remainder-men from demanding rents for any part of the time. (Tenn.) 760.

In an action on a contract to convey unimproved land with warranty of title, to recover damages for failure to convey, the vendor's title proving defective, it is held that the value of buildings placed on the land by the vendee without the request of the vendor, before the time fixed for the conveyance has arrived, cannot be recovered by the vendee. (N. J. Err. & App.) 764.

Right of plaintiff in contempt to proceed with trial.

A plaintiff in an equity case, who is in contempt of court for refusing to obey an order which can be enforced by mandamus, is held to have no absolute right to proceed with the trial. (Mass.) 311.

IX. CRIMINAL LAW AND PRACTICE.

The arrest at their own instigation, for the purpose of preventing a trial elsewhere, of persons accused of crime, in the county where the commission of the crime is commenced, and binding them over to await the action of the grand jury, are held not to prevent proceedings against them in the county where the crime is consummated, under a statute providing that, if the jurisdiction of any offense be in two counties, the accused shall be tried in the county in which he is first arrested. (Ky.) 270.

Homicide by officer.

A police officer who kills a person whom he is attempting to arrest is held to be guilty of a criminal offense if he uses more force than is reasonably necessary to effect his purpose. (Mo.) 381.

Burglary.

The fact that the owner of a building, to whom a detective disclosed that it was probably about to be burglarized by a person 60 L. R. A.

named, with the feigned assistance of the detective, for the purpose of securing evidence of the intended burglary and other crimes, did not take steps to prevent the burglary, but passively allowed it to go on, is held not to be a consent to the burglary that will be a defense in a prosecution therefor. (N. D.) 405.

Soliciting bribe.

The solicitation of a bribe is held not to constitute an attempt to accept or receive a bribe. (Kan.) 176.

Betting.

Playing pool under an agreement that the one losing the game shall pay for the use of the table is held to be betting at a pool table, within the meaning of a statute making such betting a misdemeanor. (Ga.) 117.

Lottery.

The fact that each member is entitled to trade out the amount he has paid in whenever he chooses to withdraw from the club is held not to prevent a suit club, which is a scheme by which a certain number of persons pay a small sum per week and choose by lot each week one of the number who shall receive a suit of clothes worth much more than such weekly payment, upon receipt of which he ceases to be a member of the club, from being a lottery. (Mich.) 505.

Indictment or information.

Indictment by a grand jury is held not to be necessary to due process of law, so as to preclude the institution of a criminal prosecution by information. (Or.) 466.
69 L. R. A.

Instruction to jury.

A plea of guilty of theft, to commit which a burglary is alleged to have been committed, is held not to relieve the court of the necessity of instructing the jury as to the law governing convictions on circumstantial evidence, where the fact of the burglary itself depends on circumstantial evidence. (Tex. Crim. App.) 193.

INDEX TO NOTES.

(The General Index follows this.)

Bankruptcy.

Discharge of partnership liability in individual bankruptcy proceedings	771
I. Scope	772
II. Provability of partnership debts in individual proceedings
a. Introductory	772
b. In general	773
c. Exceptions
1. Absence of joint assets or solvent partners
(a) In general	775
(b) When partnership assets have been assigned to bankrupt	777
2. Fraudulent abstraction of partnership funds by bankrupt	777
3. Right of petitioning joint creditor to prove	778
III. Discharge of partnership liability in individual proceeding
a. Discharge of liability by reason of provability of claim
1. In general	778
2. The English doctrine	779
b. Necessity of making firm or co-partners parties
1. Under bankruptcy law of 1867
(a) In general	780
(b) In absence of joint assets	782
2. Under bankruptcy law of 1898
(a) In general	783
(b) In absence of joint assets	784

Banks.

Liability of savings banks for payments to fraudulent claimants:—
I. General rule requiring reasonable care by the bank	317
II. The application of the rule of reasonable care as affected by the bank's by-laws
a. In general	318
b. By-law providing for payment to the depositor's representative after his death	323
III. The binding effect of the by-laws upon the depositor
a. Assent by the depositor	324
b. What is a reasonable by-law	326

69 L. R. A.

Banks—continued.

IV. Limits of the application of the rule requiring reasonable care
a. In general	327
b. Payment upon fraudulent claim of identity merely	327
c. Payment upon impersonation of the depositor, combined with forgery	329
d. Payment upon forged orders alone	333
e. Payment without either impersonation or forgery	336
f. Payment after the death of the depositor	338
g. The obligation to compare the signatures	339
V. Contributory negligence of the depositor
a. In general	340
b. Failure to give notice to the bank	341
c. Failure to keep pass book safely	342
VI. Matters of evidence	342

Burglary.

Necessity of instruction as to law on circumstantial evidence on prosecution for	197, 207
--	----------

Cloud on title.

Jurisdiction of equity of suit to remove cloud on title to land in other state or country	682
---	-----

Contracts.

Recovering for services and expenses under a running contract with corporation ended by its insolvency and dissolution	124
--	-----

Corporations.

Recovering for services and expenses under a running contract with a corporation ended by its insolvency and dissolution:—
I. Scope of note	124
II. Breaches of contracts in general	125
III. The measure of damages in such cases	126
IV. How corporations are dissolved	128
V. When dissolution is not effected	129
VI. The earlier common-law doctrine concerning the effect of dissolution	130
VII. Comment and criticism concerning it	132
	1005

Corporations—continued.

VIII. The trust-fund, or "American," doctrine	134
IX. The effects of corporate dissolution according to modern views
a. Civil death	137
b. Upon litigation	138
c. Upon property and assets	139
d. Upon debts and credits	141
e. Upon contracts in general	142
f. Upon employment contracts
1. With officers	144
2. With superintendents	145
3. With agents	146
4. With ordinary employees	150
X. Remedies
a. Abstract	151
b. Concrete	152
XI. Construction and effect of statutes	153
XII. Conclusion	155

Drains and ditches.

Maintenance of drainage ditches	805
---------------------------------	-----

Equity.

Equitable relief against forfeiture of estate:—
I. General rules	833
II. Conditions precedent	836
III. Forfeiture will be relieved when compensation can be made
a. In general	839
b. Forfeiture to secure payment of money
1. General rule	839
2. Grant or devise on condition of support	841
3. Grant or devise on condition of payment of money	842
4. Nonpayment of rent	844
5. Nonrenewal of lease	846
6. Nonpayment of taxes	848
7. Failure to remove encumbrance	849
IV. Fraud, accident, mistake	849
V. Effect of conduct of obligee	851
VI. Collateral covenants
a. In general	853
b. Failure to improve or repair	854
c. Failure to insure	856
d. Other covenants	858
e. Copyholds	858
f. Mining leases	858
VII. Conditions against marriage	858
VIII. After forfeiture declared	865
IX. Statutory forfeiture	866
X. Statutory jurisdiction	866
Jurisdiction of equity over suits affecting real property in another state or county:—
I. In general jurisdiction limited to suits in personam	673
II. Conditions of jurisdiction
a. Necessity of proper case for equitable intervention	675
b. Ability to grant effective relief by a decree in personam the criterion of jurisdiction	676
c. Nonresidence of defendant as affecting jurisdiction	677

69 L. R. A.

Equity, II.—continued.

d. Discretion as to exercising jurisdiction	678
III. Particular subjects of jurisdiction
a. Creation and enforcement of trusts; substitution of trustees	678
b. Suit for specific performance	681
c. Suit to remove cloud on title; to cancel void mortgage	682
d. Foreclosure of mortgage or other lien	682
e. Suit to redeem	685
f. Suit to reform deed; or to have deed declared a mortgage	685
g. Relief from fraud
1. As between parties or privies	686
2. As between one party and creditors of the other	688
h. Injunction	689
i. Accounting and incidental relief by requisition of conveyance	691
j. Partition	692
k. Appointment of receiver	693
l. Miscellaneous	693
IV. Form of relief; effect and enforcement of decree	694
V. Summary	696
Evidence.
Circumstantial; necessity of instruction as to	193
Fixtures.
Are things placed on land with the intention of annexing them fixtures, where they are never actually attached:—
I. Introduction	892
II. Actual annexation	893
III. Constructive annexation	893
IV. Mere intention to annex
a. Machinery or parts thereof	894
b. Materials for use, repair, or reconstruction of railroads	897
c. Building materials	898
d. Fencing materials	901
e. Fertilizers	902
V. Conclusion	902
Homestead.
Effect of conveyance by husband to wife	379
Homicide.
Necessity of instruction as to law on circumstantial evidence on prosecution for	193, 205
Husband and wife.
Effect of conveyance by husband to wife:—
I. At common law
a. Transfers of real estate	353
b. Gifts of personalty	355
II. In equity
a. Conveyances upheld	357
b. Conditions upon which conveyances are upheld	358
c. Necessity of trustee	362
d. Effect of conveyance	362

Husband and wife—continued.

III. Effect of statutes
a. In general	363
b. Exception of conveyances from husband	364
c. Exemption from husband's debts	366
d. Permitting revocation	367
IV. Conveyance by third person at instance of husband	367
V. Consideration	368
VI. Does conveyance create separate estate	370
VII. Remaining interest of husband
a. In general	374
b. Curtesy	375
VIII. Rights against husband's heirs	377
IX. Homestead and community	378
X. Effect of divorce	379
XI. Form and provisions of conveyance	380
Effect of divorce to revoke gift by will	940

Injunction.

Affecting real property in other state; jurisdiction of equity to issue	689
---	-----

Innkeepers.

Liability for injury to guest by servant	642
--	-----

Judicial sales.

Relief of purchaser upon annulling judicial or execution sale:—
I. Release from bid	33
II. Release from bid and return of deposit	36
III. Relief by reimbursement or subrogation
a. Generally	39
b. Reimbursement	39
c. Subrogation
1. Generally	42
2. Out of proceeds of resale	44
d. Probate, guardians' and administrators' sales
1. Guardians' sales	45
2. Administrators' sales	47
e. Statutory relief	51
f. Proceedings against nonresidents	52
g. Fraudulent sales	53
IV. Relief by action against the debtor	55
V. Relief by action against the creditor	56
VI. Relief by action against the sheriff	58
VII. Summary	58

Larceny.

Necessity of instruction as to law on circumstantial evidence on prosecution for	195, 206
--	----------

Mortgage.

Jurisdiction of equity of suit to foreclose mortgage in other state or country	682
--	-----

Negligence.

Care due to sick, infirm, disabled, and otherwise helpless persons, with whom no contract relation is sustained:—
I. Scope of note	513
II. No duty between strangers	513
69 L. R. A.

Negligence—continued.

III. Principles which determine duty in certain relations

a. Duty of special care due to persons under disability in general	514
b. Limitation upon this duty where disabled party is trespasser	514
c. Duty limited by negligence of person under disability	515
d. Another's negligence not excuse for wilful or wanton injury	516
e. Summary	517
IV. Duty to avoid injury
a. To the sick and infirm	518
b. To persons of defective sight or hearing	521
c. To persons in helpless situations
1. Sleeping on railway track	523
2. Foot caught in railway track	525
3. Walking on railway trestle	526
4. Falling on railway track	527
5. Driving frightened horse	528
6. Instances of other helpless situations	532
V. Duty of persons inflicting injury to care for those injured
a. Obligation to prevent aggravation of injury	533
b. What is sufficient performance of obligation	536
VI. Knowledge of disability
a. Actual knowledge generally necessary to creation of duty	536
b. When mere belief sufficient to impose duty	538
c. Negligent ignorance equivalent to knowledge	539
VII. Duty to discover another's peril or disability
a. At places where people are likely to be present	539
b. Whether duty exists as to trespassers	543
c. What is sufficient notice of peril or disability	548
VIII. Presumptions in absence of actual knowledge of disability
a. Right to presume person in peril will help himself	550
b. Limitations upon exercise of such presumption
1. Warning of danger generally necessary as basis for presumption	552
2. Presumption may be repelled by circumstances	552
3. "Last moment" to which presumption may be indulged	554

Right to recover for ordinary negligence under allegation of gross, wilful, or wanton negligence, or vice versa	601
---	-----

Partition.

Of land in other state or country; jurisdiction of equity to decree	692
---	-----

Partnership.

- Discharge of partnership liability in individual bankruptcy proceedings 771

Pleading.

- Right to recover for ordinary negligence under allegation of gross, wilful, or wanton negligence or vice versa;
 I. Introduction 601
 II. Allegation of wilful or gross negligence 602
 III. Allegation of reckless or wanton negligence, or both 608
 IV. Recovery on allegation of ordinary negligence, on proof of wilful or gross negligence 608
 V. Under statute or ordinance 612
 VI. Conclusion 614

Railroads.

- Duty to avoid injury to persons in helpless position on track 523

Rape.

- Necessity of instruction as to law on circumstantial evidence on prosecution for 204

Religious societies.

- Liability of member of, for its debts:—
 I. Scope 255
 II. Early rule in Massachusetts, Connecticut, and Maine 255
 III. Incorporated societies 256
 IV. Unincorporated societies 257
 V. Résumé 258

Replevin.

- Duty to preserve and return property seized under writ of:—
 I. Loss or destruction of the property
 a. In general 283
 b. Emancipation of slaves 286
 II. Depreciation of the property 286
 Right to maintain, by or against one in adverse possession of land for things severed:—
 I. The general rule
 a. In general 732
 b. Reason of the rule 732
 II. Nature of the adverse possession
 a. In general 734
 b. Incidental trial of title 735
 III. Replevin of fructus industriales 737

Robbery.

- Necessity of instruction as to law on circumstantial evidence on prosecution for 203

Specific performance.

- Jurisdiction of equity to decree specific performance of contract affecting real estate in other state or country 681

Taxes.

- Situs, for taxing purposes, of tangible personal property of domestic corporation in the United States:—
 I. Scope of note 431
 II. Essentials of jurisdiction 432
 III. Localization of corporations 433
 69 L. R. A.

Taxes—continued.

- IV. Principal office as domicile
 a. In general 433
 b. Of railroads 436
 V. Effect of certificate of incorporation on the question of domicile 437
 VI. Legislative power to fix the situs of property for taxation 441
 VII. Personal property physically present in the taxing jurisdiction 442
 VIII. Tangible property outside the state 443
 IX. Particular classes of property
 a. Railroad rolling stock 445
 b. Water craft 447
 X. Conclusion 450

Trial.

- Necessity of instruction as to law on circumstantial evidence:—
 I. Introductory 193
 II. When evidence is entirely circumstantial
 a. In general 193
 1. Homicide 193
 2. Larceny 195
 3. Burglary 197
 4. Other crimes 198
 b. Possession of stolen property 198
 III. When the evidence of guilt of accused is direct
 a. By positive testimony 200
 1. Homicide 201
 2. Larceny 203
 3. Robbery 203
 4. Rape 204
 5. Other crimes 204
 b. By proof of the confession of accused 205
 1. Homicide 205
 2. Larceny 206
 3. Burglary 207
 4. Other crimes 208
 c. Plea of insanity 208
 IV. Where evidence is both direct and circumstantial 209
 V. Where instruction, or request to charge, simply states abstract proposition 210
 VI. Testimony of accomplice 211
 VII. Necessity of request for instruction; or exception 211
 VIII. Refusal of request, the substance of which is elsewhere charged 213
 IX. Accused in juxtaposition to main or inculpatory fact 213
 X. As to question of intent 215
 XI. Miscellaneous cases 216

Waters.

- Maintenance of drainage ditches 805

Wills.

- Effect of divorce to revoke gift by will:—
 I. Introductory 940
 II. When status mentioned in will controls
 a. In general 940
 b. When legatee is mentioned by name 941
 III. Effect of lapse of time between divorce and testator's death 942
 IV. Effect of property settlement 943

GENERAL INDEX

TO

OPINIONS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

(Separate Index to Notes Precedes this.)

ABANDONMENT.

Of Condemnation Proceedings, see
EMINENT DOMAIN, 10, 11.

ABUTTING OWNER.

Punitive Damages to, for Cutting Trees in Highway, see DAMAGES, 14.

Liability to, for Removing Trees in Highway, see HIGHWAYS, 2.

ACCORD AND SATISFACTION.

The payment of less than is due will discharge the debt when an agreement to that effect is fully executed, and the discharge is evidenced by a written receipt for the lesser sum in full satisfaction of the greater one. Dreyfus v. Roberts (Ark.) 823

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Accord and satisfaction; payment of less than is due as; effect of giving receipt in full. 823

ACCOUNT.

Of Partnership Affairs, see PARTNERSHIP, 3-5.

ACTION OR SUIT.

Place of Trial for Crime Committed in Two Counties, see COURTS, 1, 2.

Stay of Suit Commenced after Other Action Begun in Different Court, see COURTS, 9.

In Whose Name Action to Enforce Order for Support in Insane Asylum Brought, see INCOMPETENT PERSONS, 1, 2.

Stay of Action on Purchase-Money Note, see INJUNCTION, 5.

Right to Maintain Replevin, see REPLEVIN, 3-6.

Availability of Defense that Statute is Invalid as to Other Corporations, see STATUTES, 1.

1. A subcontractor may pursue simultaneously a proceeding to enforce his mechanic's lien against the property and an action against the contractor for the amount due him, in which he attaches funds due the contractor from the property owner. Hunt v. Darling (R. I.) 497

69 L. R. A.

2. A note for principal, and one for interest, signed by the same maker and secured by the same mortgage, may be enforced in one action. Kleis v. McGrath (Iowa) 260

Dismissal.

Of Suit Commenced after Suit Begun in Different Court, see COURTS, 9.

3. After a valid plea of set-off has been filed, the plaintiff is not entitled to dismiss his action, so as to interfere with the rights of the defendant, except upon sufficient cause shown. Wilson v. Exchange Bank (Ga.) 97

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Action or suit; election of remedy. 497

ACT OF GOD.

Carrier's Liability for Loss Due to, see CARRIERS, 9; PROXIMATE CAUSE, 1.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Act of God; what constitutes. 509

ADMIRALTY.

Apportionment of Damages in, see DAMAGES, 8.

Application of Doctrine of Last Clear Chance in Admiralty Case, see NEGLIGENCE, 10.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Admiralty; action in, for personal injuries; considered as one of collision between two vessels; division of damages in case of mutual fault; same rule of damage applied in action for personal injuries as in case of collision; common-law rule of contributory negligence not recognized in admiralty; duty of managers of dredge to one on board. 294

ADULTERY.

Condonation of, as Justification for Filing Bill to Review Divorce Decree, see REVIEW, 3.

ADVERSE POSSESSION.

Right of Adverse Possessor to Maintain Replevin for Timber Severed, see REPLEVIN, 1, 2.

Actual possession by inclosure of a portion of land claimed under a paper title draws to it constructive possession of all land within the boundaries called for by the title papers. Wheeler v. Clark (Tenn.) 732

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also REPLEVIN.

Adverse possession; right of one holding property by, to maintain replevin for things severed. 733

ADVERTISEMENT.

Forbidding Use of Land for Park for, as Taking for Public Use, see EMINENT DOMAIN, 6.

Publishing Picture without Consent as Part of, see FREEDOM OF SPEECH.

Publication of One's Picture in, as Libel, see LIBEL AND SLANDER, 2.

Publication of Picture as Part of, as Violation of Right of Privacy, see PRIVACY, 3.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Advertising; forbidding use of land near park for. 817

AFFIDAVIT.

Effect of Failure to Indorse "Filed," see APPEAL AND ERROR, 11.

AGENT.

Of Insurance Company, see INSURANCE, 1-3.

ALIMONY.

Sufficiency of Service to Warrant Personal Judgment for, against Defendant, see WRIT AND PROCESS.

AMENDMENT.

Of Pleading; Error in Refusing to Permit, see APPEAL AND ERROR, 10.

Of Affidavit, see APPEAL AND ERROR, 11.

Of Statute; Sufficiency of Caption, see STATUTES, 6.

APPEAL AND ERROR.

Record in appellate court; generally.

1. Failure to set out instructions to 69 L. R. A.

which objection is made, as required by rule of court, will waive the objection. Garrigue v. Keller (Ind.) 870

2. That there is evidence in the record that a tenant permitted the premises to be sold for taxes in violation of his covenant through mistake does not require a reversal of a judgment dismissing his bill for equitable relief from a forfeiture claimed on the ground, where there is no statement of facts found, or of rulings made; since it cannot be held to have been error to refuse to give credence to such evidence. Gordon v. Richardson (Mass.) 867

3. Sundays cannot be excluded in computing the time for signing of bills of exception under Code Pub. Loc. Laws, art. 4, § 170, allowing it to be done "at any time within thirty days" after verdict or finding of fact. American Tobacco Co. v. Strickling (Md.) 909

Assignments of error.

4. An assignment that the court erred "in charging the jury as certified to in the printed record," without pointing out the error complained of, raises no question which the appellate court is bound to review. Chase v. Waterbury Sav. Bank (Conn.) 329

5. On appeal from an order overruling a motion for new trial, appellant is entitled to have the assignment and specification of errors contained in his statement used on the hearing of such motion examined and considered by the appellate court, although such order was not assigned as error on appeal, since Id. Rev. Stat. 1887, § 4427, allows an aggrieved party an exception, as a matter of law, to an order denying his motion for a new trial. Whitney v. Dewey (Id.) 572

6. Where a motion for a new trial has been made, and the statement used on such motion contains an assignment and specification of errors, and an appeal is taken from the order denying the motion, and the original brief of appellant contains no enumeration of errors relied on, but refers to the transcript and discusses such errors, and prior to the argument in the appellate court a supplemental brief is filed by appellant, making a specific enumeration of such errors, the same will be regarded as a substantial compliance with the rules of court requiring an assignment of errors: and the case will be examined on the merits. Id.

Necessity of exceptions.

7. In the absence of exception to the conduct of the prosecuting attorney in reading the verdict of a coroner's jury in propounding a question to a witness, the supreme court will not set aside a verdict of guilty in a murder case merely because the coroner's verdict stated that the homicide for which accused was on trial was unjustified. State v. Coleman (Mo.) 381

Questions reviewable.

8. The exercise by the trial court of its discretion as to the setting aside of a verdict as being contrary to the clear weight of the evidence will not ordinarily be reviewed on appeal. Hancock v. Western U. Telegr. Co. (N. C.) 403

9. The question of the invalidity of an information may be raised for the first time in the appellate court. State v. Coleman (Mo.) 381

10. Refusal to grant leave to amend the complaint so as to set up a new issue, after the introduction of the evidence, is not reviewable on appeal. Allen v. North Des Moines M. E. Church (Iowa) 255

11. Failure of the clerk to indorse the word "Filed" upon an affidavit is a mere irregularity which may be amended at any time before or during trial, and objection to it cannot be made for the first time on appeal. State v. Coleman (Mo.) 381

Review of facts.

12. On an appeal to the Louisiana supreme court solely under the grant of jurisdiction to that court over suits involving the constitutionality or legality of a fine or penalty imposed by a municipal corporation, the question whether the facts were sufficient to justify the conviction of the appellant cannot be considered. Crowley v. Ellsworth (La.) 276

13. A verdict in favor of plaintiff in an action to recover for injury to a railroad brakeman while coupling cars through the alleged negligence of the engineer in failing to stop his engine as soon as the cars came together, and hold it stationary until signaled to move it again, will not be disturbed where the evidence is conflicting, but plaintiff's evidence that the engine was not stopped is corroborated by undisputed evidence tending to show that fact. Schus v. Powers-Simpson Co. (Minn.) 887

14. A finding that there is no such disparity or difference between signatures on drafts presented to a savings bank and that of the depositor on file as to create a doubt or misgiving concerning the genuineness of the signatures in the mind of a competent and reasonably careful bank officer when presented by a person unknown to him, and that, therefore, the bank is not guilty of negligence in failing to make a comparison, is a conclusion of law reviewable by the appellate court, and not a finding of fact. Kelley v. Buffalo Sav. Bank (N. Y.) 317

69 L. R. A.

Grounds for reversal generally.

15. A judgment will not be reversed because the sufficiency of an answer was tested by what was called a motion to strike, instead of by demurrer, although the practice is improper, where the motion has been treated by the parties as in effect a demurrer. Wisconsin Lumber Co. v. Greene & W. Teleph. Co. (Iowa) 968

16. The admission of evidence of a conversation between the maker and payee of a note as to the law by which it shall be governed, which took place in the absence of the surety, is not reversible error upon complaint of the surety, where the conversation merely corroborated the effect of the contract itself, and there was no evidence to the contrary. Garrigue v. Keller (Ind.) 870

17. The excusing of a competent juror on motion of the court itself is not ground of error, if a fair and impartial jury was obtained. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Montgomery (Ind.) 875

18. A verdict for damages will not be disturbed on writ of error on the ground that they were excessive, when the trial court did not disturb it. Peirce v. Van Dusen (C. C. App. 8th C.) 705

19. Failure to credit overdue premium notes on a life insurance policy in entering judgment thereon, as provided in the contract, is cause for reversal. Union C. L. Ins. Co. v. Spinks (Ky.) 264

Remarks or conduct of court or counsel.

See also supra, 2, 7.

20. The jury in a murder case cannot infer that a verdict was rendered by a coroner's jury, merely because the prosecuting attorney asked a witness whether or not he, as a member of such jury, did not render such verdict, which question the witness was not permitted to answer, so as to make the conduct of the prosecuting attorney ground for reversal. State v. Coleman (Mo.) 381

21. A remark by the trial judge to counsel in the presence of the jury in a criminal case, indicating that in his opinion the case is not one depending on circumstantial evidence, and that he gives instructions on that subject only in deference to the opinion of the higher court, is reversible error. Beason v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 193

22. It is reversible error for the trial judge to permit, without rebuke, the prosecuting attorney to state to the jury, in a prosecution for burglary, that, if they do not convict, we might as well tear down the court houses; that, if defendant is not guilty, there are too many courts for the case to go through to permit his conviction; that the state has proved that defendant stole the property by his plea of guilty, which the judge would not have entered if it was not true; so that the case is one of direct, and not circumstantial, evidence, although a 2x4 appellate court had held that it was the latter. Id.

Instructions.

23. Charging the jury as to the effect of verbal statements of accused, when there is no evidence that he made any, is not reversible error, where the facts disclosed by the record show that accused was not prejudiced thereby. State v. Coleman (Mo.)

381

24. An instruction in an action for false imprisonment permitting the damages to be fixed by what the average man would suffer under the circumstances is not reversible error, where there is nothing to show that plaintiff suffered less than would the average man, although the measure of damages should actually have been what plaintiff suffered. Mumford v. Starmont (Mich.)

350

25. A manifest clerical mistake in copying an instruction is not prejudicial error. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Montgomery (Ind.)

875

26. Failure to give an instruction which is not requested upon a matter to which the attention of the court is not called is not reversible error. State v. Coleman (Mo.)

381

Modification of judgment by appellate court.

27. The appellate court may correct a judgment which erroneously imposes imprisonment in addition to a fine for a statutory misdemeanor, by striking out the erroneous portion and affirming the judgment as modified. Pressly v. State (Tenn.)

291

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Appeal; reversal for improper remarks of prosecuting attorney.

194

Failure to file assignments of error; sufficiency of general assignments.

574

APPROPRIATIONS.

Appropriations to aid counties in the construction of public roads are not forbidden by a constitutional provision that the general assembly shall not have power to involve the state in the construction of works of internal improvement, nor to grant any aid thereto, which shall involve the faith or credit of the state, nor make any appropriation therefor. Bonsal v. Yellott (Md.)

914

69 L. R. A.

ARBITRATION.

Of Insurance Loss, see INSURANCE, 7.

ARREST.

Evidence of Humiliation by, see EVIDENCE, 21.

Right of Officer to Kill while Making, see HOMICIDE.

See also FALSE IMPRISONMENT.

ASSESSMENT.

For Drainage Ditch, see DRAINS AND SEWERS.

ASSIGNMENT.

The assignee of a chose in action takes it subject to all the defenses which could have been set up against it in the hands of the assignor at the time of the assignment. Williams v. Neely (C. C. App. 8th C.)

232

ASSIGNMENT OF ERROR.

See APPEAL AND ERROR, 4-6.

ASSUMPTION OF RISK.

By Servant, see MASTER AND SERVANT, 10-13.

ATTACHMENT.

By Subcontractor, see ACTION ON SUE, 1.

Power to Set aside Levy of, on Exempt Property, see LEVY AND SEIZURE, 3.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Attachment; exemptions from; exemption of debt; effect of parting with exempt property and acquiring, in lieu thereof, property not exempt; statutory exemption of money accruing from life insurance; meaning of word "accruing;" exemption from liability for claims against beneficiary; right of legislature to increase amount of property which debtor may claim as exempt; liberal construction of exemption statute.

67

Of growing crops.

827

ATTAINDER.

A resolution expelling a member from the legislature is not a bill of attainder forbidden by the Constitution. French v. Senate (Cal.)

536

ATTEMPT.

To Accept or Receive Bribe, see BIBERY.

ATTORNEY GENERAL.

Judicial Notice of Order on, to Prosecute Criminal Proceedings, see EVIDENCE, 2.

Signing of Indictment by, see INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION.

ATTORNEYS.

1. The pardoning of a lawyer who has been convicted of embezzling funds from his client does not efface the moral turpitude and want of professional honesty involved in the crime, nor obliterate the stain upon his moral character. People ex rel. Deneen v. Gilmore (Ill.) 701

2. A license to practise law will be revoked which is secured by a fraudulent concealment of the fact that the plaintiff has recently been convicted of embezzling funds from a client in another state,—especially if, since its issuance, the plaintiff has been guilty of professional misconduct evincing such lack of personal integrity and professional honor as to establish that he is unworthy to be allowed to hold it. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Attorneys; disbarment of, for conviction of felony; in case of pardon of felony; where misconduct does not relate to professional engagement. 701

ATTORNEYS' FEES.

Sufficiency of Service to Authorize Personal Judgment for, against Defendant in Divorce Suit, see WRIT AND PROCESS.

AUTOMOBILES.

Judicial Notice as to Speed of, see EVIDENCE, 1.

1. Requiring an automobile to carry a number does not violate the constitutional provision against unreasonable searches, or compel the owner to testify against himself, or deprive him of property without due process of law. People v. Schneider (Mich.) 345

2. Power to require the registering and numbering of automobiles is conferred upon the city council by charter authority to control, prescribe, and regulate the manner in which the streets shall be used and enjoyed. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Automobiles; ordinance requiring registering and numbering of. 346

BAGGAGE.

Liability for, see CARRIERS, 6, 7.

BANKRUPTCY.

1. A debt is properly scheduled in bankruptcy proceedings, so as to give notice to the creditor or his assignor, where in the schedule the name of the original creditor and the nature and the amount of the debt
69 L. R. A.

are correctly stated. Loomis v. Wallblom (Minn.) 771

2. A trustee in bankruptcy has the option to assume or to renounce the leases and other executory contracts of the bankrupt, as he may deem for the best interest of the estate. Watson v. Merrill (C. C. App. 8th C.) 719

Provable claims.

3. Rents which a bankrupt had agreed to pay at times subsequent to the filing of the petition in bankruptcy do not constitute a provable claim under the bankruptcy law of 1898, because they are not a "fixed liability . . . absolutely owing at the time of the filing of the petition against him," and because they do not constitute an existing demand. Id.

4. Damages for the breach of a contract of the bankrupt to pay rents at times subsequent to the filing of the petition in bankruptcy are not a fixed liability, absolutely owing, which may be proved in bankruptcy proceedings under the law of 1898. Id.

Effect of adjudication.

5. An adjudication of bankruptcy absolves the bankrupt from no agreement, terminates no contract, and discharges no liability. Id.

6. An adjudication of bankruptcy in a case in which there was no rent due at the time of the filing of the petition in bankruptcy does not constitute a breach at that time of the covenants of the bankrupt in his lease to pay rents accruing thereafter. Id.

Discharge and its effect.

7. A full discharge of the individual liability of one partner on a firm debt may be had in bankruptcy proceedings concerning that partner only. Loomis v. Wallblom (Minn.) 771

8. A discharge of individual liability on a firm debt in bankruptcy proceedings concerning one partner only is a good defense in an action brought against both partners to renew a judgment on a partnership debt, the process in which action was served only on the partner who had been duly discharged in bankruptcy proceedings, where it appears that, many years before, the parties dissolved the firm, and the firm, to the actual knowledge of the judgment creditor, made an assignment of all unexempt firm and individual property under a state insolvency law, and that the claim was properly scheduled, and notice thereof duly given; and it does not affirmatively appear that any firm assets now exist. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Bankruptcy; effect of institution of proceedings to dissolve all contracts of bankrupt; right to prove claim for unaccrued rent in. 719

Discharge of partnership liability in individual bankruptcy proceedings:—(I.) Scope; (II.) provability of partnership debts in individual proceedings: (a) introductory; (b) in general; (c) exceptions: (1) absence of joint assets or solvent partners: (a) in general; (b) when partnership assets have been assigned to bankrupt; (2) fraudulent abstraction of partnership funds by bankrupt; (3) right of petitioning joint creditor to prove; (III.) discharge of partnership liability in individual proceeding: (a) discharge of liability by reason of provability of claim: (1) in general; (2) the English doctrine; (b) necessity of making firm or copartners parties: (1) under bankruptcy law of 1867: (a) in general; (b) in absence of joint assets; (2) under bankruptcy law of 1898: (a) in general; (b) in absence of joint assets. 771

Effect of discharge in bankruptcy of individual partner on partnership liability; sufficiency of notice of proceedings to interested party; right of trustee of individual bankrupt to administer assets of firm of which he is a member; no scheduling required where creditor had actual notice; discharge includes all claims. 772

BANKS.

1. A depositor in a savings bank is bound by the reasonable rules of the bank, to which he assents by an agreement in writing. Langdale v. Citizens' Bank (Ga.) 341

2. A depositor in a savings bank, by accepting and using a deposit book, assents to and is bound by the rules printed therein regulating the method of withdrawing money. Chase v. Waterbury Sav. Bank (Conn.) 329

Bank's liability on payment to wrong person.

Question for Jury as to, see TRIAL, 10. See also APPEAL AND ERROR, 14.

3. A rule of a bank that payment made to a person presenting a pass book shall be good and valid on account of the owner, unless the pass book has been lost and notice in writing given to the bank before such payment is made, is reasonable and binding upon depositors. Langdale v. Citizens' Bank (Ga.) 341

4. Under a rule of a bank that payment to a person presenting a pass book shall be good on account of the owner, unless the book has been lost and notice in writing given to the bank, where a pass book is presented by a person other than the depositor to whom it belongs, together with a forged check bearing a signature similar to that of the depositor, and there is nothing to arouse the suspicion of the teller, or put him upon inquiry, as a reasonably prudent man, as to the genuineness of the check, and the bank in good faith pays the check, believing the person presenting it to be the depositor, it is not liable in a suit by the depositor to recover the money so paid, notwithstanding another rule of the bank, that depositors must always present their pass books when depositing or withdrawing money, and that, "if not present personally, an order properly signed and witnessed must accompany the presentation of the book in case of withdrawal." Id.

5. Failure of the officers of a savings bank to make a physical comparison of the signature on a draft presented with a depositor's bank book with his signature on file will render it liable for paying out money on a forged draft, in the absence of some unusual and pertinent excuse which will justify such failure. Kelley v. Buffalo Sav. Bank (N. Y.) 317

6. Ordinary care, under the circumstances of each particular case, is the measure of the duty of a savings bank in paying money out of a depositor's account after his death, upon production of the bank book and the presentation of a draft purporting to bear his signature, when the bank has no actual notice of the depositor's death, and nothing has transpired to charge it with knowledge of that fact. Id.

7. A regulation printed in the deposit books of a savings bank relieving the bank from liability for any fraud that may be practised on its officers in withdrawing money by means of forged certificates, does not relieve the bank from its duty to exercise ordinary care to prevent payment to the wrong person. Chase v. Waterbury Sav. Bank (Conn.) 329

Effect of depositor's negligence.

8. A depositor in a savings bank is not estopped to hold the bank responsible in case it negligently pays the deposit to an unauthorized person by the fact that he also is negligent in the care which he takes of his bank book. Id.

9. Negligence of a depositor in a savings bank in failing to keep his deposit book where it will not fall into the hands of persons who will fraudulently withdraw the deposit does not relieve the bank from liability in case it is guilty of negligence in paying out a deposit to one not authorized to receive it. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Banks; liability of savings banks for payments to fraudulent claimants:—(I.) General rule requiring reasonable care by the bank; (II.) the application of the rule of reasonable care as affected by the bank's by-laws: (a) in general; (b) by-law providing for payment to the depositor's representative after his death; (III.) the binding effect of the by-laws upon the depositor: (a) assent by the depositor; (b) what is a reasonable by-law; (IV.) limits of the application of the rule requiring reasonable care: (a) in general; (b) payment upon fraudulent claim of identity merely; (c) payment upon impersonation of the depositor, combined with forgery; (d) payment upon forged orders alone; (e) payment without either impersonation or forgery; (f) payment after the death of the depositor; (g) the obligation to compare the signatures; (V.) contributory negligence of the depositor: (a) in general; (b) failure to give notice to the bank; (c) failure to keep pass book safely; (VI.) matters of evidence. 317

Duty to take notice of depositor's death; payment of deposit to impostor; right to recover back money paid to person presenting pass book of dead depositor; where bank has no knowledge of death; care required of bank in paying deposit. 321

Payment of deposit on presentation of pass book; liability where payment made to impostor; regulation relieving bank from liability for fraud in withdrawing money; effect of negligence of depositor in care of pass book; presumption that bankers know signatures of depositors; measure of care required of bank in paying deposit; duty to keep signatures of depositors on file for comparison. 329

Rule that, if depositor does not present book personally, order properly signed and witnessed must accompany book; liability for payment contrary to rule; by-law relieving bank from liability for wrong payment when depositor has failed to give notice of loss of pass book; what vigilance required of bank in detecting fraud; rule that payment to person presenting book shall be binding on depositor; negligence of bank in making payment question for jury. 342

BENEVOLENT SOCIETIES.

1. An election to treat the original contract as still in force, upon notification of reduction in the amounts of certificates 49 L. R. A.

in a mutual benefit society, adhered to for two years and five months, is not subject to change, so as to permit a certificate holder to treat the contract as rescinded, and sue for assessments paid. Supreme Council A. L. of H. v. Lippincott (C. C. App. 3d C.) 803

2. Breach of the contract of a mutual benefit society by arbitrary reduction of the amounts of outstanding certificates is not a continuing one, so as to entitle a certificate holder to elect to treat the contract as rescinded at any time before the time set for performance. Id.

BETTING.

Playing Pool as, see GAMING.

BIBLE.

Reading of, in School, see SCHOOLS, 3.

BICYCLES.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Bicycle as a vehicle. 346

BILL BOARD.

Placed Near Edge of Street; Municipal Liability for Injury by Fall of, see MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 7.

BILL OF ATTAINDER.

See ATTAINDER.

BILL OF REVIEW.

See also REVIEW.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Bill of review; limitation of time for filing. 397

BILLS AND NOTES.

Enforcing Note for Principal and for Interest in Same Action, see ACTION OR SUIT, 2.

Law Governing Married Woman's Liability on, see CONFLICT OF LAWS, 5, 6.

For Purchase Money, Stay of Action on, see INJUNCTION, 5.

Right of Set-Off in Action on, see SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM.

1. The execution of a renewal note in consideration of the surrender of one upon which the signer was liable as surety will bind him as principal, as between himself and the payee. Garrigue v. Keller (Ind.) 870

Defenses.

Laches, as, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, 2.

Availability of Defense of Recoupment though Affirmative Action Barred, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, 3.

Removal of Bar of Limitations, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, 6.

2. One who purchases for value, of a creditor, the obligation of his debtor and obtains the latter's promissory note, payable to himself, as evidence of his obligation, with full knowledge of the consideration thereof, and of the facts which condition the inception of the original obligation, takes the note subject to all the defenses which existed against it in the hands of the original creditor. Williams v. Neely (C. C. App. 8th C.) 232

3. A partial failure of consideration, which results from a defect of title, is a good defense pro tanto to an action by the vendor upon, a promissory note given for the purchase price of land which he has conveyed with covenants of warranty and against encumbrances. Id.

4. A sound reason, inhering in the same transaction from which a promissory note springs, why the holder ought not, in equity and good conscience, to recover its face value, is a good equitable defense to it, although this defense constitutes neither an offset nor a counterclaim, nor an affirmative cause of action against the holder of the note. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Bills and notes; who considered innocent purchaser of; note given for purchase price of land; breach of covenants in deed as defense to action on note; right of action on bond given by equitable owner of note as defense to action on note. 234

Effect of giving note to secure interest accrued on note previously given as acknowledgment of indebtedness upon latter; effect of mortgage given to secure original note as security for second note given for interest on first one. 261

What law governs where parties have fixed place for performance different from domicile; married woman's contract of suretyship; effect of admissions of maker of note on liability of surety. 871

BOARD OF TRADE.

Right to Enjoin Wrongful Dissemination of Quotation of Prices, see INJUNCTION, 4.

Effect of Carrying on Gambling Transactions on Property Right in Price Quotations, see PROPERTY.

69 L. R. A.

BOILER.

Master's Liability for Injury to Servant by Explosion of, see MASTER AND SERVANT, 3-5.

BONDS.

Estoppel of Corporation to Claim Payment of, see ESTOPPEL, 6.

Of Corporation, Conclusiveness against Corporation of Judgment as to, see JUDGMENT, 4.

A statute requiring that all bonds for the faithful performance of official or fiduciary duties, or the faithful keeping, applying, or accounting for funds or property, with certain exceptions, must be executed by a surety company or companies, is invalid as an invasion of the liberty to contract guaranteed by the Constitution. State ex rel. McKell v. Robins (Ohio) 427

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Bonds; when equity will go above penal sum of. 234

Action on; impossibility of performance of condition as defense; where impossibility arises through act of obligor. 285

Statute requiring all surety bonds to be signed by surety company. 428

BOULEVARD.

Condemnation of Land for, see EMINENT DOMAIN, 4, 5.

Sufficiency of Title of Statute as to, see STATUTES, 4.

BREACH.

Of Contract; Malicious Procurement of, see CASE.

BRIBERY.

Power of Legislature to Expel Member for, before Conviction, see LEGISLATURE, 4.

1. The solicitation of a bribe does not constitute an attempt to accept or receive a bribe. State v. Bowles (Kan.) 176

2. The solicitation of a bribe is not punishable as a crime by the laws of Kansas. Id.

BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS.

1. A statute which confers power on building and loan associations "to assess and collect from members and depositors such dues, fines, interest, and premium on loans made, or other assessments, as may be provided for in the constitution and by-laws;" and which further provides that "such dues, fines, premiums, or other assessments shall not be deemed usury, although in excess of the legal rate of interest,"—is not in conflict with Ohio Const. art. 2, § 26, requiring all laws to have a uniform operation, or art. 1, § 2, forbidding the grant of special privileges or immunities. Cramer v. Southern Ohio L. & T. Co. (Ohio) 415

Premiums.

2. The premium for a loan, if reasonable in amount, need not be ascertained by competitive bidding for precedence in obtaining the loan, but it may be fixed at the uniform rate by the constitution and by-laws of the association, under a statute empowering building and loan associations to impose such premiums or assessments as may be provided for in the constitution and by-laws, and exempting such associations from the operation of the usury laws. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Building and loan associations; validity of statute exempting from operation of usury laws; mutuality as essential principle of building association. 417

BUILDINGS.

License to Use Stairway on Outside of, see LICENSE, 3.

BURDEN OF PROOF.

See EVIDENCE, 4-7.

BURGLARY.

By One Apparently Assisted by Detective, see CRIMINAL LAW, 1-3.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Burglary; criminal liability when instigated by private detective with approval of proprietor of place burglarized. 406

Necessity of instruction as to law on circumstantial evidence on prosecution for 197, 207

BUSINESS.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Business; what constitutes. 599

CARRIERS.

Duty and Liability as to passengers.

Questions for Jury as to Safety of Exit, see TRIAL, 7.

1. Livery-stable keepers are not within the rule that common carriers of passengers are bound to exercise extraordinary care for the safety of their passengers. Stanley v. Steele (Conn.) 561

2. Whether or not a livery-stable keeper is liable to a patron for an injury due to a defect in the neck yoke of the carriage furnished by him depends upon whether it was discoverable by the exercise of such care as is usually exercised by persons of ordinary prudence in the conduct of such business. Id.

3. A carrier cannot delegate to another the duty of seeing that the means of egress from its terminal grounds are reasonably safe. Cotant v. Boone Suburban R. Co. (Iowa) 982

4. A railway company which expressly or by implication invites its passengers to use a stile over a wire fence in leaving its grounds is bound to use at least ordinary care in seeing that it is fit for the purpose intended, although the stile was not erected by it, and the defective part is not on its property, but where it has no right to go to make inspection or repairs. Id.

Contributory negligence of passenger.

Question for Jury as to, see TRIAL, 7.

5. Passengers have a right to assume that means of egress from the carrier's terminal grounds are reasonably safe. Id.

Liability as to baggage.

6. The checking of baggage to destination upon a through ticket to transport the passenger over roads of initial and connecting carriers will render the initial carrier liable for its loss on a connecting line. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. v. Washington (Ark.) 65

7. A steamship company is not entitled to a limitation of its liability for loss of passengers and baggage through the sinking of its vessel, where its crew could not understand the language of its officers, and were not drilled in the launching of the boats, so that after the accident but one boat was successfully launched, although there was time enough to launch them all had proper orders been given and obeyed, and the statute provides that no steamer carrying passengers shall depart from any port unless she shall have in her service a full complement of licensed officers, and a full crew sufficient at all times to manage the vessel. Re Pacific Mail S. S. Co. (C. C. App. 9th C.) 71

Duty and Liability as to freight.

Proximate Cause of Loss, see PROXIMATE CAUSE, 1.

8. It is the duty of a common carrier to whom goods are delivered for transportation, to forward them promptly, and without unreasonable delay, to their destination. Bibb Broom Corn Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (Minn.) 509

9. A carrier who negligently and carelessly delays a shipment is liable for the loss, where the goods are overtaken in transit and damaged by an act of God which would not have caused the damage had there been no delay, even though the act of God could not reasonably be anticipated; and this is true whether the goods are in their nature perishable or nonperishable. Id.

Governmental control; discrimination.

10. A carrier may at any time change its policy as to furnishing shippers of a certain commodity privileges which, under the law, it is not bound to extend to them. Central of Ga. R. Co. v. Augusta Brokerage Co. (Ga.) 119

11. That a discrimination by a carrier against a particular commodity is dictated by the business interests of the carrier, and really affects but a single shipper, does not make it unlawful. Id.

12. Discrimination against shippers only, and not against commodities, is forbidden by the rule promulgated by the railroad commission of Georgia that carriers, "in the conduct of their intrastate business, shall afford to all persons equal facilities in the transportation and delivery of freight." Id.

13. Unjust discrimination against shippers engaged in interstate commerce, as to the matter of issuing through bills of lading or furnishing reshipping facilities at terminal points within the state of Georgia, does not constitute a violation of rule 36 of the Georgia railroad commission that carriers in their intrastate business shall afford to all persons equal facilities in the transportation and delivery of freight. Id.

14. A discrimination by a carrier against cotton seed, by refusing to issue through bills of lading or to furnish its cars to connecting carriers in order that shipments may be carried to ultimate destination without reloading at terminal points, is not unlawful, provided all shippers of that commodity are treated alike. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Carriers; liability of initial carrier for loss; where through ticket is issued. 65

Limitation by steamship company of its liability for loss; when justified; statute requiring crew sufficient at all times to manage vessel. 71

Duty to ship beyond terminus of its own line; right to discriminate against certain commodity. 120

Liability of, for loss of goods which, because of delay in forwarding, are overtaken and destroyed by act of God. 509

Duty to furnish medical care and treatment to injured passenger. 513

Liability for injury to passenger; by misconduct of servant; sleeping car companies. 643

69 L. R. A.

Duty to keep stile used as exit from ground safe; where carrier did not erect stile, and it is on land of other party; care of passenger in using exit. 983

CASE.

See also CONSPIRACY.

The malicious procurement of a breach of contract of employment, resulting in damage where the procurement was during the subsistence of the contract, is an actionable wrong. Employing Printers Club v. Dr. Blosser Co. (Ga.) 90

CASH DIVIDENDS.

Right of Life Tenant as to, see LIFE TENANTS, 3-6.

CHICKEN HOUSE.

As Nuisance, see NUISANCES.

CHOSE IN ACTION.

Rights of Assignee of, see ASSIGNMENT.

CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

Necessity of Instruction as to, see TRIAL, 12.

CLOUD ON TITLE.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Cloud on title; jurisdiction of equity of suit to remove cloud on title to land in other state or country. 682

COAL.

Duty of One Mining to Leave Surface Support, see MINES.

COMBINATIONS.

Injunction against, see INJUNCTION, 2.
See also CONSPIRACY.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Combinations; illegal combination to control prices and restrict competition; attempt to injure person by inducing employees to break their contracts with him; right of party to protection where he was a former member of the combination; right to enforce illegal rules and regulations against former member. 91

COMMERCE.

See also CARRIERS, 13.

1. A statute requiring merchants licensed to sell grain on commission to render a true statement to the consignor within twenty-four hours of making a sale, showing the grain sold, price received, name and address of purchaser, and the date, hour, and minute when sold, with vouchers for charges, and expenses, is not unconstitutional.

tional as an interference with interstate commerce, though applying to shipments from beyond as well as from within the state. State v. Edwards (Minn.) 667

2. Railroad companies engaged in interstate commerce are subject to a state statute making railroad companies liable for injuries to employees on account of the negligence of others having control or direction of them, so long as Congress does not deal with that subject. Peirce v. Van Dusen (C. C. App. 6th C.) 705

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Commerce; interstate; statute regulating sales of grain by commission merchants as interference with; what constitutes interstate commerce; right to require license for conducting in state business originating outside of. 668

COMMISSION MERCHANTS.

See FACTORS.

COMMON LAW.

Rule in Shelley's Case as Part of, see REAL PROPERTY, 1.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Common law; implied change of, by statute. 354

COMPLAINT.

See PLEADING, 3-5.

CONDITIONS SUBSEQUENT.

See REAL PROPERTY, 3-8.

CONDONATION.

Of Adultery as Justification for Filing Bill to Review Divorce Decree, see REVIEW, 3.

CONFESSION.

See EVIDENCE, 16.

CONFLICT OF LAWS.

1. The validity and interpretation of the contract, as well as the rule measuring the damages arising upon its breach and the company's liability therefor, are to be determined by the laws of the state where a telegram is filed for transmission in case the points of inception and termination are in different states. Hancock v. Western U. Telegr. Co. (N. C.) 403

2. Delivery of notes into the mail, to be forwarded to another state in accordance with the understanding between maker and payee, completes the delivery so as to make the contract one to be governed by the laws of the state where the postoffice is located. Garrigue v. Keller (Ind.) 870
69 L. R. A.

As to marriage.

3. The marriage of a ward, solemnized in a sister state where it is valid, is not void because no license was procured with the consent of the guardian, as required by the laws of his domicile, nor because such laws render void all his contracts. Ex parte Chace (R. I.) 493

4. The marriage of a ward, valid where made in a sister state, must be regarded as valid at his domicile, although it would not have been so had it been solemnized there because of statutory limitation of his right to contract. Id.

As to married woman's liability.

5. That a note for the payment of which a married woman becomes surety is made payable in a state where such contract is invalid will not, although the suit is brought in that state, defeat her liability if the contract was valid at her domicile, where it was executed. Garrigue v. Keller (Ind.) 870

6. A contract of suretyship against a married woman, which is valid in the state where made, is not unenforceable in another state, as violative of its public policy, merely because its statutes forbid her to bind herself by such a contract. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Conflict of laws; as to damages for negligence in sending telegram; controlling effect of law of state in which contract made. 403

As to negotiable paper; as to contracts of married women. 870

CONNECTING CARRIERS.

Liability of, see CARRIERS, 6.

CONSENT.

To Burglary by Owner of Building, see CRIMINAL LAW, 3.

To Sale of Liquor to Minor, see INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

CONSIDERATION.

Marriage as, see CONTRACTS, 2.

CONSPIRACY.

1. A combination of two or more persons to injure one in his trade by inducing his employees to break their contract with him, or to decline to continue longer in his employment, is, if it results in damage, actionable. Employing Printers' Club v. Dr. Blosser Co. (Ga.) 90

2. A former member of an illegal combination, whose connection with it was severed before the filing of the suit, will not be denied the protection of a court of equity against an illegal act of such combination because of his previous connection therewith. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Conspiracy; to injure person's business by inducing employees to break their contracts; injunction to restrain; where party injured was formerly a member of the illegal combination. 91

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

Power of Legislature to Create and Destroy Counties, see COUNTIES.

Relation of Court to Legislative Department, see COURTS, 4, 5.

Validity of Statute for Cleaning and Repair of Drainage Ditches, see DRAINS AND SEWERS; EMINENT DOMAIN, 8.

Authorizing Abandonment of Condemnation Proceeding as Impairing Substantial Right, see EMINENT DOMAIN, 10.

Power of Legislature to Expel Member, see LEGISLATURE.

Who may Question Constitutionality of Statute, see STATUTES, 1.

Special Legislation, see STATUTES, 7.

Constitutionality of Tax Measures, see TAXES.

Constitutionality of Statute Permitting Use of Voting Machine, see VOTERS AND ELECTIONS.

1. Acts inconsistent with the spirit of the Constitution are as much prohibited by its terms as are acts specifically enumerated and forbidden therein. McDonald v. Doust (Id.) 220

Personal liberty and security.

2. Personal liberty includes not only freedom from physical restraint, but also the right "to be let alone;" to determine one's mode of life,—whether it shall be a life of publicity or of privacy; and to order one's life and manage one's affairs in a manner that may be most agreeable to him, so long as he does not violate the rights of others or of the public. Pavesich v. New England L. Ins. Co. (Ga.) 101

3. Personal security includes the right to exist, and the right to the enjoyment of life, while existing, and is invaded not only by a deprivation of life, but also by a deprivation of those things which are necessary to the enjoyment of life according to the nature, temperament, and lawful desires of the individual. Id.

Equal protection or privileges.

Special Privileges to Loan Association, see BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS, 1.

4. Railroad corporations are persons 69 L. R. A.

within the constitutional provisions as to equal privileges and immunities of citizens and the equal protection of persons. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Montgomery (Ind.) 875

5. The exemption of municipal corporations from a statute making other corporations liable to a servant for negligence of a fellow servant does not make the statute invalid. Id.

6. A constitutional provision requiring all laws of a general nature to have a uniform operation throughout the state is not violated by Ohio act April 2, 1890, relating to the liability of railroad companies for injuries to employees, since it applies to all railroad corporations operating railroads within the state, and to all of a common class of railroad employees. Peirce v. Van Dusen (C. C. App. 6th C.) 705

7. No unconstitutional discrimination between resident and nonresident owner of land along the line of a ditch is made by a statute permitting any resident owner, when the ditch needs cleaning, to petition therefor under a section which simply requires a sworn statement of such necessity to be made to the county auditor, while nonresident owners can only petition for such improvement under a section which requires application to be made to the county commissioners, and the giving of a bond for the payment of costs if the application is not granted. Taylor v. Crawford (Ohio) 805

Due process of law.

Requiring Automobile to Carry Number as Violation of Provision as to, see AUTOMOBILES, 1.

Necessity of Indictment by Grand Jury, see CRIMINAL LAW, 4.

8. Property is not taken without due process of law by Neb. Comp. Stat. 1901, chap. 77, art. 1, §§ 39, 40, requiring railroad property to be valued and assessed by one assessing body, and the aggregate value distributed, on a mileage basis, to the various counties, cities, towns, etc., through which the road runs. State ex rel. Morton v. Back (Neb.) 447

9. A person upon whose property an assessment for cleaning out a drainage ditch is laid is not deprived of his property without due process of law, where the assessment is fixed by the county surveyor after examining the sewer to ascertain whether the work is necessary, and estimating the cost, and a report of his examination and estimate must be returned to the county auditor, who appoints a day for hearing the report, of which due notice is given to all interested parties, and the auditor may make such changes in the assessment as he deems just, while any person aggrieved has a remedy under Ohio Rev. Stat. 1892, § 5848, providing for an injunction to restrain the illegal levy or collection of taxes and assessments. Taylor v. Crawford (Ohio) 805

10. Though an ordinance prohibiting the storage of explosive oils in large quantities within the corporate limits happens to have the effect of putting an end to a business, and of rendering valueless certain structures used in connection with the business, its enforcement will not constitute a depriving of property without due process of law, when the circumstances justify its adoption as a police regulation. Crowley v. Ellsworth (La.) 276

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Constitutional law; weight to be given to contemporaneous construction of Constitution. 184

Construing Constitution; power of legislature limited only by express provisions; what justifies courts in setting aside enactment of legislature; powers and duties of local authorities as to public roads and levy of taxes; held solely by delegation from general assembly. 915

Right of legislature to abolish county in existence at time state is admitted to Union; right to change county seat; refusal of court to consider extent of infringement of Constitution; any infringement, however slight, fatal. 221

Validity of statute providing that, if jurisdiction of offense be in two counties, accused shall be tried in county where first arrested. 271

What constitutes due process; denial of due process because party is in contempt of court. 312

Validity of retrospective laws not impairing obligation of contracts or of the nature of ex post facto laws; right to change form of remedy; where cause of action has already arisen; vested right of party to damages for land taken for public use; where damages have not been established in mode pointed out by law; statutory right to lien as vested right; vested right to costs. 314

Scope of police power; right to pursue lawful calling; what constitutes property; power of legislature to delegate to municipalities regulation of street traffic. 346

Police power; right to prohibit injurious or hazardous business. 350

Necessity that legislation should not be unequal or partial; statute requiring all surety bonds to be signed by surety companies; constitutional right to make and enforce contracts; right to receive property not absolute. 428

Powers and privileges of legislature; right of senate to expel member; meaning of due process of law. 557

Requirement of uniformity; making railroad companies liable for injuries to employees by superior servants. 706

What constitutes a "taking" of property, for which compensation must be made; forbidding use of land near parkway for advertising purposes; no vested right to be exempt from police regulations. 817

Statute making all corporations, except municipal, liable for injury to employee by fellow servant; making void contract by corporation for release from liability, for negligence of fellow servant; what classification of business constitutional; act invalid as to some persons embraced in provisions invalid as to all; necessity of uniformity and equal privileges; depriving owner of property of one of its attributes as depriving him of his property; interference with right to contract. 876

CONSTRUCTIVE POSSESSION.

See ADVERSE POSSESSION. ..

CONTEMPT.

Enforcing Order for Support of Insane Person by Proceedings for, see INCOMPETENT PERSONS, 2.

A plaintiff in an equity case has no absolute right to proceed with the trial while he is in contempt of court for refusal to obey an order which can be enforced by mandamus. Campbell v. Justices of Superior Court (Mass.) 311

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Contempt; refusal to permit plaintiff to proceed with trial while in contempt of court for refusal to obey orders; as denial of due process of law. 312

CONTINGENT REMAINDER.

Outstanding, Recovery for Improvements on Breach of Covenant of Seisin by, see IMPROVEMENTS.

CONTRACTS.

Maliciously Procuring Breach of, see CASE.

Conflict of Laws as to, see CONFLICT OF LAWS.

By Corporation, see CORPORATIONS, 1-6. Measure of Damages for Breach of, see DAMAGES, 1-7.

Impairing Obligation of, see EMINENT DOMAIN, 10.

- Showing Completed Agreement Satisfying Statute of Frauds, see EVIDENCE, 8.
- Parol Evidence of Signing Memorandum of Contract as Agent for Purchaser, see EVIDENCE, 15.
- Effect of Permitting Gambling Transactions on Right of Board of Trade to Protection of Price Quotations, see INJUNCTION, 4.
- Invalidity of Limitation as to Time for Suit on Policy, see INSURANCE, 8.
- Validity of Parol License, see LICENSE.
- Validity of Statute Avoiding Contract for Relief from Liability for Fellow Servant's Negligence, see MASTER AND SERVANT, 23, 24.
- Property Right in Price Quotations by Board of Trade Carrying on Gambling Transactions, see PROPERTY.
- Specific Performance of Oral Contracts, see SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE, 2.
- For Sale of Land, see VENDOR AND PURCHASER.
1. A covenant by a purchaser of the business and effects of a corporation, the sale of which is intended to terminate its existence, to indemnify it from and against the contracts and engagements to which the said vendor appears to be now liable, and also all claims and demands on account of the same contracts and engagements, does not cover a claim by the president-manager of the corporation to salary for the time subsequently accruing, where it was founded merely on the fact that he had been elected president, and there was no contract that the services and salary should continue for any specified time. Busell Trimmer Co. v. Coburn (Mass.) 821
- Consideration.
2. Marriage is a valuable consideration sufficient to support a conveyance from husband to wife. Barnum v. Le Master (Tenn.) 353
- Partial performance.
3. On the termination, by the insolvency and dissolution of a corporation, of an executory contract with it necessitating, in its execution, work, labor, and the expenditure of money for materials, machinery, etc., and the construction of roads and other improvements, as well as in carrying on the work, the contractor is entitled to compensation for services rendered by him in pursuance of the contract until the date of its termination, and to reimbursement for his actual and necessary outlay and expenses, subject to a deduction of all sums paid to him by the corporation, and of the value of such materials, machinery, and other property on hand. Griffith v. Blackwater Boom & L. Co. (W. Va.) 124
- Rescission.
- Of Mutual Benefit Certificate, see BENEVOLENT SOCIETIES.
4. A deed without power of revocation, from a parent who is incapacitated physically, and weak mentally, to his daughter, who has for some time had the care of him, made without the benefit of competent and independent advice, will be set aside by equity. Slack v. Rees (N. J. Err. & App.) 393
- NOTES AND BRIEFS.
- Different instruments executed as evidences of different parts of one transaction construed as one single contract. 234
- Contract of indemnity; payment of judgment by default or consent to warrant recovery under; what included in indemnity against "claims." 821
- Contract of service for definite period: assignability of. 822
- To release employer from liability for injury to servant through negligence of fellow servant. 876
- Validity of agreement by corporation for free passes and to repurchase stock sold. 969
- General rule for interpretation of; construing grants of land and minerals; right of surface owner to support. 637
- What part performance will take case out of operation of statute of frauds; specific performance of parol contract for sale of land; of contract by husband and wife where possession has been delivered. 568
- Parol evidence to vary terms of writing. 573
- Statute of frauds; applies to executory, and not to executed, contracts. 585
- Necessity that memorandum contain all essentials in order to satisfy statute of frauds. 630
- Notice of intention not to perform; effect, where not accepted by other party, as a breach. 803
- Liability of third party for maliciously inducing breach of; right of party to illegal contract to relief where he can make out case without invoking contract; validity of contracts in restraint of trade. 91
- Recovering for services and expenses under a running contract with corporation ended by its insolvency and dissolution. 124
- CORPORATIONS.
- Construction of Contract to Indemnify by Purchaser of Business of, see CONTRACTS, 1.

Estoppel of, see ESTOPPEL, 6.

Conclusiveness against, of Judgment as to Corporate Bonds, see JUDGMENT, 4.

Rights of Life Tenants to Cash Dividends, see LIFE TENANTS, 3-6.

Religious Corporations, see RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.

Taxation of, see TAXES.

Powers of, and contracts by.

Effect of Failure to Keep Tender Good on Right to Compel Repurchase of Stock, see TENDER.

See also CONTRACTS, 3.

1. A corporation has power to make valid contracts for the repurchase of its own stock in the absence of charter restrictions. Wisconsin Lumber Co. v. Greene & W. Telegraph Co. (Iowa) 968

2. A corporation cannot refuse to perform its contract to allow subscribers to stock free passes, or to repurchase the stock at the price paid, on the ground that it is contrary to public policy. Id.

3. A corporation cannot accept stock subscriptions secured by its officers, and repudiate the promise to take back the stock under certain circumstances. Id.

4. A corporation cannot refuse to carry out its contract to repurchase the stock of certain subscribers upon certain contingencies on the ground that other stockholders were not given the same right to return their stock; at least where there is no showing of any other prejudice to the other stockholders. Id.

5. The fact that a person entering into an executory contract with a corporation, necessitating in its execution the expenditure of money and labor, is a director of the corporation, does not affect his right, upon the termination of the contract by the insolvency and dissolution of the corporation, to compensation for services rendered, and to reimbursement for expenses incurred, under the contract, where the contract was entered into openly, without fraud, and the other directors and the stockholders were fully informed of its terms, and permitted it to be partly executed without disapproval. Griffith v. Blackwater Boom & L. Co. (W. Va.) 124

6. A contractor who, under an executory contract with a corporation, terminated by its insolvency and dissolution, has made large expenditures in the construction and repair of river dams, bridges, and roads belonging to the corporation, for the driving and hauling of timber, and upon timber partially prepared for delivery under the contract, is entitled, upon a sale of the corporate property free and discharged from the contract, under a decree of the court directing it to be offered for sale both subject to and free from the contract, to compensation and reimbursement for his services and expenditures out of the assets of the company, although he afterwards purchases the corporate property and obtains the benefit of such improvements. Id.

Compensation of officers.

7. Electing one president of a corporation, and appointing him manager, do not entitle him to a salary for any specified time. Busell Trimmer Co. v. Coburn (Mass.) 821

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Corporations; respective rights of life tenants and remainder-men in stock dividends; interference of court with management of corporate affairs; investment of profits of corporation in permanent works as a capitalization thereof. 76

Recovering for services and expenses under a running contract with a corporation ended by its insolvency and dissolution:— (I.) Scope of note; (II.) breaches of contracts in general; (III.) the measure of damages in such cases; (IV.) how corporations are dissolved; (V.) when dissolution is not effected; (VI.) the earlier common-law doctrine concerning the effect of dissolution; (VII.) comment and criticism concerning it; (VIII.) the trust-fund, or "American," doctrine; (IX.) the effects of corporate dissolution according to modern views: (a) civil death; (b) upon litigation; (c) upon property and assets; (d) upon debts and credits; (e) upon contracts in general; (f) upon employment contracts: (1) with officers; (2) with superintendents; (3) with agents; (4) with ordinary employees; (X) remedies: (a) abstract; (b) concrete; (XI.) construction and effect of statutes; (XII.) conclusion. 124

Question whether a new corporation has been created or an old one continued, as one of intent; liability of religious corporation for debts of predecessor. 256

COUNTIES.

Action to Enforce Order for Support in Insane Asylum in Name of, see INCOMPETENT PERSONS, 1-2.

See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

1. The power to create new counties, conferred on the legislature by the Constitution, does not include power to reorganize under a new name an old county existing at the time of the adoption of the Constitution. McDonald v. Doust (Id.) 220

2. The legislature has no power to destroy the counties recognized by the Constitution as organized and existing at its adoption as legal subdivisions of the state. Id.

3. A statute abolishing an existing county, and creating two new counties out of the same territory, and establishing a new county seat for each, is void under the Idaho Constitution, which recognizes the counties existing at the time of its adoption as legal subdivisions of the state, and forbids the removal of a county seat or the cutting off of territory without a vote of the people, and prohibits the reduction of the territory of a county below 400 square miles. Id.

4. A county organization is not a special privilege or immunity within the meaning of a constitutional provision that no special privilege or immunity shall ever be granted that may not be altered or revoked by the legislature. Id.

COURTS.

Judicial Notice by, see EVIDENCE, 1.

Territorial limitations.

1. A constitutional right to trial by jury of the vicinage does not prevent the trial taking place in either county, in case a crime is begun in one and consummated in another. Hargis v. Parker (Ky.) 270

2. An accessory before the fact to a murder in which the wound is inflicted in one county and the injured person dies in another may be tried in either county, although his acts are committed only in the former, under statutes providing that accessories shall be liable to the same punishment as principals, and may be prosecuted jointly with them, and, in case of a crime committed jointly in two counties the prosecution may be in either. Id.

3. No interest in real estate located in another state can be vested in a complainant in a divorce proceeding by a decree which purports to deal directly with the title to the estate. Proctor v. Proctor (Ill.) 673

Relation to legislative department.

4. The court cannot supervise the exercise by the legislature of its constitutional power to expel a member. French v. Senate (Cal.) 556

5. The question whether a general law can be made applicable to a particular case is for the legislature, and not for the court, to determine. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Montgomery (Ind.) 875

Superintending control.

6. The supreme court may exercise its 69 L. R. A.

constitutional power to prevent an inferior court from exceeding its jurisdiction, before the question of jurisdiction has been presented to such court, where the situation disclosed is such that to take the ordinary course would be of itself to subject the complaining party to irremediable loss. Hargis v. Parker (Ky.) 270

7. The supreme court has jurisdiction to intervene by a writ of prohibition to stay an inferior court from proceeding out of its jurisdiction, under a constitutional provision empowering it to issue such writs as may be necessary to give it a general control of inferior jurisdictions. Id.

Conflict of authority.

8. The court which first acquires jurisdiction of specific property by the issue and service of process in a suit to enforce a lien upon it, in which it may be necessary to take possession or control of it, retains jurisdiction until the end, free from the interference of any court of co-ordinate jurisdiction. Williams v. Neely (C. C. App. 8th C.) 232

9. A subsequent suit involving rights in the same property, in a court of co-ordinate jurisdiction, should not be dismissed, but, before a seizure of the property under it, should be stayed until the proceedings in the earlier suit are terminated, or ample time for their termination has elapsed. Id.

10. The arrest at their own instigation, for the purpose of preventing a trial elsewhere, of persons accused of crime, by a magistrate of the county where the commission of the crime is commenced, and binding them over to await the action of the grand jury, will not prevent proceedings against them in the county where the crime is consummated, under a statute providing that, if the jurisdiction of any offense be in two counties, the accused shall be tried in the county in which he is first arrested. Hargis v. Parker (Ky.) 270

Federal courts following state decisions.

11. The Federal court is not bound to follow a decision of the courts of the state in which it is sitting, declaring that a plaintiff in replevin is not bound to return the property replevied if prevented by act of law, which is based not upon a statute, but upon general principles. Three States Lumber Co. v. Blanks (C. C. App. 6th C.) 283

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Courts; inherent power of court over its process. 68

Refusal to interfere with co-ordinate departments of government. 537

Refusing to interfere with corporate management. 77

Refusal to aid either party to illegal transaction. 91

Jurisdiction of supreme court to prevent excess of jurisdiction by inferior court; right of justice having jurisdiction of charge to admit to bail; concurrent jurisdiction of prosecution in two or more counties; jurisdiction of justice residing nearest courthouse to issue warrant of arrest and take bail. 271

Jurisdiction limited to territorial limits of state in which established. 674

COVENANT.

To Pay Rent; Breach of, see BANKRUPTCY, 6.

Measure of Damages for Breach of, see DAMAGES, 2, 6.

Right of Recovery for Construction of Embankment, see EMINENT DOMAIN, 7-12.

Recovery for Improvements on Breach of, see IMPROVEMENTS.

By Tenant; Forfeiture for Breach of, see LANDLORD AND TENANT, 2.

Restoration of possession is an indispensable ingredient of a decree in equity in favor of a vendee for breach of a covenant of seisin made by an outstanding contingent remainder, where his deed gave him at least a life estate, and he has had the benefit of possession. Brannon v. Curtis (Tenn.) 760

CRIMINAL LAW.

Place of Trial of Crime Committed in Two Counties, see COURTS, 1, 2.

Effect of Arrest in Court of One County for Purpose of Preventing Trial Elsewhere, see COURTS, 10.

For Indictment, Generally, see INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION.

Power of Legislature to Expel Member for Bribery before Conviction, see LEGISLATURE, 4.

See also APPEAL AND ERROR, 27.

Criminal liability; apparent co-operation of detective.

1. Upon the trial of one charged with burglary, the mere fact that one who was present with an assisted him in the burglary was a detective is not a defense, if the detective did not instigate the crime, and it was committed, as to every ingredient of it, by the criminal. State v. Currie (N. D.) 405

2. The acts of a detective who apparently assists in a burglary for the purpose of securing evidence of the same and other offenses are not to be imputed to the criminal, as they are not acting in a common purpose. Nevertheless, if the offense is committed by the person charged, as to every element thereof, he may be found guilty, notwithstanding the complicity of the detective. Id.

3. The fact that the owner of a building to whom a detective disclosed that it was probably about to be burglarized by a person named, with the feigned assistance of himself, acting for the purpose of securing evidence of the intended burglary and other crimes, did not take steps to prevent the burglary, but passively allowed it to go on, is not a consent to the burglary that will be a defense to the burglar. Id.

Necessity of Indictment.

4. Indictment by a grand jury is not necessary to due process of law, so as to preclude the institution of a criminal prosecution by information. State v. Guglielmo (Or.) 466

5. Under a constitutional provision for the constitution of a grand jury, which empowers the legislature to modify or abolish it, provision may be made for the institution of criminal proceedings by information without the entire abolition of the grand jury. Id.

Extent of punishment.

6. Where a statute prescribes a fine as the punishment for giving liquor to minors, the court has no authority to impose imprisonment therefor. Pressly v. State (Tenn.) 291

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also TRIAL.

Criminal law; proceedings before grand jury as part of prosecution; what constitutes an attempt to commit crime; solicitation as attempt; offer by public officer to receive bribe as criminal offense. 176

Statute providing that, if jurisdiction of offense be in two counties, accused shall be tried in county where first arrested. 271

Criminal liability where crime is instigated by detective and consented to by party injured. 406

Criminal liability for violation of statute without wrongful intent. 669

Right to institute criminal prosecution by information; right of one to preliminary examination before prosecution for crime; necessity that prosecution be instituted by district attorney; necessity that indictment be signed by district attorney; power of attorney general at common law to file criminal information ex officio in case of felony; necessity that information be verified by affidavit; sufficiency of signing of name of district attorney by his deputy. 467

CURTESY.

1. A fee-simple estate is vested in a woman by a deed to her and her body heirs, in which her husband is entitled to curtesy, although the grant is expressly made free from his debts and liabilities. Bingham v. Weller (Tenn.) 370

2. A man is deprived of his curtesy interest in land by conveying it to his wife to her sole, separate, and exclusive use, free and discharged from all his control and liabilities. Id.

CUSTOM.

To Search Prisoners, Exclusion of Evidence as to, see EVIDENCE, 24.

Of Commission Merchants, see FAC-TORS, 2.

As to who Shall Furnish Scaffolding; Effect of Servant's Knowledge of, see MASTER AND SERVANT, 7.

DAMAGES.

Reversal for Excessiveness, see AP-PEAL AND ERROR, 18.

Conflict of Laws as to, see CONFLICT OF LAWS, 1.

Burden of Proof as to, see EVIDENCE, 7.

Duty to keep down damages.

1. It is the duty of the injured party, when a contract is broken, to minimize the loss and injury, when it is practicable to do so by a reasonable outlay of money; but such outlay is to be allowed him as a part of his damages. Griffith v. Blackwater Boom & L. Co. (W. Va.) 124

Nominal damages.

2. In an action on contract for breach of covenant to convey real estate with warranty of title, where the vendor's title is defective, only nominal damages can be recovered. Gerbert v. Congregation of the Sons of Abraham (N. J. Err. & App.) 764

On contracts.

Recovery for Improvements on Breach of Covenant, see IMPROVEMENTS.

3. When a contractor, by reason of the termination of a partly executed contract, is entitled to compensation for services and outlay, part of which have been made in effecting permanent improvements, the service and expenditures relating to such improvements are not apportioned between the executed and unexecuted parts of the contract. Griffith v. Blackwater Boom & L. Co. (W. Va.) 124

4. A contractor who, in the prosecution of work under his contract for cutting logs and hauling and driving them to a mill by means of a railroad, tramroads, and booms and dams in a river, constructed by him for the purpose, puts in timber to the same 69 L. R. A.

mill, by means of the same improvements, for others, not keeping separate accounts of the expenditures, may be allowed, upon an inquiry as to the amount necessary to compensate him for his services and outlay, when he has been prevented from completing his contract, to charge up his entire outlay on all the work done, and credit all sums received on account thereof, when it is shown that all the work was profitable so far as executed, and that the accounts cannot be separated. Id.

5. To entitle an employee to damages against his employer for breach of the contract by disposing of all his property so that no more services could be rendered, he must show that he has not been able to earn an equal amount elsewhere. Busell Trimmer Co. v. Coburn (Mass.) 821

6. The rental value of the premises during the possession of the vendee must be deducted from his recovery for breach of a covenant of seisin, which is made by an outstanding contingent remainder, where his deed gave him at least a life estate, and the life tenancy has continued so as to preclude the remainder-men from demanding rents for any part of the time. Brannon v. Curtis (Tenn.) 760

7. In an action on a contract to convey unimproved land with warranty of title, to recover damages for failure to convey, the vendor's title proving defective, the value of buildings placed on the land by the vendee, without the request of the vendor, before the time fixed for conveyance has arrived, cannot be recovered by the vendee. Gerbert v. Congregation of the Sons of Abraham (N. J. Err. & App.) 764

In admiralty; division of damages.

8. Negligently sitting within the bight of a hawser which is subject to strain will bring one within the admiralty rule of apportionment of damages in case both parties are in fault, where, by reason of the negligence of the vessel, the strain is put upon the line in such a way that the bitt around which it runs gives way and he is thrown overboard by the sweeping forward of the line. Steam Dredge No. 1 (C. C. App. 1st C.) 293

For personal injuries.

See also supra, 8; infra, 13.

9. Damages for future suffering because of a negligent injury may be allowed where plaintiff is still suffering at the time of trial, and experts testify that the injury will probably be permanent. Cotant v. Boone Suburban R. Co. (Iowa) 982

For deceit.

10. In an action to recover damages for fraudulent representations by which the plaintiff was induced to exchange real property for stock in a corporation, the measure of recovery, in the absence of a claim for special or exemplary damages, is the difference in value between what was received or parted with, as the case may be, and what would have been received or parted with, had the representations been true, where he affirmed the contract after discovering the deceit. Beare v. Wright (N. D.) 409

In condemnation proceedings.

11. A state statute acquiescing in an attempt by the Federal government to acquire land within the state for the use of such government does not entitle the government to employ the local rule of damages as the measure of its liability for property taken. Nahant v. United States (C. C. App. 1st C.) 723

Mental anguish.

12. Mere disappointment and regret are not included in the rule allowing damages for mental anguish upon failure of a telegraph company promptly to deliver a death message. Hancock v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (N. C.) 403

13. Physical and mental suffering arising out of a personal injury may be taken into consideration in establishing damages. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Montgomery (Ind.) 875

Punitive damages.

Necessity of Allegations as to, see PLEADING, 5.

14. Punitive damages may be allowed for the cutting of trees upon the sidewalk for the accommodation of electric-light wires, in entire disregard of the rights of the abutting owner, and against his protest. Brown v. Asheville Electric Co. (N. C.) 631

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Damages; exemplary; verdict for, not set aside unless grossly excessive. 120

For mental anguish in telegraph cases; disappointment and regret not included in. 403

Measure of, for fraudulent representations. 409

For loss of hand; what deemed excessive. 709

For breach of covenant as to title in contract for sale of real estate; where vendee has placed improvements on property. 761

DEATH.

Bank Paying Money out of Depositor's Account After, see BANKS, 6.
69 L. R. A.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Death; statutory right of action for: strict construction of. 706

DECEIT.

See FRAUD.

DEEDS.

Setting aside in Equity, see CONTRACTS, 4.

Interest Passing by Deed to Woman and Her Bodily Heirs, see CURTESY, 1.

Delivery.

Parol Evidence of, see EVIDENCE, 12, 13.
See also ESCROW.

1. Even though a valid delivery of a deed had not been made at the time of its execution, still the grantor may, after he has acquired complete knowledge of the facts of the transaction, ratify the wrongful taking of the deed by the grantee, and thereby perfect the title. Whitney v. Dewey (Id.) 572

2. The delivery to the grantee of a warranty deed executed free from any conditions or qualifications as to the vesting of title is absolute, and title vests at once, although the delivery is accompanied by a contemporaneous parol agreement to the effect that the grantee shall form a corporation and deed the property to such corporation, and thereupon pay the grantor $1,000 cash and deliver to him $5,000 worth of first-mortgage bonds of the corporation secured on the property so deeded, and the deed is placed in the hands of the grantee to facilitate such transaction. Id.

3. A grantor cannot, by warranty deed absolute on its face, and free from conditions or restrictions, convey such a title to his grantee as will enable the grantee to pass a good title to a specific corporation, and at the same time attach such parol conditions to the deed upon its delivery as to preclude the grantee from transferring an equally good title to any other person or corporation. Id.

Description of property.

4. A tract of land is sufficiently described in a deed by referring to it by the number of its government patent, in which it is definitely described. Wheeler v. Clark (Tenn.) 732

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Deed; how question whether deed passes title determined; delivery of deed to grantee as an escrow; right to show that deed absolute on its face was delivered in escrow: what constitutes complete delivery; no delivery without acceptance; presumption of acceptance by grantee. 573

Conditions in; condition subsequent; reversion of title for breach of; necessity of re-entry or some equivalent act to revest title; effect of acceptance of deed and possession of land to bind grantee to conditions; necessity of demand of performance of condition; waiver of condition; effect of breach followed by re-entry on intermediate rights acquired by third parties; strict construction of condition; grantor only entitled to take advantage of breach; effect of conveyance to third party before re-entry; waiver of condition subsequent; by silent acquiescence in grantee's failure to perform. 840

DEFENSE.

Discharge in Bankruptcy of Individual Partner, in Action against Firm, see BANKRUPTCY, 8.

To Note, see BILLS AND NOTES, 2-4.

Apparent Co-operation in Burglary, see CRIMINAL LAW, 1-3.

In Action for Replevin, see REPLEVIN, 7.

Availability of Defense that Statute is Unconstitutional as to Other Corporations, see STATUTES, 1.

DEFINITION.

Established Business. See EMINENT DOMAIN, 13.

Gross Negligence. See NEGLIGENCE, 2.

Legatee. See INSURANCE, 5.

Relative. See INSURANCE, 4.

DELIVERY.

Of Deed, see DEEDS, 1-3; ESCROW; EVIDENCE, 12, 13.

DEMURRER.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Demurrer; filing of, as waiver of right to file motion to strike paragraphs of answer; motion to strike as performing office of demurrer. 969

DEPOSIT.

See BANKS.

DEPUTY.

District Attorney; Notice of Appointment of, see EVIDENCE, 3.

Of District Attorney; Signing of Information by, see INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION, 2-4.

Of District Attorney: Oath to Information by, see INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION, 7.

39 L. R. A.

DERRICK.

Proximate Cause of Injury by Fall of Derrick, see PROXIMATE CAUSE, 3.

DETECTIVE.

Apparent Co-operation by, in Burglary, see CRIMINAL LAW, 1-3.

DIRECTION OF VERDICT.

See TRIAL, 20.

DISCHARGE.

In Bankruptcy, see BANKRUPTCY, 7, 8.

DISCRIMINATION.

By Carrier, see CARRIERS, 11-14.

Against Nonresidents, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 7.

In Ordinance, see MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 2.

In Water Rates, see WATERS, 3-5.

DISMISSAL.

Of Action, see ACTION OR SUIT, 3.

DISTRICT ATTORNEY.

Judicial Notice of Appointment of Deputy, see EVIDENCE, 3.

Signing of Information by Deputy, see INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION, 2-4.

Oath to Information by, see INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION, 7.

DIVIDENDS.

Rights of Life Tenant as to, see LIFE TENANTS, 3-6.

DIVORCE.

Power of Courts over Land in Other State, in Action for, see COURTS, 3.

Condonation of Adultery as Justification for Filing Bill to Review Decree for, see REVIEW, 3.

As Revocation or Lapse of Legacy to Wife, see WILLS, 3, 4.

Sufficiency of Service on Defendant in Suit for, see WRIT AND PROCESS.

See also HUSBAND AND WIFE, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE.

See EVIDENCE, 8-11.

DOMICIL.

The temporary absence from the state of one domiciled there will not be held a change of residence, unless to the factum of residence elsewhere be added the animus manendi; for a domicile, having once been acquired, continues until a new one is actually acquired animo et facto. Watkinson v. Watkinson (N. J. Err. & App.) 397

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Domicil; what necessary to constitute change of. 397

DONATION.

To Aid in Construction of Public Roads, see APPROPRIATIONS.

DRAFTS.

Payment on Forged Draft, see BANKS, 3-9.

DRAINS AND SEWERS.

Discrimination against Nonresidents as to, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 7.

Due Process in Assessment for Cleaning out Drainage Ditch, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 9.

Statute for Cleaning Drains as Taking of Private Property for Public Use, see EMINENT DOMAIN, 8.

Requiring Connection of Gutters and Water Spouts on Buildings with Drainage System, see WATERS, 2.

1. The legislature may constitutionally confer upon county auditors and surveyors power to receive petitions for the cleaning of drainage ditches, and, upon receipt of such a petition, to examine the ditch and pass upon the necessity of cleaning it, estimate the expense and apportion the cost thereof according to benefits among the landowners along the line of the ditch who were assessed for the original construction thereof, and appoint a day for a hearing of the matter, and give notice thereof to all parties affected by the assessment, after which the auditor shall enter upon a journal the assessments, as approved by him, and place such assessment upon the duplicate against the land upon which they are assessed. Taylor v. Crawford (Ohio) 805

2. That no discretion to determine whether the improvement is for the public health, convenience, or welfare is vested in any officer or tribunal by a statute providing for the cleaning and repair of drainage ditches, and the assessment of the cost thereof upon the parties who were assessed for the original construction of each ditch, does not render it unconstitutional, since all questions as to the public health, convenience, and welfare must have been settled by the original proceedings for the establishment of the ditch. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Drains and ditches; maintenance of drainage ditches. 805
69 L. R. A.

DRUNKENNESS.

Effect of, on Degree of Care Required, see NEGLIGENCE, 7.

DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 8-10.

EASEMENTS.

Distinction between License and, see LICENSE.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Easements; creation by parol. 568
As property. 723

ELECTION OF REMEDIES.

See ACTION OR SUIT, 1, 2.

ELECTRICAL USES AND APPLIANCES.

Authority to Erect, in Highway, see HIGHWAYS, 1, 2.

ELECTRIC RAILWAYS.

See STREET RAILWAYS.

EMBEZZLEMENT.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Embezzlement; what constitutes. 701

EMINENT DOMAIN.

Railroad Company's Right to Continue to Enjoy Property after Forfeiture for Breach of Condition Subsequent, see REAL PROPERTY, 8.

1. The doctrine that, if a railroad company takes possession of land for a public way, the owner thereof not objecting, the latter will be presumed to have consented thereto, and impliedly agreed to accept a just compensation therefor, and consented to rely upon the statutory method of obtaining the same, has no application to a case where the rights of the parties are defined by a written instrument. Maginnis v. Knickerbocker Ice Co. (Wis.) 833

What may be taken.

2. The right to fish in an inland lake in New Jersey cannot be separated from the ownership of the lake, and taken under the power of eminent domain. Albright v. Sussex County L. & P. Com. (N. J. Err. & App.) 768

For what purpose.

Question for Jury as to, see TRIAL, 3.

3. The establishment of a railroad as a purely private enterprise cannot be legitimately aided by the power of eminent domain. Maginnis v. Knickerbocker Ice Co. (Wis.) 833

4. The legislature may authorize a mu-municipal corporation to condemn for park purposes and boulevard land near to, but outside of, its corporate limits. Memphis v. Hastings (Tenn.) 750

5. The condemnation of land for a boulevard connecting public parks is not unlawful on the ground that it is for mere convenience or pleasure, not for necessity. Id. What constitutes a taking.

6. Forbidding the use of land near a park or park way for advertising purposes amounts to a taking of it for public use, for which compensation must be made. Com. v. Boston Advertising Co. (Mass.) 817

7. The wharfage and reclamation rights of the owner of land on a cove leading off from a river are not destroyed or impaired by the construction of an embankment across the mouth of the cove. Richards v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. (Conn.) 929

8. A statute providing for the cleaning of drainage ditches and the assessment of the cost thereof, according to benefits, upon the parties along its line who were assessed for the cost of its original construction, does not take private property for public use without compensation, since the property occupied by the ditch was taken by its original construction, when the parties along its line whose lands were taken had ample opportunity to obtain compensation. Taylor v. Crawford (Ohio) 805

Right to compensation.

Applying Local Rule of Damages in Federal Court, see DAMAGES, 11.

9. An amendment to a city charter authorizing the condemnation of land outside the city limits for park purposes is not invalid for not providing compensation to the owner of the land taken, where it provides that the proceedings for the exercise of the power of condemnation shall be the same as that now provided by law for the taking of private property for public use, and the charter of the city incorporates within itself the general condemnation statutes of the state. Memphis v. Hastings (Tenn.) 750

10. The statutory right to have damages for land the fee of which is taken for public use assessed and paid in money is a substantial right which, after the proceedings have progressed so far that the fee has passed, cannot be impaired by the passage of a statute authorizing the abandonment of the land, and directing that the fee shall revert in the former owner, and the fact thereof be considered in reduction of the damages to be awarded. Hellen v. Medford (Mass.) 314

11. Waiver of the right to have the whole damages for land the fee of which is taken for public use assessed and paid in money will be effected by the agreement of the former owner of the land that, if the proceedings are abandoned for his benefit, and the title reverted in him, his damages will be very light, if any. Id.

12. No recovery can be had by the owner of land on a cove leading off from a river for interference with his right of access from his land to the river by the construction of a railroad track across the mouth of the cove, where the access is not entirely cut off, and, because of the limited extent of the cove, and the shallowness of its waters, the right is not essentially impaired. Richards v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. (Conn.) 929

13. A farmer who supports his family from the products of the farm, and for many years has sold his surplus in a neighboring town, has an established business within the meaning of a statute authorizing the construction of a water-supply reservoir upon the site of the town, and providing compensation for any established business thereby destroyed, although he has no regular route or customers, or anything in the nature of good will. Allen v. Com. (Mass.) 599

14. The value of sewer and water pipes owned by a municipal corporation, and laid under streets which are taken by the Federal government under its power of eminent domain for an entirely different use, must be paid to the municipality. Nahant v. United States (C. C. App. 1st C.) 723

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Eminent domain; vested right of party to have damages for land taken for public use paid in money; validity of statute authorizing abandonment, and directing fee to revert in former owner; right to obtain market value of land taken. 314

Statute providing compensation for injury to established business; what constitutes "business." 599

Power of, inherent in United States; taking city property by; right of city to compensation for; easement as property for which compensation may be claimed; recovery of value of sewer and water pipes in city street taken by Federal government. 723

Power of municipalities to take property by; right to compensation therefor; condemning land for parks and park ways. 750

Right to take land under, for private railroad. 844

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACT.

See MASTER AND SERVANT, 19-24.

ENCUMBRANCE.

Right to Open Highways over Property as, see VENDOR AND PURCHASER, 4.

EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS.

See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 4-7.

EQUITY.

1. The adequate remedy at law which will deprive a court of equity of jurisdiction must be a remedy as certain, complete, prompt, and efficient to attain the ends of justice as the remedy in equity. Williams v. Neely (C. C. App. 8th C.) 232

2. If a person conveys property to another, coupled with a condition the breach of which will, if taken advantage of, cause the title to revert to him, the condition being to secure the payment of money, or the performance of an obligation the breach of which can be fairly measured in money by some established rule, the particular thing to be done, or the particular time of the doing thereof, not being made essential and of the very essence of the contract, under some circumstances a court of equity, by an arbitrary rule of construction peculiar to that jurisdiction, may say the parties did not intend the full effect of their language, but purposed to have the condition stand as security for the performance of the obligation or the payment of an equivalent in money. Magginnis v. Knickerbocker Ice Co. (Wis.) 833

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Equity; doctrine of clean hands; jurisdiction to protect property right in stock quotations; where illegal transactions are permitted to be conducted in exchange hall. 63

Refusal to aid either party to illegal transaction. 91

Jurisdiction of equity over suits affecting real property in another state or country:— (I.) In general; jurisdiction limited to suits in personam; (II.) conditions of jurisdiction: (a) necessity of proper case for equitable intervention; (b) ability to grant effective relief by a decree in personam the criterion of jurisdiction; (c) nonresidence of defendant as affecting jurisdiction; (d) discretion as to exercising jurisdiction; (III.) particular subjects of jurisdiction: 69 L. R. A.

(a) creation and enforcement of trusts; substitution of trustees; (b) suit for specific performance; (c) suit to remove cloud upon title; to cancel void mortgage; (d) foreclosure of mortgage or other lien; (e) suit to redeem; (f) suit to reform deed; or to have deed declared a mortgage; (g) relief from fraud: (1) as between parties or privies; (2) as between one party and creditors of the other; (h) injunction; (i) accounting and incidental relief by requisition of conveyance; (j) partition; (k) appointment of receiver; (l) miscellaneous; (IV.) form of relief; effect and enforcement of decree; (V.) summary. 673

Equitable relief against forfeiture of estate:—(I.) General rules; (II.) conditions precedent; (III.) forfeiture will be relieved when compensation can be made: (a) in general; (b) forfeiture to secure payment of money: (1) general rule; (2) grant or devise on condition of support; (3) grant or devise on condition of payment of money; (4) nonpayment of rent; (5) nonrenewal of lease; (6) nonpayment of taxes; (7) failure to remove encumbrance; (IV.) fraud, accident, mistake; (V.) effect of conduct of obligee; (VI.) collateral covenants: (a) in general; (b) failure to improve or repair; (c) failure to insure; (d) copyholds; (f) mining leases; (VII.) conditions against marriage; (VIII.) after forfeiture declared; (IX.) statutory forfeiture; (X.) statutory jurisdiction. 833

Jurisdiction of action to enforce forfeiture of estate; of action to remove cloud on title by canceling conveyance after condition broken. 840

Jurisdiction to relieve from forfeiture of estate. 868

Refusal to take charge of and administer trust when properly administered by trustee. 921

ESCROW.

Parol Evidence as to, see EVIDENCE, 13.

A deed absolute on its face cannot be delivered to the grantee therein named, to be by him held in escrow; and a delivery which purports to be such will operate as absolute and freed from all parol conditions, and title will vest at once. Whitney v. Dewey (Id.) 572

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Escrow; delivery of deed to grantee as an escrow. 573

ESTABLISHED BUSINESS.

What Constitutes, see EMINENT DOMAIN, 13.

ESTOPPEL.

Of Depositor to Hold Bank Liable after Payment to Unauthorized Person, see BANKS, 8.

Of Corporation, see CORPORATIONS, 3.

By Judgment; Burden of Proof as to, see EVIDENCE, 4, 5.

By Prior Judgment; Admissibility of Evidence in Opposition to Plea of, see EVIDENCE, 22.

Of Insurance Company, see INSURANCE, 6.

Of Beneficiary of Condition in Conveyance of Land, see REAL PROPERTY, 3.

As Basis of Waiver, see WAIVER.

1. One who consigns grain to a commission merchant for sale on commission is not estopped to repudiate a purchase of the grain by the consignee himself unless he acquiesces therein and ratifies it after being fully informed of the entire transaction, including a subsequent sale at a profit. State v. Edwards (Minn.) 667

Of married woman.

2. A married woman is estopped to set up the invalidity of a contract by herself and her husband for the sale of their homestead because of failure to comply with certain statutory provisions, as a defense to a suit for specific performance, where the purchaser has taken possession, and paid the purchase price, and made valuable improvements, with the full knowledge and consent of the wife. Grice v. Woodworth (Id.) 584

By legal proceedings.

3. A plaintiff in replevin who obtains actual possession of property seized under the writ is estopped from claiming that the writ was wrongfully executed, upon a proceeding to assess damages against him for seizure of property upon which he had no rightful claim. Three States Lumber Co. v. Blanks (C. C. App. 8th C.) 283

4. A plaintiff in replevin who took into his possession, under the writ, lumber to which he was not entitled, cannot plead, in defense of his liability to return the property, that he had caused it to be sold to satisfy his own claim for salvage in recovering and preserving the property, after the vessel on which it was stored, while in his possession, had sunk. Id.

5. One filing a bill for relief from a forfeiture, at law, of a lease, will not be heard to contend that the entry of the landlord was invalid because there was no forfeiture. Gordon v. Richardson (Mass.) 867

6. A decree for defendant in an action to compel the surrender of corporate bonds to a corporation which had succeeded to the rights of the one which issued them, on 69 L. R. A.

the ground that they had been wrongfully transferred by one in whose hands they had been placed for negotiation for the benefit of the corporation, will estop the corporation plaintiff, in a subsequent suit to foreclose the mortgage by which the bonds are secured, from setting up that they had been paid, or that the present plaintiff's grantor was present when the corporation that issued the bonds transferred its property to the present defendant, and knew that the latter understood that it was acquiring the property free from the lien of the mortgage, since these were matters which should have been tried in the former suit. Ruckman v. Union Ry. (Or.) 480

7. One who purchases mortgaged premises subject to the mortgage, but without assuming the debt, after limitations have begun to run against foreclosure by force of a stipulation in the mortgage that failure to pay at maturity any one of a series of notes secured thereby, together with nonpayment of taxes due, shall mature the entire debt, does not, by payment of such overdue taxes, estop himself from pleading the statute of limitations as a defense to an action to foreclose the mortgage. Snyder v. Miller (Kan.) 250

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Estoppel; of insurance company to claim forfeiture of policy for nonpayment of premium by retaining and attempting to collect overdue premium note. 264

Of one advising another to purchase property without mentioning lien, to assert lien. 481

To assert secret equities. 575

To dispute validity of sale after accepting benefits; of married woman by fraudulent acts. 585

To claim ownership of material; as mixed question of law and fact. 900

EVIDENCE.

Of Title of Plaintiff in Replevin, see REPLEVIN, 1, 2.

Judicial notice.

Of Proceedings by Legislature for Expulsion of Member, see LEGISLATURE, 5.

1. The court will take judicial notice of the fact that many automobiles may be driven at a speed of at least 40 miles per hour. People v. Schneider (Mich.) 345

2. The district court of any county is obliged to take judicial notice of an executive order upon the attorney general to appear and prosecute criminal proceedings there; and such authority need not be expressed on the face of an indictment which he signs. State v. Bowles (Kan.) 176

3. Proof of the appointment of a deputy district attorney who signed an information is not necessary to render it valid, since the court is presumed to be cognizant of such appointment and of the powers of the appointee. State v. Guglielmo (Or.) 466

Burden of proof.

4. The burden of proof is upon a party pleading a judgment as an estoppel to sustain the plea by showing that the particular matter in controversy was necessarily or actually determined in the former litigation. Draper v. Medlock (Ga.) 483

5. One who pleads a judgment as an estoppel must prove that the particular matter in controversy was actually decided in the former litigation in accordance with his contention, where it appears from the record that several issues were involved in the former litigation, and the verdict and judgment do not clearly show that this particular issue was then decided. Id.

6. One charging that water rates imposed upon his property are unreasonable has the burden of establishing that fact. Souther v. Gloucester (Mass.) 309

7. One claiming damages for delay in the preparations for interment of his relative because of failure promptly to deliver a telegram has the burden of showing that the preparations would have been made had the telegram been promptly delivered, and such fact will not be presumed. Hancock v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (N. C.) 403

Documentary evidence.

8. A signed but undelivered lease may be given in evidence to show an agreement upon the details of a lease pursuant to the terms of a previously signed memorandum in writing of an oral agreement for a lease, in order thereby to establish that the two writings, taken together, show a completed agreement upon the terms of the lease so as to satisfy the statute of frauds. Charlton v. Columbia Real Estate Co. (N. J. Err. & App.) 394

9. After a memorandum book has been introduced in evidence without objection no objection will lie to its use as evidence, or to a witness using it as a basis for the facts to which he testifies, on the ground that he did not make the entries. Manchester Assur. Co. v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. (Ore.) 475

10. If the memoranda of inspection of engines prepared by the men in charge of that work and filed in the office of the railroad company have been lost, and the facts with regard to the inspection forgotten by them, such facts may be proved by the introduction in evidence of a transcript of such memoranda, entered by the proper clerk in a book kept for that purpose, accompanied by his testimony and that of the inspectors, showing that inspections were made and properly entered in the book. Id.

11. The record of a prior conviction of theft, based upon a plea of guilty, is admissible in a prosecution for burglary, where the taking alleged in both cases is the same. Beason v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 193

Parol evidence.

12. Parol evidence is admissible to show delivery of a deed. Whitney v. Dewey (Id.) 572

13. Parol evidence is inadmissible to show that a deed delivered to the grantee and absolute on its face shall take effect only upon the performance of some condition or the happening of some contingency unexpressed therein. Id.

14. Parol evidence cannot be introduced to prove a warranty that a machine will do particular work as rapidly or economically as some other specified machine, where the written contract of sale is silent on the subject. Davis Calyx Drill Co. v. Mallory (C. C. App. 8th C.) 973

15. Parol evidence is admissible to show that the one who signed a memorandum for the sale of goods necessary to satisfy the statute of frauds acted as agent for the one who is seeking to enforce the contract, so as to permit him to maintain the action. Usher v. Daniels (N. H.) 629

Confessions.

16. That accused was not admonished does not destroy the effect of a judicial confession in the nature of a plea of guilty in a prosecution for a misdemeanor. Beason v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 193

Res gestæ.

17. Admissions by a servant who has committed a trespass, made a day after the trespass and only remotely connected therewith, are not admissible in evidence as a part of the res gestæ. Clancy v. Barker (Neb.) 642

18. Evidence of expressions of pain and suffering, made by an injured person at the time of or shortly after the injury is admissible as part of the res gestæ. Rideout v. Winnebago Traction Co. (Wis.) 601

19. Declarations of a train conductor tending to show that his negligence caused an injury to an employee whose hand was caught between cars is admissible as part of the res gestæ when made as he met the injured man with his hand still bleeding, immediately after he had come from between the cars, and had walked only six or seven car lengths toward the engine. Peirce v. Van Dusen (C. C. App. 6th C.) 705

Declarations; threats.

20. That threats made by one on trial for murder to kill his victim were made a year or eighteen months before the homicide does not render evidence of them inadmissible. State v. Coleman (Mo.) 381

Relevancy and materiality.

See also NEW TRIAL, 2.

21. Upon trial of an action for false imprisonment plaintiff may testify that he felt humiliated by the arrest. Mumford v. Star-mont (Mich.) 350

22. Evidence offered in opposition to a plea of estoppel by a prior judgment, which shows that in the former litigation the parties alleged to be estopped by the judgment therein sought so to amend their pleading as to have the question in controversy in the subsequent litigation determined, and that the court disallowed such amendment, is admissible. Draper v. Medlock (Ga.) 483

23. It is not error to exclude evidence, in an action by a motorman for false imprisonment for attempting to run cars against the orders of the municipal authorities, to the effect that plaintiff was subsequently complimented by his employer for his effort to do so. Mumford v. Star-mont (Mich.) 350

24. The exclusion of evidence as to a custom to search prisoners is not error in an action for wrongful arrest, where plaintiff was not searched. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Evidence; burden of proof on owners of vessel to show that loss of life or sinking of ship did not arise from insufficiency of crew. 72

Burden of proof to establish waiver of forfeiture of insurance policy. 279

Action in admiralty for alleged negligent injuries; burden of proof as to negligence and freedom from contributory negligence. 293

Presumption of due care on part of person injured. 189

Burden of proving that employee acted within scope of employment in committing injury. 645

In action by injured employee; burden of proof to show insufficiency of inspection of appliances. 798

Presumption that grantor used words with intent to give them meaning which law has attached thereto. 954

Circumstantial; necessity of instruction as to. 193

Parol; to vary terms of written contract; to establish trust; admissibility of declaration. 69 L. R. A.

tions of party against his title under deed; presumption of acceptance of deed. 573

Parol; to establish identity of sum embodied in note given for interest with interest due upon pre-existing debt, and that it was given for that debt. 261

Admissibility of record of former conviction; where state fails to show defendant had been properly admonished before pleading guilty. 194

Of verdict of coroner's jury in homicide case; effect, on competency of evidence of threats, of remoteness. 382

Admissibility of admissions of maker of note who is not making defense against surety; when not made in her hearing. 871

Of confession obtained by direct or implied promise. 406

Right of witness to use memoranda to refresh memory; admissibility of book in which memoranda have been entered; evidence of other fires set by engines other than that causing fire in question. 476

Admissibility of admissions and declarations made at time of accident; as part of res gestæ. 707

Admissibility of testimony res inter alios on measure of damages. 822

Of custom to guard shafting; admissibility in action for injury to servant. 910

EXCEPTIONS.

Necessity of, see APPEAL AND ERROR, 7.

EXECUTION.

Property Exempt from, see LEVY AND SEIZURE, 1, 2.

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

Conclusiveness of Decree of Probate Court, see JUDGMENT, 2.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Executors and administrators; right of court to reject executor appointed by will. 921

EXEMPLARY DAMAGES.

See DAMAGES, 14.

EXEMPTIONS.

What Property Exempt from Levy, see LEVY AND SEIZURE.

From Taxation, see TAXES, 1.

EXPLOSION.

Of Boiler, Master's Liability for Injury to Servant by, see MASTER AND SERVANT, 3-5.

EXPLOSIVES.

Prohibiting Extensive Storage of, within Limits of City, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 10.

Ordinance Regulating Storage of, see MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 4.

FACTORS.

Estoppel of, see ESTOPPEL, 1.
See also COMMERCE, 1.

1. Commission merchants to whom grain has been consigned for sale on commission have no right to purchase it themselves after business hours, at the highest price of the day on the board of trade; and if they do so, and subsequently resell it at an advance, the profit thus made inures to the benefit of the consignor. State v. Edwards (Minn.)

667

2. That a commission merchant who has failed to make to his principal such a report of a sale of grain consigned to him as is required by statute acted in good faith and in accordance with the custom of commission merchants in that locality is no defense to a prosecution under the statute, since, the statute having made the sending of the report a positive duty, his intent in failing to do so is immaterial.

Id.

3. A commission merchant who himself purchases a carload of grain consigned to him for sale on commission, after close of business hours, at the highest price of the day on the board of trade, and who subsequently resells the grain at an advance, is bound to report to his principal the latter sale, under a statute requiring commission merchants to render a true statement to the consignor within twenty-four hours of making a sale, showing the grain sold, price received, name and address of purchaser, etc.; and a report by the consignee of the sale to himself is not a compliance with the statute.

Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Factors; statute regulating sales of grain by commission merchant; interference with interstate commerce; right of factor to buy grain consigned to him, and resell it at advance; ratification by principal; criminal liability for violation of statute without wrongful intent.

667

FAIR.

Permitting Use of Streets for, see HIGHWAYS, 3. 4.

FALSE IMPRISONMENT.

Evidence of Humiliation by, see EVIDENCE, 21.

1. The arrest of a motorman to abate a nuisance caused by the running of cars when the trolley wire is in such poor condition that it is liable to come down to the injury of travelers upon the street is not justified when the result can be obtained by cutting the feed wires or removing the controllers from the cars. Mumford v. Starmont (Mich.)

69 I. R. A.

350

2. The mayor and chief of police of a city are liable in damages in case they arrest motormen of street cars to abate a nuisance caused by the operation of cars when the trolley wire is in such poor condition as to be liable to fall, when the object can be effected by merely cutting the wires or removing the controllers from the cars.

Id.

FELLOW SERVANTS.

See MASTER AND SERVANT, 14-24.

FIRE.

Question for Jury as to Cause of, see TRIAL, 6.

FISHERIES.

Taking Right to Fish under Power of Eminent Domain, see EMINENT DOMAIN, 2.

FIXED LIABILITY.

See BANKRUPTCY, 3.

FIXTURES.

1. Commercial finishing material, such as doors, mantels, casings, etc., which have been purchased for an unfurnished building and placed therein, but not affixed thereto, does not pass by a sale of the real property, under a mortgage foreclosure, where it is not mentioned or deemed a part of the sale. Blue v. Gunn (Tenn.)

892

2. A mortgage of a lot on which stands a partially completed building will pass cut stone and structural iron prepared for the building and located on the lot mortgaged and that adjoining, if the intention of the parties is that the building shall be speedily completed with the material at hand. Byrne v. Werner (Mich.)

900

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Fixtures; are things placed on land with the intention of annexing them fixtures, where they are never actually attached?—(I.) Introduction; (II.) actual annexation; (III.) constructive annexation; (IV.) mere intention to annex: (a) machinery or parts thereof; (b) materials for use, repair, or reconstruction of railroads; (c) building materials; (d) fencing materials; (e) fertilizers; (V.) conclusion.

892

What constitute; things placed on property with intention of annexing them, but which are not actually attached; effect of mortgage foreclosure. 893

Things placed on property with intent to affix, but never attached, as; controlling effect of intent of parties; effect of foreclosure of mortgage on land. 900

FORECLOSURE.

Estoppel to Plead Limitations as Defense to, see ESTOPPEL, 7.

FORFEITURE.

Estoppel of Tenant to Deny, see ESTOPPEL, 5.

Of Lease, see LANDLORD AND TENANT, 2.

On Breach of Condition Subsequent, see REAL PROPERTY, 3-8.

FORGERY.

Of Draft, see BANKS, 3-9.

FRAUD.

Damages for Fraudulent Representations, see DAMAGES, 10.

Misrepresentation of the price paid for property by the vendor or others does not constitute actionable deceit, in the absence of fiduciary relations between the parties, or other facts or circumstances giving rise to an express or implied agreement that the price paid should determine the price in the contract. Beare v. Wright (N. D.) 409

FREEDOM OF SPEECH.

As Limitation on Exercise of Right to Privacy, see PRIVACY, 2.

The publication of one's picture, without his consent, as part of an advertisement, is in no sense an exercise of the liberty of speech or of the press, within the meaning of those terms as used in the Constitution. Pavesich v. New England L. Ins. Co. (Ga.) 101

GAMING.

Effect of Permitting Gambling Transactions on Board of Trade's Right to Protection of Price Quotations, see INJUNCTION, 4.

Property Right in Price Quotations by Board of Trade Engaging in Gambling Transactions, see PROPERTY.

Playing pool under an agreement among the players that the one losing the game shall pay for the use of the table is betting at a pool table, within the meaning of Ga. Pen. Code 1895, § 401, providing that "if any person shall . . . bet . . . at any . . . pool table, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor;" and the fact that the state imposes a specific tax on the keeper of a pool table does not affect the question Hopkins v. State (Ga.) 117
49 L. R. A.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Gaming; what constitutes: playing for price of game as. 117

GIFT.

By Wife to Husband of Part of Profits from Partnership between Latter and Third Person, see PARTNERSHIP, 4.

GRAND JURY.

Right to Prosecute without Indictment by, see CRIMINAL LAW, 4. 5.

GROSS NEGLIGENCE.

What Constitutes, see NEGLIGENCE, 1, 2.

GUARDIAN AND WARD.

Law Governing Marriage of Ward. see CONFLICT OF LAWS, 3, 4.

Guardian's Right to Separate Ward from Wife, see GUARDIAN AND WARD.

One appointed guardian of another because of his lack of discretion to manage his estate has no authority over the person of his ward, which will entitle him to separate him from his wife. Ex parte Chace (R. I.) 493

GUESTS.

See INNKEEPERS.

HABEAS CORPUS.

The wife of one illegally restrained of his liberty may maintain a petition for a writ of habeas corpus to obtain his release. Ex parte Chace (R. I.) 493

HIGHWAYS.

Appropriation to Aid Counties in Construction of, see APPROPRIATIONS.

Punitive Damages for Cutting Trees in. see DAMAGES, 14.

Right to Open, over Property, as Encumbrance. see VENDOR AND PURCHASER, 4.

Title, use, and obstruction.

1. Authority given to a municipal corporation to permit the erection of telegraph and electric-light wires and poles in the streets does not include power to violate private rights. Brown v. Asheville Electric Co. (N. C.) 631

2. Municipal authority to place poles for the support of electric-light wires upon the sidewalk of a certain street does not relieve the one so doing from liability to the owner of the fee for the value of trees removed to make room for the poles. Id.

3. No power to permit the use of its streets for the purposes of a street fair is given a city by a charter giving the city council power when, in its opinion, a street or any part thereof has ceased to be of public utility, to declare it vacant and abandoned as a street, and donate the same to any use which, in its opinion, will be of advantage to the commercial interests of the city. Augusta v. Reynolds (Ga.) 564

4. A fair occupying 75 or 80 feet in width and 4 blocks in length of an important business street in a city, and consisting of numerous tents inclosing shows and exhibitions, in front of which are stationed men blowing horns and talking through megaphones to attract attention, together with various other stands, booths, Ferris wheels, merry-go-rounds, and other devices for amusement of the public and profit to the owners; which fair a company of the state militia is permitted to station on the street for a week,—is a public nuisance. Id.

Liability for defects and obstructions in.

Municipal Liability for Injury by Fall of Bill Board Placed Near Edge of Street, see MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 6, 7.

5. Placing a conductor pipe so as to lead water from the roof of a building adjoining a sidewalk and empty it upon the walk in the manner customary in the community is not a nuisance per se, where it does not ordinarily interfere with travel; and the property owner cannot be held liable to one who is injured by ice formed upon the walk many years after the construction of the pipe, as the result of a severe and unusual storm. New Castle v. Kurtz (Pa.) 488

6. Owners of property in possession of tenants are not bound to keep watch to see that ice dangerous to travel does not form on the walks in front of it which are properly constructed and in proper repair, where their negligent construction of their buildings does not contribute to its formation; and therefore they cannot be held liable for injuries to a traveler by falling upon ice of the existence of which they have no notice. Id.

7. A horse block or stepping stone of ordinary size, placed on the edge of the sidewalk to facilitate access to and egress from carriages in the street, is not an obstruction to the walk, so as to render the municipality liable for injuries caused by a traveler falling over it. Wolff v. District of Columbia (D. C. App.) 83

8. A municipal corporation is not liable for injuries caused to a traveler by falling over a horse block on the sidewalk because sufficient light is not maintained near it to render it visible to passers-by. Id.

9. A municipal corporation which has imposed the duty upon property owners of keeping the sidewalks in front of their property free from ice under penalty, and has provided that, in case of their neglect to remove the ice, it will be removed by the city at their expense, assumes the duty of keeping the walks clear; and, in case it is held liable for injury to one falling upon the walk, it cannot recover over against the property owner on the theory that he was primarily liable for the injury. New Castle v. Kurtz (Pa.) 488

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Highways; carriage block on sidewalk as unlawful obstruction; duty of municipality to cause removal of; liability for injury thereby; duty of traveler on sidewalk. 84

Right to use automobiles on. 346

Duty of abutting property owner to keep sidewalk in repair; right of municipality paying judgment for injuries sustained through defective walk to recover over against property owner; conductor pipe leading water from roof of building upon sidewalk as nuisance; liability of owner of property in possession of tenants for condition of walk; liability of city for failure to enforce; liability of city for defect not occasioned by its own act. in absence of notice; ordinance imposing on property owners duty of keeping sidewalks free from ice; provision that, in case of failure to do so, it will be removed at owner's expense; effect of provision on city's liability for injury. 489

Partial obstruction of; what obstructions and encroachments amount to nuisance, authority of city over its streets; use of, for street fair; injunction to prevent such use. 565

Injury to traveler on, by fall of billboard on abutting property; liability of city for. 618

Cutting or removal of trees in; under authority of city; to make room for electric poles and wires; electric poles as additional servitude. 632

HOMESTEAD.

Estoppel of Wife to Set Up Invalidity of Contract for Sale of, see ESTOPPEL, 2.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Homestead; statutes as to conveyance and abandonment of, regarded as rules of evidence merely; alienation by husband alone. 585

Effect of conveyance of, by husband to wife. 379

HOMICIDE.

Misleading Instruction as to, see TRIAL, 19.

1. A police officer who kills a person whom he is attempting to arrest is guilty of a criminal offense if he uses more force than is reasonably necessary to effect his purpose. State v. Coleman (Mo.) 381

2. Mere failure of a person to submit to arrest does not give the officer the right to take his life, although the officer has good reason to believe that he has authority to make the arrest; and, if the officer acts in malice and with premeditation because the one he is attempting to arrest does not remove his hand from his pocket upon command, the officer will be guilty of murder in the second degree. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Homicide; necessity of instruction as to law on circumstantial evidence on prosecution for. 193, 205

HORSE BLOCK.

Liability for Injury by Falling over, see HIGHWAYS, 7, 8.

HOTELS.

See INNKEEPERS.

HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Law Governing Marriage, see CONFLICT OF LAWS, 3, 4.

Law Governing Married Woman's Liability as Surety, see CONFLICT OF LAWS, 5, 6.

Marriage as Valuable Consideration for Contract, see CONTRACTS, 2.

Effect of Conveyance by Husband to Wife, see CURTESY.

Power of Courts over Land in Other State, in Divorce Proceeding, see COURTS, 3.

Estoppel of Married Woman, see ESTOPPEL, 2.

Wife's Right to Petition for Husband's Release, see HABEAS CORPUS.

Condonation of Adultery as Justification for Filing Bill to Review Divorce Decree, see REVIEW, 3.

Divorce as Revocation or Lapse of Legacy to Wife, see WILLS, 3, 4.

Sufficiency of Service on Defendant in Divorce Suit, see WRIT AND PROCESS.

Liability for wife's support.

1. The common-law liability of a husband to support his wife cannot be extended by implication from the written law as to the support of other persons; it can only be extended by a statute plainly so intended. Richardson v. Stuesser (Wis.) 820
69 L. R. A.

2. The common-law liability of a husband to support his wife does not extend to supporting her outside the matrimonial home reasonably chosen by him, unless he refuses to do so there, or she resides away therefrom by his consent. Id.

3. A husband is not liable for the support of his wife at an asylum for the insane, to which she has been removed by due process of law, in the absence of a statute expressly imposing such liability. Id.

4. There is no refusal of a husband to support his wife at the matrimonial home, or consent by him to her absence therefrom, within the common-law rule rendering him liable for her support outside of such home, where the wife, as a charity to her and protection to others, is by due process of law taken from the matrimonial home and confined in an asylum for the insane, and the husband submits, or even takes the initiatory proceedings to secure for her the benefit of the public charity. Id.

Wife's separate estate.

5. A conveyance of land from husband to wife in the usual form, for a valuable consideration, though without words disclosing an intent to do so, vests in her a separate estate which she may transfer without his joinder or consent. Barnum v. Le Master (Tenn.) 353

Partnership between.

See also PARTNERSHIP, 3-5.

6. Husband and wife may lawfully transact business as copartners, and therefore there may be a subpartnership between a husband and wife in reference to the husband's share of the profits of a business in which the husband is a partner. Morrison v. Dickey (Ga.) 87

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Husband and wife; right of wife to rents of land settled on her as separate estate; effect of conveyance by husband to wife; rule as to gifts of personalty not applicable to gifts of real estate; husband's right in wife's real estate; validity of deed of married woman alone. 353

Effect of conveyance by husband to wife:—(I.) At common law: (a) transfers of real estate; (b) gifts of personalty; (II.) in equity: (a) conveyances upheld; (b) conditions upon which conveyances are upheld; (c) necessity of trustees; (d) effect of conveyance; (III.) effect of statutes: (a) in general; (b) exception of conveyances from husband; (c) exemption from husband's debts; (d) permitting revocation; (IV.) conveyance by third person at instance of husband; (V.) consideration; (VI.) does conveyance create separate estate; (VII.)

remaining interest of husband: (a) in general; (b) curtesy; (VIII.) rights against husband's heirs; (IX.) homestead and community; (X.) effect of divorce; (XI.) form and provisions of conveyance. 353

Curtesy right of husband in land which he has conveyed to his wife's sole and separate use; curtesy interest in land devised to wife during joint and several lives of herself and husband; curtesy interest where estate of wife was a conditional or determinable fee; where condition has happened. 370

Effect of condonation on right to divorce; decree void for lack of jurisdiction. 398

Necessity of strict compliance with statute as to alienation of wife's real estate; specific performance of contract by husband and wife where possession has been delivered; effect of taking deed in wife's name to make property her separate estate; property acquired during marriage as community property; burden of proving that it is wife's separate property. 568

Estoppel of married woman; how wife may be divested of her estate; release of wife from common-law disability. 585

Nature of decree for divorce as proceeding in rem or in personam. 673

Husband not relative of wife; common-law liability of husband for support of wife; liability for support while confined in insane asylum. 830

Effect of divorce to revoke gift by will. 940

Impeachability of widow as life tenant for waste; interest in minerals or oil under land; widow's estate is equal to children's in all of its uses. 986

ICE.

On Sidewalk, see HIGHWAYS, 5, 6, 9.

IDENTITY.

Of Religious Corporation, see RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES, 1.

IMPAIRMENT OF OBLIGATION.

See EMINENT DOMAIN, 10.

IMPLIED WARRANTY.

On Sale of Machine, see SALE.

IMPRISONMENT.

For Giving Liquor to Minor, see CRIMINAL LAW, 6.

IMPROVEMENTS.

A recovery for improvements to the extent that they may have permanently enhanced the rental or usable value of the life estate may be allowed to the vendee, with his purchase money, interest thereon, and 69 L. R. A.

taxes paid, on breach of a covenant of seisin made by an outstanding contingent remainder, when his recovery in equity is conditioned on his restoration of possession to the vendor, and his accounting for his use of the premises. Brannon v. Curtis (Tenn.) 760.

IMPUTED NEGLIGENCE.

See NEGLIGENCE, 8, 9.

INCOMPETENT PERSONS.

Husband's Liability for Wife's Support at Asylum, see HUSBAND AND WIFE, 3, 4.

See also HUSBAND AND WIFE, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Liability for support.

1. An action to enforce an order of a county judge requiring a person to pay a certain sum per week for the support of another in the county asylum for the insane must be commenced in the name of the county, in some court having jurisdiction of such civil actions. The county court does not possess such jurisdiction in the absence of special authorization. Richardson v. Stuesser (Wis.) 829

2. An order of a county judge requiring a person to pay a certain sum for the support of an insane person in the county asylum for the insane may be enforced by contempt proceedings or by an action in the name of the county, under Wis. Rev. Stat. 1898, § 1504, as to enforcing private liability for the support of a poor person, which by § 604e is made applicable to the support of insane persons. Id.

3. To establish the liability of anyone for the support of a person at the county asylum for the insane, who refuses to perform his duty in that regard, the trustees of the asylum should proceed in harmony with Wis. Rev. Stat. 1898, § 1502, as to support of poor persons, by petition to the county judge; and the amount that must be paid and the time of payment must be determined in harmony with § 1504, as to the poor, under § 604e, negating the liability of the state to any county for the support of any insane person at its county asylum for the insane who is not a public charge, and making §§ 1500-1505, as to the support of the poor, applicable to the support of insane persons. Id.

4. The incorporation into Wis. Rev. Stat. § 604e, negating any liability of the state to any county for the support in its county asylum for the insane of any person who is not a public charge, of §§ 1500-1505, which provide that the father, mother, or children of any poor person unable to sup-

- port himself shall be liable for his support, if of sufficient ability, requires that the proceedings to enforce the private liability for the support of a person committed to the county insane asylum must be under such sections, so far as they are applicable thereto. Id.

INDEMNITY.

From Abutting Owner to City Held Liable for Injury on Highway, see HIGHWAYS, 9.

Conclusiveness of Judgment against Debtor on One Contracting to Indemnify, see JUDGMENT, 3.

INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION.

Raising Question of Invalidity on Appeal, see APPEAL AND ERROR, 9.

Necessity of, see CRIMINAL LAW, 4, 5.
Judicial Notice of Authority of Official Signing, see EVIDENCE, 2, 3.

Signing of.

1. Whenever required by the governor to appear and prosecute criminal proceedings in any county, the attorney general becomes prosecuting attorney of that county in those proceedings, and as such may sign indictments presented by the grand jury. State v. Bowles (Kan.) 176

2. The regularity of the appointment of the deputy district attorney who signed an information cannot be challenged by merely alleging that the information was not found, indorsed, or presented as required by law. State v. Guglielmo (Or.) 466

3. In the absence of evidence to the contrary, a deputy district attorney who signs the name of the district attorney to the information will be presumed to have possessed plenary power in the premises, and to have been authorized to examine witnesses to enable him intelligently to charge persons with the commission of crimes, to prepare informations, sign the name of the district attorney thereto, and file them in court. Id.

4. A district attorney who insists that one accused of crime shall plead to the information thereby ratifies the subscription of his name to the information by his deputy. Id.

Oath to.

5. The omission of the recital that an information for murder is upon the oath of the prosecuting attorney is fatal to its validity. State v. Coleman (Mo.) 381

6. The official oath of the officer filing an information charging one with crime is sufficient to comply with a constitutional provision that no warrant shall issue but upon probable cause supported by oath, without the necessity of verifying each particular information filed. State v. Guglielmo (Or.) 466

7. The fact that the record shows that a warrant was ordered to be issued upon an information filed by the deputy district attorney in the absence of his chief does not show that it was in fact issued without the support of the oath required by the Constitution, where it further appears that the district attorney was present in court when accused first appeared, and ratified the information, so that his oath of office supported the warrant if it was not actually issued until after he had appeared and assumed control of the proceedings. Id.

Leave of court for filing of.

8. Leave of court is not necessary to the filing of an information by the district attorney charging the commission of crime. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Indictment; authority of attorney general to sign; necessity that indictment be signed by prosecuting attorney; effect of failure of foreman to indorse and sign. 176

Sufficiency of information where words, "on his oath aforesaid," are omitted. 382

Necessity that indictment be signed by district attorney; sufficiency of his signature when made by his deputy; necessity that information be verified by affidavit. 467

INFANTS.

Punishment for Giving Liquor to, see CRIMINAL LAW, 6.

Written Consent for Sale of Liquor to, see INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

INFORMATION.

Right to Prosecute by, see CRIMINAL LAW, 4, 5.

See also INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION.

INJUNCTION.

Against Subsequent Suit in Different Court, see COURTS, 9.

Water rights.

1. The owner of property bordering on a mill pond cannot enjoin the owner of the dam and water privilege from drawing the water down to its natural level when it becomes necessary for the utilization of the power, although a portion of the bottom of the pond is thereby uncovered and exposed to the sun, rendering it unhealthful and injurious to the abutting owner. Witt v. Bissell (Conn.) 933

Against illegal or tortious acts.

2. A court of equity will interpose by injunction to prevent the several members of an illegal combination from enforcing an illegal agreement to the hurt and injury of one engaged in competitive business. Employing Printers' Club v. Dr. Blosser Co. (Ga.) 90

3. A court of equity has jurisdiction, at the instance of the solicitor general, to restrain by injunction the erection of a public nuisance. Augusta v. Reynolds (Ga.) 564

4. The fact that a board of trade permits gambling transactions within its exchange hall does not deprive it of the right to resort to equity to prevent wrongful dissemination of the quotations of prices at which sales are made, gathered and sent out by it. Board of Trade v. L. A. Kinsey Co. (C. C. App. 7th C.) 59

As to legal proceedings.

See also LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, 2.

5. An injunction should issue to stay an action at law upon a promissory note for the purchase price of land until an equitable defense of reduction for partial failure of consideration is allowed, whenever the remedy at law is less certain, prompt, and efficient to attain the ends of justice. Williams v. Neely (C. C. App. 8th C.) 232

6. Any fact which renders it against conscience to enter or execute a judgment at law, and which is not available to the defendant at law, confers jurisdiction upon a court of equity to enjoin the proposed entry or execution. Id.

7. A judgment of a justice of the peace, rendered within less than the time prescribed by statute after service of summons, is not so far void that its execution can be enjoined; but the defendant must take the proper steps to obtain a review on appeal. Kerr v. Murphy (S. D.) 499

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Injunction; to protect property right in stock quotations; where gaming transactions are permitted in exchange hall. 63

To restrain action at law to enforce claim to which an equitable defense exists. 235

To restrain execution upon void or voidable judgment. 499

To enjoin obstruction of public street; to abate private nuisance; to prevent multiplicity of suits and irreparable mischief. 565

Affecting real property in other state; jurisdiction of equity to issue. 689
69 L. R. A. 66

Right of party specially injured by act to enjoin. 934

INNKEEPERS.

1. Innkeepers are not insurers of the safety of the persons of their guests; the limit of their liability is for the exercise of reasonable care for the safety, comfort, and entertainment of their visitors. Clancy v. Barker (C. C. App. 8th C.) 653

2. In receiving a guest into his hotel, a hotel keeper impliedly undertakes that such guest shall be treated with due consideration for his comfort and safety. Clancy v. Barker (Neb.) 642

3. A trespass committed upon a guest in a hotel by a servant of the proprietor, whether actively engaged in the discharge of his duties at the time, or not, is a breach of the implied undertaking that the guest shall be treated with due consideration for his comfort and safety, for which the proprietor is liable in damages. Id.

4. It is the duty of a hotel keeper to protect his guests, while in his hotel, against the assaults of employees who assist in the conduct of the hotel and in the care and accommodation of the guests. If damages result from such assault, the hotel keeper is liable therefor. Id.

5. Innkeepers do not contract to insure the safety of their guests against injuries which are inflicted upon them by the negligent or wilful acts of their servants beyond the scope and course of their employment; and for such acts they are not liable in damages when they have exercised reasonable care to prevent them. Clancy v. Barker (C. C. App. 8th C.) 653

6. A hotel keeper is not liable for an injury inflicted by a servant on a six-year-old boy while a guest at the hotel, where the boy wandered out of the room assigned to him, and into a room in which a bell boy was playing a harmonica for his own amusement, and the latter, either accidentally or wilfully, shot the former with a pistol; since the bell boy was not acting within the scope, or apparent scope, of his employment at the time of the shooting. Id.

7. It is not within the scope of the authority of a hired manager of a hotel to bind his employer by admissions concerning a trespass committed by him upon a guest after it has been committed. Clancy v. Barker (Neb.) 642

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Innkeepers; liability for injury to guest by servant. 42

INSANE PERSONS.

See INCOMPETENT PERSONS.

INSOLVENCY.

Of Corporation, see CORPORATIONS, 6.

INSPECTION.

Master's Duty as to, see MASTER AND SERVANT, 9.

INSPECTOR.

Right of, to Protection from Negligence, see NEGLIGENCE, 4.

INSTRUCTION.

See APPEAL AND ERROR, 23-26; TRIAL, 11-19.

INSURANCE.

Failure to Credit Overdue Premium Note on Policy, see APPEAL AND ERROR, 19.

Beneficiary's Right to Treat Original Contract as Rescinded, see BENEVOLENT SOCIETIES.

Exemption of Proceeds of Insurance Policy, see LEVY AND SEIZURE, 1, 2.

Powers of agents.

1. Where a nonresident fire insurance company appoints a local agent in Louisiana, and supplies him with blank policies signed by the president and secretary of the company, to be filled up, countersigned, and issued as occasion may require, such agent will be considered as having the powers of a general agent as to policies issued by him under such circumstances. Richard v. Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. (La.) 278

2. An agent authorized to issue policies binds the company by all waivers, representations, or other acts within the scope or requirements of his business, unless the insured has notice of the limitation of his power. Id.

3. An insurance agent having power to issue and renew policies, to make waivers, and grant permits or privileges, has apparent power to waive, prior to a loss, a breach of the iron-safe clause by him attached to the policy, resulting from the failure of the insured, through illness, to make a complete inventory of stock within thirty days from the date of the issuing of the policy. Id.

Who may be beneficiaries.

4. A niece of a former wife of a man is not a relative of his child by a subsequent one, within the meaning of a statute permitting certificates of mutual benefit societies to be taken in favor of relatives. Smith v. Supreme Tent K. of M. (Iowa) 174

5. Naming a person as beneficiary in a 69 L. R. A.

mutual benefit certificate does not make her a legatee, within the meaning of a statute permitting such certificates to be issued in favor of legatees. Id.

Estoppel or waiver.See also supra, 2, 3.

6. Retaining and attempting to collect an overdue premium note on an insurance policy will waive a provision in the policy that nonpayment of the note at maturity will terminate the contract. Union C. L. Ins. Co. v. Spinks (Ky.) 264

Arbitration of loss.

7. An open mortgage clause attached to a policy of fire insurance, which merely provides that loss, if any, shall be paid to a mortgagee as his interest may appear, does not create any contract relations between the mortgagee and insurer, or give the mortgagee a right to participate in arbitration proceedings to fix the amount of loss; and, therefore, he will be bound by the award, although he was given no opportunity to be heard. Collinsville Sav. Soc. v. Boston Ins. Co. (Conn.) 924

Limitations as to time for suit.

8. A provision of a life insurance policy that suit shall be brought on it within a period less than that fixed by the statute of limitations is void as against public policy. Union C. L. Ins. Co. v. Spinks (Ky.) 264

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Insurance; statute exempting proceeds of policy from execution; effect to exempt from claims against beneficiary. 67

Provision that nonpayment of premium note at maturity shall terminate contract: waiver of, by attempting to collect overdue note; estoppel to set up termination of contract by retention of overdue premium note; provision that action shall be brought within one year. 264

Knowledge of agent authorized to issue and deliver policies and collect premiums, imputed to company; acceptance by agent of premium with knowledge of breach of condition; as waiver of breach; effect of limitation of general agent's authority; who is a general agent; presumption of agent's authority to alter or modify policy orally; duty of insured to keep books of account; burden of proof to establish waiver. 279

Attachment of mortgage clause to; binding effect on mortgagee of arbitration proceedings to which he was not a party. 925

INTENT.

Of Commission Merchant in Omitting Requirement of Statute, see FACTORS, 2.

INTERNAL IMPROVEMENT.

Construction of Public Roads as, see APPROPRIATIONS.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Internal improvement; what constitutes work of, within meaning of constitutional prohibition against state engaging in. 914

INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

Punishment for Giving Liquor to Minor, see CRIMINAL LAW, 6.

A general consent in writing, by a mother, that liquor may be furnished by the person to whom the writing is addressed, to her minor child, whenever he may desire to do so, will not bar a prosecution of such person for furnishing liquor to minors without the parent's consent, since such consent would frustrate the purpose of the statute. Pressly v. State (Tenn.) 291

INTOXICATION.

Effect of, on Degree of Care Required, see NEGLIGENCE, 7.

IRON-SAFE CLAUSE.

See INSURANCE, 3.

JUDGMENT.

Estoppel by; Burden of Proof as to, see EVIDENCE, 4, 5.

Evidence in Opposition to Plea of Estoppel by, see EVIDENCE, 22.

Injunction against Entry or Execution of, see INJUNCTION, 6, 7.

Error in Rendering Judgment on Inconsistent Findings, see TRIAL, 18.

Sufficiency of Service to Authorize Personal Judgment in Divorce Suit, see WRIT AND PROCESS.

1. A decree of distribution by the probate court holding that a testator devised certain land to his widow for life, and the remainder thereof and all his other real estate to his children, share and share alike, and ordering that the estate be assigned to the devisees according to the terms of the last will and testament of the deceased, must be construed as assigning the entire estate in the property of the deceased to the persons therein named, to wit, a life estate to the widow and a vested remainder to the children, share and share alike. Ladd v. Weiskopf (Minn.) 785

Who bound by.

2. A decree of a probate court having jurisdiction, assigning the residue of the estate of a deceased person, is conclusive upon all persons interested in the estate, whether then in being or not. It is in the 69 L. R. A.

nature of a judgment in rem, which binds all the world. Id.

3. A judgment against a debtor is not binding on one who has contracted to save him harmless from the debt, unless he has been notified to come in and defend. Busell Trimmer Co. v. Coburn (Mass.) 821

4. A decree denying the right of a corporation to have bonds secured by mortgage on its property surrendered by a pledgee who was seeking to foreclose its lien on the bonds against the pledgee, on the ground that the bonds had been wrongfully put upon the market and had never been rightfully negotiated, is no bar to a subsequent suit against the corporation to foreclose the mortgage by which they are secured, since the latter question could not have been determined in the former action. Ruckman v. Union Ry. (Or.) 480

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Judgment; conclusiveness in subsequent action or suit upon same cause; essential qualities of res judicata. 481

Effect of defective service on validity of: injunction to restrain enforcement. 499

Conclusiveness of decree of distribution by probate court on unborn devisees; on heirs or devisees not personally served or present; right of court to revise decree: conclusiveness of judgment of probate court; inadvertent mistake by probate judge in naming a conclusion of fact what is really a conclusion of law; impairment of legal effect of judgment by. 785

As presumptive evidence of liability of judgment debtor. 821

JUDICIAL NOTICE.

See EVIDENCE, 1-3.

JUDICIAL SALE.

A court order annulling a judicial sale, and directing a resale of the property, without accepting the bid, or directing any proceedings against the bidder, or any confirmation of the sale, relieves him from all liability upon his bid. Cowper v. Weaver (Ky.) 33

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Judicial sale; relief of purchaser upon annulling judicial or execution sale:—(I.) Release from bid; (II.) release from bid and return of deposit; (III.) relief by reimbursement or subrogation: (a) generally; (b) reimbursement; (c) subrogation: (1) generally; (2) out of proceeds of resale; (d) probate, guardians' and administrators' sales: (1) guardians' sales;

(2) administrators' sales; (e) statutory relief; (f) proceeding against nonresidents; (g) fraudulent sales; (IV.) relief by action against the debtor; (V.) relief by action against the creditor; (VI.) relief by action against the sheriff; (VII.) summary. 33

JURY.

Excuse of Competent Juror, see APPEAL AND ERROR, 17.

JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

Injunction against Execution of Judgment of, see INJUNCTION, 7.

LACHES.

See LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, 1, 2.

LAKE.

Taking Right to Fish in, under Power of Eminent Domain, see EMINENT DOMAIN, 2.

LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Liability of Trustee in Bankruptcy for Rent, see BANKRUPTCY, 2-4, 6.

Estoppel to Claim Invalidity of Landlord's Entry, see ESTOPPEL, 5.

Landlord's Duty as to Keeping Sidewalk Free from Ice, see HIGHWAYS, 6.

Liability of Occupants of Lower Floors for Injury Due to Blocking of Stairway, see NEGLIGENCE, 5.

1. The retaking of the premises by a lessor releases the lessee from payment of all subsequent accruing rents, unless the contract expressly provides otherwise. Watson v. Merrill (C. C. App. 8th C.) 719

2. A tenant cannot be relieved from forfeiture of his term because of breach of his covenant to pay taxes after the premises have been sold because of his default, since he can no longer perform his covenant, or make compensation for the breach, so as to entitle himself to equitable relief. Gordon v. Richardson (Mass.) 867

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Landlord and tenant; effect of adjudication in bankruptcy of tenant to terminate lease. 720

Condition giving right of re-entry for breach of covenant; enforcement of condition where compensation in money can be made; breach of covenant to pay taxes; waiver by landlord of breach of condition; effect of landlord's releasing premises before re-entry for condition broken. 867

LANDSLIDE.

Assumption of Risk of Danger from, see MASTER AND SERVANT, 13.

60 L. R. A.

LAPSE.

Of Legacy, see WILLS, 4.

LARCENY.NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Larceny; necessity of instruction as to law on circumstantial evidence on prosecution for. 195, 206

LAST CLEAR CHANCE.

See NEGLIGENCE, 10, 11; STREET RAILWAYS, 9.

LEASE.

See LANDLORD AND TENANT.

LEAVE OF COURT.

To Filing of Information, see INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION, 8.

To File Bill of Review, see REVIEW, 4.

LEGATEE.

Who is, see INSURANCE, 5.

LEGISLATURE.

Expulsion of Member as Bill of Attainder, see ATTAINDER.

Power to Create and Destroy Counties, see COUNTIES.

Relation of Judicial Department to, see COURTS, 4, 5.

1. A member of the legislature has, in the absence of constitutional provision, no right to a trial and opportunity to be heard upon charges made, before being expelled therefrom. French v. Senate (Cal.) 556

2. A member of the state legislature is not protected by the Federal Constitution from the exercise by that body of its constitutional right to remove him therefrom. Id.

3. The state legislature has power to adopt any procedure for the expulsion of members, and to change it at pleasure. Id.

4. The constitutional power of the state legislature to expel a member is not restricted by the further provision that a member who accepts a bribe is guilty of felony, upon conviction of which he shall be forever disqualified from holding any of office or public trust; and therefore conviction is not a prerequisite to his expulsion from the legislative body. Id.

5. Allegations in a petition by persons expelled from a state legislature to secure reinstatement, that they were expelled without hearing or opportunity for defense, will not be taken as true, even against a demurrer, where the record of the proceedings, of which the court takes judicial notice, shows that charges were preferred referred to a committee which reported an investigation, and that the charges were true and that the report was taken up and considered by the body, at which time petitioners had an opportunity to be heard in their own behalf. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Legislature; powers and privileges of; right to expel member; exercise of power beyond control of judiciary. 557

LEVY AND SEIZURE.

What property exempt.

1. The deposit by the beneficiary of the proceeds of a life-insurance policy, which are exempt from execution for her debts, in a bank, does not destroy the exemption. Holmes v. Marshall (Cal.) 67

2. The exemption from execution of the proceeds of insurance policies is not limited to claims against the insured, but extends to those against the beneficiary, under a statute providing that all moneys, benefits, privileges, or immunities accruing, or in any manner growing out of, life insurance, are exempt from execution; and the same rule applies where the policy is payable to the estate of the assured, and, being exempt from his debts, the proceeds are distributed to his widow under the statute as his next of kin. Id.

Setting aside levy.

3. The court may set aside the levy of an attachment upon exempt property. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Levy and seizure; of growing crops. 827

LIBEL AND SLANDER.

1. Words which are harmless in themselves may be libelous in the light of extrinsic facts. Pavesich v. New England L. Ins. Co. (Ga.) 101

2. A publication of an advertisement of an insurance company, containing a person's picture and a statement that the person has policies of insurance with the company and is pleased with his investment, when in fact he has no such policies, is libelous as having a tendency to create the impression among those who know the facts that the person whose picture is reproduced has told a wilful falsehood, either gratuitously or for a consideration. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Libel and slander; in charging one with doing what the law authorizes to be done; definition of libel; innuendo to change natural meaning of words. 102
69 L. R. A.

LIBERTY.

See FREEDOM OF SPEECH.

LIBERTY OF SPEECH OR PRESS.

As Limitation on Exercise of Right to Privacy, see PRIVACY, 2.

LICENSE.

Of Attorney; Revocation, see ATTORNEYS, 2.

Authority of Municipality as to, see MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 1.

Necessity of Ophthalmologist Procuring, see PHYSICIANS.

1. A license is a personal privilege to do certain acts upon the lands of another, but creates no estate therein, is revocable at will, and may rest in parol; while an easement is an estate in real property, and its grant falls within the statute of frauds. Howes v. Barmon (Id.) 568

2. Unless the evidence be clearly to the contrary, a court will presume that a parol agreement to impress real property with a servitude was made with a knowledge of the provisions of the statute of frauds, and was therefore intended as a license only, and not as an easement. Id.

3. A license, revocable by the licensor, and not an easement, is created by oral permission to use a stairway on the outside of a building to reach the second story of an adjoining building, in consideration that those to whom such permission is given will allow the owner of the stairway to erect a porch at the back end of his building, on a strip of vacant land owned by the other parties. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

License; upon private property; definition of; revocation. 568

LIENS.

Remedy for Enforcing, see ACTION OR SUIT, 1.

LIFE TENANTS.

1. The life estates created by statute, giving a surviving husband or wife one-third interest for life in the real estate of the other, are subject to the incidents of common-law life estates, although they are not the same as the common-law estates; and the life tenant is therefore impeachable for waste. Swayne v. Lone Acre Oil Co. (Tex.) 986

2. One entitled to an undivided life estate under a statute giving a surviving husband or wife a one-third interest in the real estate of the other cannot demand absolutely any part of the production of oil wells subsequently opened upon the property by the remainder-men, but is entitled only to the income upon one third of the oil produced. Id.

Right to dividends.

3. The rule that cash dividends on corporate stock go to life tenants, and stock dividends to the remainder-men, will not yield whenever an investigation might appear to indicate its failure in a given case to accomplish what might be conceived to be exact justice, upon the basis of some theoretical view of the ultimate rights of persons asserting conflicting successive stock interests. Smith v. Dana (Conn.) 76

4. Withdrawal from certain incidental branches of business which a corporation has been carrying on does not make the distribution of the money invested in them as dividends a partial liquidation which will carry the dividends to the remainder-men as against life tenants, where the capital stock is not impaired, and its value remains above par, and practically the same after the dividends as before. Id.

5. Cash dividends upon corporate stock belong to the life tenants notwithstanding they were derived from the sale of permanent property in which profits had been invested. Id.

6. Investment of the profits of a corporation in permanent works does not capitalize them, so that upon the sale of the works the directors cannot distribute them as a cash dividend, which will belong to life tenants, and not to remainder-men, of the stock. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Life tenants; respective rights of life tenants and remainder-men in stock dividends. 76

Interest of life tenant in mines under land; where life tenant is widow whose estate is created by statute; right to oil produced from wells drilled by remainder-men; to what life estates doctrine of waste applies; what constitutes waste. 980

LIGHT.

Municipal Liability for Falling over Horse Block from Lack of, see HIGHWAYS, 8.

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

Estoppel to Plead, see ESTOPPEL, 7.

Invalidity of Short Limitation for Suit on Policy, see INSURANCE, 8.

Time for Filing Bill of Review, see REVIEW, 2.

1. Under ordinary circumstances a suit in equity will not be stayed for laches before L. R. A.

fore, and will be stayed after, the time fixed by the analogous statute of limitations at law; but, if unusual conditions make it inequitable to allow the prosecution of a suit after a briefer, or to forbid its maintenance after a longer, period than that fixed by the statute, the chancellor will not be bound by the statute, but will determine the extraordinary case in accordance with the equities which condition it. Williams v. Neely (C. C. App. 8th C.) 232

Equitable remedies; laches.

2. It is not culpable laches for one who has an equitable defense or reduction to a promissory note which has been and is the subject of pending litigation in another court, and which, if available at law, would survive as long as the cause of action upon the note existed, to wait until an affirmative action at law upon the subject of the defense is barred, and until the equitable defense is rejected in an action at law upon the note, before invoking the aid of a court of equity to enjoin the prosecution of the latter action until his equitable defense is allowed. Id.

Effect of bar of other claim or remedy.

3. The defense of reduction or recoupment, which arises out of the same transaction as a promissory note or claim, survives as long as a cause of action upon the promissory note or claim exists, although an affirmative action upon the subject of the defense may be barred by the statute of limitations. Id.

4. A note given for interest on another note which is secured by mortgage is itself so secured, and the mortgage may be foreclosed to satisfy it, although the prior note is barred by the statute of limitations. Kleis v. McGrath (Iowa) 260

When statute runs.

5. Under a stipulation in a mortgage securing a series of notes due at intervals of one year, that nonpayment of any one of them, together with nonpayment of taxes due on the mortgaged premises, shall mature the entire debt, failure to pay the first note at its maturity and taxes due at that time, which default continues until all the notes are due, starts the running of the statute of limitations in favor of the whole debt. Snyder v. Miller (Kan.) 250

Removal of bar.

6. Giving a note for interest upon a larger note already barred by the statute of limitations, which does not mention or in any way refer to the earlier note, does not revive it under a statute providing that causes of action founded on contract are revived by an admission in writing, signed by the party to be charged, that the debt is unpaid, or by a like new promise to pay the same. Kleis v. McGrath (Iowa) 260

7. Payment of the taxes due on mortgaged premises by one who purchased the property subject to the mortgage, but did not assume its payment, does not suspend the running of limitations against the right to foreclose the mortgage, which had been started by failure of the mortgagor to pay at maturity the first of a series of notes secured by the mortgage and taxes due at that time, the mortgage providing that nonpayment of any one of the notes, together with nonpayment of taxes due on the premises, should mature the entire debt. Snyder v. Miller (Kan.) 250

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Limitation of actions: running of, against defense arising out of same transaction as claim sued on. 235

Provision in mortgage that whole debt shall become due upon failure to pay interest and taxes; suspension of operation of statute by subsequent payment of taxes; where payment is made by subsequent grantee of land. 250

Giving note to secure interest accrued on note previously given as acknowledgment of continued indebtedness upon latter; statement in writing by debtor that specific amount is due as admission of balance of claim over such amount. 261

LIMITATION OF LIABILITY.

See CARRIERS, 7.

LIVERY-STABLE KEEPER.

Liability as Carrier, see CARRIERS, 1, 2.

LOGS.

Right to Maintain Replevin for. see REPLEVIN, 4-6.

LOTTERY.

The fact that each member is entitled to trade out of the amount he has paid in whenever he chooses to withdraw from the club does not prevent a suit club, which is a scheme by which a certain number of persons pay a small sum per week, and choose by lot each week one of the number who shall receive a suit of clothes worth much more than such weekly payment, upon receipt of which he ceases to be a member of the club, from being a lottery. People v. McPhee (Mich.) 505

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Lottery; what constitutes. 506
60 L. R. A.

MAIL.

Contract by, see CONFLICT OF LAWS, 2.

MANDAMUS.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Mandamus; to compel court to proceed with trial: where party is in contempt. 312

To compel courts and judges to approve and accept bonds; to compel performance of act by officer who pleads authority of unconstitutional act for nonperformance. 428

To restore to membership one expelled from state legislature; mandamus from one branch to co-ordinate branch; not issued when not effectual or beneficial; to control discretion of lawmaking branch of government. 557

MARKETABLE TITLE.

See VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

MARRIAGE.

Law Governing, see CONFLICT OF LAWS, 3, 4.

As Consideration for Contract, see CONTRACTS, 2.

MASTER AND SERVANT.

Liability for Maliciously Procuring Breach of Contract of Employment, see CASE.

Damages for Breach of Contract of Employment, see DAMAGES, 5.

Question for Jury as to Contributory Negligence of Brakeman, see TRIAL, 8.

Master's duty as to appliances.

Proximate Cause of Injury to Servant by Fall of Derrick, see PROXIMATE CAUSE, 3.

See also TRIAL, 20.

1. There is no distinction between the construction of the appliances furnished for the use of a servant and their maintenance, so far as the right of the master is concerned to absolve himself from liability for injuries by furnishing suitable materials to a competent person, to be used for that purpose. Rincicotti v. John J. O'Brien Contracting Co. (Conn.) 936

2. Failure of an engineer to observe a custom of the road, when cars are being coupled together, to stop his engine immediately when the cars come together and hold it stationary until signaled by the brakemen making the coupling to move it again, is negligence rendering the company liable for injury to a brakeman in consequence thereof. Schus v. Powers-Simpson Co. (Minn.) 887

3. An employer without the necessary technical knowledge to enable him to determine whether or not a boiler furnished by him is safe may rely upon the statement of the official city boiler inspector, so far as his duty towards his employees is concerned. Service v. Shoneman (Pa.) 792

4. Negligence by an employer in furnishing an unsafe boiler is rebutted, so as to absolve him from liability for injuries to employees by its explosion, where, before its purchase, he made extended inquiries as to which boiler was best, and purchased the one recommended after its superiority was pointed out, paying a larger price than was asked for others; and it had been used in his establishment three years before the accident without complaint, and was exclusively used and favored by the owners. Id.

5. That a boiler furnished by an employer for the use of his employees contains an unsafe device will not render him liable for injuries to them by reason of such defect, if he procured it in the exercise of business prudence, and it was one in ordinary use. Id.

6. The failure to box or otherwise protect a rapidly revolving upright shaft coming up through the floor in an alley or passageway where an inexperienced girl is required to sweep, and who is not warned of the danger, may be found by the jury to constitute negligence which will render the employer liable for injuries to her when her clothing is caught and wound upon the shaft. American Tobacco Co. v. Strickling (Md.) 909

7. Mere knowledge of an employee of a contractor for the setting of the stone work of a building, of a custom that the scaffolding shall be furnished by the brick contractors, does not amount to a waiver of his right to hold his employer responsible for the safety of a scaffold furnished for him to work upon. McBeath v. Rawle (Ill.) 697

Master's duty to be present.

8. The mere fact that a place where a servant is working is rendered temporarily unsafe in the execution of the details of the service does not, alone, make it the duty of the master to be present in person, or by representative, to protect the servant from harm. Dill v. Marmon (Ind.) 163

Duty to inspect.

9. The master is bound to make reasonable inspection of appliances used to aid his servants in their work, and he cannot relieve himself from the consequences of his failure to do so by delegating the duty to competent employees. Rincicotti v. John J. O'Brien Contracting Co. (Conn.) 936

Assumption of risk.

10. A servant engaged in assisting in shifting cars to be loaded at a mill assumes the risk of the foreman giving a negligent command relative to the handling of the cars. Dill v. Marmon (Ind.) 163

11. After a master has exercised due care in the selection of servants, the danger arising from the negligence of a fellow servant is one which is voluntarily assumed by a person going into the service of the master; it being a risk for which satisfactory compensation is presumed to have been rendered by the larger wages he can earn in such service than in other employments. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Dillard (Tenn.) 746

12. A direction by a foreman to an employee assisting in shifting cars to be loaded at a mill, to push a car put in motion by the impact of another before it has lost its momentum, is not such a change in his work, although he has never done that particular act before, as to authorize him to proceed at the master's risk. Dill v. Marmon (Ind.) 163

13. A railroad engineer who obeys, although reluctantly, an order to take his train through a mountainous region on its regular trip at a time of heavy rains, when land slides are anticipated, assumes the risk of such slides, and cannot hold the company responsible in case his train is carried from the track by a slide which comes upon it so suddenly that there is no time to escape, and the danger of which was not observed by a track inspector, who had passed the spot just before the train reached there: since it must be regarded as pure accident. Kinzel v. Atlanta, K. & N. R. Co. (C. C. App. 6th C.) 757

Fellow servants.

Imputing Engineer's Negligence to Conductor, see NEGLIGENCE, 8.

Receiver's Liability for Injury by Fellow Servant's Negligence, see RECEIVERS.

Sufficiency of Title of Statute as to, see STATUTES, 5.

Special Legislation as to, see STATUTES, 7.

See also COMMERCE, 2; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 5, 6.

14. A master is not liable to a servant for injuries caused by negligence of a foreman in directing work where the master has otherwise performed his duty. Dill v. Marmon (Ind.) 163

15. An employer is not liable to an employee for injuries caused by negligence in the handling of a boiler upon the premises by a coemployee, an engineer who is conceded to have been competent. Service v. Shoneman (Pa.) 792

16. The conductor of a passenger train cannot be regarded as in a separate department of service from a brakeman of a freight train, so as to render the railroad company liable for injury to the latter by his negligence. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Dillard (Tenn.) 746

17. A servant employed to assist in shifting cars to be loaded at a mill cannot hold the master liable for an injury caused by the negligence of the foreman in charge of the two or three men engaged in such work, but who is not at the head of a department of the work, in directing him to push a car after it has been set in motion by the momentum of another car, or in failing to stop the latter after the servant, in attempting to obey the order, has slipped and fallen in such a way that he will be injured in case it is not stopped. Dill v. Marmon (Ind.) 163

18. The doctrine of fellow service will not defeat the liability of a steamship company for death of a member of the crew through the sinking of the vessel, although the cause of the accident was the negligence of the master and pilot, where the loss of life was due to inability to launch the boats because of insufficiency of the crew in that they could not understand the language of the officers, and had not been drilled in lowering the boats. Re Pacific Mail S. S. Co. (C. C. App. 9th C.) 71

19. An employee injured by the negligence of another while both are acting in the line of duty as employees of a corporation has a right of action against the company, under the Indiana employer's liability act of 1893. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Montgomery (Ind.) 875

20. Negligence of a superior servant of a railroad company, causing injury to an employee under his control, renders the employer liable under Ohio act April 2, 1890, although the negligence was in respect of the performance of work of the kind done by the injured person, and not in the performance of any duty imposed by law on the master personally. Peirce v. Van Dusen (C. C. App. 6th C.) 705

21. An action against a receiver of a railroad corporation is within the provisions of Ohio act April 2, 1890, making railroad companies liable in certain cases for the negligence of fellow servants or employees who have power or authority to direct or control the one injured. Id.

22. A corporation operating a "logging railroad," not as a common carrier, but exclusively for its own private business, is subject to the provisions of a statute making railroad corporations liable for injuries to servants caused by the negligence of fellow servants, since its employees engaged in the operation of the road are exposed to the same dangers and risks as are employees of railroad corporations engaged in the business of a common carrier. Schus v. Powers-Simpson Co. (Minn.) 887

23. A statute making void a contract by a corporation for the release or relief from liability to an employee for negligence of a fellow servant is not unconstitutional. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Montgomery (Ind.) 875

24. An agreement by a railroad employee that the acceptance of benefits from a relief fund shall operate as a release of all claims against the railroad company is void, under the employer's liability act of 1893, although the release is only conditional. Id.

Liability to third persons for servant's acts.

To guest at Hotel, see INNKEEPERS, 3-7.

25. The relation of master and servant does not render the master liable for the torts of the servant, unless connected with his duties as such servant or within the scope of his employment. Clancy v. Barker (Neb.) 642

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also INNKEEPERS.

Master and servant; liability for inducing servant to break contract of employment. 92

Assumption of risk; duty to furnish safe place to work; safe railroad bed and track; contributory negligence of servant; in absence of full knowledge of danger. 757

Assumption by brakeman of risk of coupling cars; action to recover; necessity of proving what particular precaution defendant should have taken, but did not; negligence of engineer in failing to keep engine stationary until coupling is made; contributory negligence of brakeman; abrogation of fellow servant doctrine as to railroads; what is a "railroad." 888

Duty to furnish safe appliances; measure of care; furnishing appliances in ordinary use; where there are safer appliances; liability for error in judgment in selecting appliances; right to rely on inspection of appliances by public officials. 797

Defective appliances; when servant may recover for injury caused by; duty of inspection; negligent construction of scaffold; where scaffold erected by independent contractor; liability of master for safety of machinery and appliances furnished and built by other contractor; duty to furnish safe place to work; delegation of duty of inspection; choice of methods of doing work by employee; employee's knowledge of danger. 697

Duty to provide safe place and appliances for servant; duty not only to make, but to keep, place of work safe; delegation of duty to agent; liability for nonfeasance as well as misfeasance of agent as to duty; failure of agent to give necessary signal; foreman acting as representative of master in ordering work at particular place; assumption of risk by servant; right to assume that there is no danger in obeying specific order; determining vice principalship with respect to character of act causing injury; foreman as fellow servant; liability of master for negligence of fellow servants in using tools or in making place of work unsafe; right to delegate superintendence of work; adoption by servant of more dangerous method of doing work; master not bound to furnish implements of the best or most approved pattern; failure to guard against accident that could not reasonably have been anticipated. 164

Duty to provide safe place of work; failure to box machinery; duty to warn of danger; evidence of custom to guard machinery. 909

Who are vice principals; statute making railroad companies liable for injury to employee by superior servant; applicability to private railroads; liability of receiver of railroad for injury to employee; question whether person is fellow servant one of general, and not local, law. 706

Test as to whether one is vice principal or fellow servant; delegation of master's duty to agent; duty of master to inspect instrumentalities; right of servant to rely on performance of duty; delegation of duty of inspection; assumption of risk by servant of defects in instrumentalities. 937

Validity of statute abrogating fellow servant rule as to corporations. 876

Liability of innkeepers and carriers for injuries to guests and passengers by servants; liability of proprietors of theaters, saloons, stores, etc.; servant not acting within scope of duty. 643

MAXIMS.

1. "Every man's house is his castle."
Pavesich v. New England L. Ins. Co. (Ga.) 101

2. He who seeks equity must do equity.
Campbell v. Justices of Superior Court (Mass.) 311

3. Nemo debet bis vexari pro eadem causa
Hunt v. Darling (R. I.) 497

4. Nullus videtur dolo facere qui suo jure utitur. Ex parte Chace (R. I.) 493

5. Qui facit per alium facit per se. Stato v. Guglielmo (Or.) 466
69 L. R. A.

6. Respondeat superior. Clancy v. Barker (C. C. App. 8th C.) 653

7. Sic utere tuo ut alienum non lada.
Youghioghenny River Coal Co. v. Allegheny Nat. Bank (Pa.) 637

8. Ubi jus ibi remedium. Pavesich v. New England L. Ins. Co. (Ga.) 101

9. Volenti non fit injuria. Dill v. Marmion (Ind.) 163

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Maxims; ex turpi causa non oritur actio. 63

Expressio unius est exclusio alterius. 830

MEMORANDUM.

Admissibility in Evidence, see EVIDENCE, 8-10.

MENTAL ANGUISH.

Damages for, see DAMAGES, 12, 14.

MILL POND.

Right to Enjoin Lowering of Water of, see INJUNCTION, 1.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Mills; reasonable use of mill pond; rights of mill owner in water. 933

MINES.

Rights of Life Tenant in Oil Wells, see LIFE TENANTS, 2.

The leaving of surface supports is not within a provision in a sale by the owner of coal in place of the vein, which is held subject to the duty of supporting the surface, by which he undertakes to indemnify the purchaser for any liability for any damage which may result to the surface "by reason of the skilful and careful mining and taking away of the coal," but the words refer solely to the manner of working the vein. Youghioghenny River Coal Co. v. Allegheny Nat. Bank (Pa.) 637

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Mines; grant or reservation of lands and minerals; right of surface owner to support. 637

Interest of widow entitled to life estate in mines underneath land; right to proportion of oil produced from wells opened by remainder-men; waste by life tenant in drilling well; interest of life tenant generally in minerals under land. 986

MINORS.

See INFANTS.

MORTGAGE.

Estoppel to Plead Limitations as Defense to Foreclosure Suit, see ESTOPPEL, 7.

Rights of Mortgagee under Policy, see INSURANCE, 7.

Right to Foreclose Mortgage to Satisfy Outlawed Note for Interest on Note Secured by the Mortgage, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, 4.

Securing Series of Notes; When Limitation Begins to run on, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, 5.

Effect of Payment of Taxes by Purchaser of Premises on Running of Limitations, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, 7.

See also FIXTURES.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also INSURANCE.

Mortgage; to secure note; effect as security for second note given for interest on first one. 261

Jurisdiction of equity of suit to foreclose mortgage in other state or country. 682

Chattel mortgage on growing crops. 827

What property will pass as fixtures under mortgage; things placed on land, but not yet affixed; intent to affix. 893, 900

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

Authorizing Condemnation of Land for Park Purposes, see EMINENT DOMAIN, 4.

Right to Value of Sewer and Water Pipes under Streets Taken by Federal Government, see EMINENT DOMAIN, 14.

Liability of Official for False Imprisonment, see FALSE IMPRISONMENT, 2.

Rights and Liabilities as to Highway, see HIGHWAYS.

Rates Charged by. for Water, see WATERS, 3-5.

Authority to license.

As to Automobiles, see AUTOMOBILES.

1. Authority given to a municipal corporation to regulate includes authority to license as a means of regulation when it cannot be otherwise accomplished. People v. Schneider (Mich.) 345 Ordinances.

Prohibiting Storage of Explosive Oils within Corporate Limits, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 10.

2. An ordinance which applies alike to all persons, firms, or corporations engaged in the business legislated against is not discriminatory. Crowley v. Ellsworth (La.) 276

3. An ordinance is not informal or illegal because the cause or reasons of its enactment are not given, nor because it punishes as a nuisance what neither by it nor by another ordinance is expressly declared to be such. Id.

4. Authority to a municipal corporation to regulate the storage of combustible and inflammable materials includes authority to prohibit the storage of refined and other explosive oils within the corporate limits; and an ordinance so providing is not unreasonable. Id.

5. A special ordinance granting to a particular person permission to store refined oils within the corporate limits of a town is repealed by a subsequent general ordinance, applicable to all persons alike, making such storage of oils a criminal offense. Id.

Liability for injuries.

In Highway, see HIGHWAYS, 5-9.

6. A municipal corporation has no right to prevent the use by its owner, in a lawful way, of a paved strip between the street line and a building set a few feet back from the street, where there is nothing to show that the strip has ever become a part of the highway, or that the municipality has so treated it. Temby v. Ishpeming (Mich.) 618

7. A municipal corporation is not liable for injuries to a traveler upon a sidewalk through the fall of a billboard insecurely placed by an abutting owner upon his own property near the edge of the street, under a statute requiring it to keep its streets reasonably safe and fit for travel. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Municipal corporations; liability for injury to person by falling over stepping stone on sidewalk. 84

Power to regulate lawful business; charter authority to make by-laws or ordinances in certain cases; power limited to cases and objects specified; legislative power to make ordinances for its own government; effect of duty to recite in ordinance necessity for its passage; to recite authority under which enacted; effect of fact that general ordinance injures in peculiar way a particular individual; validity of ordinance regulating storage of inflammatory substances. 276

No power to pass ordinance conflicting with terms of charter; ordinance requiring registering and numbering of automobiles, and compelling owners to take out license; power of legislature to delegate to municipalities regulation of street traffic; power of common council to provide for general health, and to abate nuisances. 346

Power to abate nuisance; arrest of motorman to abate nuisance caused by running of trolley cars. 350

Liability for injury by defect in sidewalk; right to recover over against property owner amount paid on judgment for such injuries; ordinance imposing on property owners duty of keeping walks free from ice; provision that, in case of failure to do so, city will remove it at owner's expense; effect of such provision on liability of city for injury. 489

Liability for injury to traveler on sidewalk by fall of billboard on abutting property. 618

Legislative authority to improve roads outside of city limits; to enforce police ordinances; to condemn property beyond limits; power of city to take land for park purposes. 750

NEGLIGENCE.

Of Bank, see BANKS, 3-7.

Of Depositor in Bank, see BANKS, 8, 9.

Of Carrier or Passenger, see CARRIERS.

In Highway, see HIGHWAYS.

Of Master or Servant, see MASTER AND SERVANT.

Uncertainty of Allegations as to, see PLEADING, 3.

Proximate Cause of Injury or Loss, see PROXIMATE CAUSE.

Of Railroad Company, see RAILROADS.

Of Street Railways, see STREET RAILWAYS.

1. Gross negligence does not include ordinary negligence, and proof of the former does not prove, but rather disproves, the latter. Rideout v. Winnebago Traction Co. (Wis.) 601

2. The term "gross negligence" signifies wilfulness; it involves intent, actual or constructive, which is a characteristic of criminal liability. Id.

3. The term "negligence" by itself suggests only inadvertence or want of ordinary care, and, however great may be the degree of such want of care, so long as the element of inadvertence remains, wilfulness is excluded. Id.

4. A government inspector whose duty it is to see that work is properly done by a dredge employed on a government contract is entitled to protection from negligent acts of those in charge of it, when upon it, even in the intervals when there is no occasion for him to be actually engaged in any immediate active duty. Steam Dredge No. 1 (C. C. App. 1st C.) 293

Dangerous premises.

5. The occupant of the lower floors of a building, who blocks the stairway leading 60 L. R. A.

from the upper floor to the ground so that a tenant of such floor, in seeking to escape a fire, is compelled to drop a considerable distance to reach the ground, is liable for the injury resulting to him therefrom. Cohn v. May (Pa.) 800

Contributory negligence.

6. The mere act of one rightfully on board a vessel, of leaning against, or wholly sitting upon, a bitt around which runs a line used in shifting the position of the vessel, is not negligence on his part. Steam Dredge No. 1 (C. C. App. 1st C.) 293

7. Intoxication does not relieve a man from the degree of care required of a sober man under the same circumstances. Vizacchero v. Rhode Island Co. (R. I.) 188

Imputed negligence.

8. Negligence of a locomotive engineer, which results in a collision, is not imputable to the conductor in charge of his train, so as to prevent a recovery for injuries thereby caused to the latter, where the conductor could not have controlled the action of the engineer at the time of the accident, or have prevented its occurrence. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. McFall (Ark.) 217

9. The owner of a wagon, seated beside the driver whom he employs, is chargeable with the driver's negligence in attempting to cross a street car track in front of an approaching car which is in plain sight. Markowitz v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. (Mo.) 389

Last clear chance.

See also STREET RAILWAYS, 9.

10. No peculiar rule which can be deduced from the doctrine of last clear chance, as originated in Davies v. Mann, can be applied in an admiralty case. Steam Dredge No. 1 (C. C. App. 1st C.) 293

11. To make applicable the doctrine of last clear chance, it must clearly appear that the negligence of one person was subsequent to that of the other. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Negligence; last clear chance; negligence in failing to discover perilous position of party injured. 189

Last clear chance. 389

Imputing negligence of engineer to conductor. 219

In leaving horse or team unhitched or negligently hitched in street; fright of, by boy causing runaway; liability for unforeseen consequences of act. 246

What contributory negligence will defeat recovery for negligent injury. 293

Negligence concurring with act of God; liability. 509

Care due to sick, infirm, disabled, and otherwise helpless persons, with whom no contract relation is sustained:—(I.) Scope of note; (II.) no duty as between strangers; (III.) principles which determine duty in certain relations: (a) duty or special care due to persons under disability in general; (b) limitation upon this duty where disabled party is trespasser; (c) duty limited by negligence of person under disability; (d) another's negligence not excuse for wilful or wanton injury; (e) summary; (IV.) duty to avoid injury: (a) to the sick and infirm; (b) to persons of defective sight or hearing; (c) to persons in helpless situations: (1) sleeping on railway track; (2) foot caught in railway track; (3) walking on railway trestle; (4) falling on railway track; (5) driving frightened horse; (6) instances of other helpless situations; (V.) duty of persons inflicting injury to care for those injured: (a) obligation to prevent aggravation of injury; (b) what is sufficient performance of obligation; (VI.) knowledge of disability: (a) actual knowledge generally necessary to creation of duty; (b) when mere belief sufficient to impose duty; (c) negligent ignorance equivalent to knowledge; (VII.) duty to discover another's peril or disability: (a) at places where people are likely to be present; (b) whether duty exists as to trespassers; (c) what is sufficient notice of peril or disability; (VIII.) presumptions in absence of knowledge of disability: (a) right to presume person in peril will help himself; (b) limitations upon exercise of such presumption: (1) warning of danger generally necessary as basis for presumption; (2) presumption may be repelled by circumstances; (3) "last moment" to which presumption may be indulged. 513

What constitutes reasonable diligence to avoid injury; concurring negligence of two or more resulting in injury to third party; right to maintain action against one or all. 561

Right to recover for ordinary negligence under allegation of gross, wilful, or wanton negligence, or vice versa. 601

Negligent injury: proximate cause of; injury committed by act in violation of statute. 801

NEW TRIAL.

For Failure to Insert Certain Facts in Special Verdict, see TRIAL, 21.

1. A claim that the jury in a criminal case was prejudiced by a report of a grand jury as to the enforcement of criminal law, 69 L. R. A.

which was read before them, comes too late on a motion for a new trial. Beason v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 193

2. The admission of evidence of the age, at the time of death, of the parents of one killed by accident, for the purpose of showing his expectation of life, although erroneous because of remoteness, is not ground for new trial. Rincicotti v. John J. O'Brien Contracting Co. (Conn.) 936

3. A new trial must be granted where the facts found in a special verdict are insufficient to support the judgment for plaintiff by reason of the absence of findings on matters in dispute essential to the complete determination of the issues. Beare v. Wright (N. D.) 409

NOISE.

From Chicken House as Nuisance, see NUISANCES.

NOMINAL DAMAGES.

See DAMAGES, 2.

NONRESIDENTS.

Discrimination against, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 7.

NUISANCES.

Arrest of Motorman to Abate, see FALSE IMPRISONMENT.

Street Fair as, see HIGHWAYS, 3. 4.

Conductor Pipe Emptying on Sidewalk as, see HIGHWAYS, 5.

Injunction against, see INJUNCTION, 3.

The characteristic noises and odors issuing from a chicken house and yard which are maintained in a cleanly manner and cared for so as not injuriously to affect the health of any normal person in the neighborhood are not a nuisance, although they may make neighboring property uncomfortable as a residence for invalids. Wade v. Miller (Mass.) 820

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Nuisance; what constitutes. 818

Right of person coming to live near alleged nuisance; what constitutes. 934

Power of municipality to abate. 350

Obstruction of, or encroachment upon, street as; injunction to abate. 565

OATH.

Information, see INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION.

ODORS.

From Chicken House as Nuisance, see NUISANCES.

OFFICERS.

Liability for False Imprisonment, see
FALSE IMPRISONMENT, 2.

Homicide by, While Making Arrest,
see HOMICIDE.

Removal of Member of Legislature,
see LEGISLATURE.

Waiver of Right of Privacy by, see
PRIVACY, 4.

The title to a public office is held subject to the constitutional provision giving the right of removal. French v. Senate (Cal.) 556

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Officers; implication of all incidental powers necessary for due exercise of power expressly granted; right of attorney general to sign indictments found by grand jury; presumption in favor of due execution of acts of official nature; offer by public officer to receive a bribe as a punishable offense. 176

Individual criminal liability of officer or agent of corporation. 276

Liability of public officials for their acts.
360

What force may be used to make an arrest. 382

OIL.

Explosive, Prohibiting Extensive Storing of, within City Limits, see
CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 10.

Rights of Life Tenant as to, see LIFE TENANTS, 2.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Oil; as mineral; as part of land. 988

OPHTHALMOLOGISTS..

Necessity of License by, see PHY-SICIANS.

ORDINANCE.

See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 2-5.

PARDON.

Of Attorney; Effect, see ATTORNEYS, 1.

PARKS.

Condemnation of Land for, see EMI-NENT DOMAIN, 4-6, 9.

Sufficiency of Title of Statute as to, see STATUTES, 3, 4.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Parks; parkways as essential part of park system; condemnation of land for parks and park ways. 750

Forbidding use of land near park for advertising purposes; as a taking for which compensation must be paid. 817
69 L. R. A.

PAROL EVIDENCE.

See EVIDENCE, 12-15.

PARTITION.NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Partition; of land in other state or country; jurisdiction of equity to decree. 692

PARTNERSHIP.

Discharge of One Partner in Bankruptcy; Effect, see BANKRUPTCY,
7, 8.

Between Husband and Wife, see HUS-BAND AND WIFE, 6.

When partnership exists.

1. A partner may make an agreement with a third person for a division of the profits coming to him from the partnership enterprise, and, if the character of the agreement is such as to disclose the essentials necessary to a partnership, a sub-partnership is thereby formed between the partner and the third person; but such person does not become a member of the first partnership, nor is he liable for the debts of that partnership. Morrison v.
Dickey (Ga.) 87

2. Mutual confidence being the foundation of the partnership relation, the mere fact that a member of a partnership is not the owner of property which he has embarked in the partnership enterprise—the same belonging to a third person, who has consented that it may be so used for his benefit, but whose interest is not disclosed to the other member of the partnership—does not cause a partnership relation to arise between the other partner and the concealed principal of his copartner. Id.

Rights and liabilities as between partners.

3. A woman whose husband is carrying on a partnership business with her money under an agreement that she shall receive all of his share of the profits of the business, is liable to account to him for the amount for which he has rendered himself liable on account of the purchase of a machine by him and his partner for use in the business, although she has given him special instructions not to purchase the machine, if the machine is in fact necessary or proper for the conduct of the business.
Id.

4. In case of a subpartnership between husband and wife in reference to the husband's share of the profits of a business in which he is a partner, a gift by the wife to the husband of a portion of her interest in the profits which the husband would derive from the first partnership is valid; and the use by him, or by his copartner, of such profits to discharge a debt of the husband does not render his partner liable to the wife on account of having used her money for the purpose of paying her husband's debt.

Id.

5. Where a business owned by a married woman was conducted by her husband in his name, and a third person, in ignorance of the wife's interest, bought a half interest therein, and later, upon discovering the wife's interest, recognized her as a partner and offered to buy her share in the business, the wife became liable, upon an accounting as to the affairs of the partnership, for half of the purchase price of a machine previously bought by her husband and his partner before her relation to the business was discovered, although she had given her husband special instructions not to purchase the machine, it appearing that it was actually purchased and used in carrying on the business of the partnership.

18.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Partnership; relation a purely contractual one; subpartnership between one partner and his wife as to his share of the profits; liability of concealed partner for debts of firm; creation of partnership by agent without authority; ratification. 88

Good faith required of partners. 574

Discharge of partnership liability in individual bankruptcy proceedings. 771

Effect on partnership debt of discharge in bankruptcy of individual partner; attempt to withdraw debts from jurisdiction of bankruptcy courts by attempted dissolution; right of creditors of, to dividend where there is no joint estate and no surplus of separate estate after paying separate debts; assignment, under insolvency laws, of one partner as dissolution of firm. 772

PASS BOOK.

See BANKS.

PAYMENT.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Payment; right to recover, though made voluntarily, where parties not on equal terms: what constitutes compulsory payment. 803

PERSON.

Railroad Company as, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 4.

69 L. R. A.

PERSONAL INJURIES.

Damages for, see DAMAGES, 8, 9.

PERSONAL LIABILITY AND SECURITY.

See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 2, 3; PRIVACY, 1.

PHYSICIANS.

An ophthalmologist who prefixes to his name the letters "Dr." on his sign, and on notices in which he undertakes to correct certain diseased conditions by the fitting of glasses to the eyes, comes within the terms of a statute providing, that, when a person shall append the title "Dr.," in a medical sense, to his name, he shall be regarded as practising medicine, within the meaning of the statute which requires a license as a condition precedent to doing so. State v. Yegge (S. D.) 504

PICTURE.

Publication of, without Consent, see FREEDOM OF SPEECH.

Publication of, as Part of Advertisement, as Violation of Right to Privacy, see PRIVACY, 4.

PLEADING.

Error in Refusing Leave to Amend, see APPEAL AND ERROR, 10.

Mode of Testing Sufficiency of Answer, see APPEAL AND ERROR, 15.

Time for objections; waiver.

1. Error in overruling a demurrer is not available to defendant after a voluntary default and hearing in damages thereon, unless the complaint is bad in substance. Richards v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. (Conn.) 929

2. The right to move to strike paragraphs of answer is not waived by filing demurrers, where, after the demurrers are filed, the petition is amended, and the answer is then amended to meet the new matter in the petition. Wisconsin Lumber Co. v. Greene & W. Teleph Co. (Iowa) 968

Sufficiency of plaintiff's pleadings.

Requiring Election between Different Theories, see TRIAL, 1.

Allegations as to Expulsion from Legislature, see LEGISLATURE, 5.

3. A complaint using language to describe defendant's fault appropriate to both gross negligence and ordinary negligence, as if they occurred at one and the same time, and that one included the other, is indefinite and uncertain. Rideout v. Winnebago Traction Co. (Wis.) 601

4. A grantor who has reclaimed the property because of breach of certain conditions subsequent, which the conveyance stipulated should cause the title to revert to him, need not, when invoking judicial remedies in respect thereto, plead the evidentiary facts showing title in him notwithstanding the paper title in the grantee, but may plead his title in general terms the same as if that title were dependent upon any other circumstances. Maginnis v. Knickerbocker Ice Co. (Wis.) 833

5. A plaintiff who sues to recover punitive damages for a particular wrongful act, and relies, as evidencing the animus with which that act was committed, upon the commission of a wholly independent act, done at a different time and place, must by his pleadings advise the defendant of the case he is expected to meet. Central of Ga. R. Co. v. Augusta Brokerage Co. (Ga.) 119

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Pleading; allegation that deed was delivered under terms of written contract; proof that it was delivered under oral contract. 572

Right to recover for ordinary negligence under allegation of gross, wilful, or wanton negligence, or vice versa:—(I.) Introduction; (II.) allegation of wilful or gross negligence; (III.) allegation of reckless or wanton negligence or both; (IV.) recovery on allegation of ordinary negligence, on proof of wilful or gross negligence; (V.) under statute or ordinance; (VI.) conclusion. 601

Inconsistent allegations. 606

Allegation of several grounds of action; right to recover where only one is proved; amendment of pleading by introducing new cause of action. 801

PLEDGE AND COLLATERAL SECURITY.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Pledge; right to sell collaterals governed by terms of contract; when purchaser has valid title to pledged property. 480

POLES.

In Highway, see HIGHWAYS, 2.

POOL.

Playing Pool as Betting, see GAMING.

POSTOFFICE.

Contract by Mail, see CONFLICT OF LAWS, 2.

PRAYER.

Offering of, in School, see SCHOOLS, 1, 2. 69 L. R. A.

PREMIUM NOTE.

Failure to Allow Credit for, in Action on Policy, see APPEAL AND ERROR, 19.

Waiver of Provision for Termination of Policy, by Nonpayment of, see INSURANCE, 6.

PREMIUMS.

To Building and Loan Association, see BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS, 2.

PRESIDENT.

Of Corporation, see CORPORATIONS, 7.

PRINCIPAL AND ACCESSORY.

In Crime Committed in Two Counties; Place for Trial of, see COURTS, 2.

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

Parol Evidence of Signing Memorandum as Agent for Purchaser, see EVIDENCE, 15.

Insurance Agent, see INSURANCE, 1-3.

Partnership between Undisclosed Principal of One Partner and Other Member of Firm, see PARTNERSHIP, 2.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Principal and agent; law of concealed agency; creation of partnership by agent without authority; ratification by principal. 88

Notice to agent as notice to principal. 279

Agent profiting by transaction at principal's expense; question whether transaction is void or voidable; ratification by principal; what constitutes; sufficiency of repudiation; effect of custom or usage on agent's powers; liability of one doing business through agent for acts and omissions of latter. 667

PRINCIPAL AND SURETY.

Liability as Surety on Notes, see BILLS AND NOTES, 1.

Law Governing Married Woman's Liability as Surety, see CONFLICT OF LAWS, 5, 6.

PRIVACY.

1. The right of privacy is embraced within the absolute rights of personal security and personal liberty. Pavesich v. New England L. Ins. Co. (Ga.) 101

2. Liberty of speech and of the press, when exercised within the bounds of the constitutional guaranties, are limitations upon the exercise of the right of privacy. Id.

3. The publication of a picture of a person, without his consent, as a part of an advertisement, for the purpose of exploiting the publisher's business, is a violation of the right of privacy of the person whose picture is reproduced, and entitles him to recover, without proof of special damage.

Id.

Waiver of right of.

4. One who seeks or holds a public office, or any person who claims from the public approval or patronage, waives his right of privacy to such an extent that he cannot restrain or impede the public in any proper investigation into the conduct of his private life which may throw light upon the question of his fitness for the office which he seeks or holds, or as to whether the public should bestow upon him the office which he seeks, or accord to him the approval or patronage which he asks.

Id.

5. The right of privacy may be waived, either expressly or by implication, except as to those matters which law or public policy demands shall be kept private; but a waiver authorizes an invasion of the right only to such an extent as is necessarily to be inferred from the purpose for which the waiver is made. Waiver for one purpose, and in favor of one person or class, does not authorize an invasion for all purposes, or by all persons and classes.

Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Privacy; right of. 103

PROHIBITION.

To Stay Inferior Court, see COURTS, 7.

PROPERTY.

A property right in price quotations gathered by a board of trade is not destroyed by the facts that a large percentage of the business done under its auspices consists of gambling transactions, or that the news is susceptible of bad, as well as good, uses. Board of Trade v. L. A. Kinsey Co. (C. C. App. 7th C.) 59

PROVABLE CLAIMS.

See BANKRUPTCY, 3.

PROXIMATE CAUSE.

1. The negligence of a carrier in failing to forward promptly goods delivered for transportation is the proximate cause of their loss, where, because of such delay, they are overtaken in transit and destroyed by an act of God, even though the act of God cannot reasonably be anticipated. Bibb Broom Corn Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (Minn.) 500
69 L. R. A.

Of personal injury.

2. The proximate cause of the accident was the striking of the horse by the boy, where a farmer left a team of eleven-year-old horses drawing a wagon loaded with about a ton's weight, fastened to a hitching rail in front of a store while engaged in unloading his wagon, as he had been frequently in the habit of doing, and while the team was standing quietly a boy, in turning over the hitching rail near the head of the team, struck one of them on the nose, which frightened the team, causing them to break the halter, which was apparently in good condition, and run away, causing damage. Stephenson v. Corder (Kan.) 246

3. The proximate cause of the injury of a servant by the fall of a derrick because of the breaking of a spliced rope is not the failure to insert thimbles into the loops of the splice, but the failure to inspect the rope for the purpose of determining its condition, and to repair it after it has become chafed and worn by use, where there is nothing to show that the splice is not sufficiently strong, without the thimbles, to do the work required of it, but fails because of the wear due to continued use. Rincicotti v. John J. O'Brien Contracting Co. (Conn.) 936

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Proximate cause; of injury; what constitutes. 246

Of accident; what constitutes. 801

PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.

See DRAINS AND SEWERS.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Public improvements; validity of assessment for construction or cleaning of sewers; giving resident landowners on line of ditch right to demand cleaning or repair; nonresident owners not considered; conferring upon auditor power to order improvement upon petition. 807

PUBLIC WATER SUPPLY.

See WATERS, 3-5.

PUNITIVE DAMAGES.

See DAMAGES, 14.

QUESTION FOR JURY.

See TRIAL, 2-10.

QUOTATIONS.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Quotations; gathered by board of trade; property right in. 63

RAILROAD RELIEF ASSOCIATION.

Invalidity of Agreement for Release of Railroad Company by Accepting Fund, see MASTER AND SERVANT, 24.

RAILROADS.

Equal Protection of, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 4, 6.

Due Process in Taxation of, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 8.

Establishment of, under Power of Eminent Domain, see EMINENT DOMAIN, 1, 3.

Liability for Injury to Employee, see MASTER AND SERVANT, 21.

Taxation of, see TAXES.

Question for Jury as to Cause of Fire, see TRIAL, 6.

1. Failure of railway employees to take charge of and care for a man who, while trespassing on the track, was struck and injured by a moving car attached to an engine in their charge, but without any fault on their part, is not the violation of a legal duty for which the company can be held liable. Union P. R. Co. v. Cappier (Kan.) 513

2. The duty to sound warnings when trains approach a trestle over a highway depends upon the dangerous character of the place, which is a question for the determination of the jury. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Sawyer (Tenn.) 662

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Railroads; failure to look for train at instant of stepping on crossing. 300

Taxation of; statute providing for valuation and assessment as a unit, and distribution of value on mileage basis to different taxing districts. 449

Duty to care for trespasser injured on track; in absence of negligence by railroad employees; duty of employees to extinguish fire found on right of way. 514

Duty to avoid injury to persons in helpless position on track. 523

Duty to look and listen before crossing track; negligence in walking on track. 606

Validity of statute making railroad companies liable for injury to employees by superior servants; scope of; liability of receiver for injury to employee. 706

Binding effect on, of condition subsequent in deed to; exercise of eminent domain to establish private railroad. 843

What constitutes a "railroad" within meaning of act making railroad corporation 69 L. R. A.

liable for injury to employees by fellow servant; application of act to logging railroads. 888

RAPE.NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Rape; necessity of instruction as to law on circumstantial evidence on prosecution for. 204

RATES.

For Water; Burden of Showing Unreasonableness of, see EVIDENCE, 6.

For Water, see WATERS, 3-5.

REAL PROPERTY.

Power of Court in Other State over, see COURTS, 3.

Rule in Shelley's Case.

1. The rule in Shelley's Case is part of the common law of Iowa. Doyle v. Andis (Iowa) 953

2. A fee simple is vested in the first taker under the rule in Shelley's Case by a conveyance to one "during his natural life, and then to his heirs." Id.

Conditions subsequent; forfeiture.

Sufficiency of Allegations as to, see PLEADING, 4.

See also EQUITY, 2.

3. The beneficiary of a condition in a conveyance of property, for the breach of which the title thereto may revert to him, may lose the benefit thereof by conduct rendering it inequitable for him to insist upon the forfeiture as stipulated. Maginnis v. Knickerbocker Ice Co. (Wis.) 833

4. Mere silence will not operate as a waiver of the benefit of a condition, in case of an intentional breach thereof, though the conditional grantee incur expense which would operate to his prejudice if the grant or were thereafter permitted to insist upon the forfeiture. Id.

5. Mere silence is not sufficient to waive a forfeiture because of breach of a condition in a conveyance of property; but silence by the grantor, and conduct in good faith relying thereon by the grantee, whereby he is placed in such a situation that he will be greatly damaged if the apparent attitude of his conditional grantor be changed effectively, will bind such grantor as a waiver of the benefit of the condition. Id.

6. Equity will not prevent forfeiture of an estate for breach of a condition subsequent, where the performance of the condition was made of the very essence of the contract, and the damages for the breach cannot be measured in money, while the fail ure to perform was not caused by mistake, nor the result of mere negligence. Id.

7. Re-entry by a grantor for the purpose of enforcing a forfeiture of the property for breach of certain conditions subsequent, which the conveyance stipulated should cause title to revert to the grantor, or the doing of something equivalent thereto for the purpose of reclaiming the property pursuant to the terms of the conveyance, causes the title to revert in the grantor as absolutely as if no conveyance had been made, in the absence of any equity preventing the legal effect of such acts. Id.

8. If a railway corporation takes possession of land for a private purpose, its right to do so resting in a grant by the owner thereof, and it subsequently loses that right by forfeiture to such owner, and cannot thereafter defy such owner, and continue to enjoy his property, because it might successfully proceed in good faith to acquire it for a public purpose. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Real property; conversion of estates tail into fee-simple estates by statute. 370

Necessity that "way" be created by deed or other writing; right of way as interest in lands. 568

Freehold never in abeyance. 786

What constitutes an encumbrance. 790

Rule in Shelley's Case; as part of common law of Iowa; what comes within rule; rule as one of property, and not of construction; statute de donis. 953

RECEIVERS.

Of Railroad Company; Liability of, for Injury to Fellow Servant, see MASTER AND SERVANT, 21; RECEIVERS.

A receiver of a Federal court in charge of a railroad company, who, by act Cong. March 3, 1887, chap. 373, corrected by act August 13, 1888, chap. 866, is required to manage and operate the property according to the requirements of the valid laws of the state in which it is situated, in the same manner as the owner or possessor thereof would be bound to do if in possession, is subject to any rule prescribed by the state imposing on railroad corporations a liability for the negligence of employees having superior authority over other employees. Peirce v. Van Dusen (C. C. App. 6th C.) 705

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Receivers; of railroad; liability for injury to employee. 796
69 L. R. A.

RECORD.

In Appellate Court, see APPEAL AND ERROR, 1-6.

Of Prior Conviction; Admissibility of, see EVIDENCE, 11.

RE-ENTRY.

By Grantor to Enforce Forfeiture, see REAL PROPERTY, 7.

REGISTRATION.

Of Automobiles, see AUTOMOBILES, 2.

RELATIVE.

Niece of Man's Former Wife as, see INSURANCE, 4.

RELEASE.

Invalidity of Agreement for Release of Employer by Accepting Benefits from Railroad Relief Fund, see MASTER AND SERVANT, 24.

Question for Jury as to, see TRIAL, 4.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Release; of liability for tort. 888

RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.

1. A religious corporation is not bound by the act of its minister in making use of the membership roll of a former corporation, the title to whose property it acquired through a foreclosure sale, so as to make such act significant upon the question of the identity of the two corporations. Allen v. North Des Moines M. E. Church (Iowa) 255

Rights of creditors of.

2. In the absence of fraud, a creditor of a religious corporation has no right to enforce his claim against property formerly belonging to it after it has been sold on mortgage foreclosure, the corporation dissolved, a new corporation organized out of the old members and new ones, and the property bought from the purchaser at the foreclosure sale, although the new corporation proceeds to carry on the work of the old one at the old location, and maintains the same relation as the old one to the general religious denomination. Id.

3. A creditor of a religious corporation has no right of action against the individual members of it as such. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Religious societies; liability of member of, for its debts:—(I.) Scope; (II.) early rule in Massachusetts, Connecticut, and Maine; (III.) incorporated societies; (IV.) unincorporated societies; (V.) résumé. 255

Liability of religious corporation for debts of predecessor. 256

REMAINDER-MEN.

See LIFE TENANTS.

RENT.

Liability of Trustee in Bankruptcy for, see BANKRUPTCY, 2-4, 6.

See also LANDLORD AND TENANT.

REPEAL.

Of Ordinance, see MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 5.

REPLEVIN.

Federal Court Not Bound by State Decisions in, see COURTS, 11.

Estoppel of Plaintiff in, see ESTOPPEL, 3, 4.

Right of Plaintiff in, to Claim Salvage, see SALVAGE.

1. An entry, under a champertous deed, upon land of which another is in possession, does not confer upon the one making it the right, when sued in replevin for timber taken from the property, to force the former occupant to prove his title. Wheeler v. Clark (Tenn.) 732

2. The deeds under which plaintiff in replevin claims possession of property from which the chattels were taken may be looked at for the purpose of defining plaintiff's possession, although the question of the ultimate title to the land cannot be gone into. Id.

Right of action.

3. Replevin lies for growing strawberry plants, although they are attached to the soil, since they are fruits of industry, and must be treated as chattels. Cannon v. Mathews (Ark.) 827

4. The rule that one in adverse possession under color of title of a tract of land is entitled to maintain replevin for logs cut thereon by one claiming to be the true owner, regardless of the true location of the ultimate title to the land, applies where the spot from which the logs were cut is annexed to the actual possession of a portion of the tract because within the boundaries of the paper title. Wheeler v. Clark (Tenn.) 732

5. That logs for which replevin is brought were not all cut from plaintiff's land is immaterial, where the one from whose land they were cut transferred all his right to plaintiff before the bringing of the action. Id.

6. That one suing to recover logs cut from real estate is shown to have deeded away a portion of the land, and that the grant is not shown not to have included the logs, are immaterial, where the grantee is joined as plaintiff in the action. Id. 69 L. R. A.

Defenses.

7. That the title to property for which replevin is brought is shown to be in one of the plaintiffs is sufficient to sustain the action; and defendant cannot take advantage of the fact that other plaintiffs are not shown to have a right to the possession of any interest therein. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Replevin; duty to preserve and return property seized under writ of:—(I.) Loss or destruction of the property: (a) in general; (b) emancipation of slaves; (II.) depreciation of the property. 283

Right to maintain by or against one in adverse possession of land for things severed: (I.) The general rule: (a) in general; (b) reason of the rule; (II.) nature of the adverse possession: (a) in general; (b) incidental trial of title; (III.) replevin of fructus industriales. 732

For growing crops. 827

RES GESTÆ.

See EVIDENCE, 17-19.

RESIDENCE.

See DOMICIL.

RÉSUMÉ.For Résumé of contents of book, see p. 993.REVIEW.

1. The object of a bill of review is to procure the reversal, alteration, or explanation of a decree in a former suit, and it must rest on error in law upon the face of the decree, fraud in procuring the decree, or new or newly discovered matter which could not have been used before the decree was made. Watkinson v. Watkinson (N. J. Err. & App.) 397

2. Although there is no express statutory limitation as to the filing of bills of review, the analogous limitation of the right of appeal should govern; and a bill of review cannot be filed after the lapse of three years from the final decree, except in case of new or newly discovered matter. Id.

3. Condonation of the adultery on which a decree for divorce was based will not justify the granting of leave to file a bill of review. If intended to be interposed, it should have been pleaded and proved in the original suit. Id.

Obtaining leave of court for.

4. When it is sought to reverse a decree upon the discovery of some new matter, leave of the court must first be obtained by petition, supported by affidavit that the evidence is not only new, but could not have been discovered by reasonable diligence before the hearing. Id.

REVOCATION.

Of Legacy, see WILLS, 3.

ROBBERY.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Robbery; necessity of instruction as to law on circumstantial evidence on prosecution for. 203

RULES.

Of Savings Bank, see BANKS.

SALE.

Implied warranty.

Parol Evidence as to, see EVIDENCE, 14.

1. An implied warranty that an article will be fit for a particular purpose may be inferred from a contract to make or furnish it to accomplish that specific purpose, because the accomplishment of the purpose is the essence of the contract. Davis Calyx Drill Co. v. Mallory (C. C. App. 8th C.) 973

2. No implied warranty of the fitness of an article for a particular purpose arises out of a contract to make or supply a described and definite article, although the seller knows that the purchaser is purchasing it to accomplish the specific purpose, because the essence of the contract is the delivery of the specific article, and not the accomplishment of the purpose. Id.

3. An implied warranty of the fitness of a machine to do a particular work does not include a warranty that it will do the work as rapidly or economically as some other specified machine; such a covenant can be introduced by express contract only. Id.

4. There is no implied warranty that a drill and its machinery are suitable to bore holes through a particular strata of land, where a contract in writing, containing no reference to a warranty, is made with a manufacturer to buy one class F3 drill made by the latter and described in his catalogue, and certain other specific machinery and tools, for an agreed price, although before the contract is made the purchaser informs the seller that he wants the drill and machinery to bore holes through certain described strata of land, and the manufacturer assures him that its class F3 drill will do this work as rapidly and economically as a diamond drill. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Sale; written contract of sale; right to 69 L. R. A.

show parol warranty of quality of property; sale of article of particular design or pattern; implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose. 975

SALVAGE.

Estoppel to Claim Sale of Replevied Property to Satisfy Claim for, see ESTOPPEL, 4.

A plaintiff in replevin cannot claim salvage for rescuing the replevied property after it had sunk while in his possession, since it was his legal duty to care for and preserve it. Three States Lumber Co. v. Blanks (C. C. App. 6th C.) 283

SAVINGS BANK.

See BANKS.

SCAFFOLD.

Master's Responsibility for Safety of, see MASTER AND SERVANT, 7.

SCHOOLS.

Offering prayer in.

1. Offering a prayer at the beginning of school each day, asking direction and guidance, which does not represent any peculiar view or dogma of any sect or denomination, does not bring a public school within a provision of the Constitution that no portion of any fund or tax raised for educational purposes shall be used in aid of any sectarian or denominational school. Hackett v. Brooksville Graded School Dist. (Ky.) 592

2. A school is not a place of worship, nor is the teacher a minister of religion, within the meaning of a constitutional provision that no person shall be compelled to attend any place of worship or contribute to the support of any minister of religion, although prayer is offered at the opening of sessions of the school. Id.

Reading Bible.

3. The King James translation of the Bible is not a sectarian book within the meaning of a statute providing that no sectarian book shall be used in any common school. Hackett v. Brooksville Graded School Dist. (Ky.) 592

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Schools; reading Bible in. 592

SEAMEN.

Liability for Death of, through Fellow Servant's Negligence, see MASTER AND SERVANT, 18.

SEARCH AND SEIZURE.

Requiring Automobile to Carry Number as Violation of Provision against, see AUTOMOBILES, 1.

SEISIN.

Recovery for Improvements on Breach of Covenant of, see IMPROVEMENTS.

SET-OFF.

Right to dismiss after Filing Plea of, see ACTION OR SUIT, 3.

Availability of, though Affirmative Action Barred by Limitations, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, 3.

In an action against the maker and the indorser of a promissory note, joined in the same suit, the indorser may set off an individual claim against the plaintiff growing out of the transaction which gave rise to the execution of the note. Wilson v. Exchange Bank (Ga.) 97

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Set-off; doctrine of equitable set-off; what covered by; when set-off allowed. 234

SHELLEY'S CASE.

See REAL PROPERTY, 1, 2, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

SHIPPING.

Limiting Liability for Loss of Passengers and Baggage, see CARRIERS, 7.

Liability for Death of Seamen through Fellow Servant's Negligence, see MASTER AND SERVANT, 18.

See also CARRIERS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

SIDEWALK.

See HIGHWAYS.

SIGNATURE.

To Wills, see WILLS, 1, 2.

SITUS.

Of Property for Purpose of Taxation, see TAXES, 2-6.

SOLICITATION.

Of bribe, see BRIBERY.

SPECIAL PRIVILEGES.

To Building and Loan Association, see BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS, 1.

County Organization as, see COUNTIES, 4.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

Of Contract for Sale of Homestead, see ESTOPPEL, 2.

1. A court of equity will not grant the aid of specific performance where the party invoking its aid has not parted with any consideration or property, and no irreparable L. R. A.

ble damage is suffered, and no fraud is inflicted upon him, and where he is in statu quo at the time of the commencement of his action. Howes v. Barmon (Id.) 568

2. Specific performance of an oral agreement to make a lease may be decreed where a signed memorandum in writing of the terms, made at the time of the agreement, and a signed but undelivered lease, taken together, show a completed agreement upon the terms of the lease. Charlton v. Columbia Real Estate Co. (N. J. Err. & App.) 394

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Specific performance; duty of one seeking, to establish clearly existence of contract and its terms; of parol contract for sale of lands; part performance to take case out of statute of frauds. 568

Of oral contract to convey real estate; where purchaser has taken possession and made improvements. 584

Jurisdiction of equity to decree specific performance of contract affecting real estate in other state or country. 681

In case of serious doubt as to meeting of minds. 790

SPEED.

Of Automobiles; Judicial Notice of, see EVIDENCE, 1.

STATUTE OF FRAUDS.

Evidence Showing Completed Agreement so as to Satisfy, see EVIDENCE, 8.

Validity of Parol License, see LICENSE.

Specific Performance of Oral Agreement, see SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE, 2.

STATUTES.

1. A question of the unconstitutionality of a statute as to other corporations cannot be raised by a railroad company as to which the act is valid. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Montgomery (Ind.) 875

Title.
2. A provision creating a new liability is within the title of a statute, "An Act Regulating Liability of Railroads and Other Corporations." Id.

3. The creation of a park commission and a board of park commissioners is within the purview of a title authorizing the acquisition, maintenance, and improvement of parks. Memphis v. Hastings (Tenn.) 750

4. A provision in a statute authorizing the condemnation of land for boulevards to connect parks is covered by a title stating the object of the statute to be to authorize the acquisition, improvement, and maintenance of parks. Id.

5. A prohibition of contracts releasing corporations from their liability to injured employees is within the main subject expressed in the title, which is the regulation of liability in such cases. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Montgomery (Ind.) 875

6. An amendatory act, whose caption merely recites the title of the original act, without enlarging its scope, is constitutional and valid, providing its purview is germane to the title of the original act. Memphis v. Hastings (Tenn.) 750

Special legislation.

7. The employer's liability act changing the law as to the defense in case of negligence of fellow servants of corporations is not within a constitutional provision as to local or special laws "regulating the practice in courts." Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Montgomery (Ind.) 875

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Statutes; liberal construction of exemption statutes. 68

One section of, treating particularly of certain matter, prevails over other sections in which incidental references are made thereto. 177

Weight of contemporaneous construction of. 185

Penal; strict construction of. 706, 817

In derogation of common law; strict construction. 876

Construction; necessity of ascertaining mischief to be remedied, in determining object of enactment. 888

Liberal construction of; statute limiting time for appeal. 909

Use in, of well-understood technical phrase; construed as using term in technical sense. 988

STAY.

Of Suit Commenced after Other Suit Begun in Different Court, see COURTS, 9.

Of Action on Purchase-Money Note, see INJUNCTION, 5.

STOCK.

Contract by Corporation to Repurchase, see CORPORATIONS, 1-4.

STOCK QUOTATIONS.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Stock quotations; property in; injunction to protect. 63
69 L. R. A.

STREET FAIR.

Permitting Use of Streets for, see HIGHWAYS, 3, 4.

STREET RAILWAYS.

Arrest of Motorman to Abate Nuisance, see FALSE IMPRISONMENT.

Negligence of motorman.

Question for Jury as to, see TRIAL, 5.

1. The speed of an electric car running along a sparsely settled country road in the space between intersecting crossroads in the dark is to be governed, not by the ability of the motorman to stop his car after discovering an object on the track by the aid of his headlight, but by the ability of persons on the track conveniently to leave it after seeing the light and hearing or understanding the signals given by the approaching car. Vizacchero v. Rhode Island Co. (R. I.) 188

2. Failure to anticipate the presence of a man on his hands and knees on the track in front of an electric car on a dark night, and to run the car so as to provide for that contingency, is not negligence on the part of the motorman. Id.

3. A motorman in charge of a street car, upon seeing a wagon approaching the track, has the right to presume that the driver will use his senses to avoid driving onto the track in front of the car. Markowitz v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. (Mo.) 389

4. One in charge of an electric street car approaching a public crossing must anticipate that any person approaching the junction from either side may turn his team into the cross street, and must exercise all due care to have his car under such control as to be able to stop it at the crossing, if necessary, to avoid an accident. Marden v. Portsmouth, K. & Y. Street R. Co. (Me.) 300

Contributory negligence.

Question for Jury as to, see TRIAL, 9.

Imputing Owner's Negligence to Driver of Wagon, see NEGLIGENCE, 9.

5. It is negligence to attempt to drive across a street car track in dangerous proximity to an approaching car which is in plain sight, whether the car is actually seen or not. Markowitz v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. (Mo.) 389

6. Failure to look and listen before crossing a street car track at a public crossing cannot be said, as matter of law, to be negligence per se. Marden v. Portsmouth, K. & Y. Street R. Co. (Me.) 300

7. One about to drive across a street car track at a public street crossing is not required to look along the whole length of visible track to see if a car is coming, but only far enough to warrant an ordinarily careful and prudent man, having in mind his own safety, under like circumstances, to conclude that no car is in such proximity as if properly managed, to endanger his safety in crossing. Id.

Liability where both parties are negligent.

8. To hold a street car company liable for the results of a collision with a team attempting to cross the track in front of a car notwithstanding the negligence of the driver, those in charge of the car must have been guilty of gross negligence, or reckless and wanton conduct. Markowitz v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. (Mo.) 389

9. The negligence of a man in crawling on his hands and knees towards an approaching electric car in the dark after the appearance of the headlight, which can be seen 800 feet away, is continuing, so as not to entitle his personal representative to hold the company liable for his death on the theory of last clear chance, because the speed of the car is so great that it cannot be stopped after his presence on the track is discovered. Vizacchero v. Rhode Island Co. (R. I.) 188

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Street railways; limiting speed of street cars; unreasonableness of limitation; speed on country roads; injury to intoxicated person crawling along track. 189

Care required in crossing track; negligence in running car at improper speed; measure of care required of motorman; relative rights of street car and pedestrians in street. 300

Duty of motorman to avoid injuring persons on track; effect of contributory negligence where motorman saw peril in time to prevent accident; not necessary that motorman be guilty of gross negligence to render company liable. 389

Duty to look and listen before crossing track; duty of motorman to person on or near track; negligence in walking on track. 606

STREETS.

See HIGHWAYS.

SUBPARTNERSHIP.

See PARTNERSHIP.

SUNDAY.

Excluding in Computing Time to Sign Bill of Exceptions, see APPEAL AND ERROR, 3.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Sunday: including or excluding, in com- 69 L. R. A.

puting time; transaction of judicial business on; signing of bill of exceptions on Sunday. 909

SUPERINTENDING CONTROL.

See COURTS, 6, 7.

SUPPORT.

Of Wife; Husband's Liability for. see HUSBAND AND WIFE, 1-4.

Of Insane Person. see INCOMPETENT PERSONS.

SURETY COMPANIES.

Invalidity of Statute Requiring Execution of Official or Fiduciary Bond by, see BONDS.

SURFACE SUPPORT.

Duty of One Mining Coal to Leave, see MINES.

SURFACE WATER.

See WATERS, 1, 2.

TAXES.

Forfeiture of Lease for Nonpayment of, see LANDLORD AND TENANT, 2.

Effect of Payment of, by Purchaser of Mortgaged Premises, on Running of Limitations against Right to Foreclose. see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, 7.

Power to exempt from taxation.

1. The legislature has no power partially to exempt from taxation the property of corporations engaged in maritime commerce and navigation where the Constitution requires a uniform rule of taxation. Teagan Transp. Co. v. Detroit Bd. of Assessors (Mich.) 431

Where taxable; situs of property.

2. A statute making all the property of corporations engaged in maritime commerce or navigation taxable only at the place designated in their charters as their general office for business violates a constitutional provision requiring a uniform rate of taxation. Id.

3. The holding of annual stockholders' and directors' meetings at the place named in the articles of incorporation as the home of the corporation is not its principal business, so as to make it taxable there, where substantially all the business for which it is organized is transacted and its funds kept at another place, under a statute providing that a corporation shall be taxable where its office is located by its charter, provided its business is actually transacted there, but that, if it shall establish its principal office in another place, then the place where it transacts its principal business shall be deemed its residence for purposes of taxation. Id.

4. In determining the situs of personal property for taxation, the legislature must regard the constitutional requirement of uniformity. Id.

5. The valuation and assessment of the property of a railway company, by one assessing body, as an entirety, and the distribution of the value thus ascertained upon a mileage basis over the entire line of such railway, as provided by statute, do not operate as a changing of the situs of the property assessed. State ex rel. Morton v. Back (Neb.) 447

6. In the assessment of railway property for taxation, it is competent for the legislature to classify such property, and provide for the assessment of the same as personalty, and to fix the situs of the property assessed by providing for the valuation of the property as an entirety, and the distribution of the total value to each taxing district according to the number of miles of main track located therein. Id.

Mode of assessment; valuation and equalization.

Due Process in Assessing Railroad Property, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 8.

See also supra, 5, 6.

7. The assessment, for municipal purposes, of railroad property according to the plan prescribed by a statute requiring the valuation and assessment of railroad property by one assessing body as a unit, and the distribution of the aggregate value on a mileage basis for all purposes of taxation to the various counties, cities, and towns through which the road runs, does not violate the provisions of the fundamental law requiring uniformity and equality in the valuation and assessment of property for the purpose of taxation. Id.

8. It is competent for the legislature to provide for the valuation and assessment of the property of railway companies, such as is required to be listed and scheduled with the auditor of public accounts by Neb. Comp. Stat. 1901, chap. 77, art. 1, §§ 39, 40, by one assessing body, and for ascertaining the value of the whole of such property of any one railway corporation subject to taxation in the state as a unit or as an entirety and for distributing the value as thus found over the main line or track of such railway company and to the different taxing districts, municipalities, etc., on a mileage basis. Id.

9. In the assessment for municipal purposes of railway property situated in cities of the metropolitan class, such as is required to be listed with and assessed by the state board of equalization for general revenue purposes, under the provisions of Neb. 69 L. R. A.

Comp. Stat. 1901, chap. 77, art. 1, §§ 39, 40, as existing prior to the revenue act of 1903 (Cobbey's Anno. Stat. 1903, chap. 49), it is made the duty of the tax commissioner or assessor of such city to accept the values of the fractional part of such railroad property situated in the municipality as the same is valued and assessed by the state board of equalization, and apportioned to such city in accordance with the provisions of said act. Id.

10. The proportional share of railway property as valued and assessed by the state board of equalization under a statute requiring railway property to be assessed as a unit, and the aggregate value to be distributed to the different counties, cities, and towns through which the road runs, on a mileage basis, belonging to and situated in a city and subject to taxation for municipal purposes, may be equalized by the proper authorities of such city by lowering or raising the values of the same as thus ascertained, so as to bring about uniformity of valuation in respect of all property subject to taxation within the municipality. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Taxes; situs, for taxing purposes, of tangible personal property of domestic corporations in the United States:—(I.) Scope of note; (II.) essentials of jurisdiction; (III.) localization of corporations; (IV.) principal office as domicile: (a) in general; (b) of railroads; (V.) effect of certificate of incorporation on the question of domicile; (VI.) legislative power to fix the situs of property for taxation; (VII.) personal property physically present in the taxing jurisdiction; (VIII.) tangible property outside the state; (IX.) particular classes of property: (a) railroad rolling stock; (b) water craft; (X.) conclusion. 431

Constitutional requirement of uniformity; power of legislature to change railroad company's real estate into personalty and shift location for purposes of taxation; statute requiring assessment of railroad as a unit, and distribution on mileage basis to the various taxing districts. 449

Levy of tax or assessment confined to public purpose; for public improvements. 807

Effect of tax sale to create encumbrance, rather than to divest title. 868

TELEGRAPHS.

Law Governing Contract and Damages for Breach, see CONFLICT OF LAWS, 1.

Measure of Damages for Failure to Deliver, see DAMAGES, 12.

Burden of Proving Loss from Delay in Delivering, see EVIDENCE, 7.

TENDER.

That a written tender is not kept good as required by statute will not defeat a judgment directing the repurchase of stock according to contract, if the shares were produced in court at the trial, and filed with the clerk. Wisconsin Lumber Co. v. Greene & W. Teleph. Co. (Iowa) 968

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Tender; sufficiency of written tender where property not brought into court. 969

THREATS.

Admissibility of Evidence of, see EVIDENCE, 20.

TIME.

Excluding Sunday in Computing, see APPEAL AND ERROR, 3.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Time; statutory limit of time for signing bills of exception; including or excluding Sundays in computing. 909

TITLE.

Of Statute, see STATUTES, 2-6.

TORTS.

Master's Liability for Servant's Torts, see INNKEEPERS, 3-7; MASTER AND SERVANT, 25.

TRADE UNIONS.NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Trade unions; right to stipulate that members shall not work for certain parties. 91

TREES.

On Sidewalk; Punitive Damages for Cutting, see DAMAGES, 14.

In Highway, Right to Remove for Electric Light Wires and Poles, see HIGHWAYS, 2.

See also HIGHWAYS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

TRESTLE.

Duty to Sound Warnings when Train Approaches, see RAILROADS, 2.

TRIAL.

Excuse of Competent Juror, see APPEAL AND ERROR, 17.

Error in Remarks by Court or Counsel, see APPEAL AND ERROR, 20-22.

Right to Proceed with Trial in Contempt of Court, see CONTEMPT.

New Trial for Insufficiency of Special Verdict, see NEW TRIAL, 3.

 Election between different theories.

1. Where a complaint is indefinite and uncertain because of the pleader's confusing 69 L. R. A.

the elements of advertence with that of inadvertence and ordinary negligence with gross negligence, and the attention of the trial court is called thereto, though not in the most approved manner, it should compel the plaintiff to proceed upon one theory or the other, if both theories can be reasonably spelled out of the pleadings, or give such permissible construction to the pleadings as to confine plaintiff's claim to one species of wrongdoing. Rideout v. Winnebago Traction Co. (Wis.) 601

Questions for jury.

Master's Liability for Injury by Unguarded Shaft, see MASTER AND SERVANT, 6.

Failure to Sound Warnings when Train Approaches Trestle, see RAILROADS, 2.

2. The credibility and value of the testimony of a lawyer of another state as to what the rule upon a certain subject is in that state may be submitted to the jury. Hancock v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (N. C.) 403

3. Whether the end sought to be attained by a taking of property by eminent domain is a public use is a question to be determined by the court. Albright v. Sussex County L. & P. Com. (N. J. Err. & App.) 768

4. Whether a sum of money paid by a railroad company to an injured brakeman was paid in satisfaction of his damages, as the company contended, or as a donation, as the brakeman claimed, and whether a release of the company from liability was executed by him for the purpose of discharging the company, or was obtained by fraud, are questions for the jury; and their finding will not be disturbed. Schus v. Powers-Simpson Co. (Minn.) 887

5. The jury must decide whether or not, under all the circumstances of the case, a street car company is guilty of negligence in approaching a street crossing at an unreasonable speed, which results in a collision with a vehicle using the highway. Marden v. Portsmouth, K. & Y. Street R. Co. (Me.) 300

6. If the particular engine which caused a fire near a railroad track is not identified, the jury may, in determining the question of the negligence of the railroad company, consider evidence that fires were set out at about the time the loss occurred, by engine belonging to the defendant, which are not claimed to have started the fire in question. Manchester Assur. Co. v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. (Or.) 475

7. The questions of the provision of a reasonably safe and accessible exit from a railroad terminal, and of the negligence of a passenger injured by attempting to use a stile over a wire fence for that purpose. are for the jury, where the evidence shows that there was an opening through the fence 40 rods away, and another 400 or 500 feet away, not in sight, which might have been closed on the day of the accident. Cotant v. Boone Suburban R. Co. (Iowa) 982

8. The question of the contributory negligence of a brakeman injured in attempting to couple two cars loaded with lumber so placed that the ends projected over the ends of the cars, so that he could not enter between the cars in an erect position, but was compelled to do so in a stooping position,—is for the jury. Schus v. Powers-Simpson Co. (Minn.) 887

9. The court will not, as a matter of law, say that it is negligence for one driving a team to attempt to cross a street car track at a public crossing, after looking along the track 244 feet without seeing a car when he is only 20 feet from the track; but the question is for the jury. Marden v. Portsmouth, K. & Y. Street R. Co. (Me.) 300

10. Whether or not a savings bank is negligent in failing to preserve the signatures of depositors for comparison, in paying money on forged orders without comparing the signatures, and in issuing a duplicate book without requiring adequate proof of the destruction of the original one, are questions for the jury. Chase v. Waterbury Sav. Bank (Conn.) 329

Instructions.

11. An instruction contained in the general charge need not, at the instance of the parties, be repeated in special instructions. State v. Coleman (Mo.) 381

12. A plea of guilty of the theft to commit which a burglary is alleged to have been committed does not, where the fact of burglary itself depends on circumstantial evidence, relieve the court of the necessity of instructing the jury as to the law governing convictions on circumstantial evidence. Beason v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 193

13. The jury should not be instructed as to the law upon abstract propositions wholly disconnected with the issues of fact they are called on to determine. Central of Ga. R. Co. v. Augusta Brokerage Co. (Ga.) 119

14. Instructions predicated on facts which do not exist are properly refused. State v. Coleman (Mo.) 381

15. Instructing the jury not to consider evidence withdrawn by the party who offered it is proper, when requested by the 69 I. R. A.

other party. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Montgomery (Ind.) 875

16. An instruction by the court that the jury must not consider the failure of the defendant to become a witness in his own behalf, in arriving at a verdict, is not erroneous. State v. Currie (N. D.) 405

17. A charge to the jury that in a decision on one branch of the case on trial the supreme court had held that plaintiff's petition set forth a cause of action is erroneous. Central of Ga. R. Co. v. Augusta Brokerage Co. (Ga.) 119

18. Where a complaint has a double aspect rendering it indefinite and uncertain, because it charges both gross negligence and ordinary negligence, it is error to submit the cause to the jury upon both aspects; and, in case error is committed in that regard, resulting in a verdict in favor of the plaintiff upon the ground of gross negligence and ordinary negligence as well, it is error to render judgment thereon because of inconsistency in the findings. Rideout v. Winnebago Traction Co. (Wis.) 601

19. It is misleading to charge that municipal ordinances do not justify the shooting of a person by an officer in attempting to arrest him for their violation, in connection with a charge that the ordinances are admissible to prove the good faith of the officer in attempting to effect the arrest. State v. Coleman (Mo.) 381

Direction of verdict.

20. It is error to direct a verdict for defendant in an action by a servant against his master to recover damages for personal injuries, where there is some evidence tending to show that the injury was caused by defective machinery. Dill v. Marmon (Ind.) 163

Correcting verdict.

21. The court may properly refuse to require the jury to return to their room and insert specified facts in their special verdict; but the remedy, if any, is by motion for a new trial. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Montgomery (Ind.) 875

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Trial; necessity of instruction as to law on circumstantial evidence:—(I.) Introductory; (II.) when evidence is entirely circumstantial: (a) in general: (1) homicide; (2) larceny; (3) burglary; (4) other crimes; (b) possession of stolen property; (III.) when the evidence of guilt of accused is direct: (a) by positive testimony: (1) homicide; (2) larceny; (3) robbery; (4) rape; (5) other crimes; (b) by proof of the confession of accused: (1) homicide; (2) larceny; (3) burglary; (4) other crimes; (c) plea of insanity; (IV.) where evidence is both direct and circumstantial; (V.) where instruction, or request to charge, simply states abstract proposition; (VI.) testimony of accomplice; (VII.) necessity of request for instruction; or exception; (VIII.) refusal of request, the substance of which is elsewhere charged; (IX.) accused in juxtaposition to main or inculpatory fact; (X.) as to question of intent; (XI.) miscellaneous cases. 193

Of criminal case; impropriety of prosecuting attorney or court appealing to prejudice of jury to obtain conviction; court intimating opinion as to guilt; judge's duty to construct charge so as to place burden of proof on state. 194

Question of proximate cause for court or jury. 248

Question of due care of plaintiff in action for personal injury as one for jury; question of negligence of defendant, and whether it was proximate cause of injury, for jury. 301

Negligence of bank in making payment to one who has stolen pass book as question for jury. 342

Question whether or not a paper writing constitutes a will, for jury. 424

Question for jury as to safety of appliances furnished by master; where testimony is conflicting; duty to submit question of master's negligence to jury. 798

Question for jury as to negligence of engineer in moving engine while coupling is being made. 888

Propriety of motion to strike out answer as method of testing sufficiency of matters of defense presented. 969

TRUSTS.

1. Mere unfriendliness of a cestui que trust toward a trustee is not sufficient ground for the removal of the latter. Polk v. Linthicum (Md.) 920

2. The removal of the widow as trustee of a fund provided for the benefit of testator's daughter is required, where she elected to take her dower rights in opposition to the will, thereby depleting the trust estate, and destroying a very important part of the scheme of the testator, remarried within a short time, became estranged from the cestui que trust and her cotrustees so that no intercourse could subsist between them, and kept the estate in needless litigation. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Trusts; duty of trustee; removal of 69 L. R. A.

trustee because of strained relations with cestui que trust; because of strained relations with cotrustee; renunciation of trust. effect of election by widow named in will as trustee for benefit of testator's daughter to take dower rights in opposition to will; in interference with testator's judgment in appointing trustee. 920

USURY.

By Building and Loan Association, see BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS. 1.

VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

Defect of Title as Defense Pro Tanto to Purchase-Money Note, see BILLS AND NOTES, 3.

Measure of Damages for Breach of Covenant of Seisin, see DAMAGES. 6.

Damages for Breach of Covenant to Convey, see DAMAGES, 7.

Recovery for Improvements on Breach of Covenant of Seisin, see IMPROVEMENTS.

Stay of Action on Purchase-Money Note, see INJUNCTION, 5.

Outstanding Contingent Remainder as Breach of Covenant, see COVENANT.

Right to marketable title.

1. A vendee is entitled to a title that is marketable, as well as good in fact, under a contract calling for a "good" title; and the rule is the same whether an action is brought by the vendor to compel specific performance, or by the vendee to recover back his earnest money. Ladd v. Weiskopf (Minn.) 785

2. A title is not unmarketable so as to entitle a vendee to rescind his contract and recover back the earnest money paid, where no question of fact is involved, but only one of law, arising exclusively upon the construction of a record muniment of title, and all parties interested are before the court, so that its decision will be a final determination of the matter. Id.

3. A doubt as to the construction of a decree of distribution by a probate court, which is conclusive upon all parties interested in the estate, does not render a title unmarketable so as to entitle a vendee to rescind his contract and recover back the earnest money paid. Id.

4. Payment of the money cannot be enforced under a contract to purchase real estate which stipulates that the property shall be clear of all encumbrances, if the title has not been accepted, and there is an existing right on the part of a municipality to open a platted street over the property, which will destroy the buildings without making compensation for them. Taylor v. Evans (Pa.) 790

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Vendor and purchaser; breach of covenant as to title because of encumbrances; duty of vendee to pay off encumbrances before seeking relief. 235

Covenant of seisin; broken when vendor has not good title; effect of vendee's obtaining rescission of contract as restoration to vendor; judgment after breach of covenant; as precluding vendee from asserting right to property. 761

Right of vendee to title in fee simple absolute; right to marketable title; what is marketable title. 785

Stipulation against encumbrances; what constitutes encumbrance; right of city to open platted street through property as encumbrance; sufficiency of notice of encumbrance. 790

VENUE.

Of Trial for Crime Committed in Two Counties, see COURTS, 1, 2.

VERDICT.

Direction of, see TRIAL, 20.

Correction of, see TRIAL, 21.

VERIFICATION.

Of Indictment, see INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION, 5-7.

VOTERS AND ELECTIONS.

A statute permitting the use of a voting machine which assures secrecy, free choice of candidates, a correct record of the vote, and a correct record and announcement of the total vote given for each candidate, does not contravene a constitutional requirement that all votes at elections shall be given by ballot. People ex rel. Detroit v. Board of Inspectors (Mich.) 184

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Voters and elections; meaning of word "ballot" in Constitution requiring votes at election to be by ballot; validity of statute permitting use of voting machines. 184

VOTING MACHINES.

Constitutionality of Statute Permitting Use of, see VOTERS AND ELECTIONS.

WAIVER.

Of Right to Have Entire Damages for Taking of Land Assessed, see EMINENT DOMAIN, 11.

By Insurance Company, see INSURANCE, 6.

Of Right to Have Paragraphs of Answer Stricken out, see PLEADING, 2.

Of Right of Privacy, see PRIVACY, 4.

Of Benefit of Condition in Conveyance of Land, see REAL PROPERTY, 4, 5.

The basis of waiver is estoppel, and where there is no estoppel there is no waiver. Williams v. Neely (C. C. App. 8th C.) 232

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Waiver; of forfeiture of lease; by acceptance of rent after; where landlord denies intent to waive. 867

WARRANTY.

Parol Evidence as to, see EVIDENCE, 14.

Of Sale of Machine, see SALE.

See also SALE, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

WASTE.

By Life Tenant, see LIFE TENANTS, 1.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Waste; by life tenants; what constitutes; to what life estates doctrine applies. 987

WATERS.

Taking Right to Fish in Lake under Power of Eminent Domain, see EMINENT DOMAIN, 2.

Right of Recovery for Constructing Embankment across Mouth of Cove, see EMINENT DOMAIN, 7-14.

Injunction to Protect Rights in, see INJUNCTION, 1.

Surface water.

1. Surface waters which by natural drainage collect in a natural basin or depression upon the premises of a dominant tenement, and escape therefrom only by percolation or evaporation, forming thereby a lake or pond permanent in its character, when so collected and coming to rest lose the character of surface water, and may not by artificial means, other than that incident to the cultivation of the soil, be drained to the damage of a servient tenement, without liability in damages for such act. Davis v. Fry (Okla.) 460

2. Owners of improved property located adjacent to an adequate sewer or drainage system in a city are required to connect therewith the water gutters and spouts upon their buildings, and not to permit the rain water to collect and discharge at a point in a public alley, where, by reason of the volume and force thus attained, it enters adjoining premises, provided such connection with the drainage system can reasonably be made. Ginter v. St. Mark's Church (Minn.) 621

Public water supply.

Burden of Showing Unreasonableness of Rates, see EVIDENCE, 6.

3. The fact that the construction of waterworks is a public use to be paid for by taxation does not require the basing of all rates upon the amount of water used in each instance, and on nothing else. Souther v. Gloucester (Mass.) 309

4. Owners of summer cottages in outlying districts, who desire to use water from a city system during part of the year only, may be required to pay the same amount for such water as owners of property in the city are required to pay for service during the whole year, where the laying of special pipes and the construction of an additional reservoir are necessary to enable the city to furnish the water, which facts create special circumstances justifying a discrimination in rates between the two classes of consumers; and they cannot complain that the rule requiring payment in advance is applied to them. Id.

5. Owners of cottages in outlying districts of a city cannot complain that some discrimination is made in rates between them and consumers in the heart of the city, where special circumstances exist which justify it. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Waters; how expense of municipal supply of water paid; when higher rate may be charged certain consumers; necessity that rates be reasonable; injunction to restrain unreasonable rates; duty to supply all on reasonable terms; necessity of uniformity of rates; how question of reasonableness of rates determined; reasonableness of regulation that every taker shall pay rent for the whole year and make payment in advance, whether he uses water for that length of time or not. 309

Surface waters; general rule as to; right to drain land of surface waters by artificial means; effect of collection of surface waters in natural basin having no outlet, to destroy their original character. 462

Surface water as common enemy; duty of city as to. 621

Maintenance of drainage ditches. 805

What constitutes unreasonable use of mill pond; injunction to restrain lowering of water in mill pond to natural level. 933

Power of Congress to authorize construction of bridges across navigable streams; power of legislature to authorize railroad company to place permanent bridge over navigable waters; construction of embankment across mouth of cove; right of riparian owner on cove to damages; right of riparian owner on navigable stream to access; right to wharf out; obstruction of navigable stream as nuisance. 929

ian owner on cove to damages; right of riparian owner on navigable stream to access; right to wharf out; obstruction of navigable stream as nuisance. 929

WHARVES.NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Wharves; right of riparian owner to wharf out; compensation for interference with right. 929

WILLS.Signing of.

1. In an action to contest a will on the sole ground that it was not signed at the end thereof as required by Ohio Rev. Stat. § 5916, its construction or interpretation is not a subject for the consideration of the court or the jury, the only question being whether the will has been executed in substantial compliance with the formalities prescribed by the statute. Irwin v. Jacques (Ohio) 422

2. A will is not signed at the end as required by statute, where the body of it is written on horizontal lines of several pages of paper, so that all its items and provisions are in consecutive order to the end on the last page, under which the testator's signature appears, but there is written in the margin of the last page, to the left of and separated from the body of the instrument, a dispositive clause, extending lengthwise of the page from near the bottom to near the top thereof, and in no manner connected with the body of the instrument by any words, mark, or character to indicate where the marginal matter is to be read in relation to the other provisions, and it is established by the testimony that the marginal matter was written after all the other provisions, at the request of the testator, and before he attached his signature under the body of the will. Id.

Revocation of legacy.

3. The granting of an absolute divorce does not revoke by implication a legacy in the will of the husband in favor of the wife. Re Jones (Pa.) 940

Lapse of legacy.

4. The procuring, by the legatee, of an absolute divorce subsequent to the execution of the will, does not cause the lapse of a legacy which testator creates for his "wife" by name. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Wills; when signed at end within meaning of statute; right to make will. 424

Devising remainder to children surviving at death of testator's wife; jurisdiction of probate court to reform will; when remainder is vested. 785

Effect of divorce to revoke gift by will:—
(I.) Introductory; (II.) when status mentioned in will controls: (a) in general; (b) when legatee is mentioned by name; (III.) effect of lapse of time between divorce and testator's death; (IV.) effect of property settlement. 940

WITNESSES.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Witnesses; right to refresh memory from 69 L. R. A.

memoranda; when memoranda not made by himself or under his direction. 476

WRIT AND PROCESS.

Service upon defendant in a divorce suit by delivering him a copy of the bill and giving him notice of the suit at his residence in another state will give the court no jurisdiction to enter a personal judgment against him for alimony and attorney's fees. Proctor v. Proctor (III.) 673

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Writ and process; sufficiency of service on party out of state. 674

al

